Western Division	145,878	47,282,233	23,020,410	24,261,823	1,094,942,620	30,366,110	186,958,178
Montana	5,603	1,964,197	915,517	1,048,680	25,512,340	1,356,010	21,620,687
Wyoming	3,125	1,830,432	476,831	1,353,601	14,460,880	522,250	15,348,331
Colorado	16,389	4,598,941	1,823,520	2,775,421	85,035,180	2,728,850	22,594,010
New Mexico	4,458	787,882	283,106	524,776	8,140,800	291,140	7,247,130
Arizona	1,426	1,297,033	104,128	1,192,905	7,222,230	196,580	3,257,600
Utah	10,517	1,323,705	546,223	775,482	28,402,780	1,164,660	6,813,830
Nevada	1,277	1,661,416	723,052	938,364	12,339,410	537,480	5,801,820
Idaho	6,603	1,302,256	606,362	695,894	17,431,580	1,172,460	7,253,490
Washington	18,056	4,179,190	1,820,832	2,358,358	83,461,660	3,150,200	14,113,110
Oregon	25,530	6,909,888	3,516,000	3,393,888	115,819,200	4,556,770	22,648,830
California	52,894	21,427,293	12,222,839	9,204,454	697,116,630	14,689,710	60,259,220

Divisions, etc.	Live stock on hand June 1, 1890, and life-stock products on farms in 1889.
	Horses.	Mules and asses.	Working oxen.	Milch cows.	Other cattle.	Swine.	Sheep, not including spring lambs.	Number of fleeces shorn spring of 1890 and fall of 1889.	Pounds of wool.	Gallons of milk.	Pounds of butter.	Pounds of cheese.	Pounds of honey.	Pounds of wax.
United States	14,969,467	2,295,532	1,117,494	16,511,950	33,734,128	57,409,583	35,935,364	32,126,868	165,449,239	5,209,125,507	1,024,223,468	18,726,818	63,897,327	1,164,588
North Atlantic Division	1,738,861	43,683	167,943	3,351,061	1,942,720	2,753,349	4,133,027	3,335,733	18,446,578	1,435,739,255	246,788,544	6,693,671	7,882,690	127,229
Maine	109,156	278	33,105	157,278	108,727	91,297	370,484	352,806	1,864,009	57,969,791	15,593,315	696,052	260,481	4,119
New Hampshire	52,458	123	23,648	109,423	89,817	58,585	131,611	123,158	717,149	42,633,268	7,942,840	341,235	112,114	1,674
Vermont	89,960	330	21,249	231,419	142,620	92,083	333,947	315,332	2,118,883	90,712,230	23,314,063	609,586	379,096	5,793
Massachusetts	63,638	196	9,831	172,046	74,251	91,483	51,438	47,862	241,314	82,571,924	8,358,703	122,900	90,929	1,690
Rhode Island	9,864	51	2,609	23,943	5,225	12,055	11,400	9,950	41,021	10,610,547	965,456	24,631	13,740	358
Connecticut	43,764	279	21,019	127,892	54,750	62,087	37,652	30,919	126,508	54,413,822	7,196,095	112,566	130,632	3,683
New York	664,430	4,630	37,293	1,440,230	653,809	843,342	1,528,979	1,187,120	6,715,696	663,917,240	98,241,813	4,324,028	4,281,964	66,054
New Jersey	86,925	8,227	1,825	161,576	48,661	224,388	55,409	41,927	180,844	64,003,953	8,367,218	23,613	160,310	3,381
Pennsylvania	618,660	29,563	17,364	927,254	761,800	1,278,029	1,612,107	1,226,669	6,441,164	368,906,480	76,809,041	439,060	2,453,424	32,877
South Atlantic Division	880,758	417,393	262,982	1,369,466	2,257,659	5,082,321	2,445,386	1,844,260	6,555,151	331,728,677	78,270,911	271,291	8,668,791	305,005
Delaware	25,656	4,819	3,846	32,574	15,424	44,981	12,265	10,731	47,281	10,699,362	2,026,498	359	66,468	1,612
Maryland	130,395	14,161	17,066	142,198	107,925	312,020	132,329	101,535	543,225	46,601,218	9,999,602	9,573	301,157	5,946
District of Columbia	826	41	.....	863	125	1,306	14	.....	.....	459,978	13,760	.....	341	20
Virginia	242,512	37,533	61,571	273,634	412,129	796,691	495,313	355,741	1,449,219	78,143,459	17,949,966	109,187	1,531,147	44,114
West Virginia	154,722	7,390	29,366	188,492	348,208	411,018	785,053	568,014	2,560,859	59,449,066	14,063,627	74,372	1,218,686	22,109
North Carolina	131,451	100,011	58,192	223,416	349,295	1,251,006	402,247	322,573	733,765	55,250,665	13,129,374	60,760	2,373,560	120,447
South Carolina	59,888	86,306	26,150	107,184	134,959	494,696	79,421	61,064	157,707	23,833,631	5,737,557	2,476	856,688	27,739
Georgia	103,501	157,377	49,108	287,717	537,101	1,396,362	440,459	349,768	841,141	52,234,508	14,483,323	12,833	1,757,758	49,935
Florida	31,807	9,755	17,683	113,388	352,493	374,241	98,278	74,834	221,954	5,056,790	867,195	1,731	562,986	27,083
North Central Division	8,571,177	657,653	181,329	8,240,999	16,150,072	37,624,632	12,332,084	9,854,644	60,965,237	2,719,414,765	520,625,636	6,669,421	29,766,640	353,398
Ohio	880,067	18,058	14,035	794,833	953,619	3,275,922	4,060,729	3,683,823	20,987,574	326,925,396	74,990,307	1,068,083	2,894,059	33,520
Indiana	720,035	59,644	6,563	579,287	926,058	3,320,817	1,081,133	779,755	4,863,404	200,510,797	48,477,766	360,948	2,106,817	24,564
Illinois	1,335,289	107,875	6,579	1,067,886	1,908,654	5,924,818	922,631	649,394	4,490,773	307,269,464	57,121,486	343,456	4,602,941	50,420
Michigan	516,117	3,822	29,795	497,611	519,365	1,126,141	2,400,318	1,971,315	12,378,318	224,537,488	50,197,481	328,682	2,487,134	26,750
Wisconsin	460,740	5,752	20,481	792,620	834,846	1,347,750	984,972	761,776	4,981,083	303,701,134	46,295,623	906,296	3,515,761	46,058
Minnesota	461,509	9,511	32,505	593,908	747,164	853,715	399,049	312,861	1,945,249	182,968,973	34,766,409	670,642	1,160,390	12,050
Iowa	1,312,079	41,648	2,367	1,498,418	3,394,765	8,266,779	547,394	361,642	2,649,652	486,961,411	72,893,079	1,038,358	6,813,412	67,339
Missouri	946,401	251,714	14,006	851,076	2,104,634	4,987,432	950,562	672,935	4,040,064	193,931,103	43,108,521	288,620	5,492,178	75,670
North Dakota	130,931	8,709	21,339	88,289	172,246	92,213	136,413	76,412	510,417	26,566,112	5,712,566	131,374	990	8
South Dakota	250,305	7,671	22,495	210,240	455,183	590,465	238,448	157,371	1,073,909	59,666,525	13,127,244	303,951	55,833	1,566
Nebraska	626,789	46,512	5,768	505,045	1,631,784	3,815,647	209,243	118,364	791,534	144,768,263	27,818,078	463,831	746,212	6,262
Kansas	930,305	95,937	4,495	741,786	2,441,752	4,022,933	401,192	308,997	2,253,240	201,608,099	46,117,076	759,210	890,913	8,880
South Central Division	2,354,662	1,093,722	488,764	2,829,657	8,406,062	10,894,270	6,217,868	6,038,810	21,911,238	509,693,663	135,192,272	318,367	11,914,123	237,290
Kentucky	401,356	151,649	58,926	364,516	642,649	2,036,746	937,124	663,367	2,777,533	118,497,289	29,038,406	64,822	2,310,615	37,225
Tennessee	311,842	203,639	40,630	345,311	579,398	1,922,912	540,996	455,653	1,397,666	107,657,116	28,314,387	69,919	2,284,155	63,290
Alabama	121,207	134,800	97,300	292,088	486,588	1,421,884	386,380	351,716	768,589	55,508,687	14,548,435	6,131	1,824,286	68,984
Mississippi	155,050	156,755	95,577	310,159	509,042	1,163,141	451,779	374,936	1,038,186	50,803,371	12,988,537	4,898	822,673	21,926
Louisiana	126,797	88,028	41,975	167,223	371,905	509,935	186,167	143,173	440,686	12,881,927	2,089,774	3,939	271,962	8,584
Texas	1,026,002	227,432	98,284	1,003,439	5,090,829	2,252,476	3,454,858	3,826,721	14,917,068	118,475,330	32,100,560	145,730	3,286,386	62,509
Oklahoma	25,554	4,923	1,627	16,756	108,572	21,962	16,565	12,201	59,114	1,544,280	387,929	1,600	2,800	25
Arkansas	186,874	126,496	54,445	330,165	608,079	1,505,214	243,999	211,043	512,396	54,325,673	15,724,144	21,328	1,111,246	24,811
Western Division	1,424,006	83,081	16,476	720,767	4,977,615	1,055,011	10,806,999	11,053,421	57,571,035	202,549,207	43,346,105	4,774,068	5,665,083	93,666
Montana	142,959	959	546	24,143	667,209	17,132	1,859,016	1,426,093	9,335,551	6,038,096	1,062,185	11,512	20	.....
Wyoming	87,403	1,242	630	11,684	673,655	6,794	712,520	545,892	4,146,773	3,064,588	428,269	15,196	350	.....
Colorado	155,170	7,130	1,282	76,948	630,631	64,356	717,990	561,951	3,234,234	19,680,791	3,282,080	87,183	390,906	7,901
New Mexico	38,130	8,367	4,990	18,507	554,014	10,471	1,248,970	1,088,250	4,074,503	717,155	86,042	18,931	21,470	98
Arizona	15,780	946	150	4,874	263,098	6,217	102,427	91,171	551,365	709,225	115,203	10,855	126,124	668
Utah	65,057	1,554	427	45,982	153,857	27,046	1,014,176	928,943	4,660,250	8,614,694	1,759,354	163,539	479,158	11,708
Nevada	56,788	1,723	52	9,273	201,575	7,373	273,469	247,246	1,450,868	2,532,052	489,057	51,207	88,557	2,825
Idaho	84,135	1,012	346	27,278	191,807	32,188	357,712	326,168	2,119,242	5,085,863	1,078,103	207,213	37,146	.....
Washington	153,770	1,345	3,787	70,721	180,626	90,274	265,267	246,415	1,556,792	19,873,281	3,482,225	71,281	156,435	2,957
Oregon	224,962	4,946	3,144	114,156	403,348	208,259	1,780,312	1,575,043	9,982,910	25,042,276	4,786,277	265,576	435,028	7,272
California	390,852	53,848	1,122	317,201	1,048,795	584,899	2,475,140	3,416,246	16,358,547	111,191,186	26,776,704	3,971,575	3,929,889	60,237

STATISTICS OF AGRICULTURE—continued.

Divisions, etc.	Cereal production in 1889.
	Barley.		Buckwheat.		Indian corn.		Oats.		Rye.		Wheat.
	Acres.	Bushels.	Acres.	Bushels.	Acres.	Bushels.	Acres.	Bushels.	Acres.	Bushels.	Acres.	Bushels.
The United States	3,220,834	78,332,976	837,164	12,110,349	72,087,752	2,122,327,547	28,310,677	809,250,066	2,171,604	28,421,398	33,579,514	468,373,908
North Atlantic Division	406,032	9,587,050	542,498	8,750,506	2,172,038	72,191,305	3,141,114	86,891,504	682,930	8,085,361	1,917,709	32,012,544
Maine	11,072	286,282	22,395	466,411	10,891	380,662	121,612	3,668,909	791	6,664	4,116	79,826
New Hampshire	4,934	112,378	3,117	75,048	23,746	968,806	26,618	892,243	1,056	11,962	2,027	36,192
Vermont	16,427	420,761	13,429	271,216	41,790	1,709,686	101,582	3,316,141	3,379	43,256	8,397	164,720
Massachusetts	1,785	38,715	2,473	31,300	34,010	1,330,101	14,331	388,819	10,665	117,091	112	1,813
Rhode Island	369	8,009	41	349	7,819	253,810	3,648	100,520	779	9,617	11	91
Connecticut	273	5,747	4,006	46,104	40,445	1,471,979	24,428	593,691	15,100	214,935	443	7,482
New York	349,311	8,220,242	280,029	4,675,735	493,320	15,109,969	1,417,371	38,896,479	236,874	3,065,623	462,561	8,304,529
New Jersey	47	1,043	13,520	114,626	267,648	8,637,011	121,327	2,837,293	77,245	874,049	121,579	1,823,382
Pennsylvania	20,950	493,893	210,488	3,069,717	1,252,369	42,318,279	1,310,197	36,197,409	336,041	3,742,164	1,318,472	21,565,499
South Atlantic division	4,755	84,482	28,978	277,807	9,623,254	131,455,786	2,203,751	23,736,705	124,640	1,268,879	2,670,335	27,435,104
Delaware	12	205	325	3,081	174,796	3,097,164	19,374	382,900	775	6,625	94,368	1,501,060
Maryland	818	18,778	7,569	96,747	586,617	14,928,143	99,195	2,019,658	34,302	352,596	510,727	8,348,177
District of Columbia			2	20	349	10,755	63	1,371	111	1,099	30	609
Virginia	2,051	40,982	5,170	41,199	1,600,690	27,172,493	495,508	5,695,100	52,063	397,394	737,510	7,904,092
West Virginia	326	5,387	13,696	120,469	592,763	13,730,506	180,815	2,946,652	14,962	117,113	349,016	3,634,197
North Carolina	302	3,521	1,800	12,621	2,360,627	25,783,623	541,851	4,512,762	56,496	276,339	666,509	4,292,035
South Carolina	688	9,428	65	472	1,345,990	13,770,417	308,056	3,019,119	4,129	17,303	115,510	658,351
Georgia	549	6,053	332	3,162	2,582,316	29,261,422	516,886	4,767,821	20,949	87,021	196,633	1,096,312
Florida	9	128	19	126	378,906	3,701,264	42,003	391,321	853	13,389	32	220
North Central Division	1,838,286	47,257,785	254,975	3,042,395	44,873,346	1,598,870,008	19,859,736	645,127,344	1,176,117	17,951,629	22,581,556	321,316,830
Ohio	37,092	1,059,915	14,052	162,833	3,189,553	113,802,318	1,215,355	40,136,732	59,643	1,007,156	2,269,585	35,559,208
Indiana	10,280	250,200	9,548	99,959	3,586,190	108,843,004	1,102,479	31,491,661	62,890	877,532	2,570,017	37,318,798
Illinois	41,390	1,197,206	9,763	107,080	7,863,025	289,697,256	3,870,702	137,624,828	165,598	2,628,046	2,240,932	27,389,444
Michigan	99,305	2,522,376	70,046	811,977	994,597	28,785,579	1,085,759	36,961,193	140,754	2,101,713	1,501,235	24,771,171
Wisconsin	474,914	15,225,872	77,456	1,064,178	1,120,341	34,024,216	1,627,151	60,739,052	275,058	4,250,582	744,080	11,698,922
Minnesota	868,510	9,100,683	22,090	281,705	901,690	24,696,446	1,579,258	49,958,791	62,869	1,252,663	3,372,627	52,300,247
Iowa	518,729	13,406,122	25,243	286,746	7,585,522	313,130,782	3,752,141	146,679,289	96,707	1,445,283	595,548	8,249,786
Missouri	1,504	34,863	2,802	28,440	6,072,121	196,999,016	1,676,706	39,820,149	24,283	308,807	1,946,785	30,113,821
North Dakota	109,400	1,570,717	147	999	11,954	178,729	402,855	5,773,129	1,568	12,195	2,709,421	26,403,365
South Dakota	97,370	902,005	1,561	11,423	753,209	13,152,008	580,289	7,469,846	9,229	65,183	2,259,816	16,541,138
Nebraska	82,890	1,822,111	15,356	120,000	5,480,279	215,895,996	1,503,515	43,843,640	81,372	1,085,083	798,855	10,571,059
Kansas	7,201	165,715	6,907	67,115	7,314,765	259,574,508	1,463,526	44,629,034	199,146	2,917,386	1,582,635	30,399,871
South Central Division	12,587	382,552	2,510	22,251	15,164,583	314,101,239	2,560,328	37,859,361	82,493	686,607	2,313,200	24,502,856
Kentucky	5,776	165,959	384	3,804	2,960,382	78,434,847	645,316	8,775,814	45,546	423,847	898,694	10,707,462
Tennessee	3,585	63,866	1,231	7,143	2,791,324	63,635,350	588,138	7,355,160	26,443	165,621	877,361	8,300,789
Alabama	200	1,996	352	4,622	2,127,302	30,072,161	344,782	3,230,455	2,190	14,616	39,641	208,591
Mississippi	80	875	56	345	1,706,352	26,148,144	133,361	1,362,290	406	3,544	2,519	16,570
Louisiana	41	598			837,516	13,081,954	27,023	297,271	73	374	41	257
Texas	2,782	48,152	99	1,263	3,079,907	69,112,150	528,924	12,581,360	5,255	62,370	352,477	4,283,344
Oklahoma	17	112			13,307	234,315	4,446	76,194	110	1,052	2,003	30,175
Arkansas	106	904	388	5,074	1,648,443	33,982,318	288,332	4,180,877	2,470	15,181	140,464	955,668
Western Division	959,145	21,121,107	1,203	17,300	254,581	5,109,209	555,748	15,635,752	45,424	428,922	4,096,714	63,106,631
Montana	4,052	160,902	13	199	1,019	14,225	52,768	1,535,615	14	198	18,696	457,607
Wyoming	486	11,763	20	140	1,977	25,172	14,607	388,505	141	2,055	4,584	74,450
Colorado	12,086	331,556	117	2,091	119,310	1,511,907	67,959	2,514,480	4,615	54,158	126,999	2,845,439
New Mexico	1,484	35,034	61	744	22,539	583,489	9,314	193,632	69	610	21,853	343,484
Arizona	10,644	252,992			4,331	62,535	1,472	33,996	29	207	6,225	100,328
Utah	6,440	163,328	15	316	5,782	84,760	22,747	597,947	3,289	33,928	84,505	1,515,465
Nevada	8,081	237,192			274	6,540	3,400	99,126	54	502	3,631	81,486
Idaho	10,004	236,471	16	305	1,307	24,695	21,997	587,407	1,092	10,809	63,704	1,176,878
Washington	51,351	1,209,140	27	430	9,883	156,413	65,080	2,273,182	1,763	19,188	372,658	6,345,426
Oregon	37,722	874,353	250	2,678	12,101	238,203	218,736	5,948,594	6,845	65,206	553,052	9,296,734
California	815,905	17,848,386	664	10,398	70,903	2,281,270	57,569	1,463,068	27,413	243,871	2,840,807	40,869,337

Divisions, etc.	Fiber, 1889.							Sugar and molasses, 1889.
	Cotton.		Flax.			Hemp.		Cane.			Maple.
	Acres.	Bales.	Acres.	Seed, bushels.	Fiber, pounds.	Acres.	Tons.	Acres.	Pounds of sugar.	Gallons of molasses.	Pounds of sugar.	Gallons of molasses.
The United States	20,172,890	7,471,116	1,318,608	10,250,410	241,382	25,054	11,511	270,600	302,731,895	25,398,954	32,952,927	2,226,376
North Atlantic Division			3,467	25,568	17,610	47	25				29,037,260	1,019,578
Maine			24	46	1,611						84,537	71,818
New Hampshire											2,124,515	81,997
Vermont			1	20							14,123,921	218,252
Massachusetts			1	4							558,674	33,632
Rhode Island
Connecticut											8,617	1,437
New York			2,922	21,307	15,625	47	25				10,485,023	437,658
New Jersey			2	8							210	134
Pennsylvania			517	4,183	173						1,651,163	154,650
South Atlantic Division	6,746,292	2,338,609	311	1,052	34,778			35,408	4,667,120	5,078,062	368,712	24,663
Delaware
Maryland			1	2							156,284	1,021
District of Columbia
Virginia	39,213	5,375	131	538	27,133						26,991	3,468
West Virginia			36	115	4,008						177,724	19,032
North Carolina	1,147,136	225,261	143	397	3,637						7,713	1,142
South Carolina	1,987,469	747,190						3,218	200,400	382,830
Georgia	3,345,104	1,191,846						21,696	1,310,630	3,217,629
Florida	227,370	57,928						10,194	3,156,090	1,477,613
North Central Division	55,617	14,673	1,301,137	10,085,923	174,016	1,517	681				3,526,194	1,202,481
Ohio			20,553	145,537	18,377	66	20				1,575,562	727,142
Indiana			2,737	17,506	4,350						67,329	189,627

STATISTICS OF AGRICULTURE—continued.

Divisions, etc.	Fiber, 1880.							Sugar and molasses, 1880.
	Cotton.		Flax.			Hemp.		Cane.			Maple.
	Acres.	Bales.	Acres.	Seed, bushels.	Fiber, pounds.	Acres.	Tons.	Acres.	Pounds of sugar.	Gallons of molasses.	Pounds of sugar.	Gallons of molasses.
North central Division—Continued.
Illinois			4,672	35,013	57,776	1,178	556				13,260	13,978
Michigan			417	3,719	31,610						1,641,402	197,775
Wisconsin			5,973	68,227	4,591						128,410	48,006
Minnesota			303,635	2,721,987	8,609						34,917	12,091
Iowa			280,085	2,282,359	6,281						45,120	14,413
Missouri	54,880	14,461	56,421	450,831	1,458	79	31				20,182	8,333
North Dakota			43,724	164,319	568
South Dakota			354,951	1,801,114	3,278							2
Nebraska			163,900	1,401,104	1,025	134	54				12	30
Kansas	731	212	114,069	994,127	36,003	60	20
South Central Division	13,300,909	5,083,728	277	2,178	14,985	23,468	10,794	241,698	298,064,775	20,320,892	20,761	11,654
Kentucky	2,629	873	186	1,321	12,295	23,468	10,794				11,259	10,468
Tennessee	747,471	190,579	17	51	2,664						9,167	1,186
Alabama	2,761,165	915,210						18,981	390,835	2,301,538
Mississippi	2,883,278	1,154,725						12,627	67,869	1,516,981
Louisiana	1,270,154	659,180						193,704	292,124,050	14,241,081
Texas	3,934,525	1,471,242	72	794				16,386	5,482,030	2,161,342
Oklahoma	1,109	425
Arkansas	1,700,578	691,494	2	12	26						335
Western Division			13,506	135,689		22	11
Montana
Wyoming
Colorado			422	1,994
New Mexico
Arizona
Utah
Nevada
Idaho			8,002	83,409
Washington			4,270	42,285
Oregon			563	3,871
California			249	4,130		22	11
Indian Territory	70,076	34,115

Divisions, etc.	Rice.		Tobacco.		Hops.		Broom corn.		Pulse.
	Acres.	Pounds.	Acres.	Pounds.	Acres.	Pounds.	Acres.	Pounds.	Dry Canada peas, bushels.	Cow peas, bushels.	Beans (dry), bushels.
The United States	161,312	128,590,934	695,301	488,256,645	50,212	39,171,270	93,425	38,557,429	2,812,437	3,402,912	3,163,554
North Atlantic Division			44,080	50,133,320	36,809	20,150,940	1,058	491,052	218,456	63,069	1,365,880
Maine			1	200	37	24,873			18,780	4,366	149,710
New Hampshire			57	86,593	15	9,033			2,749	776	44,589
Vermont			50	70,518	81	51,705			9,240	1,141	31,820
Massachusetts			2,012	2,794,848	2	800	1	800	2,310	618	11,300
Rhode Island									300	138	1,637
Connecticut			6,331	8,874,924			1	543	961	963	1,734
New York			8,629	9,316,135	36,670	20,063,029	993	450,380	177,835	50,891	1,111,510
New Jersey			45	33,855			6	3,010	2,423	2,028	2,164
Pennsylvania			26,955	28,956,247	4	1,500	57	36,319	3,858	2,148	11,356
South Atlantic Division	74,395	51,753,952	234,981	100,843,545			466	288,077	56,977	2,149,786	128,636
Delaware			20	29,680			14	2,430	167	81	517
Maryland			20,274	12,356,838			8	3,368	3,812	860	1,495
District of Columbia									203	10	148
Virginia	3	360	110,579	48,522,655			140	43,159	7,547	12,317	24,048
West Virginia			4,647	2,602,021			31	13,743	435	464	31,260
North Carolina	12,241	5,846,404	97,077	36,375,258			15	6,155	9,967	427,317	36,909
South Carolina	42,239	30,338,951	394	222,898			54	14,463	7,803	690,478	8,018
Georgia	18,126	14,556,432	800	268,752			33	7,939	19,371	955,299	19,619
Florida	1,787	1,011,805	1,190	470,443			171	196,820	7,672	62,960	6,613
North Central Division			86,789	77,604,367	1,164	526,936	88,047	36,090,935	2,411,679	37,472	812,645
Ohio			44,303	37,953,563			1,574	801,957	17,225	3,293	30,213
Indiana			9,373	7,710,297	29	10,464	413	157,231	10,513	2,231	34,988
Illinois			4,155	3,042,936	44	22,300	34,340	15,932,502	2,746	6,264	21,308
Michigan			22	11,984	121	64,815	11	5,079	1,427,988	487	434,014
Wisconsin			17,241	19,380,166	967	428,547	157	92,468	918,517	541	117,144
Minnesota			49	23,285	2	500	80	42,090	8,965	1,288	61,009
Iowa			124	74,396			1,108	507,072	18,880	8,360	33,769
Missouri			11,350	9,424,823	1	310	2,618	1,051,139	1,973	12,513	29,632
North Dakota			2	590					703	152	584
South Dakota			1	195			237	117,200	887	132	3,723
Nebraska			46	11,049			16,792	6,514,763	1,318	491	28,225
Kansas			123	62,083			30,717	10,809,434	1,964	1,720	18,036
South Central Division	86,917	76,836,982	329,379	259,650,580			2,550	949,385	39,750	1,103,543	113,087
Kentucky			274,587	221,880,303			195	93,063	2,775	5,670	56,046
Tennessee			51,471	36,368,395			1,439	409,436	6,442	90,530	29,780
Alabama	810	399,270	679	162,430			61	25,698	5,409	321,004	4,841
Mississippi	1,543	676,746	234	62,111			41	24,776	4,205	250,321	2,890
Louisiana	84,377	75,645,433	109	46,845			24	11,420	3,058	78,642	542
Texas	178	108,423	423	175,706			596	315,741	9,850	195,842	10,273
Oklahoma							59	16,550	6	369	145
Arkansas	9	7,110	1,876	954,790			135	52,701	8,005	161,165	8,570
Western Division			72	24,834	12,239	18,493,394	1,304	737,980	85,575	49,042	743,306
Montana			(a)	25					4,464	5,148	692
Wyoming					2	750			181	1	232

STATISTICS OF AGRICULTURE—continued.

Divisions, etc.	Rice.		Tobacco.		Hops.		Broom corn.		Pulse.
	Acres.	Pounds.	Acres.	Pounds.	Acres.	Pounds.	Acres.	Pounds.	Dry Canada peas, bushels.	Cow peas, bushels.	Beans (dry), bushels.
Western Division—Continued.
Colorado			2	120	20	18,300	301	60,165	20,572	24,698	7,303
New Mexico			6	1,415			102	24,500	2,046	5,384	7,843
Arizona			(a)	2					30		6,946
Utah							16	14,000	1,483	385	482
Nevada									15	2	226
Idaho							13	4,240	881	226	1,060
Washington			25	7,040	5,113	8,313,280	55	22,000	20,068	4,855	1,358
Oregon			12	3,325	3,130	3,613,727	2	1,100	4,607	6,517	3,712
California			27	12,907	3,974	6,547,338	815	611,975	30,538	1,826	713,480

a Less than 1 acre.

To-day there are 6,000,000 farms in America; there are 9,000,000 farming people, owners and laborers; there are 35,000,000 people upon these farms depending immediately upon that industry; the value of the farms is $13,000,000,000; the annual product of the farms is $4,500,000,000; and, more than that, the farmers of the United States, by their "raw material," pay three-fourths of all of the foreign exchanges of the country.

Unburdened by the protection system they would be a prosperous, mighty people; what their condition is will appear later. They are as good, as clean, as honest as their forbear. They have been as frugal in most cases as those who have gone before them; and we all recognize that as a matter of fact, what they produce is the measure of values of all that is produced by any people, unless you shall add the little of the raw products of the mines and fisheries, because all men come to his mill; because all that all men do in the way of labor and accumulation they do that they may enjoy the fruits of the earth; the best measure of a people's prosperity is the condition of the farming classes. The manufacturer exchanges for the product of their labor. The work of the mechanic, of the lawyer, of the merchant, of the doctor are all exchanged with them, and they can get no more than the farmers raise.

DEBT ACCUMULATIONS OF A PROTECTION PERIOD.

Yet, despite the productiveness of our soil and the vast wealth yielded to agricultural toil, there exists in degree the condition of misery described by the gentleman from Michigan, and in addition a vast indebtedness that balances to a large extent the presumed prosperity described as existing prior to 1893. I have a statement from the Treasury dated January 4, 1894, which I here offer.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: Inclosed is the statement in regard to the public and private indebtedness of the United States, which was promised you to-day.

In the item of real-estate mortgages the estimate covers less than $200,000,000 for four States, the remainder of the $6,000,000,000 being actual figures, as shown by census tables.

Very truly, yours,

J. H. WARDLE, Chief Clerk.

Hon. JOHN C. BLACK, Washington, D. C.

MINIMUM DEBT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Private debt.

Quasi-public corporations:
Steam railways (funded)	$4,631,473,184
Street railways (funded)	151,872,289
Telephone companies (funded)	4,992,565
Telegraph, public water, gas, electric lighting, and power companies (estimated)	200,000,000
Other quasi-public corporations (to make round total)	11,661,962
Total		$5,000,000,000
Private corporations and individuals:
Real-estate mortgages (estimated)	6,000,000,000
Crop liens in the South (estimated)	350,000,000
Chattel mortgages (estimated)	350,000,000
National banks (loans and overdrafts)	1,986,058,320
Other banks (loans and overdrafts, not including real-estate mortgages)	1,172,918,415
Other private debts (to make round total)	1,191,023,265
Total		11,000,000,000
Total private debt		16,000,000,000

Public debt.

United States	$891,960,104
States	228,997,389
Counties	145,048,045
Municipalities	724,463,060
School districts	36,701,948
Total		2,027,170,546
Grand total		18,027,170,546

I will only dwell upon two of the totals. They show that the public debts of the United States to-day are $2,000,000,000, and that the private debts of the people of the United States are $16,000,000,000. At the beginning of the period of high protection there was scarcely any public indebtedness and very little private indebtedness in this country. This is the accumulation of burdens which has been made by some process during thirty years of protection. Now, gentlemen, we can afford to deal with utter fairness with each other. I do not claim that the protective tariff is responsible for all of this indebtedness. I know that it represents something of progress, but you and I know that it also represents a vast amount of poverty, that it is all debt; and to-day upon this debt accumulated during the period of boundless protection the American people are paying yearly at the rate of $900,000,000 of interest.

Now, it seems to be very clear that where there has been a process of law according to a given system, acting without interruption and universally for a long period, the result is fairly chargeable to the system itself. What we know is that in some way or other, in spite of the vast products which I have described, and instead of the vast wealth which the American people believed they were accumulating, it is found at the end of this period that a great mass of the people are miserably poor, and that our communities and individuals are indebted in immense sums, while, on the other hand, enormous accumulations of property are found in the hands of private parties.

I make no raid upon private wealth. I pass by all attack upon it. I point to the fact that everywhere throughout favored sections of the country, those favored by the tariff laws, enormous fortunes have been accumulated by individuals, and it is out of the surplus of those fortunes that the deeds of charity are being done which are to-day found necessary in this land. If the wealth produced had remained distributed in anything like a reasonable degree of proportion; if it had not, by some secret process, been drawn off into these special side-pockets it would be found reasonably distributed among the people of the country, and the sight of poor men begging for bread, while a very few of our people enjoy all the proceeds of thirty years of labor and prosperity, would not be possible. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is any other thing that will account for this disproportionate distribution of wealth I should like to know where it has appeared and what record there is of it.

EXTENT OF DIRECT AND INDIRECT TAXATION.

We know that year after year the Government of the United States has taken from the consumers of this country from two to three hundred million dollars of revenue, and we know that at the same time under the operation of the same laws sums equivalent to four or five times that amount (according to the different calculations of economists) have also been taken from those consumers and given to the protected industries of the land. This has been done upon two pretexts. One has been that a home market was to be created by this system and preserved for the benefit of the farmers and mechanics, the laboring men, and all American citizens.

Is that true? If it is true, where is that market to-day? It is dissipated, gone; and to-day the poorest home market in the world is that which is contained within the tariff protection of the McKinley act.

Another thing that is claimed for the policy of protection is that it increases wages of the workingmen employed under this home-market arrangement. I doubt if it can possibly be established as a fact that it has had that effect. The subject has been gone into very extensively by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON], and I am inclined to accept the conclusions that he has reached. I doubt if it can be shown that, running through the whole period of time covered by the protective system, the average wages of the average American laborer have been greater than the wages of such workers in other lands that are equally or anything like equally favored of nature.

But, averaging the times of depression, of poverty, and of idleness with the flush times, is it true that the general average of wages has been increased? I doubt it very much.

The skill of the statistician would have to be called in to establish the fact. But what we do know is that upon several occasions the wages have absolutely ceased in the American home market, and that this is one of those occasions. Protection has not kept the wage market up at this hour, nor for a twelvemonth past. And the same thing has occurred three times during the ascendency of the protective system. Gentlemen, if protection is the beneficent power that you believe it to be, why is it that in 1873 a ruin more widespread than that which now prevails in the land shook the financial structure of America?

There was no thought then that the Democratic party was about to come into power. It had scarcely votes enough left in the electoral college the year before to make a record: Republicanism was in the affluence of the successful administration of its own system. Yet, in 1873, such a paralysis as we are now suffering under passed over American industries; then, as now, railroads were put into the hands of receivers, trades were checked in their establishment, properties were mortgaged, and the most active industry in the land was the industry of the sheriff.

Why was it that long before the narrow contest of 1884 was decided by less than 1,300 votes in the city of New York—why was it that while every energy of a clean and kindly Administration was put forward to enforce the laws of the country in regard to the collection of its revenue—why was it that 1884 was a year of commercial disaster and ruin, widespread indeed, although not as widespread as this, if protection has the power claimed for it? You knew that the Senate would be held, that no law overthrowing that system could be passed without the consent of the Republican Senate, and that you were secure in the administration of the protective laws of the Government for two years at least, as you really were until 1892.

Yet with this system in full force there was in 1884 another earthquake period, another period of disaster to business, another period of poor wages. And so it is that three times within thirty years, saying nothing of the failures of intervening years, which ran up to one hundred and fifty, one hundred and sixty, one hundred and ninety million dollars a year, the fact is that three times in thirty years under a completed system of protection the business industries of this country have been shaken and overwhelmed. To show the extent of these misfortunes I insert from the United States Statistical Abstract a table of failures:

Number and per cent of commercial failures and the liabilities involved in failures in the United States for each calendar year from 1879 to 1892, inclusive.

[From the annual circular of R. G. Dun & Co., New York.]

Calendar years.	Number of failures.	Number of business concerns.	Per cent of failures.	Liabilities.
1879	6,658	702,157	.95	$98,149,053
1880	4,735	746,823	.63	65,752,000
1881	5,582	781,689	.71	81,155,932
1882	6,738	822,256	.82	101,547,566
1883	9,184	863,593	1.06	172,874,192
1884	10,968	904,759	1.21	226,343,427
1885	10,637	919,990	1.16	124,220,321
1886	9,834	969,841	1.01	114,644,119
1887	9,634	994,281	.90	167,560,944
1888	10,679	1,046,662	1.02	123,829,973
1889	10,882	1,051,140	1.04	148,784,337
1890	10,907	1,110,500	.98	189,856,964
1891	12,273	1,142,951	1.07	189,868,638
1892	10,344	1,172,705	.88	114,044,167

THE PANIC YEAR, 1893—LARGEST NUMBER OF BUSINESS FAILURES EVER RECORDED IN THE UNITED STATES.

NEW YORK, December 29.

Bradstreet's will to-morrow publish a review of the business troubles during the year. It says it will doubtless be known as the "panic year, 1893," and has brought with it the largest number of business failures ever recorded in the United States, the total amounting to 15,560.

Continuing, Bradstreet's says:

The increase in the number of mercantile failures in 1893, as compared with the year before, is more than 51 per cent, which, it is unnecessary to explain, is the heaviest annual increase on record. The proportion of individuals, firms, and corporations having a recognized place in business communities throughout the United States which failed during the past year has been 1.51 or 1½ in every 100, as compared with 1 in 100 or 1 per cent in 1892, and as compared with 1.32 per cent, or nearly 1½ in every 1,000 in the last preceding important panic year, 1884.

The grand total of estimated liabilities of individuals, firms, and corporations in business, including banks which reported liabilities in excess of their actual assets, amounts to $403,000,000 in round numbers, or nearly four times the corresponding total of 1892, when the total number of failures was two-thirds as large as this year. The next largest aggregate of liabilities was in the panic year, 1884—$248,700,000, and after that in 1891—$193,100,000, and next in order in 1883—$175,900,000, and fifth in rank in 1890—$175,000,000.

Protection does not protect the financial interests of the country. It creates at times a feverish interest. It gives a false impetus. It may advance a particular industry at the expense of others, but in weighing upon the whole body of the people it is inevitable that it should produce the two results of heavy taxation and discrimination in the benefits of government. And it always has done so.

HARD TIMES NOT DUE TO DEMOCRATIC SUCCESS.

But, say gentlemen, the existing condition may be attributed to the installment in power of the Democratic party. In all the rounds of fact we ask for one that proves this. What section of altered law, what minute of changed fiscal administration, what single alteration in the forces heretofore prevailing has occurred since the 4th of March last? It is well enough in the poetic and sp endid style of my esteemed friend to dwell upon the cause that he has assigned, but when you ask for the fact upon which it is built, that fact is lacking.

BALANCE OF TRADE AGAINST US.

I offer what I regard as reasonable additional explanations of the existing condition of affairs. In 1890 and 1891 we raised the greatest crops that ever were raised in this country. Our excess of corn was 500,000,000 bushels in a year. Our excess of wheat and other products was proportionally great. About that time, too, the agitation began for bringing the World s Fair to these shores, and agents were sent to Europe in every direction, who stimulated intercourse; and the result was that we shipped abroad the largest exports we had ever made up to that time, of grain, which had to be had by Europe, met there by a corresponding deficit in the natural output. Europe needed our produce and took it in an extraordinary extent; and she sent back to us vast quantities of our obligations. But still the balance against her in the transaction arising out of the year 1891 amounted to nearly $200,000,000.

But in the next year our people discounted the crop that they thought was to come. They traded with Europe more extensively, or as extensively as they had done on the crop of the year 1891. And when the crop of the last year, 1892, was summed up, it was found to be greatly short of reasonable expectations. By that process the trade balance against us, as is shown by the figures from the Treasury Department, published in its tables, shifted in a single year nearly $300,000,000. And we had to pay the balance as Europe had to pay the preceding balance in our favor.

That payment has been made during 1893, and it accounts, in my judgment, to a large extent, for the prevailing hard times which set in about the time that American gold was being shipped to Europe. And when you reflect that the active currency of the country is probably less than $1,500,000,000, and that in a single year the trade balances against us were shifted $300,000,000, you can well understand that at the close of this year there would be a tightening in every part of our business.

EXTRAVAGANT PUBLIC EXPENDITURES SPENDING THE SURPLUS.

Nor was that all. During the year 1891 and a part of the year 1892 this Government was engaged in expending the surplus which had been accumulated through years of frugality. The legislation entered into by the preceding Congresses and maturing during this year, maturing in the shape of appropriations, maturing in the shape of largesses, stripped the Treasury bare, and have rendered it necessary for it to hold on with the grip of financial despair to every dollar that it can hold. So that before the middle of the year the surplus in the Treasury was already exhausted, not by changing revenues, not by reducing the income, but by extraordinary expenditures, by having to pay the balances of trade against us and by enormous private payments of our people going abroad. The consequence is that to-day, when we come to settle up, we are "short;" and the cash we should have in the hands of our manufacturers and operators and laborers is in the coffers of Europe.

Now, it seems to me that all of these forces actually existing, naturally working, have produced the condition of affairs now existing. It is unnecessary to call upon fancy and say that it was the incoming of the Democratic party and its installment in power that has produced this result. That is an old wife's fable, unsusceptible of proof, resting simply in common rumor.

NOT DUE TO PERIODICITY.

It has been sought to explain this condition of affairs by the very ingenious hypothesis of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], that it was inevitable in human affairs that periods of inflation and depression would occur. I do not believe it. I believe that every time a financial crisis occurs it is directly traceable to and caused by disregard of some wise and just law of business. It is because some honest method has been forgotten, or some mistake made in fiscal legislation. And so in the depressions which have come, followed by alternations, it has not been owing to any fatalism or any chance that recurs as regularly as a baleful comet, but has been due to a disregard of the laws of taxation, equality, and economy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is because the insidious hand, the inevitable hand of tariff-protection law has been reaching out and gathering in taxes from every quarter of the land.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] has said very earnestly that the industries of this country were waiting to know upon what terms the Democratic party proposed to allow them to continue in business. Upon terms of absolute and honest equality! [Applause on the Democratic side.] Upon terms that will tax them, not for the benefit of their neighbor, but for the revenues of the Government.

The gentleman seems to have been greatly disturbed by the fact that the pending bill puts 131 articles more on the free list. He seems to forget that these articles, if they are sought for in America, will be sought for by the consumers of these 131 articles and that they will come with less of expense to the consumer than they would otherwise have done but for the intervention of the Wilson bill. And pursuing the same line, the gentleman spoke with upraised hand of the terrible consequences that were to happen to this country from opening the doors between Canada and the United States.

Canadian products are selling no cheaper to-day than American products. Canadian labor crosses the line freely, and but within a few days a remonstrance was forwarded here by some association of workingmen up near the northern line, complaining because Canadian workmen cross the boundary in the morning, do a day's work in the United States, and return to their homes at night. The spirit of protection is abroad in that association, and they were seeking to "protect" the American laborer against his brother who happened to be born across the line.

PROHIBITIVE PROTECTION AND IMMIGRATION AS AFFECTING LABOR.

This, Mr. Chairman, is an instance of the false position into which the public mind has been forced by long worshiping at the altars of protection. It seems to me that the gravest charge that can be brought against the protective system, as it has been developed under our laws, is that it not only is excessive in its taxation, but it tends to disorganize society and to perpetuate the artificial divisions between peoples who otherwise would slowly but certainly come together. It seems to me that possibly the worst effect produced by the system of protection, independent of the ruin that has fallen on the laborers of the country, who have the world's markets withdrawn from them, is the fact that it produces unnatural immigration of great bodies of men from one country to another.

Mr. REED. What may unnatural immigration mean?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. My colleague, if he will permit me an interruption, instances the case of a Canadian laboring man coming over into our country, working a day and returning, not bearing the burdens of citizenship, but returning again to his own home, as being complained of by the American laborer. Does my colleague mean to say that we should pursue a policy of permitting the coming of foreign citizens here in competition with our own people, and who do not bear the burdens of citizenship?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I will answer the gentleman's question. There is to-day setting in, and there has been for ten years last past, from Europe, especially from Poland and Hungary, from Italy, and from other countries largely dominated by what are known as the Latin races, a vast immigration of people averaging about half a million each year for the last ten years. Now, if they came here naturally——

Mr. REED. How would that be?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I will answer the gentleman. I say if they came here naturally without artificial attraction, if they were a part of the great migratory masses that at one time or another have left their domiciles and sought new lands, "unawed by influences and unbought by gain," I should be willing to welcome the arrival of every one amongst them. But in so far as the protective system of laws has been responsible for their departure from their homes and their lodgment amongst us, I look upon their coming with doubt.

The pretense has been published abroad, it has been translated into all the languages of the world wherever newspapers are circulated, that under the protective system higher wages were being paid to the American than to any other workingman in the world. Now, I am aware that this is not the sole cause of this extraordinary migration. I know that the steamship and railroad companies have sent their agents abroad to harry the mountains and the valleys for the purpose of bringing men here who in the first place would pay their fares, so as to enable these companies to run their lines with profit, and in the second place, to ship them on to our great unsubdued regions, in order that railroad lands might be taken up and occupied by them, to such an extent that to-day, in the settlements of the far Northwest, there are regions where not a word of English, or any other language cognate to it, is spoken by the inhabitants in their daily intercourse.

But the strongest reason that has induced this unprecedented immigration, that which has been the mainspring to all this, is the false and alluring cry, dinned in the ear of the laborer, formerly contented in Europe and elsewhere, that here he could have higher wages; and the consequence of these causes combined, and especially of the last, has been that, until the opening of last year, when the cholera scare came upon us and for a time a rigid quarantine checked the movement, there was a movement of foreign populations into this country as great almost as the movement of the Moors out of Spain or of the Israelites out of Egypt. I denominate an immigration so obtained as artificial.

And what was the consequence? When, in addition to the expenditure of the surplus, paying it out upon every hand till there was a bankrupt Treasury at the national capital, in addition to a vast balance of trade against us which had to be paid, we found 500,000 men and women and children coming into our midst each year to be taken care of; we did not find them seeking these homes in the far West in full extent, but, as the flies are drawn to the honey, they went to the places where they were told these wages were to be had. They went to the great cities of Boston and Chicago and New York and Philadelphia. They have jammed in there and the result has been that the American workingmen have suffered.

I do not mean the American by birth, but I mean the man who has been fitted here for workmanship; who has been coming here in natural and ordinary fashion for many years, attracted by our institutions and the love of liberty; who has been trained in our life and our industries. He has been crowded away, and his place has been taken by this vast incoming mass, or else his wages have been cut down and he has been compelled to take half a loaf where formerly a whole loaf was granted him.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will my friend allow me——

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. One moment. Now, I will proceed to answer your question, which was whether I thought that the Canadian, who did not bear the burdens of this Government, ought to be allowed to cross the line and to share, with the American, the labor to be had on this side the line?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Where he returns to his own country?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Where he returns to his own home at night. The distinction there is not a distinction of race. It is not a distinction of blood. Brothers are found on both sides of that line. Sons upon each side have the same father. I would not interdict the coming of that man. I would let him come until it was demonstrated that the folly which sought to deepen the lines of political division between two kindred nations was unworthy of being longer continued in American legislation.

Mr. REED. That is, until the wages are equal.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will my colleague allow me another question?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. My colleague refers to a half million of immigrants coming to this country each year, the most of whom are attracted by the larger wages here. Do I understand my friend, that the remedy which he would propose to prevent that immigration would be by decreasing the wages of the American workingman by bringing him into competition, not with the half million who come to our borders annually from abroad, but with the labor of the two hundred millions on the other side, who would send their products here free, in competiton with our labor?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Well, the question is ponderous, but fair, and I will try to reply to it. If I was being chased by bees, I would throw the honey down. If I was being set upon by wolves, I would get the fresh meat out of their sight.

Mr. REED. Even if the children also did not get it?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. If I was certain that the American workingman of to-day was being overwhelmed by a vast mass of men seeking these shores because they believed that wages were higher—a belief which is false in the long run—and if I believed that that delusion depended upon a system of misleading laws, I should seek to repeal those laws, to let wages have their natural place all around the world, and let people move all around the world in their own way. I would not toll them over here by a system of laws, the effect of which is to drive American workingmen from their places, and to delude into starvation those who are thus attracted here.

Mr. REED. Then the gentleman favors an equality of wages between this country and others from which we have immigration?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. That is not a fair way to put the question.

Mr. REED. You can make it fair in answering.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I make answer by the removal of the artificial means by which we create a fictitious value of the article of wages, and let wages have its natural level, as it does elsewhere.

Mr. REED. If we have, then, a higher level, if we keep a portion of the honey, and still keep a portion of the meat, they will be after it. Now, when you take away the honey and the meat and hide it, do you take it away from the children?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I have not been talking about children, I had been talking about men.

Mr. REED. Say men, then, if that pleases you better.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. In answer I would restore a natural condition of affairs by taking down the protective system, which pretends to give higher wages here than otherwise would be given.

Mr. REED. You say, pretend to give higher wages! Do these people go back disappointed?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Yes, sir; they are going back in large numbers now——

Mr. REED. Now! That is true. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. And protective laws are still in force.

Mr. REED. Why, you talk about the law being still in vogue. You might as well talk about having a policeman protect a community when you put him in jail. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Well, I do not think so.

Mr. REED. I know you do not.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. There has been no law repealed.

Mr. REED. But do you not know that the act of 1890 is practically suspended in its operation; and that you have had, as it were, a pistol at its head?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. It was not before the election.

Mr. REED. Before the election! Which election?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The election of 1892.

Mr. REED. The election of 1892, before we entered this disastrous period.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I know that it has not been, and that this year the revenues collected under it are greater than they were last year.

Mr. REED. This year?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. The Treasury accounts tell a different story. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Our sources of information seem to be different. I want no mistaken impression left on the mind of the gentleman from Maine——

Mr. REED. You have not left it.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois (continuing). Or any other person here as to the exact meaning that should be attached to what I have said in regard to this question of foreign immigration. I believe it is wrong to the American workman and to the American people to put up a system of taxation which produces a false system of wages, and which, when it is reached by the workers for it, instantly disappears. I am not opposed in any way to a free and untrammeled movement of the races of man about this earth. I believe that to be one of the high purposes of the Democratic party. I think that in its mission of peace and fraternity, of fair taxation, and the removal of unnatural barriers, the Democratic party has yet to pave the way for a universal kindly fraternity of all men where doctrines of equality and brotherhood will prevail; where the narrow opinions of locality will disappear, and where a man's boast will be that he is a citizen, not of some pent-up Utica, but a citizen of the world.

DEMOCRACY MUST ADVANCE IN ITS WORK.

The Democratic party must stand ready to advance upon the line of fair and honest taxation, no matter what conclusions its enemies may draw, or what gloomy prognostics they may indulge in with regard to the future. I do not believe that the unshackled energies of the American people will work out such doleful results as we have had depicted. I can not think that mills will close all over the Union; that there will be a complete cessation of business, and that starvation's hordes will increase. With the passing of winter will come the renewal of life, and when the Democratic party has established, as it will establish, the right doctrine of commercial intercourse, the results of its wisdom and justice will begin to be felt and prosperity will return.

SEEK TRUTH REGARDLESS OF ITS SURROUNDINGS.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] chose to indulge in a stricture which I thought had become worn and obsolete. In criticising the platform of the Democratic party, as adopted at Chicago, he told us that he had found a marvelous resemblance between its enunciation of the doctrine of commercial freedom, and the nullification ordinance of South Carolina and certain recitals in the Confederate constitution. I have examined the constitution of the State of Michigan somewhat, and I find that it contains many declarations word for word the same as those that were found in the Confederate constitution. The Confederate constitution guaranteed the advantages of the writ of habeas corpus: it guaranteed freedom from unusual search and seizure; it guaranteed equality before the law, and it recognized the existence of Almighty God. So does the constitution of the State of Michigan; so does the constitution of the State of Illinois.

But, Mr. Chairman, does it make any difference in the value of a truth where it has been recited or where it is found? Because a constitution, in the overthrow of which I had some small and humble part, because that constitution contained truths that are the heritage of our race, truths that have been written in every charter of freedom from Magna Charta down to the present day, because the doctrines of personal liberty and of commercial liberty and of equality before the law and the acknowledgement of a Divine Ruler of the world were contained in the Confederate constitution, shall we therefore blot them out of our own constitutions?

If it was a truth, as announced in the Confederate constitution, that the tariff should be for revenue only, are we to reject that truth to-day upon a cry which is addressed, not to reason, but to prejudice? We are to search for the truth wherever it can be found, and this House knows that every truth the people prize, every truth that free men of all races prize, has been first of all wrested by rebels from the control of tyrants. That was true of the Declaration of Independence, it was true of the Federal Constitution, it was true of the Bill of Rights granted by English kings, it is true of every enunciation by which human liberty has been established and human liberty secured; and it is idle at this time in the century to attempt to belittle an issue by referring to the fact that South Carolina may have asserted a proposition or the Confederate constitution declared it. We welcome truth wherever we find it, and place it in its proper relation.

DUTY OF THE DEMOCRATS OF THE HOUSE.

The Democratic party has pledged itself to carry out the policy embodied in this bill, some of whose provisions I think will bear amendment, for, as the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means well said, it is not a perfect instrument. Very few perfect instruments fall from human hands. It has been brought into this House that we may work upon it; it has been brought into this House that we may consider it; it has been brought into this House that we may mold and improve and pass upon it. It is not the completed work either of the party or of the Congress. I say that the duty of the Democratic party with regard to it is to advance along the line of this bill, which points to free raw materials, to reduced taxation, to enlarged commerce, and to a broader and kinder intercourse with our fellow-men.

The gentleman from Michigan grew eloquent upon the question of free raw wool, and thought it was very dreadful that $14,000,000 of taxation should be remitted to the American people and that $51,000,000 of free goods should be added to those already coming in over the border. I wonder whether it occurred to the gentleman that if the poor who are now in the land had had their share of that free trade earlier they would not now be suffering as they are. But it happens that I have a single illustration which will close what I have to say upon this subject. Here in the midst of winter we are assured that thousands and hundreds of thousands of laborers, their wives and children are receiving charity, and free raw materials, worked up by American genius and American machinery, certainly would not have tended to bring about that condition of affairs.

But to my illustration. A gentleman departing from these shores a few weeks ago wrote me, after he had passed through London and had gone to the Mediterranean, that while in London he had bought a suit of wool clothing in the open market for which he had paid thirteen dollars and some cents. That suit was not shoddy; it was the same sort of goods as the writer wore at home, and for which he would have been obliged to pay at least $35.

Mr. Chairman, if upon each of the backs that are now suffering the pangs of cold such a suit could have been put in time by the policy we advocate, commercial freedom, or free trade, if you please, would not have been without its compensations. And if free trade or fair commercial freedom will tend to furnish more cheaply to the toilers of America the essential supplies of life, I am in favor of that commercial freedom even if branded with the name "free trade." [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not see why we should shrink back from the name of free traders. [Applause.] It seems to me that everything that the human race has won that is worth having has borne upon its banners and set in plumes that decked its highest frontlet the word "free." Free speech, free press, free thought, everything you have that is worth having has "free" woven into it; and in the end we will add commerce that is free from unjust exactions to the mighty list. [Applause.]

The American people voted that we should do this thing. The American people voted that we should strike off every unjust, discriminating, and unnecessary burden of taxation. And I am in favor, gentlemen, of executing their will, even though from the ambush of protection on every side arrows of hate and misrepresentation continue to be hurtled. We did not expect when we entered on this crusade that the monopolists of the land would be with us. We do not expect it now. We are not seeking their cooperation. We, the American people, and the party of the American people, are great enough and strong enough to succeed in this reform of the tariff, and in the enactment substantially of this Wilson bill without the aid of any monopolist in America. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois obtained the floor.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is how half past 4 o'clock. My colleague [Mr. HOPKINS], who has just been recognized, can not complete his speech this afternoon. I suggest, therefore, that he yield for a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If that is the pleasure of the committee, it will be satisfactory to me.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. O'NEIL in the chair). The Chair did not hear the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I remarked that it is now half past 4 o'clock, and that my colleague, who has just been recognized, can not complete his speech this evening. I believe the House meets at 11 o'clock in the morning, does it not?

Several MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Therefore, as my colleague can not complete his remarks this evening, I suggest that he yield now for a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. REED. Perhaps some other gentleman would like to go on.

Mr. DALZELL. There is an hour left yet.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. This will not interfere, as I understand, with the night session.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I am content to go on——

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS] to say that he is ready to proceed now.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If it is the wish of the committee, I will do so.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, this motion is a good way to test the sense of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman press his motion?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will make that motion; it can do no harm to take the sense of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order adopted by the House, as the Chair understands, the Committee of the Whole must sit each day until half past 5 o'clock. Therefore it would require unanimous consent for the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Do I understand that the Committee of the Whole must remain in session until half past 5?

The CHAIRMAN. It must, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the gentleman from Illinois does not wish to proceed now, there is a member over here who will be glad to speak.

Mr. SPRINGER. My colleague has said that he is ready to proceed.

Mr. DALZELL. If the gentleman from Illinois gives way now, that would not deprive this side of the House of the hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that it would.

Mr. HOPKINS. If I should yield now I would be recognized for the first hour in the morning?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not for the present occupant of the chair to say. According to the impression of the Chair, the side of the House represented by the gentleman from Illinois would not lose this hour, if some gentleman on the other side should go on at the present time. The Chair has no doubt that in the morning the occupant of the chair would recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Very well.

Mr. SICKLES. We are to take the regular recess to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. The order fixes a recess for half past 5 o'clock.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not want to interrupt the regular course of business, but I observe that an effort is being made now to induce a gentleman on this side to speak who is entitled to the floor at the evening session to-night. If he speaks now the present arrangement will be broken up; and it occurs to me that we had better adhere to the plan originally contemplated.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I am perfectly willing to proceed now as I had intended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the resolution in the platform that was adopted by the Democratic party at its last national convention, asserting as a fundamental principle of that party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties, except for the purposes of revenue alone, brought that question prominently before the American people in the great Presidential campaign of 1892. It is not surprising that many misguided Democrats interpreted the overwhelming defeat of the Republican party in that memorable campaign as an indorsement by the American people of their denunciation of protection and all tariff legislation.

The exultant spirit with which the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House commenced their labor in the preparation of the bill which was intended to carry out the pledges of their party contained in their national platform has been very materially cooled by the recent elections in all of the Northern States. Their interpretation of the political victory of 1892 has not been accepted by the industrial North, and if we can judge from protests which have been heard from Birmingham, Ala., West Virginia, Louisiana, and other sections in the South where the spirit of industry has found lodgment, it has not been accepted by the people of the South either.

The bill which has been reported by the Committee on Ways and Means is certainly an anomaly in Congressional legislation. It neither comes up to the standard of the bold and defiant declarations of their party platform, nor meets the approval or expectations of the more conservative element of their party. As a revenue measure it is a confessed failure. With the Treasury almost depleted and the Government marching on the high road to bankruptcy, this bill still further reduces the revenues of the Government and cuts off its power to meet its obligations to the enormous amount of $70,000,000 annually.

It ignores the fundamental principle of the Democratic party, that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties, except for the purpose of revenue only, by putting and keeping upon the free list all the staple and leading articles of import where the duty would be a duty for revenue only, such as a duty upon tea, coffee, sugar, and many other articles which, under Republican legislation, have been placed upon the free list, Republicans contending that these are the necessaries of life and should be brought in free of duty. This in itself is a cowardly surrender of the boasted principles which the Democrats claim are so dear to their hearts.

While they have been loud and long in their denunciations of Republicans and of the Republican method of tariff legislation, they have not, in this bill, had the courage of their convictions to reverse the legislation of the Republican party in this respect, and put a revenue duty upon any of these articles. They have compromised with their consciences, however, by making a deadly assault in the bill upon every industry throughout the New England, Northern, and Western States. No industry that was giving employment to labor at remunerative wages and was developing a market for the products of American farmers has escaped.

I shall later on in my remarks pay more particular attention to the schedules in this most remarkable bill, and shall endeavor to show that those schedules have been prepared with no friendly interest in American manufactures, with no love or care for American wage-earners, and in a spirit which has called forth the most profound acknowledgments from foreign importers and foreign manufacturers. It will not escape the attention of the people throughout the North generally, that the controlling minds in the Democratic Committee on Ways and Means who have formulated and presented to the country this strange bill come from a section of the country that has in times past been pronounced in the advocacy of free trade, and has shown a keener appreciation for the friendship of free-trade England than any disposition to cultivate fraternal relations with that section of our Union which lies north of that imaginary division known as Mason and Dixon's line.

The subject of tariff legislation has become, and is now, one of absorbing interest to all classes and conditions of people in the United States. There is no subject which will so readily challenge the respectful attention of an audience as this much-talked-of tariff question. People have come to appreciate the fact that the adoption or rejection of the policy of protection as advocated and maintained by the Republican party, for now more than a generation, is one which affects the interest of every citizen, I care not what his calling may be or in what portion of this grand Union his home may be found. In view of this, it seems to me that it is not inappropriate to briefly review the legislation of this country from its earliest days upon this subject and to point out some of the leading historical facts connected with this class of legislation, and from these draw such conclusions as in my judgment this legislation and these facts warrant.

It is important, too, that the people of this country should not forget that one of the great, if not the great cause for the rejection of the Articles of Confederation and the adoption of the Constitution of the United States was to enable our forefathers by proper tariff legislation to protect the interests of the recently emancipated colonists from the grasping avarice of English manufacturers and English importers, and to build up in the American Republic vast and varied industries in numbers and character which would be sufficient not only to meet the wants of the American people, but to make our country one of the important factors in the commerce of the world.

It is important, too, that the American farmers and the laboring people of the country should understand and remember that the doctrine of free trade as advocated by the Democratic party first found its birth and its subsequent support among the great leaders at the South, whose hearts never beat in sympathy with the cause of the laboring men, and who believed in establishing a social aristocracy in this country under which the men who obtained their livelihood by manual labor would forever "be hewers of wood and drawers of water" to the favored class, who arrogated to themselves all the rights and advantages that accrue to American citizenship, and looked upon their less fortunate brothers as but little better than the slaves who tilled the soil of their vast plantations.

The second bill that passed the first Congress that ever assembled under the Constitution, and that was signed by George Washington, was a tariff bill intended to be protective in its character. It was hailed by the farmers as well as the artisans of those days as a declaration of industrial emancipation from English power scarcely second to that great declaration of political independence which resulted in the establishment of the American Republic. This first tariff bill was fathered by a Virginian in the person of James Madison, one of the illustrious Presidents of the United States. Any person who will take the time to read the proceedings of Congress during the session which gave birth to this now famous piece of legislation, will affirm what I now assert, that the object and the purpose of legislation of that character was to build up in the different sections of the American Republic industries which would furnish all classes and kinds of products necessary to meet the wants of the American citizen.

There was no division of political parties on this question at that time. The feeling of patriotism was too active and too great to permit partisanship to sway the votes or control the voice of any of the people's representatives in preparing and in enacting into law legislation which would enable the Government to raise a revenue by levying and collecting import duties and at the same time would serve as a stimulus to induce capital to invest in manufacturing industries on this side of the Atlantic.

I have neither the time nor the inclination to follow in detail the various pieces of legislation that was from time to time enacted to enlarge and strengthen this first tariff bill. At this period in the history of our country the principles of protection, as now advocated by the Republican party, found its stanchest defenders in the Southern States. Whoever will take the pains to examine the debates of Congress when the tariff law of 1816 was being considered, will find that John C. Calhoun of South Carolina was the man who was most prominent in the advocacy of that measure and of protective legislation generally; and in a great speech in support of the bill when it was pending in this House advanced arguments in favor of protection which he himself at no subsequent date was ever able to overthrow, and which to-day stand unanswered by any of the advocates of free trade.

Up to this time in the history of our country the slave-owners of the South had not perceived that legislation which developed industries that required a high grade of mechanical skill and intelligence, to be successfully carried on, was destructive of the very principle of slave labor, and that in the race of prosperity and the accumulation of wealth they were being distanced by their sister States in the North.

John C. Calhoun, the protectionist of 1816, was one of the first great Southern leaders to discover this fact. He was seconded and supported by Senator Hayne, of his own State, and by McDuffie, one of the ablest, most eloquent, and fearless advocates of free trade who have ever discussed that doctrine on the floor of this House. No argument in favor of free trade and in support of the Democratic position on this question has been advanced during the present generation that was not touched upon, enriched, and embellished by the genius of McDuffie.

Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee who framed the bill now under consideration, and who have presented to the country their report upon that bill, have gathered their inspiration and their arguments from the rich field that was furnished them in reports and speeches made by this celebrated advocate of free trade during the time that he was chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House. He lived in a different generation and under different conditions than the free traders of to-day and was a more fearless and frank advocate than his followers in this generation. The Republican party has ever contended that protection builds up the social as well as the material condition of the laboring men of America and that free trade has the directly opposite tendency. That the one system is to ennoble and the other to degrade the wage-earners of this country. The free-trade advocates of to-day attempt to avoid this logical conclusion by contending that American laborers can accomplish more in the same space of time, and that a reduction of import duty will not necessitate a corresponding reduction in the wages of the laborer.

I shall before I finish show the utter fallacy of this position. My purpose here and now, however, is to show that the men who formerly advocated free trade, and who are regarded as the fathers of the Democratic thought upon this subject, were too honest and too fearless in the advocacy of their opinions to resort to any such subterfuge. They planted their faith upon the peculiar institutions that existed in the South; they proposed an alliance with free-trade England because they believed that by such an alliance only could slavery be maintained. They saw at the North that the men who worked in the furnaces and wrought at the forges were men who had a controlling voice in the local, Congressional, and State, as well as national elections. They viewed with apprehension the onward march of this class of American citizens in the highways of intelligence and social advancement. They believed that the spirit of liberty could be best carried forward by the maintenance of an aristocracy such as at that time was held in the South, and that the laboring man should not participate in the rights that are accorded under the Constitution to an American citizen, and in support of this assertion I crave the indulgence of the House while I quote a few selections from a speech of Mr. McDuffie, of South Carolina, delivered in this House on the 11th day of May, 1830. In speaking upon this labor question and the influence that protection has in benefiting the wage-earners, he said:

> Yielding to the influence of a mawkish and mistaken humanity, our own statesmen have generally conceded that slavery is a political evil as it regards the white population. Now, sir, I firmly believe that there never has existed a form of slavery so favorable to the happiness of the servants, and at the same time so conducive to political freedom, as that which we are considering.
>
> Where those who perform the menial and degrading offices of society constitute a part of a political body and participate in the government of the country, through the elective franchise, this high privilege is degraded, and the spirit of liberty as well as its security diminished. It is not in the natur of things that a mere dependent who brushes your coat and cleans your boots can be regarded by you with a feeling of equality which is due to a freeman, nor is it expected that he should have the profound feelings that belong to a freeman.
>
> A state of servile dependence is utterly incompatible with political freedom; and by conferring the right of suffrage upon persons in that condition, whatever may be their color, you do not elevate them to the character of freemen, but degrade liberty to their level. What, sir, would you expect from an election where hostlers and grooms, and postillions and footmen, should come to the polls and control the result? Where all the offices of dependent servitude are performed by a separate caste, distinguished by color, and wholly excluded from all participation in the Government, it is not to be doubted that the spirit of freedom is rendered much more proud and lofty by the very contrast.

Mr. McDuffie asserts in this speech what was believed and practiced by all the leading free traders at the South. In his elaborate and able argument he undertook to demonstrate how much better it would be for the South to sell their raw products, which consisted at that time principally of cotton, to the English manufacturers free of duty, and to permit the English manufacturers to import the manufactured products, not only of cotton, but of all other industries, into this country free of duty in exchange therefor. The tillers of the soil, such as our farmers at the North, and the men who labor in our mines, our foundries, and our factories, found no lot or place in his scheme of government. They belonged to a class who, in the opinion of this great free trader, ought to be thankful that they were permitted even to live in the same country with such choice spirits as himself and his free-trade associates.

The cardinal principle announced in the constitution of the so-called Confederate States was an absolute prohibition of any imposition of import duties. Free trade was there recognized as clearly and as fully as it has ever been asserted in any civilized government. The distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and other leading members of the Democratic portion of the committee who are principally responsible for this bill with all its free-trade qualities and tendencies, not only rallied to the support of the constitution containing such declarations as these, but imperiled their lives upon more than one occasion in its defense, in the hope that it might become an established fact. While disappointed in their efforts to destroy the Union and establish their ideal free-trade government, they have ever been constant to this doctrine.

It is therefore not surprising that a bill is here presented that is not only a menace to the industries that have developed and enriched the New England, Middle, and Western States, and would have made the Southern States blossom like a rose had the people in this favored section taken advantage of the legislation and developed the resources of their States, but is also antagonistic to the rights and dearest interests of the wage-workers in this country. Disguise it as they may in any form of rhetoric, the stern fact appears that in the whole history of our country, whenever the principles of free trade have temporarily obtained the ascendency, we have had times of industrial depression and capital has remained uninvested. The furnace fires have gone out, the busy hum of the spindle and the loom has been hushed, and the laborer has walked the streets unemployed, while hunger and want have been the companions of his wife and children.

The import duties imposed under the law of 1816 were not high enough to protect American industries against the vast amount of imported goods that were shipped to this country by English manufacturers, and the universal judgment of history is that the people of this country for the years following that and preceding the legislation of 1824 and 1828 suffered financial and commercial distress to a degree that drove them well nigh into general bankruptcy. There was an almost universal demand for legislation that would guarantee a sufficient protection to American manufacturers against the onslaught that was being made upon them by foreign manufacturers. Mr. Bolles, in his Financial History of the United States, in speaking of this period, says:

During the four years between 1817 and 1821, the holders of property in the United States were supposed to have suffered a depreciation of nearly $300,000,000. General bankruptcy spread its darkness over the land; many of the wealthiest families were reduced to poverty; laborers suffered for want of bread; improvements of all sorts were abandoned, and a scene of the most intense national distress ensued.

The same historian goes on to describe the condition of iron manufacturers at this period, and among other things says:

Every man who made it his principal business, who sold his iron and purchased his provision and stock, was ruined. His forges, his lands, his goods and chattels were all struck off under the sheriff's hammer at public auction; he himself was driven to jail; his workmen were unemployed; some of them followed their employer to prison; others emigrated to new countries; their families were reduced to abject want and were compelled to ask relief from the town or resort to beggary.

It was this condition of the American people, so graphically and truly described by this eminent writer, that led to the tariff legislation of 1824, and to the still stronger protective measure known as the tariff law of 1828. Those who are familiar with the history of our country immediately following this legislation will bear me out in the statement that I make, that every industry seemed inspired with new life; old mills were started up, and new ones were built; furnace fires were again lighted; and instead of feeding the laboring class, unemployed and walking the streets in idleness, they were given employment at good wages, and as if by magic a depressed and poverty-stricken country was changed into a happy, contented, and industrious people.

This condition of affairs continued until the agitation and aggression of the free traders of the South forced the country into the compromise measure of 1832, a measure which in many respects resembles the bill now under consideration. The avowed object of many of the supporters of that great measure was to reach absolute free trade by a system of deductions from import duties yearly until a period should be reached when a custom-house would be a thing of the past. I shall not take the time to go into an elaborate discussion of the history of that great measure and the results under it. It is enough for my purpose to show to this House what the facts of history demonstrate; that the scenes and incidents that followed the extraordinary importation of goods into this country from 1817 to 1821 were again experienced, and that the thriving mills and factories throughout the North were seized with an industrial paralysis, progressive in its nature, which threatened the ultimate extinction of the life of all such industries in our Republic.

The condition of the farmer was but little better than that of the laboring man. The richness of the earth yielded abundant crops to the cultivation of man, but there was no money in the country; there was no market for the surplus farm products; there was an abundance of foreign goods in the American markets, but no money or means possessed by the farmer with which to purchase them. It is stated by competent authority that so baleful was the influence of the compromise measure here referred to, on the industries of the country prior to the act of 1842, that more than 200,000 persons, chiefly factory hands, were out of employment in the section of the country east of the Hudson River. You must remember, gentlemen, that that was at a period when our country's population was scarcely over one-third of what it is now.

This vast army of unemployed factory hands was the sacrifice made to appease the wrath of the free-trade advocates of America. Their cry for work or for bread for their families touched the hearts of the American people, and a demand was made upon Congress to reenact such legislation as would restore these men to their wanted callings. It was in response to such appeals that the tariff act of 1842 was enacted into law, and upon its passage every establishment was at once set in motion and every unemployed factory hand was given employment. I can not refrain in this connection from quoting from an article written by Freeman Hunt, a Democrat and the editor of the Merchants' Magazine, a periodical of wide circulation in those days, and one which voiced the sentiments of the manufacturing and commercial classes of the country. In speaking upon this subject he said:

The condition of the country at the date of the passage of the act of 1842 was humiliating in the extreme. The Treasury, unable to obtain at home the means required for administering the Government, even on the most economical scale, had failed in all its efforts to negotiate a loan at 6 per cent, even in the same foreign markets in which it had but recently paid at par a debt bearing an interest of only 3 per cent. Many of the States, and some of the oldest of them, had been forced to suspend the payment of the interest of their debts. The banks to a great extent were in a state of suspension. Of the merchants, a large portion had become bankrupt; factories and furnaces being closed hundreds of thousands of persons were totally unemployed; commerce had scarcely an existence, those who could not sell their own labor being unable to purchase of others. Nevertheless, deep as was the abyss into which the nation had been plunged, so magical was the effect of the adoption of the system that had turned the balance of trade in its favor that scarcely had the act of August, 1842, become a law, when the Government found that it could have all its wants supplied at home. Mills, factories, and furnaces long closed were again opened; labor came into demand, and before the close of its third year prosperity almost universally reigned.

It would seem, Mr. Chairman, that the experiences of the people of this country which have here been mentioned, would have been sufficient to have created an almost united sentiment in favor of ample and complete protection to all American industries, and I think, sir, had it not been for the influence that was exerted by the slave-owners of the South in favor of free trade, that the legislation of this country upon this subject would have, from 1842 to the present time, been uniform and continuous. But the great leaders who recklessly plunged this country into civil war had come to believe that the preservation of slavery depended upon the establishment of free trade in America, and they were sufficiently strong to enact a legislation that was intended to gradually reach this object of their ambition.

It was in pursuance of this, that the great measure known as the Walker law became a part of the legislation of our country in 1846; and it was the same influence, exerted, in my judgment, against the best interests of America, that enabled the same class of legislators to procure the still further free-trade legislation of 1857. The condition of our country under these laws is too well known to the American people to require a restatement at my hands here. It was a repetition of the same old story, a story of a depleted Treasury, of the balance of trade against our country; of idle mills and dead furnaces; general stagnation in business; all of the attendant hardships that follow the cultivation of agricultural products without adequate markets: factory hands without employment; homes without the comforts and necessaries of life; and little children asking their mothers for bread where none was to be given. Mr. Greeley, in a few sentences, has given a picture of the condition of the people of New York during this free-trade period, which I commend to the consideration of my free-trade friends before they vote upon this pending bill. On January 15, 1855, there appeared in the New York Tribune the following article:

Who is hungry? Go and see. You that are full-fed and know not what it is to be hungry—perhaps never saw a hungry man—go and see. Go and see thousands, men and women, boys and girls, old and young, black and white, of all nations, crowding and jostling each other, almost fighting for the first chance, acting more like hungry wolves than human beings, in a land of plenty. It is only by the continuous efforts of two policemen that the crowd can be kept in order, or made to wait until the food is ready for distribution. Such a scene may be seen between 11 and 2 o'clock around the corner of Orange and Chatham streets, where charity gives a dinner to the poor, and soup and bread to others to carry to their miserable families. On Saturday we spent an hour there at the hour of high tide. We have never see anything like it before. Upward of a thousand people were fed with a plate of soup, a piece of bread, and a piece of meat on the premises, and in all more than 1,600. On the same day 1,130 portions of soup were dealt out at Stewart's "soup kitchen," in the rear of the great store, corner of Reede street and Broadway.

At the rooms on Duane street, for the relief of the poor, on the same day, they gave food to 2,256. In the Sixth ward alone over 6,000 persons were fed by charity on Saturday, January 13. And this is only one day in one ward. Meanwhile scenes of a like nature are being enacted all over the city. A procession of several thousand persons kept marching about the streets yesterday, with flags and banners which bore such inscriptions as "Hunger is a sharp thorn;" "We want work." Such are the scenes that are being enacted daily before our eyes, while the cry of hard times reaches us from every part of the country. The making of roads is stopped, factories are closed, and houses and ships are no longer being built. Factory hands, road-makers, carpenters, bricklayers, and laborers are idle, paralysis is rapidly embracing every pursuit in the country. The cause of all this stoppage of circulation is to be found in the steady outflow of gold to pay foreign laborers for the cloth, the shoes, the iron, and the other things that could be produced by American labor, but which can not be so produced under our present revenue system.

The Republican party has been denounced by the Democratic party for its steady adherence to the principles of protection, and for its courageous support of legislation that has created and developed these vast and varied industries throughout the length and breadth of our land. Our principles have been denounced as a fraud and a robbery of the great majority for the benefit of the few, but I thank God that no such scenes as these, which have been so faithfully portrayed by Horace Greeley, have ever been repeated or witnessed during the entire period that the Republican party was in control of the destinies of this great Republic. No large classes of men have ever been compelled under Republican administration to appeal to charity for the support of themselves and those of their families who are dearer to them than their own lives. None of the great cities that have grown up under the beneficent legislation that has been given to the country by the Republican party have ever had within their borders to establish soup-houses to protect the poor of their numbers.

It is the boast of the Republican party and the glory of its administration that it has given to this country such laws and such legislation as have diversified labor and induced capital to invest in new industries and furnish employment at good wages to all who had a desire to earn a livelihood by honest industry.

For two hundred years England has been mistress of the seas. Her commerce has been carried on under English flags to every civilized port in the world. She has been selfish and aggressive in the extreme. The moneyed and manufacturing interests of England have directed her commercial and legislative policy. Like Alexander the Great, her ambition has been to commercially dominate and control all the great manufacturing interests in every part of the known world. Her colonial policy with America was to prevent the establishment of any new industries on the American continent, and to destroy those which had found a foothold.

The industry and the energy of this country under her colonial system were made to feed and increase her home manufactures. That illiberal and hostile policy which the mother country displayed to the colonies in our early history has been steadfastly pursued by her from that day to this. Whatever advancement has been made by American manufacturers has been over the protest and in spite of the piratical rivalry of that great manufacturing country. The sentiment on this question that has always prevailed in England was voiced by Lord Brougham in 1816, in a remarkable speech relating to the financial and industrial condition of England, in which he recommended to British manufacturers to export and sell their products in this country at a loss, holding that it was well worth while to incur a loss upon first exportations, in order by the glut to stifle those rising manufactories in the United States; stating that after this was done the British manufacturers could put their prices back where they could make a profit that would not only recompense them for the sacrifices made in destroying American manufactories, but would yield them a handsome profit besides.

This advice of this great statesman has been adopted by English manufacturers again and again during the last seventy years. There is scarcely a successful industry which is now amply and fully protected under existing law that has not felt the crushing effect of that policy under previous inadequate import duties; but in every instance where Congress has given the American producers a duty which would be sufficient to protect and encourage the industry, it has not only been successfully carried on, but has furnished the article to the American consumer at a less price than was exacted by the foreign competitor when he controlled the market.

For more than two generations English manufacturers and English importers have taken almost as lively an interest in our Presidential campaigns as the citizens themselves; and ever since the organization of the Republican party the English Government, regardless of political divisions at home, have been united in their opposition to the policy of the Republican party and to its political success. The reason is plain. The Republican party has advocated what Henry Clay so eloquently styled the American policy, while during this period the Democratic party has advocated a policy of free trade that found its ablest advocates and most fertile disseminators of that particular faith among English capitalists and English statesmen. The so-called Walker tariff of 1846 was framed on lines and political ideas congenial to the English mind; and it is said that the report of Secretary Walker, which treats upon this subject, received the unprecedented recognition of a republication in England by authority of the British Parliament.

During the campaign which resulted in the election of Mr. Polk as President over the protectionist, Henry Clay, the London Times said:

A subscription was recently opened to raise funds to circulate free trade tracts in foreign countries; about £440,000 were subscribed. Some of these tracts are to be printed in New York for circulation in the United States.

At this time it was published in Niles that at Manchester £100,000 was raised for the same purpose; and the same publication charges:

It has never been denied that most of the money thus raised was used to elect Polk, with the expectation or understanding that the tariff of 1842 would be radically modified in the direction of free trade.

Whether there was an understanding or not, it is a little remarkable that, immediately after the election of Polk as President, the Walker law of 1846 was formulated and passed by Congress, and was received with every mark of approval in England. English newspapers and English manufacturers have denounced every protective tariff measure that has been fathered and passed by the Republican party from the Morrill bill to the McKinley law. The Cobden Club, a famous free-trade organization, has increased its membership by establishing headquarters in New York, and many of the leading statesmen in the Democratic party to-day are members of this free-trade organization. The present Secretary of the Treasury is one of its shining lights. Its avowed object and purpose is to commit this Government to the doctrines of free trade.

When the McKinley bill was presented to the House of Representatives and was under discussion, the most virulent and scandalous criticisms and opposition were found in the English press and in utterances of English statesmen. No Democratic member in this House, in the discussion of that great measure, ever indulged in harsher language in the denunciation of it than can be found in the great English journals of that day. The election of President Cleveland and the restoration of the Democratic party to power, with full control of both Houses of Congress, after more than a generation, has been accepted by the people of Great Britain as a triumph of the free-trade doctrine, and ever since the preparation of this bill was commenced by the Committee on Ways and Means, foreign importers and foreign manufacturers have been maturing their plans to again take possession of the American markets.

The publication of the President's message in London before it was given out to the American people is in harmony with the present order of things and of the position of this great Democratic party. The Republican party is an American party. It believes in advancing the interests of the American citizen over that of the foreigner; it believes in protecting the wages of the American laborer over that of his foreign competitor; it believes that the American manufacturer has some claims upon the American Government that are not possessed by those in any foreign country, and it believes that the interests of all classes and shades of people in this country will be best subserved by holding the American market for the benefit of American laborers, American farmers, and American manufacturers. Holding these views, as we do, it is not strange that the principles of our party are not popular in Great Britain. It is not remarkable in view of all this that the Democratic party finds as strong support in England as they do in America; and defeat for them is felt as keenly abroad as it is by their own leaders here.

The recent election in the States of Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, and Iowa indicate that the people of this country are beginning to realize that their interests are jeopardized by the success of the Democratic party in 1892. This generation has grown up under Republican administration and protective laws. They know nothing by experience of free trade or Democratic ascendency. It is true that history teaches that the best interests of this country are protected and subserved by maintaining adequate tariff laws; but so persistent have been the advocates of free trade, and so emphatic have been the denunciations by the Democrats of the Republican party and Republican measures, that many honest and true citizens believed that a change in the Administration would be followed by additional prosperity to the people and better times in all classes and grades of business.

Republicans in the campaign of 1892 pointed out again and again the evil results that would inevitably follow an overwhelming Democratic victory; but it seems that an object lesson was necessary to demonstrate fully and completely the inability of the Democratic party to govern and control a country composed of 67,000,000 people, and to prove that their industrial and economical policy was one which inured to the benefit of our great commercial rival, England, and to the detriment of our own people.

The fallacy that a properly graduated tariff law increases the price of the products manufactured in this country to the consumer, has been so often exposed that it seems almost useless to discuss it here, and I would not were it not for the fact that, both in the report of the committee and in the discussion that has been so far had upon this great measure, the contention is made that the import duty is added to the foreign price when the consumer purchases the imported article.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Illinois is a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, I ask unanimous consent that he have permission to continue his remarks without limit in the morning

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I now ask that the committee rise, as it is near the time fixed by the special order for taking a recess.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee must rise now, and go into the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4864, had come to no resolution thereon.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I desire to state, Mr. Speaker, in justice to myself, that on yesterday the Chair stated, in connection with the action of the House towards certain members who had been temporarily absent that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CORNISH] had requested the Chair to present an application for a leave of absence until Monday, which had escaped the memory of the Chair, and that it was not the fault of the gentleman from New Jersey but the fault of the Chair. On that statement the gentleman from New Jersey was not published as a delinquent. Also in regard to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN]. He said:

I simply wish to state that I have seen it in several newspapers that I was one of the delinquents. I was absent with the leave of the House in the first place, and I was at home, detained by sickness in my family.

The Chair stated in response to this that it appeared from the Journal the gentleman from Mississippi had leave of absence on account of sickness in his family, but in making up the list of absentees that fact was overlooked. The Speaker further stated that that being the fact, the gentleman's name would not be included in the list of delinquents.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in justice to myself, let me state that I had the advantage of both of these instances, and yet my name was published as a delinquent. I wish to call the attention of the House to this injustice that seems to have been done to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina had leave of absence, as he has stated: but all leaves of absence were revoked by order of the House. The gentleman from South Carolina had pending on the desk another application for leave of absence, which escaped the attention of the Chair.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. That is the fact, Mr. Speaker, that I desired to have stated.

The SPEAKER. That is correct; it escaped the attention of the Chair.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. And that oversight caused me to be published as a delinquent.

The SPEAKER. The facts of the case are that the gentleman was not here, but some request was placed upon the desk, and it would have been submitted to the House, but by some oversight it was not submitted.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. That was what I desired to call the attention of the House to, Mr. Speaker, simply that this justice might be done to me.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] will preside at the evening session.

The hour of 5 o'clock and 30 minutes having now arrived, the Chair declares the House in recess until 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted exclusively to debate on the pending bill.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., was called to order by Mr. BROOKSHIRE as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is now in session for the purpose of debate only on the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole under the special order for the purpose of considering this bill.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, in a message which the President sent to Congress in December, 1885, he said that "The zealous watchfulness of our constituents, great and small, supplements their suffrages, and before the tribunals they establish every public servant should be judged."

With a unanimity not often to be found among the constituents of a Representative, the people of the Nineteenth Congressional district of New York, which I have the honor to represent here, have taken a stand in regard to the bill now before the House, which will constitute the principle of the tribunal by which I, who am their public servant, shall be judged.

It is for me a source of infinite regret that, at a time when the interests of so great a constituency are in such jeopardy as they are placed in by the provisions of this bill, when the populations of the many surrounding towns and villages and the large farming district which are dependent upon it for their prosperity are watching with so much anxiety the conduct of their Representative in Congress, they have not upon the floor of this House at this crisis an advocate of more ability and experience. Fortunately for me, they have marked out the course which I should pursue, and fortunately, too, the course which they have thus marked out for me is one which meets with my heartiest approval, and which it is my pleasure as well as my duty to follow.

I have before me a memorial to this illustrious body, signed by 69,819 persons, 50,465 of whom are inhabitants of the city of Troy and vicinity, and which I shall present to the House tomorrow. I ask the Clerk to read said memorial.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The people of Troy, without regard to party affiliations, in mass meeting assembled, do respectfully petition your honorable body and represent as follows: That this city and the surrounding country is the center of the great collar, cuff, and shirt making industries of the United States. The capital invested in Troy alone in these industries is $5,000,000; employment is here given to upwards of 15,000 persons, to whom more than $4,000,000 in wages is annually paid This money finds its way into all the channels of trade and its effect is beneficially felt by every interest in the community. Fully 90 per cent of the employés are women, and the work is done by them not only in the factories but at their homes, both in the city and the farming districts. The busy and prosperous communities which occupy this valley, the large number of individual property-owners and the thrifty and skilful body of artisans who have made their homes here, and who are sources of strength to the State in times of peace as well as war, are all powerful witnesses to the value and importance of these industries and are entitled to the favorable consideration of the National Legislature.

Indeed, the continued growth and prosperity of this city and the neighboring villages is absolutely dependent upon the success of these industries and the payment of fair wages to the employés. The recent census shows that the manufacture of shirts is carried on in 113 cities of the country, with a capital invested of more than $12,000,000 and an annual product of nearly $30,000,000. Labor is the chief item in these manufactures, being 60 per cent of the cost of production. Under the existing law the duties levied on foreign goods are 40 per cent ad valorem, and 30 cents per dozen on collars and cuffs made wholly or in part of linen, 35 per cent ad valorem and 15 cents per dozen on cotton collars and cuffs, 55 per cent ad valorem on shirts, and 35 per cent on shirting linens. By the Wilson bill it is proposed to entirely abolish the specific duties and to reduce the ad valorem rates to 35 per cent on collars, cuffs, and shirts, while nothing like a corresponding reduction is made in the duties on the raw materials of the manufactured product, linen being reduced from 35 per cent to 30 per cent ad valorem.

As to collars and cuffs these rates are less than the ad valorem rates which existed prior to the passage of the tariff law of 1890. It will be impossible to meet foreign competition with these rates of duties. A vast disproportion exists in the wages paid to employés in these industries in this country and those paid abroad; the average weekly wages being $3 in Scotland, $2.70 in France, $2.70 in Londonderry, $2.40 in Berlin, and $1.50 in Saxony, while it is $8 in Troy. The reductions in the present rates will result in the taking of wages from the home-workers for the benefit of foreigners and will seriously cripple, if they do not destroy, a considerable portion of the domestic manufacture. They will inevitably tend to degrade our labor to the inferior conditions that prevail in other lands. They will bring distress to thousands of homes, and idleness and want to a great body of deserving citizens, who will find it impossible to obtain employment in any other occupations where the labor of women can be fairly remunerated.

Your honorable body is undoubtedly aware of the ease with which ad valorem duties can be evaded by undervaluation. The practice, which it is conceded prevails in this respect, together with the facts already pointed out, make the proposed rates of practically no benefit to our manufacturers or wage-earners.

The present tariff has not raised the prices of these articles to consumers, nor has it created any combinations or trusts which control the business, nor has it proven to be prohibitory of all foreign competition; but, on the contrary, the domestic competition is greater than ever it was before, while the prices to the consumers have been reduced. We raise our voices, then, on behalf of thousands of wage-earners whose comfortable living is threatened by the proposed reduction and of an important domestic manufacture in which our fellow-citizens have large sums of money invested, and we earnestly protest against the enactment of the Wilson bill in its present form, and respectfully ask your honorable body to modify it by continuing the rates of duties that now exist upon the importation of collars, cuffs, and shirts.

Mr. HAINES. This memorial was adopted on Tuesday evening, December 19, at a meeting held in the city of Troy to protest against the provisions of this bill. The meeting was presided over by the Democratic mayor of the city and addressed by several of the principal Democratic officers of the city of Troy and the county of Rensselaer, and it was approved by the press of the two counties which constitute the Nineteenth Congressional district, without regard to party affiliations.

The principle upon which my constituents contend against this bill has been stated for them and for me by a President whom we have twice assisted in placing at the head of the Executive Department of the Government.

Justice and fairness dictate—

Said he in one of his messages—

that in any modification of our present laws relating to revenue, the industries and interests which have been encouraged by such laws, and in which our citizens have large investments, should not be ruthlessly injured or destroyed. We should also deal with the subject in such a manner as to protect the interests of American labor, which is the capital of our workingmen.

Another principle by which we should be guided in the consideration of this question, and by which I shall be guided in the stand I take on this bill, has been stated by one of the most eminent and influential Democrats in the country:

That the tariff on manufactured articles should, as a general rule, be larger where similar articles are manufactured in this country than where they are not. That the tariff imposed upon all manufactured articles (other than those which, for good reasons, are placed on the free list) should equal the difference between the rate of wages paid in this and foreign countries, so far as labor enters into the cost of their production.

So far as concerns the interests which I have the honor to represent, these principles have been totally ignored by the framers of the bill before the House. The opposition of my constituents to the bill is not the opposition "that rallies behind the intolerance of monopoly or the power of concentrated wealth, or the inertia of fixed habits," or the alleged "honest errors of a generation of false teachers." We oppose the bill for the reason that, while its designers were "forced to consider," they did not consider in framing it, so far as my constituents are concerned, "that great interests do exist, whose existence and prosperity it is no part of our reform either to imperil or to curtail."

The framers of the bill themselves lay down a principle by which they claim to have been governed, and which, so far as the industries of my district are concerned, they altogether abandon, that "in adjusting duties upon what may be called the finished products we have tried to impose such rates as will not destroy or distress any of our own industries on the one hand, nor on the other secure to them absolute and oppressive monopoly of the whole market." If this rule had been strictly adhered to by the framers of this bill in considering the shirt, collar, and cuff industry the tariff now existing would not be disturbed; and that industry has not "an absolute and oppressive monopoly of the whole market;" while the change proposed by this bill in the existing tariff will not only distress but will go far to destroy the great industry upon which the prosperity of my district largely depends.

I will take the principle approved by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee, attributed by them in their report to the late President Garfield, that—

Duties should be so high that our manufacturers can fairly compete with the foreign product, but not so high as to enable them to drive out the foreign article, enjoy the monopoly of the trade, and regulate the prices as they please.

The population of the city of Troy is 70,000. From 15 per cent to 20 per cent of this population is directly interested in the collar and cuff industry. The city of Troy has $5,000,000 of capital invested in that enterprise. The annual sales of those products amount to nearly $10,000,000. The annual wages paid amount to $4,300,000. There are 15,749 persons employed, the wages paid to whom amount to 44½ per cent of the sales and 60 per cent of the cost.

In 113 cities of the United States the amount of capital invested in the shirt industry is $12,151,900, and the value of the product is nearly $30,000,000. There are 26,560 persons employed in the shirt industry alone; and of this number 8,713 are engaged in that business in the city of Troy.

Ninety per cent of the persons employed in these industries in Troy are women. No other industry in the State of New York gives employment to so large a proportion of women. This industry gives them employment not only in the factories, but in their homes. About one-half the work is done in the factories; the rest is done in homes throughout the city and in the farming districts for many miles around. These industries are the principal source of income for families representing 50,000 persons in and around the city of Troy. They are the only source of ready-money income of the wives and daughters of the farmers in a wide extent of territory around that city.

The tariff of 1883 gave no recognition to these industries and practically no protection. In 1886 the factories ceased producing for some time, owing to a strike, and the foreign manufacturers of collars, cuffs, and shirts, taking advantage of the condition of the market here due to the cessation of work in Troy, sent over a considerable quantity of their products, the importation of which from that time to this has steadily increased.

It is important to bear in mind in connection with these importations that the foreign manufacturers are represented in this country by agents and sell directly to the consumer.

The advent of these products of the foreign manufacturers threatened to cripple the collar and shirt industry of this country, and made a substantial measure of protection necessary to preserve it. This protection was afforded by the "customs laws of 1890." This protection did not exclude foreign goods, while it saved the principal industry of the city of Troy. The German goods especially were constantly growing in demand. For a few years after 1886 the shelves of the retail dealers were filled with them and, as I shall show later on, they would ultimately have driven the domestic article from the market if the tariff act of 1890 had not been passed. Troy had already suffered greatly from the closing and removal of various industries in which, for twenty years prior to 1890, a large part of its population had been engaged. Machine shops, iron and steel industries, woolen goods, door, sash, and blind factories, and upwards of thirty-seven concerns engaged in the manufacture of collars, bosoms, and shirts have gone out of business, and for the few years between 1886 and 1890 it looked as if the last important industry remaining to Troy was about to disappear.

The tariff on shirts provided for by the bill before the House is the same as it was before 1890, when this condition of things existed; and on collars, it proposes 5 per cent less than was levied prior to 1890.

The passage of the law of 1890, to which I have referred, did not increase the price of collars and shirts, and did not increase the profits of the manufacturers, as will appear later. Nor did the law of 1890 decrease importations, as the customs reports show that the importation of shirts increased 112 per cent in 1892 over 1891, and during the same period the importation of collars and cuffs increased 95 per cent.

I have said that the prices of these goods did not increase after the passage of the laws of 1890, known as the McKinley bill, and that that law was not prohibitive. Under the tariff laws of 1883 the duty on collars and cuffs was 40 per cent. Business increased under that tariff until the foreign competition to which I have referred and which commenced in 1886. The bill before the House reduces the tariff on linen collars 5 per cent; so that there is 5 per cent less protection to these industries than under the laws of 1883, although under the laws of 1883 the importations largely increased from 1886 to 1890, and, as I have stated, had not the tariff been materially increased in that year the domestic trade would have been ruined.

These questions as to whether the McKinley bill prohibited importation increased the price to consumers and the profits of the manufacturers were discussed before the Committee on Ways and Means, before which the foreign and the home manufacturers had a hearing; and it resulted from this hearing that the statements, the ideas, and the propositions of the foreign manufacturers were accepted to the letter by the majority of the committee, and the testimony of the home manufacturers and their claims have been totally ignored. The bill before the House embodies the ideas of the foreign manufacturers.

The position which the foreign manufacturers thought would be fair to them, and which they stated, the very duty which they proposed has been embodied in the bill; and it would appear that the representations of the home manufacturers were regarded as utterly without foundation, their position untenable, the great interests they represented and the vast amount and the character of the labor they employed entitled to no consideration whatever.

Permit me to say here that this is not a protest on my part in behalf of capitalists. My principal concern is for the labor engaged in these industries, which is the principal factor in shirt and collar making. This labor is nearly altogether performed by women, for whom the proposed change in the tariff laws means loss of work, reduction of wages, destitution, degradation.

At the hearing before the committee the foreign manufacturers were represented by an importer in the city of New York, a gentleman named Rosenfeld, who read a statement before the committee in which he stated that he believed "that justice to the consumer as well as to the manufacturer may be secured by the reduction of the rate of duty in the proposed new tariff bill on linen cloth of, say, from 35 to 25 per cent, and fixing the rate of duty on the finished articles at 35 per cent." These propositions were practically adopted by the committee. They make the duty upon linen cloth 30 per cent, and they fix the rate of duty on the finished article at the figure suggested by the foreign importer.

It is worth while considering, from some of the statements that this gentleman made in his testimony, what degree of credit he is entitled to, as at his suggestion the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States propose to cripple a great industry and impoverish 50,000 of my constituents. In his written statement he replies to the committee as follows:

I am not controlled by selfish interests wholly, because under the tariff act of 1890 my importations have not been diminished.

Why, therefore, not being controlled by selfish interests in the matter which he represented, he should have imposed upon the committee the grossest misrepresentations in regard to the most material questions, is not comprehensible to the disingenuous mind. He stated that the home concerns combined to form trusts and keep up prices; that they made from 75 to 100 per cent in Troy, and that he thought a man in business ought to make no more than 35 per cent. He said the importer of the foreign articles makes 30 per cent, and he wants to make 37½ per cent.

It was shown by the affidavits of the leading manufacturers of Troy:

That the collar and cuff business is localized in the hands of about thirty manufacturing concerns, among whom there are no combinations or trusts, but, on the contrary, a sharp and spirited rivalry and competition exists, compelling the offering of the productions at the lowest prices at which they can be made.

So that Mr. Rosenfeld's representation to the committee in regard to this alleged trust did not have the slightest foundation in fact; and Mr. Rosenfeld, being engaged in the business, must necessarily have known it.

It was shown before the committee by the representatives of the home manufacturers that instead of 75 and 100 per cent profit, as stated by Mr. Rosenfeld, the manufacturers received no more than from 2 to 7½ per cent, except in some extreme styles, where the profits reach as high as 12½ per cent. In some instances, on collars, it was shown that the profit was only 2 per cent. It was shown that a certain popular German shirt, which now sells for $13.50 a dozen less 6 per cent, gives a profit to the German importer of 26 per cent on his selling price, or 35 per cent on his cost price, and that under the proposed bill before the House the importer could sell the same shirt for $10.80 a dozen and make the same profit. To produce this shirt at their factories would cost the Troy manufacturers $10.34; to manfacture the same shirt in Germany costs only $5.76. Under the McKinley bill, the duty on such a shirt, at 55 per cent, amounts to $3.17, and with 6 per cent freight, 34 cents, leaves the net cost delivered in New York, $9.27; and as the shirt sells at $13.50 less 6 per cent, making $12.69 net, it leaves the importer a profit of 26 per cent.

Permit me to call your attention once more to the fact that these shirts are sold directly to the consumer by the German manufacturer through his agent at the port of entry.

Under the bill before the House the same shirt that cost in Germany $5.76, 35 per cent duty; $1.91, 6 per cent; freight, 34 cents; total cost delivered at the port of entry, $8.01, being sold for $10.80, leaves a net profit of 26 per cent. After the payment of the duty and freight, aggregating 41 per cent of the cost in Germany, these shirts, in the store of the importer in the city of New York, represent a cost of $2.33 less per dozen than the same goods can be manufactured for by the manufacturers in the city of Troy.

It was shown before the committee that a collar manufactured in Germany, which can be sold in the city of New York at 77 cents a dozen, less 6 per cent, would cost to manufacture in the city of Troy 81 cents a dozen.

It was shown that a collar manufactured in Berlin, which, under the present tariff, after the payment of duty and freight, sells in the city of New York for $1.98 a dozen wholesale, sells at retail at 25 cents, or more than one-third of the cost in the hands of the importer in New York.

It was shown that collars manufactured in the city of Troy, which Mr. Rosenfeld represented as being sold for 75 per cent profit, were sold by the manufacturer at 5½ per cent profit, and that a German collar, which it costs to land in New York duty and freight paid, $1.69 a dozen net, costs $1.33 to manufacture in Troy in material and labor alone.

It was shown that the average profit of the home manufacturer is 6 per cent.

The home manufacturers showed that they were satisfied if they got 5 per cent profit on the greater part of the articles they manufactured. The foreign manufacturer under the present tariff gets 26 per cent, and in some instances 31 per cent profit, and he thinks he ought to get 37½ per cent. Mr. Rosenfeld, therefore, grossly misrepresented the facts to the committee in regard to the alleged trusts and combinations among the manufacturers in Troy, in regard to the cost of manufacturing their goods, and in regard to their profits.

But the most serious misrepresentation made by Mr. Rosenfeld was in regard to the wages of the German operatives engaged in the shirt, collar, and cuff industry. He stated that the wages of girls in that business in Berlin is $8 a week. During the sessions of the committee one of the Troy manufacturers telegraphed to Germany, asking how much an operative earned a week in a German shirt factory, and the answer, which came from Billefeld, Germany, was: "Here, from 6 to 15 marks per week; United States currency, $1.44 to $3.60 per week." And in reply to a similar question telegraphed to Glasgow, the answer was: "Average in Glasgow, 12 shillings and 6 pence per week for cutters and machinists," which would be $3 per week. It was shown by one of the representatives of the home manufacturers that in Germany a forewoman gets $3 a week, and here a forewoman gets $12 and $14 a week; and one firm was shown to pay more than that.

This bill proposes a reduction on linen used in the manufacture of shirts and collars at 5 per cent. The ratio of protection afforded to shirts and collars, by reason of this reduction, is thirty-five one-hundredths of 1 per cent on shirts, and three-fourths of 1 per cent on collars and cuffs. The ratio of value of the linen in a shirt to the total cost of the shirt is 7 per cent; and the ratio of value of the linen in collars to the total cost is 15 per cent. So that the increased tariff on linen will but very slightly decrease the cost of production of these articles, and as the additional cost of production, apart from the cost of labor that enters into their manufacture, will remain the same, and as the profits of the manufacturers are now down to a minimum, whatever reductions there may be in the items of cost fall principally on labor; and hence it becomes important, in considering this question, to take into view the condition of the labor market in regard to these industries in the United States and in Europe.

The average wages of an operative in Berlin is $2.42 a week; in Saxony it is $1.50 a week, and in Japan $1 a week. The consular reports show that the wages of these operatives in recent years have not varied. It appears in No. 74 of Reports from the Consuls of the United States for February, 1887, at page 377, that the wages of a female operative in a factory in Germany averages $1.71 per week; the lowest is $1.61 per week, and the highest $1.87 per week; and that young girls get as low as $1.14 a week; that male adults average $3.50 a week.

The report of Consul Miller, in No. 88 of the Consular Reports for January, 1888, shows that a skillful seamstress can only earn about $3 a week; and that the greater part of the families engaged in the industries to which I have alluded can not earn sufficient wages to support themselves apart from their families. He says that among a large part of them potatoes form the principal food of the workers; that a large number eat no dinner; that in the summer they live during the week on bread and herrings or sausages, and "only eat a decent meal on Sundays." In Consular Reports No. 89 for February, 1888, page 206, it is shown that female workers in the Dresden district get from 2½ cents to 3½ cents an hour, or from $1.32 to $1.80 per week, if they work ten hours a day.

In Consular Reports, No. 117, the consul at Mannheim, in November, 1889, shows the manner in which these women live:

The lives of those toiling in these factories are like those of all other workers in German mills—whether they want little or not they get it. They prepare soft down and feathers for others, sleeping themselves on sea grass or common straw, when not on wood shavings. They live so poorly and closely huddled together that economists, urged, perhaps, by the investigation of philanthropists, are pushing upon the attention of the government the problem of building or having built better tenements for the working classes. Their food is uniformly simple, dry rye bread being its chief part. This they bring with them to the mill and eat during the "rests," the half-hour recesses at 8 to 8:30 and 4 to 4:30. The girls in the feather factories are far from healthy. I do not wonder. The dust and dirt are suffocating and disagreeable; still, all that mechanical skill and scientific research has been able to do has, perhaps, been done to ventilate such factories.

I say "perhaps," because I doubt whether the lives of those who toil in the dirt and dust of these mills are regarded as of sufficient importance to awaken enough interest to make a search half as thorough as a scientist would make to discover the causes of some physical disturbances around some million-mile-away planet. The heartless "Was wissen, was fühlen die Leute?" (What do the people know or feel?) on the part of the manufacturers more than justifies the governmental interference, which by all kinds of legislation paternally protective seeks to put about the persons of all parts and classes of the population safeguards against danger and securities and indemnities when injured.

The consul at Glasgow reported in February, 1890, in No. 115 of these Reports, that the highest wages paid to adult women is $3.71 a week, and the lowest $2.16. The consul-general at Berlin reported in February, 1890, that the average of the female operatives at present there get from $1.52 to $2.10 a week; and in other parts of Germany it is shown, by Consular Reports, No. 153, at page 173, that the wages of an adult female worker is from 72 cents to $3.60 a week.

The wages of a female operative in Troy would have to be reduced 60 per cent, if the bill before the House goes into effect, to enable the manufacturer in Troy to compete with the manufacturer in Berlin.

A week's wages in Berlin is $2.40 on the average, which, with 35 per cent duty added, 84 cents, makes $3.24. For the same labor a female operative in Troy earns from $7 to $8, which is the average wages paid there.

The dread of this tariff reduction has already within the past year caused a loss of $2,000,000 of wages to the workers employed in the shirt and collar industry of Troy. The wages have remained the same, but as Troy operatives are paid largely by the piece, reduction in the volume of the products of the factories have reduced the amount paid to the employés, so that the volume of wages paid the operatives now, compared with that of a year ago, shows a decrease of 50 per cent.

The bill before the House affords no protection to the workers, as these articles are protected only so far as the rate on the article exceeds the rate on the base of supply. When the rate under this bill on linen cloth is 30 per cent and on cotton cloth suitable for collars 40 per cent, an average of 35 per cent, and the rate on manufactured collars is 35 per cent, it follows that the bill affords no protection.

Hence, I think it has fairly been shown that so far as these industries are concerned the principle enunciated in the report of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee, that "duties should be so high that our manufacturers can fairly compete with the foreign product," has been abandoned in the bill before the House. The duties under the tariff laws of 1890 have not been so high as to enable the manufacturers to drive out the foreign article, as I have shown that the importation of the foreign article has increased since 1890; and hence, the home manufacturers do not enjoy a monopoly of the trade, and do not regulate prices as they please.

If the foreign manufacturer would sell his goods at the same profit with which the home manufacturer is content the foreign product might be sold in this country, under existing laws, very much cheaper than it has been sold since 1890. Thus the "measure of protection," which, according to the committee, "should extend only so far as to create competition," is the measure of protection, in regard to these industries, which has existed since 1890, and the result of the bill before the House will be to deprive these industries of the measure of protection which has created competition and give a monopoly to the foreign manufacturer.

The American female operatives can not live upon the wages which the home manufacturers could afford to pay them, if this bill goes into effect. Their habits of life are fixed; they do not live in luxury, but they lead a comfortable existence; the wages that are paid to them enable them to live in decency and comfort, to dress respectably, to procure wholesome food, to live in comfortable dwellings and amid comfortable surroundings. To deprive them of the protection which the present tariff laws afford them will result in changing all of the present conditions under which they live, and will leave a great number of them without any occupation at all. Nor can it be said that they can find employment in other walks of life. They can not find employment in other manufacturing centers in the East.

The manufacturers of the East are not increasing. The utmost they can do is to maintain the business they have already established. The disruption of all kinds of domestic and business relations, by throwing out of employment such vast numbers of persons as will result from the passage of this bill, will cause a general unsettling of the condition of things in all walks of life in great manufacturing centers like the city of Troy, and the discontented elements of society will be increased by a large number of persons who have heretofore exercised the most healthful influence in favor of order and good government.

These employés are, or may be under existing laws, in good circumstances; they are fairly well educated; they are intelligent; they are contented, or have every reason to be contented, with their condition; they receive steady employment. If they are deprived of the protection which confers these benefits upon them, they will be reduced to the condition, and physically, mentally, and morally will soon descend to the level, of the unfortunate workers in Germany, whose unhappy condition is a never-failing source of comment on the part of the consuls in Europe.

Some philanthropists and politicians have claimed that the remedy for the effects of a low tariff would be found if the manufacturers would share with their employés more liberally the wealth which they are alleged to accumulate with the aid of labor. I think it was sufficiently shown before the Ways and Means Committee that the manufacturers of Troy have not accumulated and can not, from the small profits which they make on their products, accumulate any great amount of wealth.

While I do not undertake the defense of the manufacturers, I must say, from a personal inquiry into the matter, that very few of them within the last twenty-five years have been enabled to make more than a fair competence, as the result of more than a quarter of a century of hard work and great risk of capital, and that the severe competition to which they are subjected in these days even among the manufacturers of our own country, has resulted in the small profits to which I have alluded and in forcing a great many concerns to go out of business, whose places have not been filled up by new industries. The time when a manufacturer might commence upon a small capital and gradually increase his business in extent from profits has long since passed away, and only copartnerships or corporations with large capital can now expect to operate with any degree of success.

The opposition, therefore, to this measure does not come principally from the manufacturers, but from the workers. The workers will be the first to suffer; and it will be difficult if not impossible for them to obtain employment in other fields of industry. The greatest destitution, followed by the usual labor troubles which bring so much disgrace to our form of government, will inevitably result.

I do not think that politics ought to enter into the discussion of a question like this. For my part I am here to take the position which I occupy on this question without any regard to the political result to myself. At the same time I have no hesitation in saying that I believe if this bill is passed I shall be the last Democratic Representative who will appear in this House from the Nineteenth Congressional district of New York.

If this bill is passed there will be an influx of foreign-made collars and shirts at such prices as will entirely displace the American-made product, a condition of things which will inevitably continue until the home manufacturer shall be enabled to meet the competition by forcing their employés to descend to the condition of the workers of Europe and Japan. The foreign-made goods will come from Austria, from England, from France, from Saxony, and from Japan.

An immense influx of cheap goods will come from Saxony, where the labor engaged in this industry can be had for $1.70 a week. They will come from France, which to-day has the largest shirt factory in the world, employing 6,000 hands. They will come from Berlin and from Glasgow, where the most skillful workers in the world can be had for $2 and $3 a week. They will come from Japan, where collars of the most finished design and workmanship are made at an expense for labor of $1 a week. They will come from Austria, the collars and cuffs of which are already sold in and fill the markets of all the countries of America except the United States. That country had one of the most splendid exhibits at the World's Fair at Chicago, although they have never sought the trade of the United States; and a vast quantity of the goods of that country, made at a minimum cost of labor impossible of attainment here, will flood our markets if the bill before the House should be passed in its present form.

Nor is it Troy alone that will be affected by this result. The United States census reports show that shirts are manufactured in fifty-eight towns and cities in the United States, and that there are 776 firms engaged in the business, besides a vast number of small retail dealers, who will be proportionately affected. The census reports show that the shirt factories in the United States manufacture goods to the extent of more than $28,000,000 a year and give employment to nearly 27,000 persons.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from New York will allow me an interruption.

Mr. HAINES. Certainly.

Mr. HARTMAN. There are some of us who are anxious for a little further information. We are anxious to know whether that document before you, which looks like a book, is an infernal machine, a Democratic bible, or simply a record of the sins and transgressions of the Democratic party. Will you kindly inform us? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAINES. If the gentleman will come close enough, he is at liberty, in a few moments, to open up the book and examine it, and he will find that in it are protests secured, irrespective of party, from my constituents to the number of between fifty and fifty-one thousand.

Mr. HARTMAN. And not secured under duress?

Mr. HAINES. Decidedly not. If any one can compel the mayor of the city of Troy, N. Y., the Democratic board of aldermen, and the Democratic board of supervisors of Rensselaer County, and every Democratic officeholder of Troy, a city of 70,000 population, and which in November last, in spite of the Republican cyclone, gave 6,000 Democratic majority—I say, if these people can be compelled, there might be some ground for such an allegation.

Mr. SIMPSON. For further information I should like to ask the gentleman if that petition is altogether from the people who make collars and shirts, or from the people who wear shirts and collars? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAINES. Both. The manufacturers, too, have offered a separate petition which will be properly placed before the committee.

Mr. HARTMAN. Does that include the people that wear socks also? [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. HAINES. It includes 16,000 people employed in making the collars and cuffs, which gives them remunerative employment at better wages and better living than is received in the same business in any other part of the world. This is their protest against being reduced to the condition of foreign pauper labor.

Mr. SIMPSON. It strikes me that this petition comes from one district alone in the United States, and as there are three hundred and fifty or more other districts where it is presumed that people wear shirts and collars, and some of them socks

[laughter], that the interests of those that wear shirts and collars are greater in the aggregate than those who make them, and if those who wear the shirts and collars should send up a petition, why I apprehend this petition would not be in it a little bit. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAINES. I fully agree with you; but I ask you who wear our collars and cuffs—and we make 95 per cent of all that are made in the United States—if there is a disposition on your part to throw out sixteen thousand laborers in my district, 90 per cent of whom are women, simply to save 1 cent on a collar, and that not against local competition, but to favor the foreigner? [Applause.]

I am convinced that, if this question was thoroughly understood, there is not an honest, loyal Representative on this floor, whether Democrat or Republican who sits here, who would permit this bill to pass until we receive in protection the amount that measures the difference between the wages of foreign countries and those we pay in this country.

Mr. BRYAN. May I ask the gentleman a question right there?

Mr. HAINES. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. I was not permitted to hear the first part of your remarks, because I did not know you were going to speak, or I would have been here.

Mr. HAINES. Thank you.

Mr. BRYAN. I want to ask you what is the difference in cost—what protection do you ask?

Mr. HAINES. We ask the protection afforded by the McKinley bill, which, in this instance, is absolutely necessary. [Applause on the Republican side.] As I have said previously, I am not here in the interest of the manufacturers of Troy, but over 50,000 people living in one county in my district have asked me to represent them here in the manner that I am attempting to do to-night. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BOWERS of California. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I want to ask him if the protection asked for by the operatives and manufacturers of Troy is as large a per cent as the protection given by this bill to the rice-producers of the Carolinas?

Mr. HAINES. In answer to that I will say that I have not the slightest idea what protection is to be given to the rice-producers, and I have not the slightest conception as to what protection is necessary to the rice-producers; but I know the necessity of protection, and the necessity for all I ask, for the people of the Nineteenth district of New York.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask you, if we change the bill in the House here so as to give you the protection that you now have under the McKinley bill, would you be satisfied with the bill and help to pass it?

Mr. HAINES. Undoubtedly, if my district was taken care of.

Mr. HARTMAN. If protection to the collar and cuff industry is a desirable thing, do not you think you could shy your castor into the ring and help the boys who are trying to get protection on wool and lead a little bit also, for the purpose of preventing the throwing out of employment of thousands and tens of thousands of men engaged in those industries? If it is a good thing for you, is it not it a pretty good thing for us also?

Mr. HAINES. I believe that if you, representing that interest, can demonstrate to this Democratic House that there is need and necessity for such protection, this Democratic House will give it to you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RYAN. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be allowed five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAINES. The claim that this foreign competition will result in making these goods cheaper to the consumer can be shown by experience and the natural course of trade to be unfounded. The domestic competition, even under protection, has kept prices at the lowest possible point, and the evidence before the Ways and Means Committee showed that the foreign manufacturers maintained their high prices, notwithstanding the excessive profits they made upon their goods. The rivalry among the domestic manufacturers is so great that they sell these goods at prices as low as the prices for which the same goods are sold in Europe. They make smaller profits than the European manufacturers, but they pay higher wages. The foreigner will continue to sell at the same prices, and will make regular profits.

There has been no diminution of the profits of the importer since the passage of the tariff laws of 1890. He sells directly to the consumer, as I have already stated, and he can invoice his goods, under custom-house rules, at cost, plus 10 per cent, instead of at the selling price in the country from which he exports; and this rule he frequently evades by undervaluation.

The Mr. Rosenfeld who was the mouthpiece of the importers before the committee admitted that after the passage of the tariff bill of 1890 he only raised his price 5 cents per dozen, while the duty was increased 30 cents per dozen and 5 per cent; so that either he made an exorbitant profit on his goods before the tariff act of 1890 became a law, or he now undervalues his goods and thus evades payment of part of the present duty.

The only other person who will be benefited by this bill is the dealer. The bill provides for a reduction of 3 cents apiece on collars, and 15 cents each on shirts, which will be added to the profits of the dealers. As these articles are sold under regular brands and at standard and fixed prices, according to the value, ranging for instance, at 3 collars for 25 cents, or 10 cents each; or 2 collars for 25 cents, or 15 cents each; or 3 collars for 50 cents, or 20 cents each; or at popular prices of 10, 15, and 25 cents, respectively, the dealer will continue to sell at these customary prices and be the only person besides the foreign manufacturer who will benefit by the reduction.

The home trade and the workers will further suffer a loss, if this bill is passed, by the restriction of the business of the home manufacturers. The sale of these goods has a limit, and by restricting the market of the home manufacturer, which will result in effect from the influx of foreign goods, if this bill is passed, the quantity of labor employed will consequently be greatly reduced. If the market is divided with the foreign manufacturer the amount of labor now employed in the home product will necessarily be proportionately reduced. This will be unfair to home labor for this reason, if no other, that the market was created by home labor.

Detached collars and cuffs first came into vogue in the United States, and were introduced by the manufacturers of Troy. Collars and cuffs not attached to the shirt were unknown as an article of commerce in Europe until recent years. They were first manufactured for the trade in the city of Troy, and it is only in recent years that the European manufacturers entered into the business of making and exporting them.

It follows, therefore, that if the present bill is passed the American manufacturers engaged in the collar and shirt business will have to succumb to foreign competition. The bill before the House, as I have said again and again, affords no protection.

I do not deem it necessary to discuss the arguments which have been brought forward on both sides for and against the system of ad valorem duties. The most eminent Democrats as well as the most eminent Republicans during the past twenty years, and some of the most eminent statesmen of the country, have raised their voices against the system of ad valorem duties. The manufacturers of the country have no faith in it. Its principal advocates have always been found among the agents of the importers or among the importers themselves. It has been shown again and again, from every experience and from indisputable facts, that under that system the greatest frauds have at all times been perpetrated against the Government. The system is discredited.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAINES. I trust that the House will indulge me for a moment longer so that I may be enabled to appeal to the House that this bill should not pass, or that it should be modified, at least, so far as concerns the industries for which I speak, so as to leave the tariff existing as framed under the laws of 1890. I make this appeal in the name and at the request of more than 70,000 of the inhabitants of my own Congressional district. I make it in the name of 50,000 persons in that district who will be immediately and disastrously affected by the bill. I make it in behalf of many thousands of families in and around the city of Troy. And in making it I am supported by the Democratic platforms of all the national conventions that have been held during the last twenty years. [Great applause in House and galleries.]

Mr. WOOMER. Mr. Chairman, if the question before us were not one of extraordinary importance I should cheerfully refrain from attempting to add anything to the full exposition it has received, and content myself with casting my vote in accordance with the demands of the country and my constituency. But the matter now under consideration is one of such vital interest to my native State, and to the district which elected me a member of this body, that I am unwilling to forego the right to add my protest to the many warnings that Congress has already received. The State of Pennsylvania has a right to require that her representatives in the National Legislature maintain that consistent and unfaltering attitude which has been hers from the very beginning of the protective controversy.

Much of the prosperity of that State is due to the wise and beneficent legislation of the past, much of it depends upon the continuance of that legislation in the future. It is little wonder, then, that now when her prosperity is attacked, when it is flung into her teeth that the tariff is to be reformed and that it will not be reformed in the interests of Pennsylvania, she could declare, as she now does, that no such radical alteration as is proposed shall be made but in defiance of her solemn protest.

But, sir, I am not to be understood as representing the great manufacturing State of Pennsylvania as a suppliant begging for your charity to assist her to maintain a position that does not rightfully belong to her. The Representatives of the Keystone State do not come before you in any such pitiable condition; they base their right to advise and warn you upon their experience with the system you propose to destroy, and they have a right to be heard, because the history of their State records the advantages of that system and the dangers of its overthrow.

What protection has done for Pennsylvania it has also done for many other Commonwealths of this Union, and will do for such as have not already felt its strengthening aid, in the near future; and we ask you carefully to heed the lesson our experience teaches before you withdraw the protection of the Government from the great partially developed resources of the nation at the time that their need of it is most pressing. We freely admit that it is to the advantage of Pennsylvania to have the present degree of protection continued, but we deny that this makes out the charge of sectionalism that has been hurled at us, for we are convinced that the interests of our State and those of the nation are identical; that it is a patriotic thing to legislate for the national prosperity, and that no better rule exists for discovering what the national interest really is than by taking the sum total of the local interests of the many communities that together compose this country.

And if you, gentlemen, vote in sympathy with the true interests of the constituencies you represent, there is little danger that this question will be decided in the way the workingmen of America tremble to think it will be decided; for the wage-earners of the nation are following the progress of this bill with an anxiety that is pitiful in its intensity; they have never before seen such a tremendous blow threatened at their means of livelihood, and they are organizing as they never did before to impress upon you what this bill means to them. The representatives of the purely agricultural districts of the South, whose influence was all-powerful in framing this measure, do not know, they could hardly understand the distress that this wanton and untimely attack upon the industries of the country has produced; they can hardly conceive the sufferings which hundreds of thousands of men who earn their living in the workshop and the factory are now undergoing; they can not realize the poverty that has come into manufacturing centers with the closing of the mills and the banking of the furnaces.

It seems to me then that this issue can be decided without any reference to economic arguments. The first duty of Congress is to alleviate the almost universal distress which the fear of its probable course has caused by giving back to the workingmen the opportunity to work, to earn the wages that will give bread to them and their children. These are not the times to indulge in experiments with the system upon which our industries are founded. For more than thirty years the business interests of the country have adjusted themselves with reference to a definite, consistent policy on the part of the Government. Capital has been lavishly invested in these industries upon the assumption that the same policy was to continue; employers have regulated wages with regard to it, and by reason of its beneficial influence the American wage-earner has accustomed himself to a standard of comfortable living which none of us I think has any wish to lower.

These considerations should surely be sufficient very strongly to impress us with the danger of doing anything to disturb the basis upon which so much depends. The possibility of such a disturbance, with its far-reaching consequences, is something from which the wisest might shrink in the most prosperous times after having taken the greatest precautions; and heedlessly and deliberately to aggravate distress when the manufactures of the nation are reeling under the mere threat of the assault made upon them, when armies of unemployed men are looking wistfully toward Washington as their only hope, is worse than unstatesmanlike; it is wicked and criminal.

We are told, however, as an unanswerable reply to any criticism of this bill, that it is merely in obedience to the express command of the American people. Ever since the Presidential election in 1892 it has been dinned into our ears in the press and upon the floor of Congress that the Democratic party has been intrusted with a mission by the voters of this country to apply its peculiar ideas to the tariff question, and it has been calmly assumed that the election of the present Administration was an unqualified sanction of the radical declarations of the Chicago platform; a reference to this supposed popular indorsement has been thought sufficient to close all debate upon the question. I deny that any such mission was given by the people to the party in power, and insist that the popular verdict of 1892, whether taken by itself or in the light of subsequent events, can not be regarded as an expression of discontent with the tariff policy of the Republican party.

We all have heard the story of the Athenian citizen who voted to ostracise Aristides because he was tired of hearing him called "the just;" and it was much this same sort of feeling that led to the defeat of the Republican party in the last Presidential campaign. The people well knew that party had proved equal to every one of the great responsibilities imposed upon it; that for more than thirty years it had given to the country the greatest prosperity any nation had ever known; that it had solved problems more difficult than those any other party had ever been called upon to solve, and in the belief that their prosperity was so firmly established as to be impregnable against any assaults, they listened to the cheap promises of the Democratic party and yielded to its request for a trial. The unfortunate labor troubles of that year contributed to this result, but it was principally due to apathy and restlessness; the people voted for a change, hardly knowing why they did it.

The lack of any foundation to the notion that this Administration is authorized to convert its tariff theories into legislation is completely shown by the defeat of the party in control in last fall's election; when the voters of the United States realized that their vote had been misunderstood, their carelessness misinterpreted, they were prompt to set themselves right and declare as emphatically as they knew how what their real views on this question are. However the results of 1892 can be construed, the vote of last November can bear but one interpretation; the only national issue involved was the question of tariff reduction, and the people recorded their decision in unmistakable terms. In the deplorable condition of business to-day you have no right to go on with a measure that has been condemned in every State where an election means anything; you have no right to pass an act which the people have warned you they will never allow to become permanent.

It is not, after all, strange that a party which for a third of a century had been debarred from control of the Government should persuade itself that its return to power marked an epoch in history, and ascribe an undeserved importance to such an unexpected and unfortunate event. It is still less strange than this that the people have discovered as soon as they have that such a long freedom from responsibility has developed, as might have been foreseen, a very high degree of incompetency in the Democratic party to introduce measures of any lasting value. The pity is that the crude attempts of this inexperienced and untrained party are far from harmless, but that they fall with crushing force upon the industries which have been developed and can only be continued by adhering to the views of their opponents.

I am one of those who believe that the protective system should form a permanent part of our national policy; for while I admit that industries begun by its assistance should become independent after the period of their infancy is passed, yet in the varied industrial development of a country so rich in resources and an age so pregnant with mechanical inventions and improvements as our own, there must inevitably be at all times some new industries, or new forms of those already carried on, that stand for a time in need of protective aid, though in the future they may be successfully pursued without it. Were there nothing else in this question than this, the idea of a permanent protective duty in any single industry might be excluded, but another factor of the greatest importance enters into the question and causes us to arrive at an entirely different result.

Since the Morrill tariff marked the beginning of substantial protection there has been a steady rise in the wages paid to American labor. Wages have reached a point that permits those who receive them to enjoy a measure of comfort unknown to the workingmen of other nations; the American wage-earner is well able to provide himself with many articles that not long ago were considered luxuries in this country, and will for many years continue to rank as such in others; his children are spared from the obligation to labor at tender years, and are given an education that affords them an equal start in life with those of wealthier citizens; he enjoys shorter hours of work, and has better opportunities to improve his leisure and condition than his fellow-workman across the ocean. It is the most vital interest of the nation that this gratifying condition of things be continued, and it can be maintained in no other way than by keeping wages at their present figures.

But, with the invasion of foreign competition invited by this bill such a thing is impossible. Manufacturers will be compelled to reduce the wages of their employés to meet the cut-throat prices of foreign competitors. This bill gives to the manufacturer the alternative of dismantling his plant or of lowering the wages of his working people, and of the two evils it is hard to say which is the lesser to the workingman. That the wage-earner will be compensated for his diminished returns by any corresponding increase in his necessary outlays is untrue. The fact that the very commodities which enter most largely into the cost of living are those to which the free-traders direct this country to devote all its powers indicates its falsity, and the statistics in the most careful examinations of the subject within my reach—the Senate report on retail prices and wages—is absolutely conclusive. It is at least beyond disproof that the higher wages are the greater is the margin for saving, and as this margin is not expended but invested, workingmen will require some proof that the interest on their savings will be increased by this bill in the proportion that their chances for accumulating them are diminished, before they are ready to accept it.

Another argument very frequently employed among the farming communities is that this increase in the rate of wages comes directly out of the pockets of the agricultural classes. The higher prices that persons employed in one protected industry may have to pay for the articles produced by those engaged in another industry also protected are made up, it is admitted even by the free trader, by the higher prices that they in turn receive from the rest of the public; but it is alleged that in the last resort what our friends choose to call "the tariff tax" falls upon the farmers. This conclusion will not, however, bear examination; the farmer receives his share of the benefits of protection equally with the other wealth producers of the land, and indeed the articles for which he pays a higher price because of a protected system are so few and the increase is so inconsiderable that the advantages are overwhelmingly on his side; he receives a direct and substantial benefit in the exclusion from the home markets of many articles of which wool, potatoes, eggs, live stock, and the like are instances, which, if imported free, would force him into an unprofitable competition.

What is of much greater service to him is the home market that the protective system gives him at his very door. The establishment of every manufacturing town, of every industrial plant, opens a market to the adjoining farmers where they can dispose of their products at good prices with little or no charge for transportation; it enables them to diversify the productions of their farm, and to place less reliance upon the great staple crops like wheat and cotton, in which they must compete in the world's exchanges with the poorly paid Egyptian fellah and the Indian ryot; they are able to go into the business of raising small fruits, truck, poultry, and many products for which a manufacturing community offers a remunerative market; and finally, they are guaranteed against overproductions and overcrowding of their business by the manifold opportunities that diversified industries create for labor. It is a matter worthy of the most serious consideration of the farmers of this country, to calculate what the effect of the return to the soil of the millions of persons now engaged in protected pursuits would mean to them, and this is the logical result of the adoption of a system that would narrow the present numerous fields of national industry.

The protective system is strongest when viewed as a whole. It provides for the most varied forms of industrial activity; it seeks to distribute the gifts of nature among the largest number of recipients, and to give to each a fair and equal chance with any other to enjoy his part of the national prosperity. It is perfectly possible to lay one's finger on this or that branch of the system, and by excluding everything not directly affecting that particular subject to arrive at an unfavorable result. This was the ingenious course of the Democratic party with what has been well called their popgun policy in the Fifty-second Congress; but it is manifestly unfair. The interdependence of manufactures and agriculture and trade and transportation must all be considered; and never before was this correlation of the different branches of industry so well illustrated as to-day, when the farmer must sacrifice his crops at ruinous prices, the storekeeper close his store for want of business, the railroad manager discharge his hands and reduce his service, and the banker contract his discounts and withdraw his aid because of the blight that the fear of tariff changes has brought upon the manufacturing industries of the nation.

The sympathy of all industries with one another, and the effect upon the whole of an injury to any part, is foreign to the ideas of the writers on political economy whose views we are bidden to accept as final upon this question; their writings reflect the conditions of industrial society as it existed in the past much more accurately than they do the conditions with which we have now to do, and these dogmas are very materially qualified when applied to modern business conditions; at best they are tendencies rather than laws, and recent industrial history has shown us that these tendencies are often checked and not infrequently completely arrested by the present industrial methods. We have to-day to do with the regulation of competition and production in the place of the unrestricted competition of the theorists; we know that manufacturers will and do sell their goods at unusually low prices to gain or keep control of markets against competitors; we know that the importer very often pays a part or the whole of a customs duty without making a proportionate increase in the price of his wares.

All these things are opposed to the teachings of the old political economists, and are but a few of the many instances that might be given. We have to-day, in a word, a highly complex business and industrial organization with which Mill and Adam Smith were not acquainted, an artificial organization as compared with the society upon which their arguments rest, and we must deal with them artificially. The "let alone" doctrine is unsuited to these times, and the advocates of it and not we are yet in darkness; we decline all their sympathy with our supposed economic ignorance in the full confidence that our would-be teachers will some day pay a little attention to the facts and appreciate the changes that have taken place. If for the present they will only refrain from invoking these antiquated documents as inspired and infallible authorities we shall be content.

I know of no better illustration of the mutual benefits that accrue to a whole community from a protective tariff than the experience of the section with which I am most familiar; it reflects very accurately the varied industrial life which that system has so successfully introduced upon a larger scale throughout the country. The proportion of persons engaged in agriculture to those employed in manufactures varies somewhat in the three counties which I represent, but the totals may roughly be taken as equal; of those not engaged in farming fully two-thirds are directly dependent upon some form or other of the iron industry; in my own county are situated the famous Cornwall mines, which have now been worked for more than one hundred and fifty years, and still form the richest and most accessible ore supply in the seaboard States; iron-ore mining was naturally the first industry of any consequence established, together with the closely related manufacture of pig iron from the ore so mined. From this small beginning there arose in time other manufactures, but these were insignificant until the iron industry first received its deserved protection in 1861; since that date almost every form of the manufactures of iron has been established in the close vicinity, until the Congressional district now contains not only the large number of blast furnaces and rolling mills which perhaps might be expected in a locality so favored by natural advantages, but establishments for the manufacture of steel rails, malleable iron, bolts and nuts, chains, nails, agricultural implements of no less importance.

We have several plants that are either the largest or among the largest of the kind in the United States, and which never would have been established had it not been for the protection that the Republican party afforded them. Now, the men who earn their wages in these mines and mills and manufactories, and the neighboring farmers who supply their tables are not willing to come down to the scale of wages which the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] spoke of as prevailing in that State. If they were they might be willing to accept this bill.

It was said, I think, that ten or twelve dollars a month was considered a very fair average income in Texas, and that on little more than double that amount the gentleman's happy constituents reveled in luxury. The farmers and workers that I represent have fortunately thus far been spared from the effort to live upon such limited means, and I am very greatly mistaken if they have any wish to attempt the experiment. The workingmen of my district know that their wages steadily increased under Republican rule, that work was plentiful, and that under the latest developments of protection in the McKinley act markets had been opened up with the South American countries that promised them a new era of increased prosperity. The farmers know that under this same Republican rule, although the prices of some of the staple crops had either fallen or remained stationary, the value of the annual products of their farms steadily increased, because they were able to put more and more of their land into other crops to supply the men employed at the near-by mills and factories, and that the price of every article they used steadily declined, and they, too, are unprepared to live upon the Texas scale, from which they are exempt as long as the neighboring industries are prosperous; they, too, are very anxious that the duties protecting those industries should not be diminished; nor do they make an exception in the case of the duty on iron ore.

It is assumed by many gentlemen on this floor that the remark that ore is a raw material fully and finally answers any plea for the retention of the duty upon it, but so is everything raw material to a manufacturer who produces a more highly finished product than the last was, no matter how many processes it may have gone through, or how much labor may have been expended upon it before it reached his hands; something more than this is required before we can refuse the demand that the wages of the workingman shall not be reduced by any act of ours. He is entitled to be protected, whether he labors in the ore mines or in the steel mill or in the woolen factory. The miner differs from more skilled mechanics in degree and not in kind, and is as well entitled as they to have the reward of his labor maintained.

If we once admit that it is desirable to keep wages at their present rate it is the rankest injustice and discrimination to except the laborers in the mines from the advantages of the tariff. It is a more serious objection that labor of this class is often performed by those foreigners who are least welcome in our country, and it is almost the only encouraging incident of the present depression that these gentry have been driven back to their native lands by lack of work and must cross the Atlantic before they can again secure employment here, and Congress will not do its duty if it does not take this favorable opportunity to prevent this undesirable foreign element from again coming into ruinous competition with American labor, by enacting more stringent immigration laws.

Thus far only the wisdom of the policy upon which this bill rests has been considered, but the methods by which the results sought are attempted to be obtained are no less open to criticism. If the Democratic theory that the American people authorized the present proposed measures by their vote in 1892 be correct, then the popular instructions are to be found in the platform of that party, and it has been given no discretionary power to alter the line of action there set forth. We learned from that very interesting document, the tariff plank in the Chicago platform, that duties are to be limited to the supply of the revenues required for the necessities of the Government economically administered; that is, the people have, according to the Democratic supposition, directed a reduction of tariff duties only when the revenues derived from them exceed such necessary expenses, but in place of any such surplus of revenue we are confronted with a deficit of seventy-five millions even with the present receipts from customs duties. Where, then, is the popular mandate that justifies a bill providing for a further reduction of fifty millions in these already shrunken receipts?

Our contention is that the proper course for Congress to pursue under these circumstances would be to refuse to make any change in the tariff laws now upon the statute book; with the revival of prosperity and public confidence that such action would insure, we could look forward to an increase in the revenues to their normal figure, and there would be no occasion to devise any untried methods for supplying a deficit, simply because such a deficit would not then exist. We may note again that the expenses of the Government in the Chicago platform are to be only those of a government ecomically administered. There has been no serious effort made to fulfill this pledge but in one branch of the national expenditure, and that the last that should have been touched.

The obligations of the Government to its pensioners are of too sacred a nature to be lightly and recklessly broken, and whatever the frauds that have been perpetrated in this respect may be, and the Administration has been very unsuccessful in finding many such, it is my deliberate conviction that the manner in which the economy in the Pension Bureau has been affected is one of the greatest national disgraces of our history; the methods employed were mean and unworthy of a great Government; suspensions and removals from the list were attended with the most scandalous injustice, and the results attained are trivial. I do not suppose that there is a member of this House representing a district north of Mason and Dixon's line who could not give numerous cases in which deserving veterans have had the pittance they received from the Government stopped or reduced upon the most frivolous pretexts, where the unjust conduct of the Government has deprived a worthy soldier of his sole means of support and reduced him to beggary.

I could certainly give many such instances that have come within my own limited experience, and this, I repeat, has been the only serious effort of the party in power to reduce the expenses of Government. Again, if we are to look to the Democratic platform of 1892 for the terms of the contract upon which that party was given control of the country, we find still greater difficulty in understanding how even the least incidental protection is permissible, much less the avowed protection that this bill gives to certain industries which have been fortunate enough to obtain the favor of its authors. Where do the gentlemen derive their right to recede a step from their instructions? If the tariff is unconstitutional and a robbery, by what right do they tamper with the evil? Their duty is plain, and upon their theory the responsibility is with the people; they have declared that protective duties should be immediately and entirely eradicated, and yet they have introduced a measure just consistent enough with their promises to produce the maximum amount of harm, and yet falling far short of what their platform announced their policy to be.

The attempt to balance the different constructions that the Democratic platform is capable of has resulted in a scheme that is consistent with neither of them. They have not dared to live up to one interpretation of it, and frankly say that with the present deficit in sight they are not bound to remove any of the present duties. Neither have they dared to carry their ideas to the other extreme, and give the country a tariff for revenue only. The gap that their equivocal policy creates between the receipts necessary to carry on the Government and those provided by this bill is to be filled by the iniquitous income tax. No one knows what this tax will produce, and no one seems to care; something was wanted to fill the void in the National Treasury that will be created by this measure, and this tax has been tossed in in want of something better to fill it. A new set of revenue officials and an annoying inquest annually into every man's private affairs is to be forced upon the country because the Democratic party has not the courage of its convictions.

Another great defect of this measure, in the substitution of ad valorem for specific duties, has been fully pointed out in this debate, and its many dangers shown. It is unnecessary to say anything further to show that this bill is, as might be expected from the work of a party whose business it has been to criticise and destroy what wiser men have created, a half-hearted, inconsistent, incomplete measure, a Janus-faced god looking toward free traders and protectionists, and not forgetting to squint incidentally at the Populists. We can briefly describe it when we say that it is characteristic of the dominant party, and that implies that it has reached the lowest depths of incompetency.

Gentlemen, many of you must already realize that your triumph will be but short-lived. You received your quit-notice from the country but a few months ago; you know well that the return to power of your opponents is imminent, and you are now on the point of enacting a law that is manifestly unfair to the most important industrial interests of the nation. You have taken good care to protect the Southern planter, but the Northern manufacturer and the Northern farmer have asked in vain for your consideration. It may be worth your while to reflect that when this question comes up again before a House whose disposition will be very different from this one, your statements and your votes may be taken as conclusive evidence against you and yours.

The Republican party will always be true to its record. It will treat this matter as it always has treated it, in a thoroughly broad, national way; but it may in the future have no other recourse than to accept what you, and your constituents through you, assert to be the principles that should govern the tariff policy of the nation, and the Republican party perhaps will not be willing to accept the exceptions to these principles that you are now making in favor of your particular local interests. It therefore will be well for you to assure yourselves of the interests of your constituents and to think very carefully before you misrepresent them. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PENDLETON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it is said that death and taxes are the only two absolutely certain things, but to these may be added another certainty, and that is that no bill which promises any substantial relief to the tax-burdened people will meet the approval of the tariff-protected industries. So that those who imagine it possible to frame a measure to satisfy both taxpayers and tax-eaters had as well dismiss the pleasing illusion. The tariff is a tax, and taxes must be paid if the Government is to be supported. If we were just now beginning our national existence, without the Constitution and without a fiscal system, and were trying to raise the necessary revenue in the way fairest to the people and most impartial in its treatment of all industries, many thinking and fair-minded men, after the experience of one hundred years, would hesitate before consenting to any tax on imports. Other things being equal, that country will make the most rapid growth where a free people are governed by just and equal laws; where production is not burdened by heavy taxes, nor distribution misdirected by discriminating legislation.

The dominant party has before it two imperative duties, first, to reduce the burden of taxation; next, to adjust that burden so that it will be equally borne by all, as nearly as is possible, under any system deriving its largest revenue from the tax on imports. From the foundation of the Government to the present, under all parties, the Government has derived its largest support from its customs duties. The reasons originally urged for these duties were the necessities of the Government and the duty to aid our struggling industries. Temporary protection was advocated by one party and acquiesced in by many of the leaders in the other, and surely if it was ever defensible it was at the beginning of our national existence, when we had not only inaugurated a separate Government, but had adopted a theory in government which was a threat to monarchical institutions and excited their profoundest apprehensions.

Our people then felt themselves compelled to subordinate theories to emergencies, and prepare for inevitable collisions with those European nations who had not yet been taught to respect our rights and fear our strength; but, Mr. Chairman, the Government was cheaply administered and our demands for revenue so much smaller then than now that from the beginning up to 1860 our entire expense did not during that time exceed $2 per capita per annum. The manufacturers thought a modest tax of 10 or 20 per cent per annum would be amply sufficient to cover the difference between European and American wages, and confidently looked forward to the period when even this small measure of protection could be dispensed with; but now, after one hundred years of national existence and thirty years of Republican rule, we find these puling infant industries, grown to lusty manhood, declaiming more loudly than ever the necessity for continued protection.

Protection and higher protection have gone hand in hand with extravagance and greater extravagance, and, Mr. Chairman, one of the worst features of the protection theory is, that while the masses favor cheap government, the entire body of manufacturing industries favors costly government, because that means high tariff, and high tariff means larger profits for the manufacturers. A recent instance is the conduct of the Republican party under Mr. Harrison. Mr. Cleveland left a surplus of one hundred millions. The Republicans had a golden opportunity to lighten the burdens of the people, but it answered their petitions by increasing their taxes, and got rid of their surplus by adding to their expenses. "We asked for bread and they gave us a stone."

The Republican theory assumes the right to direct the course of industry by taxing some for the benefit of others. It makes some less profitable in order to make others more profitable. This is a dangerous power in any government, but especially in a republican government where equality of rights should be as closely allied to equality of conditions as may be obtainable under just laws. We see before us the natural and inevitable consequence of such pernicious theories. Protected by the ocean from the aggressive designs of other powers, blessed with cheap and fertile lands, and enjoying a larger measure of freedom than any other people, our progress has been more rapid than any other in all history. The people have spread over and conquered a continent, and wealth has accumulated beyond the dreams of the miser; but, Mr. Chairman, when we inquire how this wealth has been distributed we find that thirty thousand people own one-half of it, and sixty-three millions of people own the other half.

While a few are reveling in law-made wealth, thousands, aye, millions, are suffering for the necessaries of life, and many throng the streets and beg for bread. I grant you, sir, that some men will not thrive under the best government, and that others will thrive under the worst governments; but all men are entitled to just government. Inequalities in condition are inseparable from human affairs; though deplorable, they are unavoidable, but surely legislation ought not to accelerate this tendency.

I leave to those who have better opportunities and more aptitude for statistics to show the exact comparative growth in wealth of the different sections in the last decade, but I state a proposition which I think will not be denied when I say that the manufacturing have vastly outstripped the agricultural regions in the race for profit, and when we have traced this increased wealth we will find that it has not lodged in the pocket of the laborer, but in the strong box of the manufacturer.

As the danger from foreign cannon no longer alarms us, we are now told by our Republican friends that the present danger is foreign cheap labor, and against this we must level our legislative artillery. We are told that a high tariff is necessary to enable the manufacturer to pay high wages and compete with the pauper labor of Europe.

High tariff means high prices to the consumer, and three-fourths of the workingmen engaged in unprotected industries are taxed and made less prosperous in order to pay higher wages to the other fourth; but, Mr. Chairman, after having a tax laid ostensibly in their interest they are denied the benefit of it, for the law kindly turns it over to the manufacturer, and he scours the market and stands upon the seashore beckoning to the landing immigrant to come and work in competition with his high-priced American brother.

If pauper labor is so despicable in Europe, why should it be so lovable when it lands in Castle Garden? If the Republican party is really so much in love with the American laborer, why does it not, after taxing all the people for his ostensible benefit, follow the tax into the factory and see that it is equitably distributed among its beneficiaries. True, it would savor of paternalism, but not more so than the entire protective theory. The Republicans claim that high tariff and high wages are inseparable, and that the one is indispensable to the other. The Democrats say that this contention is neither correct nor just. They say that high wages do not necessarily follow from high tariffs, and if they did it would not be right to lower the wages of three men to add to the wages of the fourth. To escape this proposition the Republicans say that high tariff means not higher but lower prices. If it means lower prices what becomes of the workingman for whom they profess so much solicitude? Is it possible that it brings both lower prices and higher wages? And if the manufacturer has to pay higher wages, and take less for his goods, where does his profit come in?

Mr. Chairman, the American people can no longer be deluded with such indefensible pretenses. The value of products has for many years suffered a gradual, sometimes a rapid decline, but this decline is world-wide, and is not confined to protective tariff countries. Goods are cheap here, but cheaper still beyond the tariff wall. If this were not true the manufacturers themselves would assist to level the wall so that their cheaper goods could go out and compete with the world.

Reciprocity has been for several years a favorite word in their mouths. Protection and reciprocity in their abstract meaning convey ideas that are very dear to the American heart, but as reciprocity is applied by the Republican party it means high-priced goods for the American consumer and cheaper goods for the foreign consumer. It means that the American manufacturer shall have the American market free from competition with the European market, but that he may take the same class of goods to South America and then sell them for less money in competition with the European market.

In fact, the modern article of reciprocity seems to have been invented solely for the benefit of the foreign consumer and the American manufacturer, and in the transaction the great mass of burden-bearing American taxpayers are forgotten. Another fear agonizing the Republican party is that if the tariff bars are let down a flood of cheap foreign goods will be let in, and the people will buy too many of them. It would naturally follow that they would buy more, because the same amount of money would purchase more; but, Mr. Chairman, is not the average American citizen capable of running his own business, and can he not wisely determine for himself how to spend his money after he has made it?

This is the Democratic theory, but the Republicans seem to think it a province of the Government to build up certain industries, to give certain classes higher wages, and finally to direct the purchases of the people and protect them from overconsumption. This is paternalism pure and simple, and it is not wonderful that a party which advocates such doctrines should be the author and advocate of every plan which has been proposed to enlarge the power of the General Government at the expense of the State and individual citizen.

The sole reliance for the continuance of our free institutions is the capacity of the individual for self-government. This power can only be preserved and increased by letting him absolutely alone, protecting him in all his rights, and taking from his toil as a tax only his fair pro rata of the necessary levy. It is not our province—

> To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land
> And read our history in a nation's eyes.

Plenty is created by industry, and its creator should be allowed to scatter or keep it just as he prefers. Under Republican rule wealth has rapidly increased, but production has been abnormally increased and made more profitable in some industries, and heavily burdened and made less profitable in other directions. The result has been to concentrate enormous wealth with certain individuals and classes, and to deprive larger classes of their share in the prosperity. Men have opened their eyes to these conditions. In the manufacturing States we find that the workingmen, for whom the Republicans profess so much solicitude, are compelled to combine in societies to secure their shares of the profits voted to them out of the pockets of the American people, but grudgingly given, and often refused by the manufacturer.

In the West and South, in the wheat and cotton regions, we find every year more hard work and less profit in productions. They are compelled to make their products for sale in a foreign market, in competition with the cheap labor of the world, but to return home and buy their goods in a protected market. They toil from year's end to year's end and their profits, if they make profits at all, are growing smaller and smaller. Such a condition must result in discontent. We want just and equal laws that will compel every man to bear his own burden, but protect him from bearing the burden of others. We want our intelligent American citizenship to rely on their cultivated minds and brawny arms and not on the Government at Washington for their prosperity. Agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, the great sources of our prosperity, will reach their best and most healthful development when neither fostered nor hindered by special legislation.

In 1860 at least three-fourths of our carrying trade was done in our own vessels; now after thirty years of protection our merchant marine is reduced to a beggarly 15 per cent. After a few more years of such protection the American flag will be driven from the ocean. The former incumbent of the Presidency, for whom the people, without regard to party, entertain a genuine respect, said in one of his many able speeches made in the campaign of 1888, that the Democrats were "students of maxims, not of markets." His meaning, of course, was that the Democrats were theoretical, not practical; and that the Republicans were the practical business men, the students, and makers or discoverers of markets.

As a fact Mr. Chairman, where are the markets they have opened to us? In the words of Mr. Blaine the McKinley bill has not found a sale for "a bushel of wheat or a pound of pork;" but, sir, perhaps they will claim that the purpose of the protective policy is to find a home market for our raw materials and food products, and a foreign market for our manufactures. Let us see what success they have made in this. We now consume about two million bales of cotton, and the annual product is more than eight million bales. If it has taken one hundred years to reach this point, at the same ratio it will take over three hundred years before the cotton can all be consumed at home.

The manufacturer enjoying a comfortable seat on the prostrate form of the cotton raiser can say: "Be patient, my friend; the good time will come in the sweet by and by, three hundred years hence: only work for us until then, and then having become rich at your expense we will allow you to make something for yourself." But Mr. Speaker, this is a very uncomfortable position for the under man to occupy, with nothing to feed on but promises that may not be redeemed until the judgment day. Now let us see about a foreign market for manufacturers. I have an official report from the Bureau of Statistics which shows that from 1847 to 1860, fourteen years, the percentage of exports of manufactures of cotton, iron and steel, leather and wool were 5.22 of the whole; from 1880 to 1893 the percentage of exports of these articles had risen to 5.61 per cent or a net proportionate increase of .39 per cent.

Now, if it takes us at the period of our greatest national activity thirty-three years to make an increase of .39 per cent, it is easy calculated how long it will be before we sweep proud Britania from the ocean, and again the under man in the intensity of his agony may gasp between breaths and say, "Oh, Lord, how long."

The pending bill, Mr. Chairman, bears hard on the section which I have the honor in part to represent, because it puts raw materials on the free list; and in my ignorance, perhaps, of the correct principles which underlie a revenue tariff, I have never been able to see any good reason why we should not collect some revenue from every article that passes through the custom-house; yet believing that the present measure is better for the whole people and more just than the law which it is designed to supplant I shall vote for it, reserving the right to support amendments intended to perfect the bill.

Loving my country without regard to class, section, or party, I rejoice in its prosperity, and while the wealth of the manufacturer is largely the result of favoring and discriminating legislation, yet they are our people, and their wealth is our wealth, and in changing from favoritism to justice the changes should be so gradual that they can adapt themselves to the change without serious injury or financial and commercial paralysis, and I believe that the moderate bill now under consideration will accomplish that purpose. The entire people are waiting upon our action, industry is inactive, commerce is waiting, enterprise is suspended, suspense is continued injury, certainty of any sort is beneficial.

We know our duty, and we know that duty and interest point in the same direction. Let us lighten the burden of agriculture, unfetter commerce, strike the shackles from all industry, impose the same burdens, and give the same privileges to all. Give them all an open field and a fair fight. Reduce expenses, reduce taxes, and inaugurate a just, honest, and economical Government, and when we return to our homes we will deserve and receive the plaudits of the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, the time of Mr. PENDLETON of Texas having expired, on motion of Mr. KILGORE, it was extended ten minutes.

[Mr. CURTIS of New York addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. KILGORE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and Mr. BROOKSHIRE having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation and to provide revenue for the Government, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KILGORE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 43 minutes) the House adjourned until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PASCHAL: A bill (H. R. 5099) for appropriation of $40,000 to repair, improve, or erect buildings at Government military post at Del Rio, Tex.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 5100) to appropriate Government land for a cemetery, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BELL of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 5101) to provide that neither of the United States district land offices at Hugo or Lat mar, in the State of Colorado, shall be abolished or consolidated, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BALDWIN: A bill (H. R. 5103) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota"—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CONN: A bill (H. R. 5104) for additional appropriations for a public building at South Bend, Ind.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. RITCHIE: A bill (H. R. 5105) to purchase, inclose, and improve the sites, or portions thereof, of certain forts, battlefields, and graves of American soldiers, sailors, and marines in the Maumee Valley, and to erect thereon appropriate monuments and commemorative tablets—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LOCKWOOD: A bill (H. R. 5106) to provide for the construction of a bridge or tunnel across Niagara River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5107) for the necessary and better protection of American labor and enforcement of the law of domicile, and the restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A joint resolution (H. Res. 107) directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commissioner of engineers to examine and report upon the cost of deepening the harbors of Superior and Duluth and their extremes to a uniform depth of 20 feet—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee: A concurrent resolution to print 8,000 copies of the report of the Fish Commissioner for the year 1893—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. McLAURIN: A resolution to place Granville Tennant on the roll of the Doorkeeper as a page—to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. AITKEN: A bill (H. R. 5108) empowering and directing the Secretary of War to furnish two pieces of condemned cannon to Lakeside Cemetery, Michigan—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: A bill (H. R. 5109) granting a pension to Margaret Meyer—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRODERICK: A bill (H. R. 5110) for the relief of Jennie E. Jones—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CABANISS: A bill (H. R. 5111) for the relief of John I. Patman—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CONN: A bill (H. R. 5112) for the relief of Mrs. Mary E. Cole—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRAWFORD: A bill (H. R. 5113) for the relief of Enoch Voyles—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 5114) for the relief of William A. Starkweather, of Oregon—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MAGUIRE: A bill (H. R. 5115) for the relief of James L. Ord, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKAIG (by request): A bill (H. R. 5116) for the relief of Reuben A. Hurley, of Montgomery County, Md., administrator de bonis non of A. F. Hurley, deceased, late of Lyon County, Nev., for stores and supplies furnished by the decedent to the Utah volunteers in 1860, during the suppression of Indian hostilities, as found by the Court of Claims and the War Claims Committee of the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MARTIN of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 5117) to correct the military record of Frank G. Gardner—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5118) increasing the pension of Lewis H. McCaskey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 5119) for the relief of John H. Fralick—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STONE of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 5120) for relief of the legal representatives of Carroll Winters, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5121) for the relief of H. P. Bennett—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

By Mr. ALDRICH: Protest of Edward B. Bacon and 55 others, employés of Clement Balne & Co., wholesale clothiers of Chicago; of James F. Shields and 42 others, employés of Henry W. King & Co., wholesale clothiers of Chicago; and of J. L. Howe and 24 others, employés of E. Rothschilds & Bros., wholesale clothiers of Chicago, against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of E. S. Roberts and 80 others, miners and workingmen of the Menominee iron district, Michigan, protesting against the placing of iron ore on the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. APSLEY: Petition of Samuel Irving and 4,038 others, of Fitchburg, Mass., protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of 124 employés of Abbott & Co., of Forge Village, Mass., protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BALDWIN: Petition of workingmen and citizens of Ely, Minn., asking for a reduction of tariff on iron ore—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BARWIG: Petition of citizens of Jefferson, Wis., remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Copeland & Ryder Shoe Factory, at Jefferson, Wis., against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BLANCHARD: Petitions of citizens of Louisiana and Texas, for improvement of Sabine River, in Louisiana and Texas—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CONN: Protest of the South Bend Woolen Company and the A. C. Staley Manufacturing Company, against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the business men of South Bend, Ind., remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COBB of Missouri: Petition of the Carpenters' District Council of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of St. Louis, Mo., in favor of the Government ownership and control of telegraphs—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of William Charles Schuter and F. R. Rice, and other manufacturers and makers of cigars, of St. Louis, Mo., for a uniform rate of duty of 35 cents on all unstemmed tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of John J. Applebaum and others, makers of cigars, of St. Louis, Mo., for a uniform rate of duty of 35 cents on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COUSINS: Petition of 200 honorably discharged Union soldiers of John Kyle Post, Grand Army of the Republic, and others of Coggon, Iowa, for a just and equitable service-pension law—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: Petition relating to the limitation of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon the public works of the United States and District of Columbia—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of miners of lead ores in Southwest Missouri and Southeast Kansas, in favor of a specific duty on lead in all ores and drosses—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of Workingmen's Protective Tariff League of Philadelphia, of Philadelphia Board of Trade, and of the South Pittsburg (Pa.) Board of Trade, against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the employing printers of Pittsburg in favor of repeal of provision permitting the Postmaster-General to have return request printed on stamped envelopes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolutions of lithographers of New York, Brooklyn, and New Jersey, in favor of an amendment to the Wilson bill relating to lithographic products, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, two petitions of employers of labor, workingmen, and others, citizens of Pittsburg, against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DURBOROW: Petition of shoe manufacturers and jobbers of the city of Chicago, praying that sole leather be placed on the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the employés of Cohn Bros. and Kohn, Schoenbrun & Co., both of Chicago, protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial to Congress for a national alphabet—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. ELLIS of Oregon: Petition of 47 employés of the Oregon City Manufacturing Company, of Oregon, protesting against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GILLET of New York: Protest of 204 workmen, constituting the entire force employed in the glass-cutting establishment of T. G. Hawkes & Co., covering New York, against a reduction of the tariff on cut glass—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GORMAN: Petition of 11 members of Onsted (Mich.) Grange, No. 279, Patrons of Husbandry, asking for the passage of Senate bill 1136, to provide for the Government ownership and control of the telegraph—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of 35 soldiers of Ypsilanti, Mich., asking that all claims for pensions be made special and disposed of at once—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAGER: Petition of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of Iowa, for the enactment of a law prohibiting the suspension of pensions pending investigation of alleged fraud; also praying that all pensions now suspended be restored until pending investigations are concluded—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of manufacturers and makers of cigars for a uniform rate of duty of 35 cents on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of citizens of Pottawatomie, Iowa, for a bureau of public health within the Treasury Department of the United States—to the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

By Mr. HAUGEN: Protest of lead-ore miners of Missouri and Kansas against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois (by request): Petition of Philip S. Wales, medical director of the United States Navy, praying for relief of charges standing against him as such officer—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of O. Frenell, J. F. Cox, R. Knox, and 101 other citizens of Henry County, Ill., praying for the defeat of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HERMANN: Protest of laborers in Salem (Oregon) Woolen Mills, against change of duty on woolens—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of Board of Trade of Salem, Oreg., denying and repudiating the statements made by the governor of Oregon, representing the State and people to be in a wretched condition—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HULL: Petition of A. L. Ogg and 27 other citizens of Warren County, Iowa, asking that all suspended pensions be restored and no further suspension be allowed except on proof of fraud—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of A. L. Ogg and 27 others of Warren County, Iowa, asking the enactment of an equitable service-pension law—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOSEPH: Two petitions from officers of the United States Army and citizens of New Mexico, praying Congress to pass the act entitled "An act to amend the act of February 14, 1885"—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KIEFER: Petition of subassociation northwest No. 10, Lithographers' International Protective and Insurance Association, United States and Canada, asking that no reduction be made in tariff upon lithograph work—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KEM: Petition of 55 citizens of Nebraska, who are members of Garrison No. 53, asking for the passage of an act to amend the act of February 14, 1885, relative to the reënlistment of enlisted men of the Army and Marine Corps—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LOUD: Petition of S. T. Wire Dealers' Association, Viticultural Commission, 5,000 vineyardists, and over 20,000 others interested, against the clause relative to wire in the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MAHON: Petition of coal-miners of Huntingdon County, Pa., protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill, House bill No. 4864—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McALEER: Petition of George S. Campbell and others, of Philadelphia, against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McCALL: Petition of St. Botolph Club, of Boston, Mass., for the placing of paintings and statuary on the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota: Protest of F. W. Betz and other citizens of Fairmont, Minn., against proposed change in the McKinley act—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McNAGNY: Petition and papers to accompany House bill 4999—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MIEKLEJOHN: Resolutions of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of miners of lead in Southwest Missouri and Southeast Kansas, praying that a specific duty be placed upon lead in all ores and drosses—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MUTCHLER (by request): Protest of mine owners and laborers and others of South Easton, Pa., against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RAY: Petition of citizens of Ithaca, N. Y., as to duty on playing cards—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. REYBURN: Petition of cigar manufacturers of Philadelphia, Pa., for a duty of 35 cents on unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut: Petition of fur-hat manufacturers of South Norwalk, Conn., for retention of present tariff duty on fur hats—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TRACEY: Petition of Messrs. Reiche's, Albany, N. Y., asking that a duty of 35 cents a pound be laid on all unstemmed tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of William Vanpel and others, citizens of Albany, N. Y., for a uniform rate of 35 cents a pound on unstemmed tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of E. Q. Cunningham and T. E. Cunningham, of Albany, N. Y., that a uniform duty of 35 cents a pound be imposed on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of citizens of Cohoes, Troy, and Lansingburg, N. Y., praying for a uniform rate of 35 cents on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of 90 members of Garrison 34, Watervliet Arsenal, West Troy, N. Y., favoring amendments to act relative to retirement of enlisted men in the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of 83 employés of Globe Knitting Mills, of Cohoes, N. Y., against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SHAW: Protest of M. Larson and 144 others, citizens of Stockholm, Pepin County, Wis., farmers and dealers in barley, against the reduction in duty on barley proposed in the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Two petitions of Martin Lutz and of John Weikert and others, of Utica, N. Y., asking for a uniform rate of duty on unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SPERRY: Petition of the employés of P. & F. Corbin Manufacturing Company against the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of farmers, growers of cigar leaf tobacco, their employés, and others interested, of Canton, Hartford County; also, petition of the same from South Windsor, Hartford, and other places in Connecticut, protesting against the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of workingmen employed in the shops at East Berlin, Conn., against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEPHENSON: Memorial from 569 miners and others directly engaged in the iron industry at Ishpeming, Mich., protesting against the proposed placing of iron ore on the free list, and representing that great suffering must ensue if such action is taken by Congress—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial from 728 miners, workingmen, and citizens of Negaunee, Mich., regardless of politics, protesting against the removal of the duty on iron ore, and announcing that such action by Congress must bring destitution to a large proportion of the people of that section, among whom there is already great suffering, owing to the uncertainty as to the action of Congress concerning iron ore—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial from 178 workmen, employers of labor, and and others, citizens of Bessemer, Mich., without regard to any political relation, expressing great anxiety concerning proposed legislation in reference to iron ore, protesting against the placing of this commodity on the free list, and affirming that such action would work great hardship to the people of that section—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial from 144 citizens and business men of Ishpeming, Mich., regardless of politics, protesting against the removal of the duty on iron ore, and affirming that such action would bring grave distress not only to those engaged in the iron industry in Northern Michigan, but to large numbers of other people of that section—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial from 37 workmen, employés and citizens of Marquette County, Mich., irrespective of politics, protesting against the removal of the duty on iron ore, and affirming that such action would result in great hardship to the people of that section—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial from 284 workingmen, employers of labor, and others, citizens of Republic, Mich., irrespective of party relations, remonstrating against the free admission of iron ore and declaring that such action would prove most disastrous to the iron industries—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WADSWORTH: Petition of employés of the Duncan Salt Company against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WALKER: Petition of 100 employés of Josiah Perry, Webster, Mass., protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of 195 employés of the Stoneville Worsted Company, Auburn, Mass., protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of 7 employés of Samuel A. Prescott, Wilkinsonville, Mass., protesting against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of 258 employés of Forehand Ames Company, Worcester, Mass., protesting against the proposed change in the tariff—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WANGER: Petition of C. Huber, jr., manufacturer and employés, makers of cigars, for a uniform rate of 35 cents on unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WRIGHT of Massachusetts: Remonstrance of Charles E. Alderman and 109 others, employés of the Surface Coating Paper Mills, of Holyoke, Mass., against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, remonstrance of Ino Lewis and 118 other citizens of Great Barrington, Mass., against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WOOMER: Petition of the manufacturers and makers of cigars for a uniform rate of duty of 35 cents on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 10, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The VICE-PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 93) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owners of cattle and horses transporting them into Mexico to reimport the same into the United States at any time before May 1, 1894, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 439) for the relief of David R. Gottwals;

A bill (H. R. 71) for the relief of purchasers of timber and stone lands under the act of June 3, 1878; and

A bill (H. R. 2796) relating to the disqualification of registers and receivers of the United States land offices, and making provision in case of such disqualification.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McMILLAN presented memorials of Gilbert Hodgkin and 128 other citizens of Ishpeming; of G. R. Persons and 36 other citizens of Marquette County; of G. R. Persons and 79 other citizens of Ishpeming, and of James Harvey and 62 workingmen, employers of labor and others, citizens of Negaunee, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against placing iron ore on the free list; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the memorial of Hugh Mitchelson and 38 other cigar-manufacturers of East Granby, Conn., remonstrating against any change in the present duty on leaf tobacco and cigars; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Theodore Cameron and 2 other cigar-manufacturers of Westport, Conn., praying for the imposition of a uniform duty of 35 per cent on unstemmed leaf tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FRYE presented a memorial of 70 operatives of the Dana Warp Mills, of Westbrook, Me., remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GORMAN presented a memorial of sundry workingmen of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Maryland, praying for the establishment of a road department similar to the Agricultural Department at Washington, D. C.; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented 13 petitions of Louis Hellwig and other cigar-manufacturers, citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the imposition of a uniform duty of 35 per cent on unstemmed leaf tobacco; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TURPIE presented petitions of citizens of Fort Wayne, Indianapolis, Logansport, Crown Point, Connersville, Laporte, and Bloomington, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the imposition of a duty of 35 per cent on unstemmed leaf tobacco; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WASHBURN presented the memorial of O. G. Korb and other citizens of Ely, Minn., remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill, and especially against placing iron ore on the free list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 269) for the relief of Jacob I. Cohen and J. Randolph Mordecai, administrators of M. C. Mordecai, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by himself on the 8th instant, intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill, reported it favorably, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 299) making an appropriation toward the construction of a dock at the Portsmouth navy-yard; reported it favorably as an amendment to the naval appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

PERSONNEL OF THE NAVY.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the House concurrent resolution relative to the appointment of a commission on the part of the House and the Senate to consider the personnel of the Navy, to report it with amendments. I ask that the concurrent resolution may go to the Calendar, stating that the Committee on Naval Affairs, instead of providing for a joint commission, as the other House have done, substituted for it a provision that subcommittees of the two committees may act together, so that the whole matter may be in the hands of the committees of the two Houses.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask my friend from Maine to give notice that he will ask for the early consideration of the concurrent resolution, as it is important that the joint committee should get to work?

Mr. HALE. Yes, I am obliged to the Senator from South Carolina. I give notice that I shall call up the concurrent resolution for passage at an early day. I presume there will be no objection to it.

Mr. FRYE (to Mr. HALE). Can you not have it passed now?

Mr. HALE. I do not know but that the Senate will agree to pass it now. I ask consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HARRIS and Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read at length.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution.

Mr. HALE. If the Secretary will read the amendments I will explain in brief the effect of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amendments proposed by the committee:

Strike out, after the word "concurring," page 1, line 12, the words "that a special joint committee, consisting of three members of the House and three members of the Senate, be appointed, respectively, by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate," and insert, "that subcommittees of the Committees on Naval Affairs of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, to be selected by each of said committees, are hereby directed to act jointly."

After the word "convenient," in line 6, page 2, insert "to said committees."

Strike out all after the word "premises" in line 8, page 2.

Mr. HALE. The object of the concurrent resolution is to take into consideration the great and difficult questions that have arisen as to the personnel and the rank of the Navy. It is a matter that ought to be attended to. The House of Representatives have provided for a joint committee to consider the whole subject and report to Congress. Senators will remember that a few days ago, upon another report from a joint commission of this kind, the sense of the Senate was shown very clearly against such joint commissions. The Committee on Naval Affairs, in the amendments which I report, have stricken out the feature of a joint committee separate and apart from the two committees, and simply provide that subcommittees of the two committees may act jointly. That is desirable, because there is no necessity that the investigation should be made in two places. It can all be done at once.

That is the effect of the first amendment. Then by the second amendment it is provided that instead of reporting to Congress the subcommittees shall report to their respective committees, and they of course to their respective Houses. The whole matter is to go through the channels by which the two bodies act, and I think it is a wise thing in this case and generally, because the committees are constituted for the very purpose of attending to these duties. If the Secretary will now read the concurrent resolution as it will stand after the amendments are made every Senator will see what is provided by it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as suggested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That subcommittees of the Committees on Naval Affairs of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, to be selected by each of said committees, are hereby directed to act jointly, whose duty it shall be to fully investigate and consider the entire subject of the rank, pay, and all other matters relating to the personnel of the Navy; to have power to send for persons and papers, sit during the recess, if any, and during the sitting of both Houses, and to report at any time after it convenes as may be convenient to such committees what legislation, if any, is necessary in the premises.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine what significance he gives to the phrase "to act jointly."

Mr. HALE. That the two subcommittees, instead of each taking the same testimony separately, may act together. That in fact is the distinctive feature of the amendments.

Mr. HOAR. Would it not be more strictly in accordance with parliamentary phraseology to say, "to act in concurrence?" A joint committee, I understand, makes one committee, and that committee acts by its majority; it does not require a majority of each; that is, a majority of the House committee and a minority of the Senate committee might adopt a particular report. I do not suppose that is the intention; but I submit to the Senator from Maine whether the words "to act in concurrence" would not better express what he desires to get at.

Mr. HALE. I do not think there is much difference between the two, although I think the word "jointly," selected by the committee would more certainly tend to bring them together. At the same time I think no such question would arise as the Senator suggests.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to indulge in any personalities towards my friend from Maine, but if I were to do so I should say that I think there is no member of this body who is more remarkable for neatness and elegance in his style of expression. I know it must have been very hard for him indeed to have had to report the curious example of language which he has reported, and that he is not in the least responsible for it.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator refer to the amendments or to the House provision?

Mr. HOAR. I refer to so much of the original resolution as is proposed to be left by the committee.

Mr. HALE. The Senator's compliment to the clause inserted by the Senate committee does not apply to the House provision, I understand; I think, perhaps, the language is well enough as it is.

Mr. HOAR. I shall move to strike out the second part of the preamble when that is reached.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine for the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now the Senator from Massachusetts has an amendment to offer to which I do not object.

Mr. HOAR. If the Secretary will read the whole preamble again, I will move to strike out part of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The preamble will be again read.

The Secretary read the preamble, as follows:

Whereas there are constantly before Congress numerous bills dealing with the question of rank and pay in the Navy and other matters concerning the personnel of the same; and

Whereas the present laws relating to this subject are in many instances imperfect, inconsistent, unjust, and the result of piece-meal legislation: Therefore be it

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the second whereas.

Mr. HALE. I do not see much force in the preamble. I do not object to the entire preamble being stricken out. It is not needed.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the preamble will be stricken out. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution as amended.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

PRINTING OF FIRST COMPTROLLER'S REPORT.

Mr. GORMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the report of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, forwarding books and stating accounts settled by his office for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1893, to report adversely upon the printing thereof; and I ask for the adoption of the report. This is in conformity with the usual custom.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be agreed to, in the absence of objection.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of the Report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year 1892, 1,500 copies of Part I in quarto form; 200 copies for the use of the Senate, 400 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 900 copies for distribution by the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey; and 2,800 copies of Part II in octavo form; 200 copies for the use of the Senate, 400 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,200 copies for distribution by the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

LEGATION QUARTERS AT PEKING, CHINA.

Mr. MORGAN. By direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I present a communication from the Secretary of State, relating to an increase of appropriation for the payment for the lease of property at Peking, China, for the use of our legation there, and I move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 1399) to promote the efficiency of the naval militia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1400) to commission passed assistant surgeons in the United States Navy and to provide for their examination preliminary to their promotion to the grade of surgeon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS. At the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia I introduce a bill, which, after a second reading, I ask may be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 1401) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act for the further protection of property from fire and safety of lives in the District of Columbia," was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1402) to create the office of foreman of presswork in the Government Printing Office; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 1403) to authorize the reconstruction of a bridge across the Niobrara River near the village of Niobrara, Nebr., and making an appropriation therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1404) to open to settlement and provide for the disposal of the public lands of the "Old Sheridan reservation," in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 1405) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Despatch on Assateague Shoals, Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WALTHALL introduced a bill (S. 1406) for the relief of Eliza H. Yerger and Mary Virginia Rawlins, both born Sizer, daughters and only heirs at law of Henry E. Sizer, deceased, late of Jackson, State of Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MANDERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1407) for the relief of William H. Sloan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 1408) to provide for the purchase of additional land in the square now occupied by the custom-house in the city of Baltimore, Md., and for the preparation of plans and specifications for a new custom-house building; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1409) for the relief of James A. Windsor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HUNTON introduced a bill (S. 1410) for the relief of John H. Redman, a citizen of King George County, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 1411) to increase the facilities of the Post-Office Department for obtaining the use of buildings for post-office purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 50) directing the Secretary of the Interior to permit certain persons to enter lands upon the Umatilla Indian Reservation; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

INVESTIGATION OF HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay the necessary expenses of the investigation by the Committee on Foreign Relations, including mileage and lawful fees for attendance of witnesses, and the employment of a stenographer, in pursuance of Senate resolution of December 20, 1893, out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

STREET TRAVEL IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to have erected suitable and convenient sheds or covers at each and every transfer station of the street car and herdic lines of the District of Columbia for the protection of passengers.

PRINTING OF TARIFF STATISTICS.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 6,000 copies of Senate Report No. 2130, Fifty-first Congress, second session, "Rates of duty on imports into the United States from 1789 to 1890, inclusive, together with the statistics relating thereto;" of which 4,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

LANDS ON ANASTASIA ISLAND, FLORIDA.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, requested to suspend all further action in respect of admitting land claims under the laws of the United States on the island of Anastasia, Florida, during the present session of Congress, and until the expiration of the next session of Congress, unless Congressional action on the subject shall have been taken meantime.

On motion of Mr. HALE it was—Ordered, That the papers relating to land claims on the island of Anastasia, Florida, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. HALE. On the same subject matter I present a petition of the heirs of Jesse Fish, jr., of the State of Florida, praying Congress to confirm the report of the commissioners appointed granting to them 10,000 acres of land on what is known as Anastasia Island, and directing the issuance of a patent to secure to them the undisturbed possession of their own. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

FORCE IN SUPERVISING ARCHITECT'S OFFICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PEFFER on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire whether there is need of additional service in the Bureau of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury with respect to the matter of the erection of Government buildings, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the reason for introducing the resolution. Some four or five or perhaps more years ago an appropriation was made by Congress for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at the city of Salina, in the State of Kansas. Nothing has been done about the matter by the Department, and my attention was called to it for the first time during the past session of the Senate, when the mayor of the city and one or two other citizens came to Washington for the purpose of looking after it and inquiring why nothing had been done. They went to the Treasury Department and had a conference with the Secretary of the Treasury and with the Supervising Architect, and learned from the latter named gentleman that the reason no action had been taken in the way of erecting the building at Salina was that there was not sufficient help in his office to keep up with the work that was given to him by Congress. With a view of ascertaining something further about it, and also urging action, I wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury making inquiry, and I will ask that the Secretary read the letter in response.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, D. C., January 6, 1894.

SIR: Referring to your letters of the 18th and 27th ultimo, relating to the construction of the new United States post-office building at Salina, Kans., I have to advise you that the Salina building is one of twenty-seven authorized by Congress for which this office has not been able hitherto to commence the working drawings. The delay in these cases is due to the inadequate technical force employed in the office, which is necessarily limited by the amount fixed by Congress annually for payment for such services. The pressure also on the office for drawings necessary to prevent the interruption of work on the buildings already commenced is such as to render it impossible for me to fix at this time a date when the drawings for the Salina building can be taken in hand. They, however, will be taken up at the earliest possible moment.

Respectfully yours,

J. O'ROURKE,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. W. A. PEFFER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PEFFER. It appears from this letter that not only has nothing been done in relation to the erection of the building, but that for want of help the Department is not able to give us any encouragement as to when the work can be done. At each session of Congress there are appropriations made for other buildings in other parts of the country. I introduced a bill upon the first day of this session, proposing to enlarge the building at Topeka, the capital of my State, and several other applications of a similar character are about to be made. This is true of all the States in the Union.

It seems to me that under those circumstances, Mr. President, it will be well for the committee to make inquiry, and if it be true—as there can be no doubt that it is true—that the Department needs more assistance in order to get up with this work, the committees should so advise the Senate, that we may act accordingly.

Public buildings would not be authorized, indeed they would not be asked for, if it were not to accommodate the people. I know in my own town it is necessary now to rent other rooms for the purpose of accommodating different divisions of the public service. The pension agency is one case where we are compelled to rent a room in another part of the city to accommodate the pension business.

I therefore submit, with great respect to the committee, that this is a matter with which they may very properly deal, and I hope they will do so promptly.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to be permitted to say one word in reënforcement of what has been so well said by the honorable Senator from Kansas.

I think every visitor to the exhibition at Chicago, even those who were familiar with the greatest works of the architectural genius of other countries and of past ages, experienced a feeling of pride at the wonderful achievement of the genius of the architects of the United States in the designing and construction of those buildings. Those exquisite forms of beauty and grace were in perishable material. When collected in one neighborhood their relations to each other constituted a result which I think nothing in human history has surpassed. Why should not that architectural genius be called into the service of the United States in the construction of our public buildings?

I desire to find no fault with and to make no imputation upon the ability of the gentlemen who have from time to time since I have been in the public service held the office of Supervising Architect of the Treasury; but our public buildings are the creation of a single mind, and so long as one and the same man remains in that office they have been and will be largely the creation of a tired and exhausted mind. No one man, however able he may be, can design, unless he keeps along in the same rut and on the same model and plan, this vast number of public buildings, and it seems to me that there ought to be a provision made—it would not and ought not largely to increase the expense—by which the best architectural genius in this country should be summoned into this service, either by having an association of architects employed to give out this work, or by giving amplest authority to the Supervising Architect himself to employ the eminent men of all parts of the country, not merely as assistants, but as original designers, either by competition or where an architect has won his spurs and his genius is well known, by confidence, and not a particular architect to be selected for the purpose.

I hope the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will address themselves to bringing about that much-needed reform, which will not only accomplish all that my honorable friend from Kansas desires of promptness in the accomplishment of the work so far as the Architect can bring that to pass, but will give to the people of the United States all over the country public buildings which will increase their sentiment of pride and reverence for the Republic itself. There is no reason why in Italy, France, England, and Germany, the traveler should see in every little village some structure of beauty and grace which he remembers always as one of the fairest visions of life, and we should be condemned to tameness and sameness and mediocrity in our public architecture.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts had given his usual attention to this subject he would have known that Congress has done all it could in the direction he has indicated in his remarks. We have a provision already in a general appropriation act that the architects of the United States shall be invited to submit plans for the construction of public buildings, and there is already authority in the Treasury Department to employ them.

This matter has been considered by the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House and the Senate, and legislation was formulated in a bill which was afterwards put into a general appropriation act. To the trouble in the whole matter I have called the attention of the Senate repeatedly since I have been connected with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. We do not pay a sufficient salary to the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department. We expect to obtain first-class talent for a very low salary, and we have never been able to do it. That is the first defect.

In the second place the system under which public buildings have been constructed in the United States has been such as to preclude the possibility of obtaining first-class buildings. We have proceeded in this matter upon a sporadic principle, every Senator and Representative attempting to get the largest appropriation possible for his city or town, without regard to the recommendations made by the Supervising Architect as to the kind of building that should be constructed.

Now, as to the resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas, I have no particular objection to it, but I suggest to him that a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Representatives is now engaged in examining the different branches of the public service and going through the bureaus of the different Departments in order to make a report as to their reorganization. It is an open secret that the Supervising Architect's Bureau needs reorganization.

Again, I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that his resolution should go to the standing committee of the Senate which is charged with an examination of the different branches of the civil service. That would be the appropriate reference, and as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate I would prefer to have it referred to that committee. The committee of which I am chairman has done all it could in the direction indicated by the resolution, and if it is agreeable to him I should like that change to be made. I ask the Senator from Kansas to have his resolution referred to the Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.

Mr. PEFFER. I have no objection. Let the resolution be so referred.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the resolution be read again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I appreciate perfectly the desire of the Senator from Kansas and other Senators with regard to the construction of public buildings, and I know how annoying is the delay where Congress has already directed the construction of such buildings. The underlying fact is that Congress has made provision for the construction of more buildings than it was possible to have the plans prepared for by the Treasury Department with the present force, efficient as it may be, and as I have no doubt it is. But there is another consideration which Senators must not overlook. We have appropriated so much more money than there is revenue to meet the expenditures that it is not possible to force the construction, to employ additional architects for the plans, or to commence the erection of buildings unless additional provision shall be made by Congress to supply the Treasury with money. When the Senator from Kansas or any other Senator has in mind any provision of law or resolution of this body to expedite work upon public structures he must at the same time be prepared to vote for an additional loan to the Treasury or an increase of the revenues from taxation.

This condition applies not only to the present Administration, but to the one which has just gone out of power. There have been three hundred and odd million of dollars more appropriated in the last three years than the revenues of the Government have amounted to. While I have no objection to an inquiry as to the amount of money that ought to be expended in facilitating all matters in the Treasury Department in the preparation of plans, I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that we are met immediately afterward with the greater question, where is the money to come from?

I am myself very anxious to have all the public buildings that are necessary for Government purposes constructed at the earliest possible moment, but the condition in which the Treasury is found, and has been for a year past and will be for the next year, is the important question which is to come up for consideration in this body.

I trust, notwithstanding the objection of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to have the resolution referred to his committee, that on examination he will waive the objection. He has had great familiarity with this work. The committee would examine it intelligently and come back again, I have no doubt, with proper recommendations, as they have done in the past. Then their recommendations would go to the Committee on Appropriations, as a matter of course, with the other question I have suggested, which is much more serious, and which will confront us.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, in connection with this subject I wish to put myself upon the record. The present condition of the United States, with the millions of unemployed and starving people who are to be found throughout the country, demands, in my judgment, the most liberal expenditure on the part of the Federal Government. The credit of this country is inexhaustible, and it is easy to provide a form in which it may be utilized to relieve the millions of people who are now out of employment. No more important question can address itself to the consideration of a statesman and of those who are charged with public duty than that of a public policy which will at least prevent widespread want and suffering for the want of employment because work can not be had.

My own judgment is that noninterest-paying Treasury notes ought to be issued to a great extent, and every important public work in the United States which is useful and necessary ought now to be encouraged and liberal expenditures made for its conduct. I should go further. I would even appropriate money for the construction under the immediate direction and supervision of the United States, of the great water way across the continent at Nicaragua, if it be ascertained to be practicable. It surprises me that more attention is not given to the condition in which our people are found everywhere throughout the country, without employment and dependent upon the unstable confidence to be inspired in business men for renewed enterprises which may give them employment.

I wish to put myself upon record as favoring liberal expenditures, and whatever financial policy may be necessary to utilize the public credit of the United States in the shape of Treasury notes which may pass current in order to relieve the distress prevailing throughout the country.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, very early in the special session of Congress I introduced a bill to repeal the limitation contained in the sundry civil appropriation act, I think, as to the amount of money that may be expended in any one year in the office of the Supervising Architect for the preparation of plans and for clerical services. The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I was informed then by members of the Committee on Appropriations that the provision I complained of was one which was contained in previous appropriation acts, and that the amount which was permitted to be expended under the provision of the last sundry civil act for that purpose was as large or larger than had been expended in previous years. I was also told that if a larger appropriation were made additional office room for the Supervising Architect of the Treasury would have to be provided, and that was an objection to the expenditure of a larger sum in any one year.

Now, I have ascertained that in the opinion of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury if the amount were increased fifty or a hundred thousand dollars, which may be used for that purpose for the present fiscal year, no additional room would be required, but that with that increased appropriation and an increase in the clerical force the necessary plans for the public buildings which Congress has provided for could be prepared and the buildings could be commenced.

I hardly thought, as the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds desired my bill to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, that it would receive immediate consideration; but I desire to call the attention of the Senate again to the proposition that the only purpose of this provision in the sundry civil act, limiting the amount which may be expended in any one year by the Supervising Architect for the preparation of plans, of moneys already appropriated for public buildings, is to prevent the expenditure of money already appropriated and lessen the expenditures of the Government. The money is already appropriated. The cost of the preparation of the plans comes out of the appropriations made for the different public buildings, and the limitation in the sundry civil act is not a limitation of appropriation, but simply a limitation of the expenditure for the purposes stated in any one year out of moneys already appropriated for public buildings.

I do not agree with my friend from Florida that it is the duty of the General Government, or the State governments, or even of the numerous municipalities, to provide for the general destitution and want in the community, and to furnish idle laborers with employment of which they have been deprived by the fear of hostile legislation by Congress. If it is desirable that these men shall be employed, as I once before stated on this floor, let the Senate or the Congress pass a resolution assuring the country that there will be no hostile tariff legislation during the present Congress; give the country opportunity to reverse its verdict upon the question of protection and the chance to elect another House of Representatives, and it will not be ten days until every industry in the country will be in full blast and labor will be employed. If we are going to try to remedy the troubles let us adopt the true remedy.

Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Florida give me an opportunity I have been waiting for recently to notice certain transactions in my own State. Our worthy governor saw fit to address a letter to the President of the United States, I think on Christmas day, in which he took the President to task for his position on the financial question, for favoring a repeal of the Sherman law, and in which he asserted that two-thirds of the people of the State of Oregon were unemployed and in destitution and want on account of the repeal of the provision of the Sherman law authorizing the purchase of silver. The press in my State is very indignant at the State having been advertised in that manner by the governor, and the boards of trade of Salem and Portland have adopted resolutions denying the statements of the governor and asserting that he has misrepresented the condition of our people.

Mr. ALLEN. With the permission of the Senator from Oregon——

Mr. DOLPH. I should prefer not to be interrupted just now. I will yield directly.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not wish to be interrupted until I complete my statement.

Mr. ALLEN. Has the Senator the letter of the governor containing the statement he has just attributed to him?

Mr. DOLPH. I have not, but I have the resolution. I do not care to reproduce the letter. I am not advertising Governor Pennoyer. I propose to correct his statement in regard to the condition of the people of my State.

Mr. ALLEN. I have the letter——

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I decline to yield.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon declines to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator goes entirely beyond the governor's statement.

Mr. DOLPH. I think not. I do not know in what respect I have done so. I have stated only one fact, I think, concerning the governor's letter, and that is that he stated that two-thirds of the people of my State were unemployed. The truth is that Oregon is suffering, like every other State in the Union, from the present depression of business and the financial disturbance. There have been some failures of banks in Portland. There has been some suspension of industries, but probably Oregon is suffering as little as any other State in the Union. There are not a great many unemployed people. Of course it is difficult for people now to borrow money for speculative purposes. The money of some of the people has been tied up in suspended banks and there are some people unemployed, but the general condition of the people of the State of Oregon is quite as prosperous as that of any other State in the Union.

I have had transmitted to me, with the request that I give it all possible publicity, a resolution of the Board of Trade of Salem, Oregon, which is as follows:

Whereas the Governor of the State of Oregon has abused the official position conferred upon him by the people by addressing the President of the United States a letter containing certain statements injurious to the Commonwealth and calculated to create an erroneous impression in the minds of those not acquainted with the facts, thereby deterring those who might contemplate engaging in productive industries here: Be it therefore

Resolved, That we, the board of trade and business men of Salem, most emphatically deny the assertions of the governor and brand his statements as false, and aver that, notwithstanding the pervading depression, there is no widespread destitution or actual want in Oregon, and that the governor in claiming that two-thirds of our people are without employment while one-third are without the means of subsistence was guilty of gross misrepresentation; and we request our representatives in Congress to present these resolutions to the President of the United States and to deny, in both Senate and House, the truth of the governor's statements. While admitting that Oregon is suffering from the prevailing hard times, we confidently claim that there is less poverty here in proportion to the population than in any other State in the Union, and the prospects for the future are excellent.

ALBERT I. WAGNER,
Secretary Salem Board of Trade.

Mr. President, I have discharged my duty in this regard.

Mr. VEST. I hardly anticipated, sir, that a little ordinary resolution in regard to the expenditure for public buildings would lead to a discussion of the Senatorial question in Oregon. I am also profoundly astonished that the Senator from Oregon should have now changed his opinion as to the causes of the depression of business throughout the country. Unless my memory has absolutely deserted me, I think I recollect some very eloquent speeches by the Senator from Oregon during the last silver discussion, in which he promised us that if there should be a repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act a millenium of prosperity would flood the country like the sunlight on a May day. He, with his friends, succeeded in securing the repeal of that clause, but yet the sunlight has not materialized, and the country is suffering to-day to a greater extent than almost ever before in its history.

After having failed to prophesy correctly in that regard, the Senator from Oregon has discovered another cause of calamity, and that is the tariff. But it is a singular contradiction of his statement that the depression extends throughout the whole world. Business in Europe is depressed as well as in the United States, and certainly our tariff has not affected business relations there. It is also a singular fact that whenever such statements as those alluded to by the Senator from Oregon as having been made by his governor are brought forward in either House of Congress they are denied most emphatically, as in this instance, by the Senators and Representatives from those States. While we are told that there is a general depression throughout the country, the Representatives and Senators are always ready to contradict the assertion that in their States an unusual degree of depression exists.

Coming back to the real matter before the Senate, I did not care in the few remarks I made in reply to the Senator from Kansas, or rather in discussing his resolution, to allude to the condition of the Treasury of the United States, as has been done by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. When the Senator from Oregon sent to the committee of which I am chairman his bill removing the limitation upon the amount to be expended in any one year in plans and specifications of public buildings, as a matter of course it involved to a large extent the condition of the Treasury of the country.

It was not my purpose, Mr. President, to avoid any legitimate duty when I suggested to the Senator from Oregon when he came to the reference of that bill that it should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The idea in my mind was that the Committee on Appropriations was the proper committee to look into legislation which increased the expenditures of the Government, and it was an open secret then, as it is now, that the condition of the Treasury of the United States was such that appropriations by us, unless we furnished additional means to the Treasury, constituted simply an empty farce. It is known, without any official inquiry, that more money must be furnished in some way to the Treasury. We can appropriate. What is it but a simple and empty appropriation unless money is furnished to the Treasury with which to pay these appropriations? Until that question could be in some sort of way met, and the amount in the Treasury properly ascertained, I was reluctant to report a bill which took off the limitation in the general appropriation bill and extended the expenditures of the Government without understanding exactly where we stood.

I am glad that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has stated here so frankly the real condition. It is above all party. The representatives of the people must now meet the situation as it exists, and in some sort of way furnish the money in order to carry on the Government.

I do not care to indulge in any partisan discussion. It is not my purpose to go back and show the condition of the Treasury when it was passed over by our Republican friends to us. It is enough now for Senators to know that the Treasury is practically empty, and that we must furnish the money in order to meet such appropriations as Congress thinks proper to make. It is very easy to find out how money should be expended, but the question is where is the money to be obtained?

I shall not follow the Senator from Oregon in his attempt to make the tariff policy of the Democratic party responsible for existing conditions. Those conditions were upon us before the tariff agitation commenced. They came from other causes, and every intelligent man in the United States knows it.

It is no good now, however, to indulge in recrimination, but it is the highest duty of statesmanship, without regard to party, to meet the condition as it is and adopt some means by which to replenish the exchequer of the country in order that our appropriations may amount to something.

Mr. DOLPH. I regret exceedingly that so able and distinguished a Senator as the Senator from Missouri should have paid so little attention to my speech upon the silver question as to indulge in the idea he has stated, that I ever suggested that our business disturbances and financial troubles were the result of the operation of the Sherman law. On the contrary, on the very day that the President's message was received at the special session of Congress, I took occasion to dissent from the statement of the President that the then existing condition of the country had been brought about by the operation of the Sherman law, and asserted that, in my judgment, the then condition of the country was the result of threatened hostile tariff legislation, a cause which had always produced in this country similar conditions.

Again, on the 3d day of October, in another speech I made upon the bill for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law, I took occasion to amplify that statement to some extent, and then stated what I have substantially repeated this morning in regard to the securing of prosperity to the country by assuring the country that there would be no hostile tariff legislation at the present session of Congress. I did assert on more than one occasion in discussing the silver bill that, in my judgment, its repeal would not greatly aid in restoring the prosperity of the country; and then, not being willing to occupy the time of the Senate and let the impression go to the Senate and the country that I was seeking to delay the final vote upon that measure, I promised that when an opportunity came when I could do so without interfering with the other business of the Senate, I would undertake to prove by reference to our history from the foundation of the Government to the present time that what had this recently happened in this country had always happened when the protective policy had been abandoned or its abandonment had been threatened.

On the 18th of last month I fulfilled my promise, and notwithstanding the Senator from Missouri asserts that every intelligent man knows that the present condition of the country is not the result of threatened tariff legislation, I desire to say that, in my judgment and in the judgment of a good many others, I then established the proposition beyond controversy by reference to our history, by reference to the messages of the Presidents of the United States, by reference to the speeches of Democrats and of Whigs in Congress, and by other historical references, that what has happened since the last Presidential election in this country has always happened whenever the protective system has been abandoned or its abandonment has been threatened.

I say, I regret that it is necessary to correct the honorable Senator from Missouri. I hoped that he had paid better attention to what I said upon the silver question than to make the assertion which he did.

Mr. PEFFER. I merely wish to add a few more words. I do not desire to be sidetracked, if I may use that Western phrase, by the threat of a deficit in the Treasury, for I think it is safe to say that if the present policy of the Government of the United States, without regard to party, is to be continued it will not be long until there will not be anything that they call a dollar in the Treasury or anywhere else in the country; for it seems, Mr. President, that it has been the policy of every Administration since the time of the great war to contract our money to the gold basis, and then to place the gold in the hands of a few speculators so that they shall have control not only of the money of the people but, through the money, of their business. If we are going to wait until there is money in the Treasury according to the present and past policies of the Administration we shall never have any money there and we shall never have any public buildings.

But it is a mistake to say—and the word "mistake" is hardly expressive of what I mean—that there is not money enough on hand to carry out every contract of the Government. I wish to say to the Senator from Maryland, to the Senator from Missouri, and to other Senators who believe as they do, that there is an abundance of money in the Treasury at this hour to meet every appropriation which has been made by Congress. I do not mean to say that there is gold in the Treasury—I do not mean to say that at all—but I mean to say that, according to the platforms of those parties, the Democratic and the Republican, everything we are now using as money is money and that it is just as good as gold, that for all practical purposes national-bank notes are just as good as gold, for all practical purposes silver certificates are just as good as gold, Treasury notes just as good as gold, greenbacks just as good as gold, and silver dollars just as good as gold; and we have—I do not know how much, because I have not figured the amount exactly—an abundance of that kind of money which the people out where I live are very glad to take, and I have no doubt the people in the State that the Senator from Oregon represents so ably are quite anxious to get that money out, and so it is everywhere in the country. There is an abundance of that kind of money, I will say to Senators. So there can be no trouble on that score, and if we can prevail upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to take charge of this resolution and see that the Supervising Architect is properly supplied with help to catch up with his work—if that is a proper expression—there will be no trouble about the money by the poor fellows who do the work. It is just such money as the rest of us have.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment being withdrawn, the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

TARIFF POLICY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to give notice that on Monday next, the 15th instant, after the routine morning business, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to submit some remarks on the resolution I offered the 20th day of December relating to the tariff.

HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. ALLEN. I call up the resolution I offered yesterday, which is now lying on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is recognized by the Chair, under notice previously given.

Mr. ALLEN. My resolution comes over, as I suppose, as the unfinished business from yesterday, but under the circumstances the resolution may be passed over for the present.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask to have taken from the table the resolution introduced on the 3d instant by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] respecting the affairs of Hawaii.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. FRYE on the 3d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate, pending the investigation ordered by resolution of December 21, directing the Committee on Foreign Relations to inquire into our relations with Hawaii, there should be no interference on the part of this Government, by moral influence or physical force, for the restoration of Lilliuokalani or the maintenance of the Provisional Government in the Hawaiian Islands, and that our naval forces should be used in said islands only for the protection of the lives and property of American citizens.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator from Minnesota desires to make some observations on the resolution, I ask at this time unanimous consent that he may be permitted to conclude his remarks without interruption by the intervention of the hour of 2 o'clock, and that at the conclusion of his remarks the regular order may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAY. What is the regular order?

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose there is no regular order unless it be the Calendar. I ask that the Senator from Minnesota may be permitted to conclude his remarks without the customary interruption at the close of the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, on the 4th day of March, 1893, there was no question pending between this Government and the Government of Hawaii except the consideration of the treaty of annexation. All preceding questions, whatever they were, had been gathered up into the recognition of that Government, and had been settled in the most solemn form by the conclusion of a convention which had been submitted to the Senate. The Provisional Government of Hawaii had also been recognized by the nations of the civilized world, and from no quarter of the horizon was there any portent whatever of trouble to come.

Immediately upon the accession of the present Administration recommendations were made and action was taken which, in the course of their performance and in their consequences, have largely undone, and threaten entirely to undo, the composed condition of affairs which up to that time had existed. Our relations to those islands are now such as to excite the gravest apprehension, and seem to be fraught with consequences which, as they evolve from day to day, no foresight can adequately predict. The widest divergence of opinion exists, the matter is thrown into the sea of debate and public discussion, and it is my purpose, with powers which I regret are not adequate to so great an occasion, to discuss somewhat extensively the past and the present of those transactions.

Mr. President, the relations of Hawaii to the United States are and have been peculiar and exceptional. For more than fifty years, as a matter of announced national policy on the part of this Government, acquiesced in by Hawaii and by the nations of the civilized world, those islands have been entailed to the United States, and as to the United States have been in reversion when the time should come when the fleeting monarchy which has existed there should expire. There has not been a Secretary of State since 1840 who has not announced this determination and this policy. Mr. Webster, Mr. Legaré, Mr. Marcy, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Seward, Mr. Blaine, and all who have held that office have spoken in the voice of their Government in this respect with no uncertain tone, and it has been acquiesced in by foreign nations.

So that it is neither extraordinary nor remarkable that at sometime under favorable circumstances and conditions that to which manifest destiny had dedicated those islands should be brought to pass. Indeed in 1854, Mr. Marcy, then being Secretary of State, a treaty of annexation was negotiated and only failed of confirmation because of its condition respecting pecuniary compensation to be made, and because of the fact that the treaty provided that the Islands of Hawaii should become a State in the Union.

Mr. President, the condition of that country, like all communities which have emerged or are emerging from barbarism into civilization, has always been peculiar and precarious. It has been subjected to foreign intervention over and over again, and those interventions were the occasions of many expressions of policy by the various Secretaries of State whom I have mentioned.

In 1836 the English negotiated relations with that island under the guns of a frigate. In 1839 the French did the same. In 1843 the English Government by force took possession of those islands and held them for months. The French did so substantially on another occasion, and when in 1851, under the guns of a French man-of-war, treaty obligations were demanded of the Kingdom of Hawaii, the then king executed a deed of cession and delivered it in escrow to the United States representative to be opened and considered as received upon the happening of certain events.

As I shall, in the course of the remarks which I propose to make, discuss at considerable length the events of January, 1893, in that island and the events subsequent to that time, it is, in my conception of the subject, necessary and proper, not for the purpose of vindicating particularly what has been done, but for showing the reasons and occasions of the action of the civilized people of those islands, to go somewhat into the history of the repeated occasions of oppression and abuse of power which finally brought those people to a conviction that they were under a condition of government which they could no longer endure and which authorized them to resort to the sacred right of revolution.

The reciprocity treaty with the Hawaiian Islands was concluded in 1876. Before that time and from the beginning of its history, or from the beginning of the time when civilization had come in contact with its history, those islands had been, so far as their civilized condition was concerned, the outgrowth of American influence, American settlement, and American civilization. It was a proud memorial of these. No other government exercising a protectorate or a sovereignty over the people of any other islands in the Pacific Ocean had brought about such results. The English found a republican form of government recently organized by the Maoris in New Zealand when they took possession in 1840, and where are the Maoris now? Swept away by the inexorable destructiveness of British administration.

But here in these islands, through American settlement, American influence, American wealth, and American Christianity, is presented the only instance in all that vast sea of a people forming themselves into a government under the guidance of civilization. So when the reciprocity treaty of 1876 became operative, there poured into those islands thus prepared an enormous accession of American enterprise, wealth, and people, and its influence upon the destinies of that island of all kinds was of the most beneficent character.

But the new influences had to contend with a condition of things destined to soon pass away. The experiment of monarchical rule, then being conducted there, was ephemeral in its very nature.

Mr. President, relations such as those between this Government and that implied a certain right of intervention and control and interference. Such intervention and control have been exercised over and over again. That which would not be necessary in any situation which may now be conceived of as to relations which we have with any other nation of the world has been necessary there.

In 1874, by the death of the King without issue, he naming no successor, the office became elective by the Legislature. Strife arose between the partisans of Queen Emma, who represented the British interests, and those of the late King Kalakaua, whose disposition toward the United States was supposed to be favorable. The Legislature of Hawaii convened. There was an election. It resulted in the choice of the late King. Immediately a riot sprang up, intended by its contrivers to grow to the proportions of a revolution. The rioters were natives. They broke into the legislative chamber where the ceremony of election was taking place, and assaulted and beat the legislators then in the performance of their duty. Whereupon, without invitation, upon the mere motion of the United States minister, the American marines were landed from the ship of war then in the harbor of Honolulu, and that election was thereupon conducted and concluded, and King Kalakaua was inaugurated under the direct supervision and guard of American military power.

In 1880 there was trouble in Hawaii because a foreign adventurer by the name of Moreno, who had become minister of foreign affairs or of finance, was playing havoc with the interests of the islands. The situation became so intolerable that all the foreign ministers raised their flags over their legations, and declined to hold any further intercourse with that Government until Moreno was displaced.

In time the Government became corrupt—corrupt beyond example, inefficient beyond precedent; it became the prey of every flagitious scheme which was not able to obtain a foothold in any other land. The opium bill of 1886, designed by its promoters to have its inevitable effect of producing a moral lethargy upon the people, was introduced, and a most singular system of bribery did its work.

A Chinese named Aki gave to the then King $71,000 as a consideration for a license to be thereafter issued to him. Another Chinese paid to the King $80,000 for the same thing, but took the precaution to get the license before he paid his money. The consequence of which was that Aki committed suicide and his estate went into administration. Because of the excesses, the profligacy, the riotous expenditure of the late King, his private debts had become about $250,000, and he was compelled to assign the crown lands to trustees as security for the payment. The administrator of Aki put in his claim. It was contended on the part of the Hawaiian Government, or by the trustees, that the contract was against good morals and public policy, and therefore was void; but by a strange yet I think logical application of the ancient maxim that the king can do no wrong, the supreme court of Hawaii held the contract valid and held the estate for the repayment of the sum.

The year 1887 was marked with great disturbances. Many events, which the limitations of the present occasion do not permit me to recount in detail, had brought this about. Many people from civilized lands had come in; great operations were going on, agricultural and otherwise; the existing constitution of 1874 was distasteful to them—unjust, for it contained instrumentalities of oppression. Accordingly, in that year a revolution was organized—revolutions are frequent in that island—and volunteer companies were equipped. Foreign residents addressed their ministers and stated that the situation as it had been was intolerable. Mass meetings were held, guarded by armed volunteer troops; business was suspended, and resolutions were passed declaring that the monarchy had ceased to exist through its incompetency and corruption.

A committee was sent to the King with this resolution. He called upon certain foreign ministers, those of the United States and Great Britain and Portugal, and offered to put his Kingdom into their hands if he could be extricated from what he considered the personal peril of his position. They declined this, and advised him to promulgate a new constitution at once, acceding to the demands of the revolutionists. He followed the advice. This was the constitution of 1887, which the ex-queen, by a revolutionary act, and in violation of the terms of every constitution which ever has subsisted in that island, undertook to abrogate by her own personal decree, and to restore that of 1874, which contained the unjust and oppressive provisions to which I have alluded.

After the adoption of the constitution of 1887 the next three years and a half of the history of that island were marked with sedition, conspiracy, and tumult. There was a revolution in July, 1889, and it resulted in insurrection, fighting in the streets, and much bloodshed.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. My impression is that the Senator is not strictly accurate when he says that Queen Liliuokalani proposed to restore the constitution of 1874. I think the evidence shows that she proposed a constitution of her own, which was infinitely worse than that of 1874.

Mr. DAVIS. I have compared the constitutions of 1887 and 1874 with what purports to be a copy of the constitution which she proposed to promulgate in January, 1893, and which until a very recent date has been visible to no man, and I am inclined to think that my general statement in that respect is correct.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to say further in relation to that, that there may be similar features in the constitution of 1874 to the one proposed by the Queen, but as published in the Blount report there are some parts of it left out of the constitution which the Queen proposes, notably the article which provided for disfranchising all the white inhabitants.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall come to that in the due course of my remarks. I propose to analyze those constitutions before I get through.

There was another conspiracy in 1888, the direct object of which was to depose the then King, and the ultimate object of which was to procure an abrogation of the constitution of 1887 and a return to the former bad condition of affairs.

Mr. President, I wish to impute in the discussion I am about to make upon this question of fact improper motives to no man. I have, however, become impressed with the conviction that upon the testimony which Mr. Blount took in the Hawaiian Islands, and upon that alone, his report can not be sustained.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will pardon me one moment, I should like him to state right there if it is a fact that his argument is proceeding upon the evidence printed in the Blount report, and that he has not been present as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations to hear the evidence which has been since taken?

Mr. DAVIS. That is true. In what I shall say, Mr. President, respecting the bearing of the testimony upon the Blount report, I shall confine myself exclusively to the testimony reported by that gentleman in connection with it. I will also state that, as a matter of fact, and designedly, I have not attended a meeting of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations now conducting its investigations. No syllable of the testimony taken there has been reported to me. I am unable to use it. I would not use it if I could, owing to the manifest impropriety of any such action. But I purpose to test the report so far as I can by the testimony which was taken by Mr. Blount and which it is asserted sustains it; and it does seem to me, weighing it with as much impartiality as one can who has convictions upon either side of the subject, that, instead of sustaining the conclusions to which the commissioner came, it sustains the action of Minister Stevens and sustains the action of the preceding Administration based thereon.

As I said, another conspiracy was inaugurated in 1888, all of these conspiracies having for their object the deprivation of the people there, who are of American and European birth, of the civil rights guaranteed to them by the constitution of 1887, having for their object a reversion to the old order of things whereby only native subjects were electors and eligible to office. The King having granted the constitution of 1887 under the conditions of force and duress which I have stated, many of his subjects were naturally dissatisfied, and accordingly the conspiracy of 1888 was entered into, in which the recent Queen, then Mrs. Dominis, was a prime mover, for the purpose of deposing her brother. Its object was to compel by force the King to abdicate.

The King got forty-eight hours to temporize, and the result was that some of the revolutionists were arrested, the conspiracy was frustrated, and the object of Mrs. Dominis, who afterwards became queen, was not attained. I cite this and other analogous facts to show the character and disposition of this woman, what she has done in the past, what her purposes have been, how she has violated pledges and oaths, and how much reliance can be placed upon any assurance of hers that her conduct in the future will ever be otherwise than it has been in the past.

Another revolution or conspiracy took shape and force on the 30th day of July, 1889, and Mrs. Dominis was back of that. It was known as the Wilcox insurrection. He arrayed a force of one hundred men, and he was a man perfectly competent to carry out a design of that character. He is a somewhat remarkable personage, of Hawaiian birth, largely of Hawaiian blood. He was educated in his youth at the expense of the Government of the islands in the military schools of Italy, and served as a subaltern in the artillery service of that Kingdom until he was recalled by his own government. He entered into a conspiracy to dethrone the King, and Mrs. Dominis, the King's sister, was a confederate with him. With characteristic falsity she afterwards disavowed it, but no one can read the evidence in this report without being convinced that such was the fact, the scheme being throughout to procure a return to the old bad order of things.

Wilcox with his armed force moved out early in the morning and took possession of the government building. He received large accessions. The King fled from his palace and took refuge in a boathouse, under the guns of the United States man-of-war Adams. Some ten Hawaiians were killed in the fighting which ensued before the insurrection was put down.

On that occasion, in 1889, in the presence of a revolution organized and carried out to overthrow the King, the then minister of the United States did not hesitate. His conduct was never condemned. Mr. Merrill, who was then our minister, without any invitation from the Government, landed the American marines from the ship of war then in the harbor. He landed them because it was necessary to protect American life and property, no matter what the incidental results or the collateral consequences might be as to the stability of the Kingdom itself. His conduct was never blamed. Later in the afternoon, at the request of the Government, which he had not asked before, another detachment was landed and he reports:

The appearance of the marines on the streets and at the legation had a very favorable effect upon the populace.

Here was a conspiracy to overthrow the throne, necessarily implicating American interests in the result, whichever way the result might be, threatening violence; and yet before anything overt had happened, an article of property destroyed, or the life or safety of a single person actually threatened, the then minister landed the American troops, and no exception was ever taken to that act.

The time came for the King to die, and Mrs. Dominis was elected as his successor and took the title of Queen Liliuokalani.

Mr. MORGAN. Mrs. Dominis was not elected by the Legislature; she was appointed by Kalakaua.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not mean to say that. The constitution of that kingdom, issue failing, empowers the king the right to designate his successor, and that failing, the right of election vests in the Legislature. She was designated by her brother. When she was inducted into the sovereignty, under circumstances of great solemnity, she took an oath administered by the chief justice of the Kingdom to support the constitution of the year 1887; and yet her words had scarcely died away (certainly not from the recollection and hopes of those who heard them) before, in the early part of the year 1892, she began to conspire to do that which she afterwards attempted to do in January, 1893. She purposed and conspired to promulgate a constitution similar to that of January 14, 1893, and which when attempted resulted in her downfall. She requested Wilcox, the trained military man who conducted the preceding revolution, to assist her in the attempt and he refused. She caused warrants to be issued for 37 members of the Patriotic League. She laid plans to attack and shoot in the streets all who should resist her intended proceedings. Proclamations of martial law were drafted, to be made efficient by their issuance whenever it should be thought necessary.

Not meeting with sufficient encouragement, that attempt took no efficient shape; but the fact that it was made so recently after her coronation, so recently after she had sworn to support the constitution under which she had been inaugurated, with the other facts and circumstances to which I have called and to which I shall call attention, shows how little she is to be trusted and how justifiable her subjects were at the time of the revolution of January, 1893, in declaring that the time had passed when they could put any faith in her promises, and that any excuse or promise she might make was only significant of ulterior designs of the same character intended by her.

The year 1893 came in. The Legislature had been in session several months. The constitution of that kingdom provided, not that the cabinet should exist as long as the sovereign pleased, but that it should continue until voted out by a want of confidence of the Legislature. Up to January three cabinets had been voted out. It also provided that no royal act should be of validity unless countersigned by one member of the cabinet, who should thereby become responsible therefor.

During the session of this Legislature many causes conspired to produce the greatest discontent and alarm among the people of those islands. The opium-license bill came up again; but worse than that, the Louisiana lottery, driven from its own country, made its appearance through its agents in those islands and was seeking to spread over them the blight of another leprosy.

The result was that about the 11th of January, 1893, a bill was passed providing for granting opium licenses and another was passed granting a franchise to certain persons, but which, it was understood, was to go from them to the Louisiana lottery. The subsidy to be paid by the lottery company to the Hawaiian Government annually for the lottery franchise was $500,000, and the amount expected to be realized annually from the operations of the opium-license statute was $200,000, in all $700,000; one-third of the sum had hitherto been the highest revenues of the Kingdom. Of course, the feelings of the law-abiding people of the islands, of those who saw the correct way to civilization and who were leading in it, were outraged.

It was, however, a mere matter of domestic administration, and perhaps might have been suffered but for other proceedings. It being feared that no member of the then cabinet would countersign those bills, as required by the Hawaiian constitution, in order to make the Queen's approval valid, it was resolved by those who had secured the passage of those bills by bribery and corruption that they would obviate that difficulty by voting out the cabinet, whose action they feared, and by voting in one whom the Queen should nominate, upon whose favorable action they knew they could rely.

Accordingly, a vote of want of confidence was passed, and the ministry that was feared gave way to one from which much was to be expected with certainty. On the 14th day of January, 1893, if I am not mistaken in the date, the work all having been done to which I have alluded, the Queen prorogued the Legislature. The constitution of Hawaii contained a provision that any amendment of that instrument should be considered by two successive Legislatures, and be submitted to the people in the meantime. No proposition was heard in that Legislature for the amendment of the constitution; no knowledge or hint had been given to the public of the intention of the Queen; but immediately upon the prorogation, and upon the same day, word was given out to the native population to repair to the palace, and that the Queen was about to proclaim another constitution.

The announcement was heard with alarm, with indignation. The ultimate extent of her purposes could only be conjectured, but it was believed that they were radical and subversive in their character to rights existing and property invested in those islands by foreign-born residents, and yet who were citizens for all purposes of holding office and of voting. It is a most singular commentary upon this revolution and everything connected with it, and a most emphatic refutation of the pretexts of the defunct monarchy that it had the power at that time to crush the revolution, that from the time of the announcement of the Queen's intention to her ministers, of her wish and purpose to promulgate a new constitution, they were in continual conference with Thurston and the other revolutionists, receiving proposals from them.

On Saturday at 11 a. m., testifies Mr. Smith, Thurston and Colburn, the minister of the interior, had a conference at Hartwell's office, and here is what took place. W. O. Smith, at page 489, states in substance that about 11 o'clock Saturday morning he found Thurston, Hartwell, and Colburn, one of the cabinet, in Hartwell's office talking very earnestly. Colburn very much excited. Colburn said that the ministers had been informed that the Queen would promulgate a constitution immediately after the prorogation. Colburn was excited and very much alarmed. Colburn's manner was that of a scared man, very much frightened. Smith says that a number of native members knew that the new constitution was coming.

A meeting of some of the native members of the Legislature had been held on the preceding Friday night. It was reported that John Kaluna, a member, was very violent in his speech; and stated at that meeting that he could kill five or six men, and would be perfectly willing to be hung for it, or die if he only had the opportunity to kill five or six more in defense of the proposed constitution. On a subsequent occasion, on the same day, Colburn came to Smith's office wearing a blue sash, only worn on state occasions, and asked Smith to go with him to the attorney-general's office (Colburn was the minister of finance, and the attorney-general was Mr. Peterson) in the Government building. Smith went and found there Peterson, Colburn, and Cornwell (the minister of the interior), Thurston, Wundenburg, and McFarlane. Colburn stated what had taken place at the palace. The others advised the ministers not to resign. A messenger came from the Queen requesting the ministers to return to the palace. At the time the whole of the Queen's guard was drawn up in front of the palace.

Then, describing the various streets, Mr. Smith says that on the Waikikki side of the main entrance to the palace and on the Ewa side of that entrance was a large crowd of natives—two or three hundred—and half as many more on the Makai side.

Mr. HOAR. What day was that?

Mr. DAVIS. This was Saturday. Smith says when the messenger came to summon them he told them not to return, explaining that three being absent it was a majority of the Government. Colburn expressed unwillingness to go, stating that he feared an excited mob and felt that their lives were in danger if they went back. It was decided to send for Parker to come over. He came, and the whole situation was discussed.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Parker was the other member of the cabinet?

Mr. DAVIS. Parker was the minister of foreign affairs. There was a third conference between the revolutionists and the Queen's minister held at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of Saturday, concerning which Mr. Smith states in substance on page 489:

> After the attempt to promulgate the constitution, and at about half past 3, Colburn overtook Thurston and myself returning to my office and told us how the Queen in great anger had stated to the people that she had been unable to carry out her wishes and had been prevented.

Concerning this third interview Mr. Waterhouse states in substance on page 47:

Colburn stated that the Queen had gotten them into a room and requested them to sign the new constitution; they asked for a half hour to talk it over; in the meantime the natives were talking quite loud, and Colburn thought it about time for him to get out of it. So they went out the back way to the Government house. If they had gone out the front way the natives were all out there, and they were afraid. They wanted to know if the merchants would support them in their position. After discussing the matter a committee of safety was appointed.

I pause here, Mr. President, to call attention to the fact that this potent monarchy which it is now asserted was all through these proceedings, if it had been let alone by the United States, powerful enough to put down the insurrection, was, through three of its cabinet ministers, consulting with the revolutionists for what was deemed to be the public good. It was at the last consultation that the committee of public safety was appointed. The ministers had fled from the palace. The royal power was broken then and there.

Its executive arm was palsied. No element of force able to sustain it appears during the four days covered by these events except in the person of Mr. Wilson, concerning whom this testimony is full, and who was the only one of the Queen's adherents, I am bound to say, who throughout this entire business showed any courage or manhood, or was willing to employ the powers which it is said she possessed to put down the revolution, which they knew from its very inception was in progress, and which they assisted up to a certain point and knowingly helped to carry out.

There was still a fourth conference upon that Saturday, but it was probably not the fourth in order. This depends upon the statement made to Mr. Blount by Mr. Colburn, one of the ministers (page 30). January 14, Colburn and Peterson conferred with Thurston and others at Smith's office, and Thurston submitted to them a written plan of action in case the Queen persisted. This Colburn and Peterson took, and told Thurston they would await developments. The Queen was very determined at first. Mr. Colburn further states that Mr. Thurston came to him and insisted that he (Mr. Colburn) should oppose the Queen's intention, and that he would receive all the support wanted, even if necessary to depose her. This was at the Government building, whence the ministers returned to the palace.

The proposition which Colburn and Peterson took from Mr. Thurston on that Saturday was that the Queen under certain circumstances should be deposed, and that they should take part in the act of deposition. And these ministers, invested with such powers, powerful enough, as they afterward said in this testimony, to suppress the insurrection if they had been let alone, neither on that Saturday, nor on any day thereafter, took one step, so far as physical force is concerned, to attempt to do it, but put the proposition for the deposition of the Queen, in which they were to assist, into their own pockets and took it into further consideration. Some of these conferences to which I have alluded took place at the Government building and some of them were held at the office of Mr. R. O. Smith. Mr. Smith says, page 489:

> And we heard from various sources of the violent speeches of William White and others threatening bloodshed, and we returned and reported this to the meeting. My office was crowded with people. Colburn worked his way in, and Peterson appeared a little later and Colburn repeated his statement. This was after the constitution was attempted to be promulgated.

There is much more in this testimony to the same effect, but I have given in a condensed way the substance of some of its salient points.

This was a singular revolution, avowed, open, known to the Queen's ministers, they consulting and finally confederating with the revolutionists in a certain contingency, not one of them invoking any show whatever of physical force for its repression. The fact is that the monarchy was physically and morally gone on Saturday, two days, nearly three days, before a United States marine put his foot upon the island. They knew perfectly well—and the silence of the Queen all through these proceedings is significant, for nobody claims that she is not a bold and brave woman—that the days of the monarchy were over. The revolution was, like the great volcano on the neighboring island, giving signs of an activity which no human power could repress, but in the presence of which all human beings were hushed awaiting the unavoidable convulsion that was shortly to come to pass with irresistible power.

The proceedings at the palace when the Queen attempted to promulgate this constitution throw great light upon what she intended to do, whether she did in good faith then or thereafter defer her intention, how much reliance can be placed upon her promises now, and whether the apprehensions of the people on the island—the American people, the English people, the German people, the Norwegian people, the Portuguese people—were well founded, that there was no safety for them if the rotten dynasty should be suffered to continue. What took place at the palace does not seem to have impressed the mind of Commissioner Blount with any particular force, and yet it is concurred in by witnesses of the highest respectability. I shall take the liberty to read some condensations of their testimony. I will read first from the report of the committee on public safety, page 316. I read this for what it is worth, and ask no further credence for it than is derived from corroborative evidence to which in a few minutes I shall call the attention of the Senate.

These portions of the testimony which I shall state pertain to the proceedings that took place at the palace between 1 o'clock and 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, the 14th of January, 1893; and I may say that the entire events of the revolution are comprised within that Saturday, and the following Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday.

The Queen turned a deaf ear to the protests of the cabinet that the proposed action would cause the streets to run red with blood, and threatened that unless they complied with her demands she would state from the steps of the palace that the reason she did not give the people the new constitution was because the ministers would not let her. Three of the ministers feared mob violence and went to the Government house. They were summoned back, but refused to go. Later they returned to the palace, and for nearly three hours she again endeavored to force them to acquiesce. Upon their final refusal, in a public speech in the throne room, and again from the upper gallery of the palace, she announced that she desired to issue the new constitution, but was prevented by her ministers, and would do so in a few days. So the committee of public safety reported to the people.

I wish the Senate to be properly impressed with the situation as it was at the time. A constitution was to be promulgated without any previous public announcement of the fact. It had been kept a profound secret except as to very few people. It was to be promulgated by a revolutionary act to be committed by the Queen, in violation of the existing constitution which she had sworn to support. It does not appear in this testimony that anybody but Peterson, and perhaps some of the natives, knew of the existence of such an instrument before it was presented by the Queen at the palace about 1 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, and he had been carrying it around in his pocket for about eleven days. The entire royal forces of the island were drawn up in line and in arms before the palace, the force being limited to seventy-five by the law of the kingdom. Word had been sent out to the natives to appear, and hundreds of them surrounded the palace on all sides where the troops were not—an excited mob. Bearing in mind the previous attempts to forcibly abrogate the constitution of 1887, the conspiracies in which the Queen then in private life had figured and in which blood had been shed, this testimony and that which follows and corroborates it is very significant, not only as to the character of the woman, but as to the utter want of reliance which any circumspect person or administration can place in her assurance of her future good conduct.

Mr. Bishop, who was present on the same occasion, says in substance that the Queen drew up the household troops in front of the palace and determined to promulgate a new constitution; that she used violent language toward her ministers and they fled, and that she said she abandoned her intention for the present, but told her native subjects that she did so with regret, and would promulgate the constitution within a short time. And, as Mr. Bishop says, this wrecked her government.

Let me call attention to the testimony of Chief Justice Judd, who had been summoned from the seat of judgment where he was holding court to attend at the palace—he learning for the first time when he was summoned what the object of the message was. Mr. Judd had sworn the Queen to the constitution of 1887. He is a man of great prominence in the island, and is of the very highest personal character. Let us consider his version of the events at the palace, of which he was a personal witness. He says, in substance, that the Queen invited him to attend at the promulgation of the new constitution.

Shortly before the invitation, the chief justice was told that an advocate of the lottery bill was going to the palace, with a large number following, and that the Queen was going to proclaim a new constitution. The chief justice proceeds to say that the Queen was in great agitation, and at the same time controlled herself. He gives her language as follows: "She had prepared a new constitution which she thought would meet the purposes required and meet the approval of the people, but" she said "with great sorrow, I am obliged to tell you that I can not do it now, but I ask you to go home and love me and I will continue to love you, and in a few days you will have your wishes gratified." Whereupon a member of the Legislature turned around and said: "What shall we do with these men who prevent the gratification of our wishes?"

He was seeking an object of vengeance, and asked what shall be done with the cabinet, who in obedience to their constitutional duty, and in fear for the personal consequences to themselves, had refused to countersign the proclamation of the Queen giving out the new constitution, abrogating a constitution which she had been solemnly sworn to support, and which contained provision for the only method by which it could be amended, namely, by a new organic instrument, or by amendments which were to be passed upon by the action of two successive Legislatures. And as against this any royal proclamation promulgating another constitution was revolutionary in its character, and by its very force and effect absolved every subject of the Queen from allegiance to her, just as surely as the arbitrary acts of the King of Great Britain absolved our forefathers from allegiance to him.

Mr. Boyd was also present and he says the Queen was a very angry woman when at 4 p. m. Saturday she returned to the throne room, where were assembled the Hui Kalaiaina with most of the native members of the Legislature, the cabinet, the governor of Oahu, the young princess, Chief Justice Judd, and Mr. Justice Bickerton, the staff, ladies of the court, kahili bearers and others. She ascended the dais and spoke substantially as follows: "Princes, nobles, and representatives: I have listened to the thousands of voices of my people that have come to me, and I am prepared to grant their request.

"The present constitution is full of defects, as the chief justice here will testify, as questions regarding it have so often come before him for settlement. It is so faulty that I think a new one should be granted. I have prepared one, in which the rights of all have been regarded—a constitution suited to the wishes of the people. I was ready and expected to proclaim the new constitution to day as a suitable occasion for it, and thus satisfy the wishes of my dear people. But, with deep regret, I say that I have met with obstacles that prevent it. Return to your homes peaceably and quietly, and continue to look toward me and I will look toward you. Keep me ever in your love. I am obliged to postpone the granting of the new constitution for a few days. I must confer with my cabinet, and when, after you return home, you may see it, receive it graciously. You have my love, and with sorrow I now dismiss you."

There is published, in the evidence which accompanies the report of Commissioner Blount, extracts from an article or a work called Two Weeks of Hawaiian History, which gives a somewhat circumstantial account of the proceedings at the palace.

Its substance is that Mr. White replied, thanking the Queen and assuring her of the love of the people and that they would wait patiently until their desires should be fulfilled; to which the Queen responded with thanks, and left the throne room.

This was after she had announced her failure.

Mr. Kaunamano then began, in a loud voice, an inflammatory harangue, which was suppressed. He demanded the lives of the members of the cabinet who had opposed the wishes of Her Majesty, and declared that he thirsted for bloodshed. A few moments later the Queen went out upon the upper balcony of the palace and addressed the crowd. She told them that on account of the perfidy of her ministers she was unable to give them the constitution which she had promised them, but that she would take the earliest opportunity of procuring it for them. The crowd then gave three cheers. Representative White then proceeded to the steps of the palace and began an address. He told the crowd that the cabinet had betrayed them, and that instead of going home peaceably they should go into the palace and kill and bury them. Attempts were made to stop him, which he resisted, saying that he would never close his mouth until the new constitution was granted. Finally he yielded to expostulations.

Mr. President, this discussion of the question of fact has perhaps been wearisome, but I am very anxious to lay before the Senate testimony which evidently made no impression whatever upon the mind of Commissioner Blount. It seems to me if he had had the least desire to sustain his own country in this matter, to sustain what had been done for our glory and credit, and not to discompose a condition of affairs which when he went there was settled, that some weight might have been given to this testimony. I am aware that there is scattered through this record testimony which can be strained and perverted according to the condition of mind in which you look at the transaction, to sustain to some degree the report of Commissioner Blount.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota, before he passes from the narrative he has just made, whether he has found anywhere, in the report of Mr. Blount, or the statement of the case on either side, in the evidence or elsewhere, in the discussion of the press or otherwise, any claim that the Queen had any constitutional power to proclaim a constitution? Has any human being claimed that, so far as the Senator knows?

Mr. DAVIS. No human being has ever made that claim. It has been conceded from all points and it must be conceded that it was a revolutionary act, in violation of the constitution which the Queen had sworn to support.

It is a proper time now, Mr. President, to state very briefly what these constitutions were; those which had been, were, and were proposed, and to which these events have relevance. There was the constitution of 1874, the constitution of 1887, which was that in force during the Queen's reign, and the proposed constitution. I said some time ago that the influx into the island of people of European and American birth after the convention of 1876, establishing reciprocity between that government and ours, had been so great, and the property thereby created so vast in value that it was felt, felt by them, felt by many of the enlightened natives, that their interests were not safe until there could be some radical change in the organic law whereby, by the right of voting and the right of holding office, they could in some degree protect the great interests which they had created. Out of this conviction sprang the constitution of 1887.

The constitution of 1874 gave the King the absolute right of veto. The constitution of 1887 provided, as ours does, that a vetoed bill could be passed over the disapproval of the executive by a two-thirds vote. It is certain that the Queen proposed in the constitution which in 1893 she intended and attempted to promulgate, to restore and to retake to herself, by the arbitrary act of proclamation, the right of absolute veto, and to take from the Legislature any control or restriction of her powers as to that.

Under the constitution of 1874, the one which was set aside and supplanted by the revolution of 1887, the right of suffrage was limited, and consequently the right of holding office, to every male subject of the island. Every male subject of the Hawaiian Islands of a certain age and with certain qualifications, not necessary to be considered here, was an elector, and no one else. The evils to which I have alluded, and which were remedied in the constitution of 1887 (which, I confess, was revolutionary in its character, but long acquiesced in), procured the introduction of a clause into that constitution by which every male resident of the island, of Hawaiian or American or European birth, of a certain age and possessing certain property qualifications, became entitled to the right of suffrage, and became entitled to the right to hold office.

Now that provision, concerning which I will not descant here, meritorious and protective in its character to all the material interests of the island, was proposed by the Queen to be taken away by a revolutionary proceeding in 1893, and the right of suffrage and the right to hold office were to be revested, as under the constitution of 1874, only in the male subjects of the island, the vastly large proportion being of native Hawaiian blood. That proceeding took from the great interests which have sprung up there every security which they had. It took away the right to limit taxation, and vested the power to tax without limit in a half reclaimed horde of semi-barbarians. It took away the dearest right which a man in any constitutional government can have—the right to protect himself by his suffrage. It limited it exclusively to others. There is not a government on earth, constitutional in its form, where the people have the right to exercise the elective franchise, where such people would not rise in revolution, and have not repeatedly risen, for instances of encroachment less flagrant, and who would not be justified in so doing by the earnest sympathy, if not by the active assistance of the people of other nations.

I can not refrain, Mr. President, from the expression that here throughout I am talking on behalf of men and women who are of American blood and birth or of American descent. This is no abstract question in that regard. They built up the islands. They caused the influences of civilization to fall upon them for more than sixty years. They Christianized them. They reduced the language to form and put it into printed speech. They invited American industries, American wealth, and American people to those shores. They established and fostered self-government. They drafted their laws; and it is upon them, people of our own blood, inhabitants and citizens of islands dedicated by a long system of policy to ultimate annexation to the United States, that the attack of the present Administration is made, by processes which many of us think are unconstitutional, and which are certainly irregular and without precedent.

Under the constitution of 1874 the nobles, who constituted one-half of the Legislature, were appointed by the King for life. Under the constitution of 1887 they were elected for six years, one-third going out at intervals of two years, as is the case with the Senate of the United States. That was proposed to be taken away, and the power of the Queen to appoint for life as nobles one-half of the Legislature was in this unconstitutional form to be re-established and revested in the sovereign. The full effect of this usurpation is apparent when it is considered that the Legislature of that Kingdom sits as one body. The Queen thus purposed to appoint one-half of that Legislature for life.

The cabinet under the constitution of 1874 was appointed and was removable by the King. Under that of 1887 it was removable only upon a vote of want of confidence, and no sovereign written act whatever could have any validity without the signature of one member of that cabinet. That provision was to be abrogated by this revolutionary act of the Queen, secret in its inception, sprung with sudden force upon the public mind when she, surrounded by troops and having gathered around her a turbulent Hawaiian mob, attempted to commit an act of usurpation which was contrary not only to her general duty as sovereign, but was violative of the oath which she took at the time of her coronation.

The judges under the constitution of 1874 were appointed by the King for life. The judicial tenure was thus stable, not subject to the mutations of popular caprice nor to the whims of the sovereign. The proposed constitution of 1893 provided that they should be appointed by the sovereign for six years. The succession to the throne was carefully limited in the constitution of 1887. By this arbitrary act she added two persons to the line of succession, those failing who stood before them in the line.

I have stated the provisions of the proposed constitution of 1893 as nearly as they can be ascertained. Up to a very recent time no copy of that constitution could be obtained. It vanished at the time of the failure to promulgate it and did not reappear until very recently, as I find one in the documents which have been laid before the Senate. It is certified to in the most guarded manner by Parker and others as to being a copy and as to the changes which it was to effect.

Mr. President, as I have said, on Saturday it was resolved to appoint a committee of public safety. This was done at a meeting at which two of the Queen's cabinet ministers were present and had taken part. But before I proceed to discuss that branch of the subject let me call attention to a fact which to my mind all throughout has had great significance. When the Queen took occasion to attempt to promulgate the constitution on Saturday, the 14th day of January, Minister Stevens was not in the islands, nor was there any United States ship of war there. The Boston, with Mr. Stevens on board, had been gone to Hilo for about ten days, and the time of return was uncertain. It seems to me that the Queen and those who were conspiring with her took advantage of the absence of the Boston and of the American minister, thinking that the situation would be more advantageous for the consummation of this revolutionary act than if the minister or the ship of war were present.

Mr. PLATT. The revolution was not anticipated by them before leaving?

Mr. DAVIS. When the ship went away no such thing was suspected. No idea or hint had come from sea or shore to any person that any revolutionary act whatever was in design or course of perpetration.

Mr. SHERMAN. The old cabinet was in existence.

Mr. DAVIS. The old cabinet, as is suggested, was in existence—known, I believe, as the Wilcox ministry—one in which the country had a great degree of confidence, and one which, as I have remarked, was voted out because it was felt that none of its members would sign either of those twin iniquities, the opium and lottery bills, and one voted in that it was known would sign them. Mr. Stevens returned on Saturday. The Boston sailed into the harbor of Honolulu on Saturday at about 11 o'clock.

Mr. PLATT. On what day of the month?

Mr. DAVIS. On the 14th of January—this same day. Neither those who had decided to create a revolution nor the Queen nor any of her adherents, it is apparent, had any knowledge as to when the Boston would return. It can not be, and it has not been, charged against Mr. Stevens or the memory of Capt. Wiltse that in the preliminary acts by which the revolutionists irrevocably committed themselves to revolt, they had any lot or part whatever.

Mr. HOAR. Or that they knew when the Boston was coming back.

Mr. DAVIS. Or that the revolutionists or anybody knew when the Boston was coming back. Mr. Stevens's daughter was an invalid. He was away caring for her health. I say before the Boston had returned to the port the revolution was under way, and firm and resolute men with our blood in their veins; yes, and Englishmen, and Germans, too, and Portuguese, Norwegians, and French, had resolved that they would rise in their might and majesty against this corrupt dynasty and depose and overthrow it forever. It is in vain to argue by special pleading that Mr. Stevens did not, as a matter of fact, find this revolutionary situation there when he returned, and that it was not one which required his immediate action if he obeyed the dictates of duty as imposed by international law, or if he obeyed the positive instructions which were then upon file in his office from Mr. Bayard.

Mr. CULLOM. And by following precedents?

Mr. DAVIS. And by following out repeated precedents in the history of our diplomatic relations with those islands. Of course, when the Boston came into port with these forces looking each other in the face, the one side resolute and determined and the other cowed, with no action latent in them and no resolve to act except by mob violence breaking out upon impulse, it became a matter of importance to every citizen, irrespective of his connection with either side, to know what in the certainty and inevitable character of the impending troubles the action of the Unied States forces was to be. It was known that they had landed twice before during revolutionary times. Accordingly, a delegation of the committee of safety was appointed to wait on Mr. Stevens to ascertain the disposition of the United States minister and what would be his action in regard to the landing of troops. He undoubtedly knew the situation. The town is a little town of 20,000 people. The island is but 600 miles square, turbulent as the volcano in one of the neighboring islands. Every noise is heard and every sight is seen by everybody.

The American interests there were vast and the American population numerous. The matter undoubtedly came with force and suddenness upon Mr. Stevens's mind the moment he touched the shore in landing from the Boston, at about 11 or 12 o'clock on that Saturday. The committee waited on Stevens, and I will read from the testimony of Mr. Smith the substance of what they reported he said.

Mr. CULLOM. Is that in the testimony accompanying Blount's report?

Mr. DAVIS. Everything that I am speaking about is in the testimony which Mr. Blount has submitted as corroborative of and as a foundation for his report.

At 8 o'clock in the evening another meeting of the committee was held at the Thurston House. Thurston stated that Stevens had said that the United States troops on board the Boston would be ready to land any moment to protect the lives and property; and as to the establishment of a provisional government, he would of course recognize the existing government, whatever it might be.

If he had taken down a work on international law from the shelf and read it, he could not have stated the abstract principles any more justly or correctly.

Mr. GRAY. Whom is the Senator now reading from?

Mr. DAVIS. I am reading from my abstract of the testimony of Mr. Smith, page 489. Thurston stated to Stevens the proposition that was under consideration, and he asked Stevens what his attitude would be. Stevens told him whatever government was established and was actually in possession of the Government building, the executive departments and archives, and in possession of the city, that was a de facto government, proclaiming itself as a government, and would necessarily have to be recognized.

I say, Mr. President, that that is a general principle of law which could not be stated better and never has been stated more exactly by text-writer or commentator. Time after time in the history of our diplomatic relations that has gone out as the standing instruction of our Government in regard to revolutionary transactions, especially upon this hemisphere.

What was Mr. Stevens to do under these circumstances? The revolution was on. It had been resolved to depose the Queen. All civilization was back of the revolt. The passions of the natives were excited. Lives had been threatened in the very throne room of the palace. Preceding history was full not only of warnings, but of imperious monitions to action. Any action taken there without some restraining force would inevitably result in danger and perhaps destruction to American life and property. Why should he have acted differently from the manner Mr. Merrill acted in 1889, or differently from what was done in 1874 when the election of King Kalakaua was being conducted, and a native force of insurrectionists broke into the legislative hall and there inflicted personal violence upon the members because they, the assailants, favored the cause of Queen Emma?

Mr. President, supposing the marines had not been landed and this revolution had progressed, as most assuredly it would—for the men at the back of it were determined men, and I say they had the force to carry out their intention—suppose the marines had not been landed and the result had been bloodshed in the streets of Honolulu, that the lives of American men, women, or children had been taken away, or arson had lit the sky with its red glow, or property had been destroyed, how instantly the American people, officially and unofficially, would have risen up in condemnation of his negligence!

Mr. Stevens was not without instructions here. If he consulted the records of his legation he found a letter from the premier of Mr. Cleveland's first Administration, Mr. Bayard, to Minister Merrill of July 12, 1887. It is to be found in Executive Document No. 1, Foreign Relations, 1887, page 520. It will be observed that this dispatch was written about the time, either after, or in immediate apprehension of the troubles and insurrections which had culminated in enforcing from King Kalakaua the constitution of 1887. Mr. Bayard recites the necessity for the strictest vigilance. Mr. Merrill had written to Mr. Bayard stating the precarious condition of things there, the latent turbulency and unrest, and had requested instructions what to do in case that happened which actually happened in July and which actually happened in the year of grace 1893.

Mr. Bayard recites in his dispatch the necessity for strict vigilance by those charged with the care of the rights of American citizens, as well as the rights of the United States under treaties, regrets recent domestic discords, and states that the interests of American citizens, which have grown up under the extension of commerce between the United States and Hawaii, must not be jeopardized—meaning, as I construe it, must not be put in peril, but must be protected by precautionary action in advance of actual assault, or attempt; this is the fair construction of that language—must not be jeopardized by internal confusion in the Government of those islands, and that it is the duty of the United States to see that these interests are not imperiled or injured, and to do all things necessary for their just protection.

That is very comprehensive language written by the Secretary of State to Mr. Merrill at the time when the events which afterwards took place were feared—nothing must be jeopardized or imperiled or injured. He states that the Department can give only general instructions, which may be communicated to the commanding officer of the naval forces, "with whom you will freely confer in order that such prompt and efficient action may be taken as the circumstances may make necessary." Then he concludes as follows:

While we abstain from interference with the domestic affairs of Hawaii in accordance with the policy and practice of this Government, yet obstruction to the channels of legitimate commerce under existing treaties must not be allowed, and American citizens in Hawaii must be protected in their persons and property by the representatives of their country's law and power, and no internal discord must be suffered to impair them. Your own aid and counsel, as well as the assistance of our Government vessels, if found necessary, will therefore be promptly afforded to promote the reign of law and respect for orderly government in Hawaii.

I maintain, taking into consideration the situation as it was when Mr. Stevens returned to the port of Honolulu, that those instructions of Secretary Bayard's vindicated and were a direction to do all that Mr. Stevens did, and to say that because in doing that, in protecting American citizens, he incidentally, and as a collateral consequence, made the sustaining of royalty more difficult than it otherwise would have been by preventing bloodshed and havoc in the streets, is to attach all importance to the incidental and particular and to leave out of all account the general and conclusive object that was to be attained.

These, Mr. President, comprise principally the events of Saturday, sketched at more length than was perhaps necessary, but sketched, I think, with substantial accuracy from the material furnished by the testimony taken by Mr. Blount.

We come now to Sunday, and we find Colburn and Peterson still in collusion with Thurston and the others. I refer to the testimony of Colburn, on page 30, who says in effect that the next morning, Sunday, January 15, at 6 a. m., Thurston came to Colburn's house and wanted him to go with him to Peterson's house. Upon their arrival there Thurston said that he represented a committee of safety, who had held a meeting at his house on Saturday evening and decided to send him to us with a proposition that Peterson and Colburn should depose the Queen. Thurston gave them the names of the committee of thirteen, and said that the desire of this committee was that you two depose the Queen and declare a provisional government.

What did the ministers do? Did they rise up in their might and loyalty and endeavor to secure the arrest or even the rebuke of Mr. Thurston? Not at all.

We told him that we would have to take the matter under advisement and would inform him of our conclusions later on.

This proposition, treasonable as it is claimed, was made on Sunday, when there was not a United States marine on the island, and when it is asserted by the royalists in the United States and elsewhere that all-sufficient physical force and military power were in the hands of the Queen's Government; was made to these cabinet ministers, who said that they would have to take it into consideration, and would inform the revolutionists of their conclusions later on. If they thought they had the physical force to suppress or check that which to their knowledge had been resolved upon, and which to their knowledge was being carried on, why was it not employed? It was not employed, Mr. President, and these considerations and suggestions were received thus favorably for the simple and only reason that they knew that the monarchy was powerless, and that it had broken down in substance and effect.

On the same day, at a meeting at Mr. Thurston's house, a message was received from the cabinet that the ministers would like to meet the committee of thirteen, whose names had been given to Colburn and Peterson.

To show how much force and power there was behind the Queen's Government, adequate in any degree to prevent that which afterwards came to pass, I call attention to the statement of Robert Wilcox, (on page 539 of the report), a trained military man, who conducted the revolution of 1889. Speaking of Sunday he says in substance that on Sunday he was called on by Colburn, who wanted him to assist the Government, who said that Thurston had requested him to sign a document requesting the ordering of the Boston's marines on shore and to proclaim the Provisional Government. Colburn called again in the evening and wanted Wilcox to go down to the Government building. Several people were there consulting over the situation. Marshal Wilson was there. Wilson decided it was proper to arrest the committee of safety.

Mr. PLATT. Was that after the troops landed?

Mr. DAVIS. No; it was the day before. This was on Sunday. The troops landed at 5 o'clock on Monday afternoon.

Wilson, the only resolute man who appears upon the side of the Queen, was there with full knowledge of the facts and of the names of the committee of public safety, and he decided and held that it was proper to arrest that committee.

They asked my opinion—

It is Wilcox who is testifying—

I said the only thing was to suppress them before they made any progress. They said the revolutionists were going to have a mass meeting. Then they decided to have a meeting of the supporters of the Government in the square right opposite the Government building, and some one talked about proclaiming martial law, and stop all the rebels and riots, and all that sort of thing; but Paul Neumann said—it would not be necessary; it would only create friction. I told Paul Neumann that if there was any bloodshed the Government would be responsible for taking such a weak stand. Paul Neumann said there was a document to be read there to detarone the Queen—

He is one of the leading advocates of the Queen and her trusted representative—

That was at the mass meeting—

by the opposition party. He said, "That is no treason." I said, "If that is not treason, we had better give up the whole thing."

Here, on Sunday, with full knowledge by the Queen's government and all her ministers that the committee of safety had been appointed; that the Queen was to be deposed, and that a proclamation to that effect was to be read at the mass meeting, as then intended; with not a show of force up to that time back of the Provisional Government; with all the public arms in the hands of the Queen's Government; with the educated military officer, Wilcox, then adherent to the Queen, sent for to come into their councils—under all these circumstances the Queen's advisers met and declined to make any civil arrests; they decided that it was unnecessary to proclaim martial law, because it would produce friction. They decided to do nothing whatever except to call another mass meeting.

Finally Paul Neumann, the lawyer and attorney of the Queen, who has held her letters of attorney, who represented her in Washington, as I am informed, declares that all this proceeding which they had been discussing is not treason. Then they were advised by the only military man on the island on either side, if that was not treason they had better give up the whole thing.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator ought to add one more thing, that Wilson, who was the marshal and had charge of the police, was there.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Wilson was the marshal, as the Senator suggests, and had the entire control of the police force, 60 in number; and he was there, as I have stated. He had, in addition to that, 75 of the Queen's guard, a trained body of men. Repeated meetings of the committee of safety had been held in Mr. Smith's office and elsewhere, and that fact was well known. Three constables could have effected the arrest of the entire committee in a time when the Government had any power. It was not attempted.

I say that Government had broken down, and these pretexts, officially and otherwise set forth, that this power of the Government, otherwise invincible, broke down at the presence of United States troops, is absolutely and flagrantly contradicted by concurrent facts from the time and many hours before a United States Government marine was in sight of the island.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether I understand him to say that on Sunday there was not a United States Government marine in sight of the island?

Mr. DAVIS. I do.

Mr. GRAY. The Boston was in the harbor.

Mr. DAVIS. I beg pardon. I did not for the moment remember that.

Mr. GRAY. The Boston arrived at 10 o'clock on Saturday morning.

Mr. FRYE. There was not a marine on shore.

Mr. DAVIS. There was not a marine on shore. The Boston had arrived—and I am very much obliged to the Senator from Delaware for correcting me.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator will pardon my interruption. I know he wants to be accurate.

Mr. DAVIS. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. Wilson, in a statement on page 552, states that he proposed to the cabinet on Sunday to arrest the ringleaders of the plot at once.

What I have said is a résumé, and hardly that—a few scattered suggestions of fact as to what took place on Sunday. Two days had passed away since this revolution was more than brewing; it had been in full progress.

Coming now to Monday, the 16th of January, Mr. Waterhouse testifies as to the mass meeting of 2 p. m. on Monday, that after the mass meeting the committee of safety met and decided to take possession of the Government. There was still another meeting on Monday, when they planned what should be done on Tuesday. After the meeting on Monday, Mr. Carter took the request of the committee of safety to Mr. Stevens.

Without going into this testimony as fully as I had intended, I make the statement here that in all the interviews which were held with Mr. Stevens by the committee of public safety, and also by the Queen's ministers—for the applications to Mr. Stevens were not confined to one party—his invariable assertion was that he would land troops to protect American lives and property, and every attempt to draw him by declaration or intimation into a pledge or understanding, express or implied, that he would support the Provisional Government failed to elicit anything of that kind from him. He stated in reply to all such inquiries the abstract principle of international law, reiterated over and over again in our diplomatic history, that the Government de facto would be the one that would be recognized. He had no authority to stay this revolution; he had no authority to support this reeling, toppling monarchy. He did have the right, and it was his duty, if either revolution or monarchy created a situation which, in the language of Mr. Bayard, "imperiled American interests," to land the troops and to thus prevent those interests thus imperiled from being injured. If the Queen's Government had by a course of action created a situation which made the exercise of that right by Mr. Stevens necessary, she can not complain if, by her own act thus creating occasion for the exercise of that necessary right by Mr. Stevens, such exercise by him incidentally and collaterally may have had some effect toward sweeping away the throne which she herself had thus put in jeopardy.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator does not admit that?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not admit that it did—that his action had that effect. I maintain that it had not. I shall come to that in due time. The testimony here is abundant that the revolutionists were able to protect themselves, and that the Queen's Government was powerless to stay the execution of their purpose.

I may say here, for fear that I forget it in a more appropriate connection, that the testimony is concurrent that the Provisional Government expected to have some trouble, and it is abundant, as I have stated, that they did not rely upon the United States troops and that they were able to take care of themselves. This revolution would have gone on if not a marine had ever set his foot on the island of Oahu. I shall demonstrate, I think, before I get through, that all the talk of intervention or of implied duress by the United States troops by reason of their position is the merest fallacy, a far-drawn argument to support what I think was a foregone conclusion.

As illustrative of just exactly what the attitude of Mr. Stevens was—and contemporaneous records of this character are of much greater value than the testimony of any witness whose recollection may be distorted by want of full retention in memory or by prejudice—I desire to read at length Mr. Stevens's letter to Capt. Wiltse, and Capt. Wiltse's order to Lieut. Swinburne:

UNITED STATES LEGATION, Honolulu, January 16, 1893.

SIR: In view of existing critical circumstances in Honolulu, indicating an inadequate legal force, I request you to land marines and sailors from the ship under your command for the protection of the United States legation and the United States consulate, and to secure the safety of American life and property.

Yours truly,

JOHN L. STEVENS,
Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States.

Capt. G. C. WILTSE.

This request to Capt. Wiltse is limited by its very terms to the protection of the legation and the securing of the safety of American lives and property. Acting upon that, Capt. Wiltse issues to the executive officer, Lieut. Swinburne, the following order:

U. S. S. BOSTON, SECOND RATE,
Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, January 16, 1893.

SIR: You will take command of the battalion and land in Honolulu for the purpose of protecting our legation, consulate, and the lives and property of American citizens, and to assist in preserving public order.

Great prudence must be exercised by both officers and men, and no action taken that is not fully warranted by the condition of affairs, and by the conduct of those who may be inimical to the treaty rights of American citizens.

You will inform me at the earliest practicable moment of any change in the situation.

Very respectfully,

G. C. WILTSE,
Captain, U. S. Navy, Commanding U. S. S. Boston.

Lieut. Commander W. T. SWINBURNE,
Executive Officer, U. S. S. Boston.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has been speaking continuously for several hours. Would he prefer to yield now and continue to-morrow?

Mr. DAVIS. I should prefer it.

Mr. HALE. Then, unless there is some business to intervene, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

REPORT OF UTAH SCHOOL COMMISSIONER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORMAN in the chair). Before putting the motion of the Senator from Maine, the Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the sixth annual report of the commissioner of schools for Utah Territory.

The communication was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF ELECTION LAWS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 2331) to repeal all statutes relating to supervisors of elections and special deputy marshals, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and forty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 11, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 10, 1894.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Otis B. Spencer, of Colorado, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Denver, in the State of Colorado, to succeed Henry G. Heffron, resigned.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Stephen P. Slocum, of Rhode Island, to be collector of customs for the district of Newport, in the State of Rhode Island, to succeed John H. Cozzens, whose term of office has expired by limitation.

Thomas W. Lamb, of Georgia, to be collector of customs for the district of Brunswick, in the State of Georgia, to succeed John H. Devereaux, resigned.

POSTMASTERS.

Theodore H. Holck, to be postmaster at Grundy Center, in the county of Grundy, and State of Iowa, in the place of Charles J. Keiter, whose commission expired January 8, 1894.

W. L. Farrar, to be postmaster at South Paris, in the county of Oxford and State of Maine, in the place of Franklin Maxim, whose commission expired December 19, 1893.

Charles R. Henry, to be postmaster at Au Sable, in the county of Iosco and State of Michigan, in the place of James A. Perry, whose commission expired January 8, 1894.

James McNamara, to be postmaster at Alpena, in the county of Alpena and State of Michigan, in the place of Thomas White, whose commission expired December 21, 1893.

Alfred E. Haven, to be postmaster at Faribault, in the county of Rice and State of Minnesota, in the place of Eden N. Leavens, whose commission expired December 21, 1893.

Hettie J. Foose, to be postmaster at Kosciusko, in the county of Attala and State of Mississippi, in the place of Rasselas Boyd, deceased.

John W. Mason, to be postmaster at Mexico, in the county of Audrain and State of Missouri, in the place of Eugene C. Burkhart, removed.

David H. Mock, to be postmaster at Webb City, in the county of Jasper and State of Missouri, in the place of Ellen M. Dodge, whose commission expired December 21, 1893.

Robert C. Albright, to be postmaster at Madison, in the county of Morris and State of New Jersey, in the place of William T. Brown, whose commission expired December 21, 1893.

Garrabrant R. Alyea, to be postmaster at Rutherford, in the county of Bergen and State of New Jersey, in the place of Charles Burrows, whose commission expired December 19, 1893.

Frank K. Avery, to be postmaster at Phœnix, in the county of Oswego and State of New York, in the place of Joshua M. Williams, whose commission expired December 21, 1893.

Lyman S. Coleman, to be postmaster at Castile, in the county of Wyoming and State of New York, in the place of Edward A. Pierce, whose commission expired December 21, 1893.

C. Leonard Lewis, to be postmaster at Naples, in the county of Ontario and State of New York, in the place of Frank W. James, whose commission expired December 21, 1893.

James H. Quinlan, to be postmaster at Flushing, in the county of Queens and State of New York, in the place of Elisha F. Harris, whose commission expired December 21, 1893.

Patrick Reiley, to be postmaster at West Troy, in the county of Albany and State of New York, in the place of T. T. Woodward, whose commission expired January 9, 1894.

Andrew McTigue, to be postmaster at Far Rockaway, in the county of Queens and State of New York, in the place of Thomas Henderson, whose commission expired December 21, 1893.

Charles E. Kinder, to be postmaster at Miamisburg, in the county of Montgomery and State of Ohio, in the place of Emanuel Schultz, whose commission expired December 19, 1893.

Jacob Stief, to be postmaster at Carey, in the county of Wyandot and State of Ohio, in the place of James A. Gibbs, resigned.

Thomas A. Butkiewicz, to be postmaster at Nanticoke, in the county of Luzerne and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of George T. Morgan, resigned.

Thomas B. Gillouly, to be postmaster at Ridgway, in the county of Elk and State of Pennsylvania, in place of James H. Hagerty, whose commission expired December 21, 1893.

John Julian, to be postmaster at El Paso, in the county of El Paso and State of Texas, in the place of James A. Smith, removed.

Ed E. King, to be postmaster at Brownwood, in the county of Brown and State of Texas, in the place of Marion Mullins, whose commission expired December 21, 1893.

Robert M. Crawford, to be postmaster at Mineral Point, in the county of Iowa and State of Wisconsin, in the place of Sidney E. Shepard, whose commission expires January 16, 1894.

Fergus F. Green, to be postmaster at Shawano, in the county of Shawano and State of Wisconsin, in the place of Christopher Hill, whose commission expires January 16, 1894.

Daniel P. Gallivan, to be postmaster at Clintonville, in the county of New Haven and State of Connecticut, in the place of David L. Clinton, whose commission expired December 21, 1893.

Denis T. Walsh, to be postmaster at Ansonia, in the county of New Haven and State of Connecticut, in the place of Morris Drew, whose commission expires January 16, 1894.

William H. Burks, to be postmaster at Sullivan, in the county of Sullivan and State of Indiana, in the place of James H. Clugage, whose commission expired January 8, 1894.

V. C. Hanawalt, to be postmaster at Logansport, in the county of Cass and State of Indiana, in the place of Daniel W. Tomlinson, whose commision expired January 8, 1894.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 8, 1894.

SUPERINTENDENT OF INDIAN SCHOOLS.

William N. Hailmann, of La Porte, Ind., to be superintendent of Indian schools.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

John W. Ferguson, of Minden, Nebr., to be register of the land office at Lincoln, Nebr.

POSTMASTERS.

William M. Kintner, to be postmaster at La Junta, in the county of Otero and State of Colorado.

Samuel A. Cunningham, to be postmaster at Golden, in the county of Jefferson and State of Colorado.

Frank P. Hobbs, to be postmaster at Wolfboro, in the county of Carroll and State of New Hampshire.

Charles Spinney, to be postmaster at Goodland, in the county of Newton and State of Indiana.

Eugene Lewis, to be postmaster at Greenfield, in the county of Hancock and State of Indiana.

Benjamin F. Sonnenstine, to be postmaster at Wadsworth, in the county of Medina and State of Ohio.

Joseph W. Falknor, to be postmaster at Covington, in the county of Miami and State of Ohio.

Frank M. Parker, to be postmaster at Hillsboro Bridge, in the county of Hillsboro and State of New Hampshire.

John G. Schwegman, to be postmaster at Richmond, in the county of Wayne and State of Indiana.

Patrick Roach, to be postmaster at Harbor, in the county of Ashtabula and State of Ohio.

James L. Carson, to be postmaster at Wapakoneta, in the county of Auglaize and State of Ohio.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 10, 1894.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rabbi Edw. N. Calisch, of Richmond, Va.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled an act (S. 439) for the relief of David R. Gottwals.

WITNESS FEES IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Attorney-General submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for fees of witnesses in the United States courts for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CONGAREE RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to House resolution dated December 15, 1893, information relating to the necessity of deepening the 2 miles of the Congaree River below Columbia, S. C.; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

MISDEMEANORS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting sundry letters from the United States attorney for the Indian Territory relative to the method of trying misdemeanors now in force in the Territory; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

REIMPORTATION OF HORSES AND CATTLE FROM MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a joint resolution (H. Res. 93) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owner of cattle and horses transporting them into Mexico to reimport same into the United States at any time before May 1, 1894, and for other purposes, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. PASCHAL, who is not just now in his seat, being in attendance upon a committee, desires that the House concur in the Senate amendment, and I make that motion for him.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the preamble.

Amend the title so as to read, "Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owners of cattle and horses transporting them into Mexico, to reimport same into the United States at any time within twelve months from the date of the passage of this resolution, and for other purposes."

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles, which were severally referred as follows:

An act (S. 1377) for the relief of William Hendershott, of Butteville, Oregon—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

An act (S. 69) to grant to the State of Oregon townships 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 south, in ranges 5 and 6 east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, for a public park—to the Committee on Public Lands.

An act (S. 79) to authorize a corrected patent to be issued for the donation land claim of Wheelock Simmons and wife—to the Committee on Public Lands.

USE OF THE NAVY AT HAWAII.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Naval Affairs on the resolution offered on December 21 by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] asking for information from the Secretary of the Navy concerning Hawaiian affairs. I will state that under the rules the report should have been made yesterday, but the House took a recess before there was an opportunity to present it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can submit the report, but no action can be taken on it except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. DOCKERY. I object.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that it lie on the Speaker's table without losing its privilege.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do I understand the Chair to rule that this is not a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I refer the Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not rule that the report was not privileged. It is privileged.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I refer the Chair to page 519 of the Manual, where he will find a ruling of the House that the fact that a privileged report is not made on the day prescribed by the rule does not cause it to lose its privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated that the report is privileged.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In what does the privilege consist, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The privilege consists in the right under the rules to call it up for consideration; but the House has modified and altered its rules by a rule adopted a day or two ago, providing for a special order, which order does not permit the Chair to entertain any motion except one of those mentioned in the order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But this is not a motion. This is a report which comes back as a privileged matter, and comes up by force of its own inherent privilege outside of the ordinary rules of procedure.

The SPEAKER. The motion would necessarily be to agree to the report.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But I understand that the report comes up by reason of its own inherent privilege, and must be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. It can not be disposed of at this time under the order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. We are proceeding to do a great many things here that do not appear in the order.

The SPEAKER. Nothing whatever.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, the Chair has already transacted other business here this morning.

The SPEAKER. It is provided for in the order. The Clerk will report the special order so that the House may understand this matter. The Chair calls attention to the first part of the order, which defines what must be done daily.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That after the passage of this resolution the House shall meet each legislative day at 11 o'clock a. m. That beginning to-day without intervening motion, except conference reports and reports from the Committee on Rules, the Journal shall be read, business under clause 1 of Rule XXIV shall be disposed of, the Speaker shall call the committees for reports, and then the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) "to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. This order, it will be observed, provides that—beginning to-day without intervening motion—

Now that cuts off every other motion—except conference reports and reports from the Committee on Rules, the Journal shall be read—

That has been done—business under clause 1 of Rule XXIV shall be disposed of—

That is, clearing the Speaker's table, which has just been done—

The Speaker shall call the committees for reports—

That was about to be done—and then the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then the Chair rules that this matter can not be called up?

The SPEAKER. It can not be called up now; but it does not lose its privilege——

Mr. BOUTELLE. Where does it go?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask that it lie on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will not my colleague on the committee [Mr. CUMMINGS] ask unanimous consent to take up and adopt this unanimous report?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I did ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. DOCKERY. I object

Mr. BOUTELLE. This is a unanimous report from the committee.

The SPEAKER. The matter does not lose its privilege, but can be called up when the pending order of business is disposed of.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I call up the question of privilege pending, which the Chair presented to the House a week ago—the resolution setting forth that the Executive has invaded the rights and privileges of the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the Chair will be forced to direct the call——

Mr. BOUTELLE. Before the Chair rules I would like to make a suggestion. I desire to make a point of order. I have been looking into this question with some little care——

Mr. CUMMINGS. Do I understand that the report of which I had charge lies on the table without losing its privilege?

The SPEAKER. The report does not lose its privilege, and can be called up at any time when the special order is out of the way.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That carries it over until January 29?

The SPEAKER. Until the operation of the pending order has terminated.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And it will not terminate until January 29.

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now I call up this question of privilege; and I make the point of order that neither the House by any rule nor the Speaker by any ruling can divest this body of any of its constitutional functions. The function here involved in the pending question of privilege is one which does not rely upon any rule, but is based upon the fundamental organic law of the Government, a provision that is absolutely and obviously essential to the maintenance of republican institutions, viz, that the House of Representatives shall be an independent coördinate branch of the Government, and shall at all times be in possession of the power and opportunity to protect its existence, its honor, and its privileges.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair will see that in the nature of things, if we are to continue as a republican government with coördinate branches, and if this House is to continue to be what the Constitution made it, a coördinate branch of the Government of the United States, with its coördinate privileges and powers, it can not be possible that by the adoption of any mere rule as to consideration of a bill the constitutional function and privileges and duties of the House not specified in this rule can be put in absolute abeyance, be practically abrogated for more than three weeks while the House is in session.

Mr. Speaker, suppose that the Committee on Rules in preparing this rule had inadvertently or otherwise omitted to take note of the fact that during the period embraced in its operation—a period of more than twenty days—it would become the constitutional duty of the House to participate in the counting and declaration of the electoral vote. Of course, so far as any inherent power of this rule is concerned, the Speaker, ruling that he is absolutely bound hand and foot, as it were, by the specific terms and provisions of this rule, would have to deny the right to proceed to the performance of that duty, as he has denied the right to consider any other matter of high privilege.

But it can not be possible that if during a period which the House had thus assigned for the consideration of a tariff bill, it should be found that the time had arrived for the execution of the duty of the House to participate in counting and declaring the electoral vote, the Chair would hold that by reason of the adoption of such a rule for the consideration of a matter of business, the constitutional right and function of the House with reference to the counting of the electoral vote would be set aside; that the House could not take part in the counting of that vote; that the statutes of the United States providing for executing the constitutional determination of the succession to the Presidency of the United States would be rendered nugatory, because the House by the adoption of a special rule or order for the consideration of a tariff bill had provided that nothing outside of the matters specified in that rule could be entertained.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one more suggestion. Suppose the Executive of the United States, in the pursuance of the policy which the Executive has inaugurated, and that is now in process of being carried forward in Hawaii, should deem it necessary to use the armed forces of the United States? On the 3d day of December, the Secretary of State, in a letter of instructions to the United States minister in Hawaii, informed him what the Administration desired him to do to displace the Government, but for the first time put in the qualifying phrase that armed forces could not be used without the authority of Congress. Now, clearly on the face of the instructions the minister of the United States in Hawaii was authorized by the Executive to go forward in the attempt at the restoration of the Queen to the full extent that he could carry out that policy without using armed forces, and the implication gathered from the instructions is that when he reaches that point the action of Congress, if necessary, would be invoked to authorize the use of the armed forces of the United States.

Now, does the Speaker of the House hold that by the operation of the rule under which we are now acting it is possible, if the conditions now existing in Hawaii should be shown by to-day's or to-morrow's advices to have reached a point where it is impossible to carry out the policy of the Administration without the use of the armed forces of the United States, and the President should send a message to Congress asking for power in this particular to declare war, does the Speaker then hold that the mere operation of this rule prevents the House of Representatives from exercising its high constitutional functions?

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to demand the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine was making a statement of his view on this question.

A MEMBER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why this impatience? The White House clock has not struck this morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Maine——

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, if I may be kindly indulged for a moment, I wish to say, if the gentleman from Maine desires to offer an affront to a fellow-member on the floor of the House, I would advise him to do it in a more marked manner—something that can be taken notice of.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TRACEY. I have never attempted to use the slightest discourtesy to the gentleman from Maine. Now, if it is not my privilege to rise here and make a parliamentary inquiry without being insulted, I would like to be informed of the fact.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New York is hurt by what I have said I withdraw the jocular remark. If he is so sensitive that he can not accept a piece of pleasantry of that kind, I withdraw the remark. I supposed that he would see it was merely a joke.

Mr. TRACEY. It is not pleasant to hear such language.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I withdraw the remark. I had no intention, of course, of wounding the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine that the House of Representatives acts, of course, through and by a majority of its members.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope that gentlemen on the other side will preserve order while the Chair is ruling on this question so that he may be heard.

The SPEAKER. The House acts by a majority of its members. A majority of the House has determined, by the adoption of this rule, that they will attend only to the business marked out in this rule until they shall have disposed of the pending revenue bill. Now, in order to provide for any emergency which might arise, the Committee on Rules, in reporting this order of business to the House, and the House in adopting it, have provided that the reports from the Committee on Rules may be in order at any time pending the operation of this rule, for without such a provision it is doubtful whether that would even have been in order. So that there can be no trouble about the House binding itself. A majority of the House is responsible to the country for the manner in which it transacts the public business; it is responsible for the maintenance of the honor, the dignity, and the integrity of the proceedings of the House, so that a majority can determine on their responsibility what business shall be transacted.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the Chair pleases, do I understand the Chair to mean that that whole matter is to be determined and controlled not by the House itself, but by the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Rules represents the majority of the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. All matters coming before the House of Representatives go to the committees, which are organized by the majority, which committees represent the majority of the House, and are supposed to be responsible to the wishes, views, and purposes of the majority of the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But does the Chair hold that the Committee on Rules is the entire repository of the control and defense of the privileges of the House?

The SPEAKER. When the House of Representatives, by a majority vote, determine that they will pursue a certain order of business, not to be interrupted except by a report from the Committee on Rules, the Chair understands that they have reposed in that committee discretion and judgment as to whether or no they shall make a report.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the Chair kindly rule on the point of order that I made, that it is not in the power of the House itself, or of any committee of the House, or of the Speaker, by any ruling to divest the House for one moment, or for an hour, or for three weeks, of its constitutional functions?

The SPEAKER. That question does not arise. There is no such purpose; no such intention.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, Mr. Speaker, suppose the President sends a message here, setting forth certain conditions; for example, that the United States minister is obstructed in carrying out his instructions, that the British marines are already on the shores of Hawaii, and that it is necessary for us to land troops there to carry out the Administration's policy. Now, does the Speaker hold that because we are operating under a rule that has bound us until the 29th of January, that the House can not consider that message? I am not speaking now of the Committee on Rules, because we can not control the volition of the Committee on Rules. Under the ruling of the Chair the House can not even instruct the Committee on Rules, can not even take cognizance of the matter, and order the Committee on Rules to present any subject for consideration. Suppose that the three members constituting the majority of the Committee on Rules, individually or officially, were indisposed or physically unable to act on such a matter, does the Speaker hold that thereby the House of Representatives in its collective capacity is estopped by this rule from taking any action for the exercise of its constitutional function of declaring war? It certainly can not seem possible——

The SPEAKER. Of course no such question has arisen.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I present the question. I call the question up now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman now to raise that question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But if the Chair please, the very question is precipitated by the resolution now pending. It declares that the rights of this House are invaded by the Executive, by his own statements. Now, it makes no difference as to the degree, if the privileges of this House are invaded to the slightest degree by the Executive, the principle is exactly the same as if every right of the House were invaded. My resolution sets forth—and the Speaker has recognized it as involving a question of high privilege—that to-day this House is not in the full exercise of its powers, by reason of a usurpation on the part of the executive department. Now, it makes no difference, Mr. Speaker, as to the operation of these rules, or as to the duty of the House, whether this usurpation is a little one or a big one. It makes no difference whether it goes to one degree or another; and just exactly as it is impossible to conceive that this House has bound itself so that it can not act upon a call of the Executive to declare war, even if it were to enable the Government of the United States to repel invasion, so I insist that it is impossible that this resolution or question of privilege can be out of order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Has not the Chair already ruled that the gentleman is out of order and not entitled to be heard further?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the gentleman will not be discourteous.

Mr. McMILLIN. There has been no discourtesy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. When the Chair is willing to listen, I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] can very well continue to keep his seat until I have finished.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, if it comes to that, I will have the right the rules give me. The Chair has decided the question and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has not appealed. He is out of order, and I make the point of order against him.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Chair has not ruled upon the point made.

Mr. McMILLIN. I so understood from the Chair. I understand the Chair to state that he had decided the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has expressed an opinion. The Chair thinks——

Mr. McMILLIN. Then the gentleman's only remedy is by appeal.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, now, you need not instruct me on that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks under the order adopted by the House the Chair must submit to the House only that business which is provided for in the order. Now, so far as the immediate question is concerned—that called up by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]—the gentleman from Maine himself can not dispute the power of the House, if it had been considering the resolution offered by the gentleman from Maine, to postpone its further consideration until the 29th day of January or until the 15th day of February.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But if the Speaker please——

The SPEAKER. The House might have done that by a vote. The Chair understands this order to be not only that that proposition, but every other proposition not provided for in the order is postponed until after the House has disposed of the revenue bill which is now pending before it. That is the whole question, as the Chair understands it. The Chair is forced, then, to direct the Clerk to call the committees for reports.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the Chair permit me to call his attention to his statement of a few days ago? I want to remind the Chair that he distinctly stated that if consideration was voted down at one time it might be because on that day the House did not want to consider it, and that on another day the House might want to consider the question. There is no analogy between the question of consideration and the refusal to submit the question of consideration. I am perfectly willing to submit this question to the consideration of the House. My protest is against the Chair refusing to permit the House to act upon this question in anyway, and that he is thereby absolutely depriving the House of the right to exercise its own privilege.

The SPEAKER. Of course the Chair must take the responsibility, subject, as stated the other day by the gentleman from Maine, to the criticism of the House. The Chair must take the responsibility of executing the orders of the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the appeal.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Under what rule does the Chair refuse to entertain the appeal?

The SPEAKER. Because there is no provision in the order to entertain any motion at all. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman to make a motion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Chair does not recognize any appeal now. When will an appeal be in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be in order.

The Clerk proceeded to call committees for reports.

POST LIGHTS ON YORK RIVER, VIRGINIA.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4697) to authorize the establishment and maintenance of post lights on York River, in the State of Virginia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NONRESIDENT PENSIONERS.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1138) to repeal so much of a proviso of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes," and approved March 1, 1893, as relates to the payment of pensions to nonresidents who are not citizens of the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of committees for reports. Under the order of the House heretofore made the House will now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. HAINES. I rise, Mr. Speaker, in order to present this petition [pointing to an immense bound petition], and I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted at this time to present the remonstrance from the citizens and collar and cuff operatives of the city of Troy, N. Y. It contains 69,817 protests, 50,465 of which are from citizens of the city of Troy and vicinity, who pray that the tariff be not changed so far as it affects the reduction of tariff on collars, cuffs, and shirts.

Mr. KILGORE. I ask that the petition be read. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. That can not be without unanimous consent. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion that at the end of this discussion the gentleman from New York be permitted to take possession of this petition. It is my understanding that it is in accordance with his wishes.

Mr. REED. That is all right. You can insult anybody in this House now, because privilege exists no longer.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman can make remarks when he desires, but I make this request with the approval of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PICKLER. I rise to a point of order. I make the point of order that no motion is in order.

The SPEAKER. None is in order without unanimous consent.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from Nebraska makes a motion.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent to make it. The Chair had announced that the House would resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, but recognized the gentleman from New York because he stated that he desired to call attention to petition.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. That can not be entertained at this time. The House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill the title of which has been read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 335) to provide for the disposal of the abandoned Fort Maginnis military reservation, in Montana, under the homestead and mining laws, for educational and other purposes;

A bill (S. 411) for the relief of Samuel Collins; and

A bill (S. 901) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry Tilton and of personal effects thereon.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments concurrent resolution relative to the personnel of the Navy, etc.; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year 1892; in which concurrence was requested.

THE TARIFF.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole to consider a bill raising revenue. Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the argument is made that we are a tax-ridden people, and that we are paying much more for articles of consumption and apparel than we would were the principles of the Democratic party to prevail. There is no article manufactured in this country to day in sufficient quantities to meet or nearly meet the requirements of the consumers that is not cheaper than it was when we depended upon the foreign manufacturer. I defy any Democrat in this House or out of it, in America or in England, to successfully controvert this statement. In the discussions in this House which resulted in the compromise measure of 1832 this argument, which the Democrats now so strenuously contend for, was as loudly proclaimed then.

Mr. Ingersoll, of Pennsylvania, who was a consistent protectionist and a true lover of his country, met these objections by a number of illustrations demonstrating the fallacy of the then Democratic position, and showed conclusively that under the protective laws of 1824 and 1828 all articles that were covered by adequate protective duties were being sold in the American markets cheaper than they were when we depended upon the importer and the foreign manufacturer for them. In a report to the House he said:

The soundness of this objection, as applying generally, for such as it is used, may be well tested by a few familiar examples: cut nails were formerly from 10 to 12 cents the pound; there is a specific duty on them of 5 cents and, under this duty, competition has brought down the price to 6 cents the pound, which is but little more than half what they formerly cost.

According to the objection, this duty may have been a reasonable one when first imposed, but is an odious tax when, under its protection, we can get nails for nearly one-half the former prices. Supposing the duty to be a "tax" in the sense generally used, we ought to get them for 1 cent the pound if the tax should be taken off; but it will be difficult for us to believe this because, under a lower rate of duty, and when our principal supply was from foreign workshops, we were obliged to pay 10 and 12 cents for what our workmen now turn out for 6 cents.

Lead formerly cost from 6 to 8 cents the pound, the duty is 3 cents specific, and the present price is far below the former. Common window glass formerly cost from $10 to $14 the box; it is subject to a specific duty of $3.50 per 100 feet, and is now selling from $4 to $4.25 the box. Brown sugar formerly cost $14 the hundredweight; it is subject to a specific duty of 3 cents the pound, and the present price is about $7 or $7.50 the hundredweight, but again specific. Twelve years ago bar iron sold at Pittsburg for $190 to $200 the ton. Under the protection of a specific duty the price has fallen to $100 per ton. Hoop iron was $250, and is now $120. Sheet iron was sold for $18 the hundredweight, and is now $8.50.

Cotton bagging has also a specific duty; the price was formerly 26 cents, and is now 16 cents the yard. The minimum duty on coarse cotton goods is in effect a specific duty of 8¼ cents the square yard; the price was formerly 20 and 25 cents; the like goods, or rather goods of a much better quality, are now furnished for about 8 cents the yard; so that if the protecting duty of 8¼ cents is a "tax" to that extent, we ought to get the fabric for less than nothing if the tax should be repealed. But in truth the people are not taxed in these cases, unless it is by having their supplies furnished by American workmen, in many instances, at one-half the price they were formerly taxed with for similar articles when our market was controlled by foreigners.

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. COOMBS. The gentleman has stated, as I understand him, that hoop iron is offered at $1.20 per hundred pounds.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I am reading what Mr. Ingersoll said was the price of hoop iron in 1833; showing that under the protection that was given to that product the price had fallen from $2.50 to $1.20.

Mr. COOMBS. It is $1.20 per hundred pounds to-day. It is offered at that price in large quantities. I would remind the gentleman that the duty upon hoop iron is $1 per hundred pounds. Now, does not the gentleman realize that this great fall is due to no other cause than to the extraordinary and ruinous competition which the McKinley bill has brought into the market, and does he not see, therefore, that the McKinley law, instead of benefiting the manufacturers, is ruining them?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the McKinley law could not have ruined anything in 1833. [Laughter.] The point that I am presenting here is from a report that was made by Mr. Ingersoll, a member of the Ways and Means Committee in 1833, showing that by putting a proper import duty upon hoop iron, which had been selling when we were dependent upon the foreign manufacturer for $2.50, the price had been reduced at the time this report was made to $1.20. And, Mr. Chairman, every other article that has been properly and adequately protected will show like gratifying results in the reduction of price.

This statement of Mr. Ingersoll illustrates the workings of protective tariff legislation. Instead of its being a "tax" upon the people, it is the means of their procuring all of the necessaries of life much cheaper than it would be possible for them to procure them when we were wholly dependent upon foreign manufacturers. Familiar illustrations can be given by examining the ledgers and books of any firm or corporation which has been engaged in mercantile business for a period of thirty, forty, or fifty years past. At any of the free-trade periods in the history of our country the prices of articles have been higher than at other times when the Government has been under the control of a political party which favored adequate and ample protection. In 1837, a period when free-trade Democracy controlled this Government, the ledger of a prominent mercantile house shows the retail prices of eighteen different articles, as follows:

Calico, per yard	$0.37½	Iron, per pound	$0.12½
Unbleached cotton	.25	Coffee mills	3.00
Bleached cotton	.33½	Lamb's wool hose, per pair	1.25
Jeans	1.75	Yarn, per pound	1.75
Coal shovels	1.35	Gingham, per yard	.44
Cast steel, per pound	.31½	Pins, per paper	.12½
Spool cotton	.12½	Water buckets	.75
White lead, per keg	4.25	White flannel, per yard	1.25
Shoe tacks	.12½	Needles, per paper	.12½

These articles, many of them, are 80 per cent cheaper to-day than they were then, and there are none of them that are not 50 per cent cheaper than they were in those free-trade days.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman claim that that reduction has been caused by protection?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I will answer the gentleman. He asks me if I claim that this reduction has been caused by protection. Protection is the primary cause. If we were merely an agricultural people there would be no invention in machinery in this country, and the reduction in prices has been brought about in part by stimulating the inventive genius of our people as well as by the aid that has been given to the establishment and maintenance of these industries by judicious protection. A splendid illustration of this was given before the Ways and Means Committee during the hearings that were accorded to the public when the present bill was under consideration. A witness engaged in the carpet industry came before the committee and spoke of a kind of carpet which had cost formerly, when we depended upon the foreign manufacturer, about $6 a yard, but to-day that article is sold in the American market for $1.50 a yard. How has that reduction been brought about? In this manner:

First, by perfecting and improving our machinery. In the case about which I am speaking, an ingenious Yankee boy was employed in the coarser work in the mills which were engaged in the manufacture of carpeting. This boy, who had come from the farm, and whose inventive genius would probably have lain dormant during his entire life if there had not been mills and factories here where he could find a field for the stimulation and development of the natural bent of his mind, went into this mill and soon saw that improvements could be made in the machinery that was used, by means of which the carpet could be made much cheaper, and, by the result of his inventive genius together with the protection that was afforded to the manufacture by our laws, this kind of carpet has been brought down in price from $6 a yard to $1.50 a yard. Now, in the main the same thing is true of every other article that has been produced under our protective system.

Mr. BRYAN. Does that reasoning apply to the reduction in the price of farm products, which have been protected, and which have gone down in price under protection?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman, that a little later on I will show him that the reason why farm products have remained as low as they are, is because the American farmer has not been properly and adequately protected. For example, the gentleman is in favor of putting wool on the free list. My colleague from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] in an argument upon this floor in the last Congress showed to this House and to the country that wool in North Dakota was selling for 10 cents a pound more than it brought in British America, and that, were it not for the protective duty upon wool, the flocks which were being herded and developed in North Dakota would have been wiped out of existence, the capital which the farmers and herders had put into that business would have been destroyed, and they would have been driven back to raising wheat and corn.

Mr. BRYAN. Are we to understand, then, that the tariff reduces the price of manufactured products, but raises the price of agricultural products?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I will not be responsible for what the gentleman from Nebraska understands. If he will quietly listen to my argument I will endeavor to prove to him before I close that a protective tariff law is as beneficial to the farmer as it is to any other class of American citizens.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield further. It would take too much of my time to yield to all these interruptions.

The iron and steel industry shows a remarkable reduction in prices under proper protection. In 1866 a ton of pig iron cost $46.87. This is a product that for some years now has been under a protection ample in character to develop that industry in this country. The product in 1866 was 1,205,666 tons; in 1890 it had increased to 9,202,703 tons, and instead of costing $46.87 per ton, this increased product was furnished at an average of $18.40 a ton, a decrease in price of 61 per cent. In 1867 railway bars, better known as steel rails, sold for $166 per ton. Our production that year aggregated 2,277 tons. In 1890 that industry, under the tariff laws that have been maintained by the Republican party, produced 1,957,366 tons at an average price of $31.75. The same product at the present time can be purchased in the market for $26 per ton. Here is a decrease in the price of steel rails of 84 per cent, while the increase in the production, or volume of the business has been 85,862 per cent. In 1866, 17,000 tons of ingot steel were produced in the United States, while in 1890 4,272,610 gross tons were produced here, an increase in the volume of production in this industry of 25,033 per cent. These figures ought to satisfy the most skeptical of the wisdom of maintaining a legislation that will show such phenomenal results.

Not only has the consumer been enabled to procure these products at these enormously reduced prices, but more than three hundred thousand men have found employment at good wages to develop the various materials that are used in the production of pig iron, steel ingots, and steel rails.

The wealth that has been developed in this industry has built churches, founded schools, endowed libraries, and created thriving cities. The population that is directly and indirectly supported by the development of our iron and steel industries is numbered by the millions. Railroad transportation and freights have been reduced by reason of the rapid and enormous decrease in the price of steel rails and other iron and steel that have entered into the construction of the great lines of railway that span our country and make such cities as San Francisco and New York near neighbors. The reduction in the price of other productions which have been amply protected under Republican administration and Republican law, give almost as flattering results as these which are briefly set forth here. An assorted crate of China ware in 1852, under the revenue duties that were then in force, cost the American merchant $95.30.

In 1890, under a protective duty of 55 per cent, an assorted crate of white China ware, superior in quality, could be purchased for $46.30, a reduction in price, under Republican protection, of 52 per cent. While the Democratic party was in power, and maintained their free-trade doctrines, no bunting was manufactured in this country. The price paid for foreign labor, and the character of the machinery used in this country, was such that no manufacturer in America dared invest his capital, and while our soldiers and sailors were winning glorious victories during the late civil war and bringing imperishable renown to the American Army and the American Navy, they were fighting under flags that were made from bunting manufactured in England.

The Republican party placed adequate duty upon this article, and within twelve years from that time 13,000 looms were weaving bunting in the United States. Hundreds of honest men, who had fought under the flag, were engaged in the business of weaving material from which the glorious emblem of our country is made, and bunting now is sold for $18 that cost $25 when we depended upon the foreign manufacturer, a reduction, as you will see, of 28 per cent.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I will.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman was speaking a moment ago of china and crockery ware——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And he stated, as I understood, that in 1855 a crate of crockery ware cost $90 and over.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And that under our protective laws fostering the manufacture of crockery in this country it could be bought in 1890 for $47 a crate?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Forty-six dollars.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, I will ask my colleague first whether the wage of that industry in this country is larger than wages abroad?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Vastly higher.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Secondly, is it not true that there has been no labor-saving machinery introduced into the making of crockery, so that this cheapening of over one-half in the cost of this article to the American consumer comes from the competition in the manufacture of crockery in the United States?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman is absolutely correct in his statement. There has been no improvement of machinery in this respect; the result is due to competition among home manufacturers. While the cost of labor has been higher, the price of the product has been reduced, as shown by figures which I have given to the House.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I will.

Mr. HUTCHESON. In view of what the gentleman has just said I would like to know why it is not to the disadvantage of the manufacturer to continue a system which stimulates at home a competition that drives down the price of the product from $90 to $46 per crate? How do you encourage existing manufactures by fostering a policy which so stimulates the industry at home as to make a reduction of something like 50 per cent in the price of the product?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. One of the reasons is this: By reason of the high wages which we pay to our laboring people in this country they are enabled to live in better condition than the laborers in any other country in the world. They are the large consumers of every product that is manufactured; and by reason of the extended consumption the manufacturers are enabled to accept a smaller profit upon a crate of crockery ware than if the consumption were more limited. From the grand total they realize the profit necessary for the maintenance of the industry.

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I have already yielded several times, and in justice to other members I can not yield further.

The spool-cotton industry is another illustration of the benefits of protection and the decrease in the price of the product under well-regulated and graduated import duties.

Prior to 1861 nine-tenths of the spool cotton used in the United States was manufactured abroad and imported here. The price charged by the importer to the American consumer was 47½ cents per dozen of spools. At this time the same product was sold in the English market for 26 cents per dozen of spools. Without competition in the American market from American producers, the foreign manufacturer was charging the American consumer 83 per cent more for the same production than he was charging the consumer in England. The Republican party placed a duty equal to 21 cents per dozen of spools on this production, and it has remained practically at that figure up to the present time. As a result $25,000,000 have been invested in that branch of the industry alone, and the price has been reduced from 47½ cents for each dozen of spools containing 200 yards of cotton thread to 38 cents per dozen of spools, a reduction of 20 per cent in the price, and instead of getting nine-tenths of this product abroad, as was required under Democratic free-trade times, the American manufacturer now furnishes more than nine-tenths of all the spool cotton consumed in America.

What demonstrates to my mind, and I think will satisfy the country, that there would have been no reduction in the price to the American consumer had it not been for our protective tariff laws, and the development of this industry in America, is that during all this time, from 1861 to the present, there has been no reduction in the price of spool cotton in England, where the manufacturers there have for more than thirty-two years controlled the market, and not only has there been no reduction, as a fact the English consumer is paying 28 cents a dozen for what he paid only 26 cents a dozen thirty-two years ago.

These figures must satisfy even the most prejudiced minds that in this production a tariff is not a tax, and that if there should be such a reduction in the import duties as would enable the foreign manufacturer to glut the market here at ruinous rates, and drive the American producers out of this branch of the business, that they would again, after having obtained control of the American market, restore the old prices that they had in the good old Democratic days, and thus reimburse themselves for all the sacrifices they would make in reëstablishing themselves in the control of the American markets.

I give a table, prepared by Mr. Atkinson, of West Virginia, showing the retail prices on many articles in common consumption. The first column shows the prices in 1857, near the close of the last free-trade period in this country; the second column gives prices in 1889, a year before the McKinley bill became a law. The next column gives prices in 1890, and the last column the prices that were charged after the McKinley law was in full force and its effect was being felt upon these industries.

Articles.	1857.	October, 1889.	October, 1890.	October, 1891.
Ax	$1.49	$0.93	$0.92	$0.88
Binding twine, per pound			.14½	.11
Blankets, per pair	6.83½	4.23	4.09½	3.70
Blue shirting, per yard	.17¼	.11½	.11	.09½
Boots	4.76	3.27	3.07	2.78½
Calico, per yard	.14½	.07½	.06½	.06
Carpets, per yard	1.30½	.77½	.72½	.66½
Cotton gloves	.34½	.24½	.22½	.19½
Cotton hosiery	.47	.27½	.25½	.20½
Cotton knit goods	.98	.52½	.46½	.41½
Cotton thread	.09½	.05	.04½	.04½
Crowbar, per pound	.11½	.07½	.06½	.06½
Drawing chains	1.28½	.71½	.65½	.58½
File	.42	.27½	.24	.20½
Fork, 3-tined	.99½	.56½	.53½	.46½
Flannel, per yard	.70	.39½	.37½	.34½
Fruit cans, per dozen	3.00	.72	.65	.54½
Gingham, per yard	.22½	.10½	.10½	.08½
Hand saw	2.43½	1.62½	1.53	1.39
Hoe	.85	.48½	.43	.37½
Hemp rope, per pound	.21	.14	.14½	.11½
Linen, per yard	.83	.48½	.47	.42½
Mowing machine	121.15	56.98	52.60	47.10
Nails, wire, per pound		.06	.04½	.03½
Nails, iron, per pound	.06½	.05½	.03½	.03
Oilcloth, per yard	.84	.38	.35½	.31
Overalls	1.20½	.83	.79½	.70½
Pearl buttons, per dozen	.22½	.11½	.11½	.18½
Pins, per paper	.11½	.06½	.06½	.05½
Plow	20.12½	14.37½	13.93½	12.92½
Rake, horse	41.25	22.56	21.24½	19.48
Rake, hand	.61½	.34	.30	.26
Reaper, binder	247.85	142.36	129.85	115.96½
Rubber boots	4.63½	3.10½	3.00	2.75½
Salt, per barrel	2.30	1.75	1.65	1.35½
Shoes	5.84	3.45	3.15	3.06
Sheeting, per yard	.12½	.08	.07½	.07½
Shovel	1.47	.97½	.93½	.84
Spade	1.44½	.93½	.95½	.89½
Starch, per pound	.13½	.09½	.09½	.09½
Straw hat, good	1.75	1.28	1.25	1.19

Articles.	1857.	October, 1869.	October, 1890.	October, 1891.
Straw hat, common	$0.44	$0.31	$0.28	$0.22½
Sugar, granulated, per pound	.19½	.09½	.09½	.05½
Sugar, brown, per pound	.16½	.08½	.08	.04½
Sugar bowl	.61	.38½	.37½	.32½
Scythe	1.22	.85½	.74½	.68½
Tin dipper	.25	.12½	.12½	.10½
Tin milk pail	.75½	.46½	.43½	.39½
Tin milk pan	.37½	.18½	.17½	.15½
Ticking, per yard	.35½	.20	.18½	.17
Wagon	130.00	95.00	90.00	75.00
Washboard	.41	.24½	.24	.22½
Washtub	1.20	.70½	.65	.65
Wheelbarrow	2.23	1.65	1.60	1.40½
Wooden pail	.45	.24½	.22	.20½
Woolen clothing	24.00	16.75	14.50	14.25

Statement showing the prices of farm implements, hardware, etc., in 1880 and 1890.

	1880.	1890.
FARM IMPLEMENTS.
Self-binder	$315.00	$130.00
Steel-beam walking plow, 14-inch	28.00	14.00
Riding cultivator	45.00	25.05
Mowing machine	85.00	50.00
Wood pumps	15.00	6.00
Farm wagon	85.00	50.00
Two-seated spring wagon	100.00	75.00
HARDWARE.
Barb wire, per pound	.10	.04
Fence staples, per pound	.10	.05
Iron nails, per keg	6.00
Steel nails, per keg		2.80
Plain wire, per pound	.05½	.03½
Horseshoes, per keg	8.00	4.50
Mattock and handle	1.40	.85
Wrench	.75	.40
Shot, per pound	.12½	.08
Iron, per pound	.05	.03
Four-tined fork	.75	.50
Lantern	1.50	.75
Milk pans, per dozen	2.25	1.00
Post auger	2.25	1.25
Chains, per pound	.22	.12
File	.05	.25
Wheelbarrow	2.25	1.65
Cistern pump	4.25	2.25
Universal wringer	7.00	3.00
GROCERIES.
Sugar, granulated, per pound	.12½	.07
Kerosene oil, 150 test per gallon	.25	.13
Salt, per barrel	2.25	1.25
Flour, per cwt	4.50	3.50
Coffee, Java	.33	.33
Coffee, Rio	.25	.25
Canned tomatoes, per can	.15	.10
Soda crackers, per pound	.10	.06½
Soap, per cake	.07	.05
Crockery	(*)
DRY GOODS.
Unbleached muslin, per yard	.08	.06
Calico, per yard	.07	.05
Gingham, per yard, unbleached	.12½	.10
Worsted dress goods, per yard	.15	.12½
Carpets	(†)
General reduction on stock of dry goods	(‡)

* 25 per cent reduction.
† 23 to 33 per cent reduction.
‡ 25 to 33⅓ per cent reduction.

These figures show a steady and gradual reduction in the price of all articles that have been properly and adequately protected for a series of years, and show, too, that the McKinley bill instead of increasing the price of commodities to the consumer has decreased it, and that to-day there is no article of common consumption which is manufactured in this country in any large quantity that is not cheaper than it was before the passage of the McKinley bill. The facts here presented ought to satisfy any person who is open to reason that the system of protection to American industries and American labor, as advocated and practiced by the Republican party, is beneficial to all people alike.

This reduction of the price of the manufactured article to the consumer has not been brought about by any reduction in the wages of those who have been engaged in their manufacture and production.

The condition of the laboring man at the close of the Harrison Administration was never better in the whole history of our Government. There was not an idle man in the country. The demand for employment was such that a common day laborer was receiving from $1.75 to $2 per day, and the skilled mechanic was receiving from $2.50 to $10 a day. The report of the Finance Committee of the Senate, made on the 3d day of March, 1892, gives a most gratifying summary of the condition of the laboring people of this country.

I can not in the time that is given me for this discussion enter into a detailed statement of the condition of these wage-workers in the different industries in which they are and have been engaged; but the result of the investigation that was instituted by the Finance Committee of the Senate, to secure statistics of the course of wages and earnings of the laboring people of this country for a series of years, is one which must be gratifying to every loyal American. It shows conclusively that the standard of life has been improved; that the average of wages has been increased, and that the condition of the laboring man at the close of the Harrison Administration was such that the President in his last annual message to Congress said with great truth:

> There never has been a time in our history when work was so abundant or wages were as high, whether measured by the currency in which they were paid or by their power to supply the necessaries and comforts of life.

My colleague from Illinois [Mr. BLACK], in his argument yesterday, undertook to show that the price of labor had not increased in this country during Republican administration. I confess I was surprised at the statement, and no doubt my surprise was shared by other members of the Republican party. I had supposed that if there was one thing which had been conclusively settled by statistics in this country it was that the condition of the laboring man had been improved under Republican administration and protective laws. I had supposed this question to be beyond debate. But, inasmuch as my colleague saw fit yesterday to challenge the statement which had been made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] I desire to call attention to a statement of Mr. Atkinson, of Massachusetts, one of the ablest statisticians of this country, a gentleman who is in sympathy with the Democratic party in their tariff-reform movement, who is himself a pronounced free trader, but a man who has too much honesty of intellect to misstate the facts or draw illogical conclusions from the statistics presented to him.

What is the statement of Mr. Atkinson? He says that from 1865 down to 1892, when his statement was made, there had been a gradual upward movement in the prices paid to labor—not only unskilled labor, but in the wages of skilled mechanics throughout the country. Mr. Atkinson says that from 1880 to 1890 this increase averaged from 10 to 40 per cent; and not only this, but during all this time when the Republican party under the policy it has maintained all these years was insuring increased wages to the laboring man, the prices of the products that he consumed were gradually decreased; so that at the time when Mr. Atkinson gave this statement to the public in the Forum of May, 1892, the condition of the laboring man had never been better. I trust that in view of this declaration of Mr. Atkinson we shall hear no more from the Democratic party in this House or throughout the country upon this labor question. Any man who has investigated this matter sufficiently to give an intelligent opinion must agree with the conclusions that have been given to the public by Mr. Atkinson.

Those who favor free trade have as one of their stock arguments that protection is maintained at the expense of the farmer. No speech has been made in this House in the discussion of this question since I have had the honor to be a member of this body that has not in some manner referred to the hard lines of the farmers, and insisted with a good deal of vehemence that they received no benefits under protective tariff legislation, while they were required to pay more for all machinery used on their farms and the products consumed upon their tables than they would if free trade were the order of the day. The hard lot of the farmer is found more in the imagination of these free-trade orators than in the facts of history.

It is true that in some localities, owing to local causes largely, farmers now have and in the past have had serious struggles in life; but the great mass of the farmers of America are not the suffering people they are painted by our Democratic friends. Their condition as compared with the farmers of free-trade England is infinitely better. They have made steady advancement in wealth, and the improvement in their home conditions is apparent to anybody who is familiar with this class of our American citizens. I have lived with them and been one of them and I know whereof I speak. Had I the power I would like to give a faithful picture of the condition of the farmers of this country from 1846 up to the time that the Republican party came into power and compare it with an equally truthful picture of their condition at the present time.

Under Democracy and free trade at the time I mention there was no money in the country; there were no markets for the products of the farm; and no means were possessed by the tillers of the soil to purchase more than the scantiest necessities of life. The log house and the straw shed were the improvements that covered the family and the small amount of stock that had been gathered upon the farm. I can remember in Illinois, when both our National and State governments were under Democratic control, that a farmer with a hundred and sixty acres of the richest land that God ever blessed man with, would not produce enough, when reduced to money under free-trade prices, to pay his taxes, support his family, furnish himself with a new suit of clothes, and his wife a calico dress.

In those days there were no carpets on the floor, no pictures on the wall, and no books in the home, and the rudest kind of furniture was all that could be afforded by even the most fortunate ones among the farmers. The soil yielded abundant crops, but there was no market for the corn, wheat, and other cereals raised. The strictest economy was the order of the day. The girls and boys in the family were all required to engage in the hardest kind of manual labor to help their parents eke out their humble existence; while three months' schooling in the winter season at a cross-road schoolhouse, reached sometimes by almost impassable roads, was the extent of the educational advantages that were given. The good old Democratic days, mentioned as so favorable to the farmer, always bring to my mind the picture of privation and distress through which the farmers of Illinois were compelled to pass during the period it was under Democratic free-trade control.

The people of Illinois early took advantage of the tariff legislation that was given the country by the Republican party, to establish manufactories there which have increased and multiplied in number, diversified the labor of our people, and furnished a certain and sure market for all of the products of the farm. The log house of free-trade days has given place to beautiful frame houses with all of the modern comforts and conveniences of life. Rugs and carpets cover the floor of the sitting room and the parlors; while the walls have been adorned with pictures which not only delight the eye, but improve the mind; books and magazines are found upon the table; organs and pianos attest the musical culture of the household; the scanty schooling that was given the children in the early days has now given place to our splendid public schools of to-day, where the farmer boys and girls are not only taught the common English branches, but are given an education that enables the boys to engage in business, adopt any of the learned professions, and compete for all of the prizes of life, on an equality with those who have heretofore been regarded as the most favored in our land; while the girls, under our present system of education, are so taught that they are enabled to qualify themselves to fill any position in life, not only with credit, but with a grace and ease of manner that is an honor to their sex.

Political economists teach us what practical experience has demonstrated; that the nearer you can bring the producer and the consumer to each other, the better it is for both classes. If the farmers of Illinois and the great West had no market for any of their products west of the Alleghany Mountains their condition would be much more unfavorable than it is at the present time. The true theory of government is to diversify our manufacturing industries and distribute them in a manner so that the products of the farm will be consumed by the employés in the factories, and farmers can become the customers of these factories that create the home market for the products of the farm. Wherever this has been done, not only has the condition of the farmer been improved by securing better prices for his products, but he has been enabled to purchase all of the necessaries and comforts and many of the luxuries of life cheaper than when he depended upon a distant or a foreign market.

The great State of New York serves as a good illustration of the principle for which I here contend. There was a time, and that not very long ago, when New York, from the wonderful fertility of her soil, supplied all of the States to the east of her with wheat; yet such has been the remarkable development of manufacturing industries in that Empire State that now she is enabled to supply only a portion of her own people with the wheat that is annually consumed within her borders. The rapid development of manufacturing industries in that State furnished a better market for the products of the farms in Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Illinois. As these industries have increased in this country and extended to the States which are now large consumers and small producers of agricultural products, they have built up beautiful and thriving cities within their borders. Statistics show that the prices of all farm products range higher in manufacturing States than they do in purely agricultural States. This arises from the superiority of the home market over that of a distant or foreign market.

For example: New York is the greatest manufacturing State in the Union: it is a great agricultural State as well. Nebraska is a fine agricultural State; but, unfortunately, up to the present time has not developed manufacturing industries within her borders in sufficient quantities to furnish a good home market for the products of her farms. What is the effect upon the prices of agricultural products in these two States? Corn in New York sells for 100 per cent more than it will in Nebraska; wheat for 38 per cent more; rye for 76 per cent more; oats 94 per cent more; barley 44 per cent more; Irish potatoes 100 per cent more; hay 100 per cent more. The average selling price of these farm products is nearly 80 per cent higher in New York than in Nebraska.

Mr. BRYAN. Do not the farmers of the Eastern States have the advantage of the freights which have to be paid on the crop from the West; and is it not natural to expect that wheat will be higher in Massachusetts than in Illinois and Nebraska?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's statement answers itself. The point I make is that as a State develops manufacturing industries, and as an increased number of people engage in such industries they become the consumers of the products of the soil and thus the price of such products is raised. My remarks further on will be a complete answer to the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Is it not true that the State of Illinois while first in agriculture is third in manufactures, and that Chicago is the second manufacturing city in the Union?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That is true; and, Mr. Chairman, further on in my remarks I shall give a splendid illustration of the benefits of the protective system to the farmer, by referring to the city of Chicago.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman indulge me with one more interruption in this connection?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman state whether the price of agricultural products is higher in New York to-day, with all of the increased manufactures in that State, than it was twenty years ago?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I will not speak of to-day, because we are under a Democratic Administration and are experiencing what free trade is. [Applause on the Republican side.] But I will say that during the Administration of Mr. Harrison, with the single exception of wheat, they were all higher, infinitely higher.

Let me give a different illustration to demonstrate the benefits of a protective tariff to the farmer.

Prof. Dodge, of the Agricultural Department, has given a good deal of attention to statistics on this question, and from his study and observation has divided the States of the Union into four classes or groups; the first class is where the per cent of the population of the States engaged in farming is less than 30 per cent; the second class is where the per cent is over 30 and less than 50 per cent; the third class is where the farmers number over 50 per cent and are less than 70 per cent of the aggregate population of the States; and the fourth class is where the farmers number over 70 per cent of the population of the States. In the States comprised in the first class, Prof. Dodge tells us that the value of land per acre will average $38.65; in the second class it will average $30.55; in the third class $13.53; and in the fourth class $5.18.

These statistics are prepared by Prof. Dodge for no partisan purpose; they are given to illustrate the condition of the farmers in the various sections in the Union. They furnish a most instructive lesson. Why is it that the land in Pennsylvania or New York is worth on an average of $38.65 per acre? It is because those States have stimulated capital to invest in manufacturing industries, and thousands of men are given employment in mills, factories, and foundries who live upon the products of the farms of those States. They have a market at their own doors for everything that is raised in the field or in their gardens. Their profits are not eaten up by middlemen or railroad transportation; and the result is that no more thrifty, successful, or independent class of citizens can be found in the world than the farmers in these two States.

Who are the poor farmers, and where are they found? They are found in the sections of the Union where the States are given up almost wholly to agriculture; they are found in localities where the market for the products of their farms is hundreds if not thousands of miles away from the places where they are produced. Another illustration is given by Prof. Dodge which still further demonstrates the benefits of protective tariff legislation to the farmers of America. In the grouping of the States which I have just given he further shows the value of products per capita to the individual cultivator. His statistics show that in the first group of States, where the population engaged in farming is less than 30 per cent, that the value of the products of the farm per capita to individual cultivator averages $457, in the second class it averages $394, in the third class $261, and in the fourth class $160; in other words, a man engaged in agriculture in any of the first group of States, for the same labor in the cultivation of the same number of acres, will make 185 per cent more than the individual cultivator in the States where over 70 per cent of the population is engaged in farming.

These facts ought to satisfy even a British free trader that agriculture is more profitable where it has a market at the door of the farmer for all that he raises on his farm. A remarkable illustration of the truth of this is furnished in the aggregate of the manufacturing and agricultural products of Cook County, Ill. As appears by the census of 1890 Cook County yielded in that year farm products valued at $4,437,140; and manufactured products valued at $664,567,923. The farmers of Cook County, Ill., can not afford to raise wheat, corn, rye, and barley. Why? Because by the diversity of industries in that county so large a population has been developed there that the farmer finds it profitable to engage in what is known as truck farming.

This diversification of farm industry is only possible where manufacturing industries are established alongside or near the farms. Take wheat at an average of 75 cents per bushel, and the yield at 18 bushels per acre, a fair estimate in Illinois, it would require 328,677 acres of land to cultivate, as we used to cultivate land in the good old Democratic free-trade times, to produce in value the products that are raised on the few acres devoted to agriculture in Cook County under the conditions that have been developed and exist under Republican administration and protective tariff legislation.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that these figures demonstrate what I started out to prove, that the farmer is benefited as much as the manufacturer or any other class of citizens, by the maintenance of a system of protection that will give such splendid results as we see in New York, Pennsylvania, and in Illinois, and I can say to my friend from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] that if that great and rich State will adopt the policy that has prevailed in Illinois for now more than a generation, the city of Omaha will become a rival of Chicago, and the farmers of the State of Nebraska will find as rich a market for their product in the cities of Omaha and Lincoln as the farmers of Illinois now find in the great city of Chicago.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman allow me to say that the cities of Lincoln and Omaha have grown more rapidly in the last ten years than any manufacturing city in the East.

Mr. MERCER. I desire to say that the cities of Omaha and Lincoln are becoming manufacturing cities very rapidly.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Let me give another illustration of the benefits of the protective tariff to the farmer, drawn from the county in which I reside. Kane is about 40 miles from the city of Chicago. I can remember when that county was given up entirely to raising wheat, corn, and other cereals, when these productions were taken in a farm wagon and drawn to the city of Chicago, and there sold at prices that would hardly pay for a barrel of salt that a farmer could take back to his home. To-day, by the development of these industries along the Fox River, which runs through this county, and the development of the city of Chicago, there are $3,600,000 annually paid to the farmers of Kane County for milk alone, an industry that could not exist under any other conditions than those conditions which have grown up under a protective tariff system in this country.

When the McKinley bill was under discussion in the House and before the country, much ado was made over the effort on the part of the Republican party to protect the farmers on the various farm products, including cattle and horses, from foreign importations; and we were charged with a desire to mislead this worthy class of citizens when we asserted that they would receive a direct benefit by this check upon importations from Canada, Mexico, and other foreign countries. Democratic newspapers and Democratic speakers contended that the amount of farm products of every kind, including cattle and horses, which were imported into this country was so small that it was not and would not be felt by the farmers. I have with some pains gathered statistics on this point, and I find that in that, as well as its other provisions, the McKinley bill wisely and justly placed high duties upon further importations on all products in which the farmers of the country are most interested.

As illustrating this, I desire to show that in 1888 there were 62,411 head of horses imported and sold in the markets of this country. On this item alone the farmers were deprived of the sale of more than 60,000 horses. This importation in 1888 is only a fair average of the annual importation for five or six years preceding the adoption of the McKinley law. The average importation of beef cattle into America prior to the enactment of the McKinley law aggregated 88,000 head. The United States Wool Growers' Association estimates that by a proper protection of the wool and sheep industry the farmers of this country could increase their flocks by more than 60,000,000 sheep.

Prior to the passage of the McKinley bill in the House there were 8,259,538 bushels of potatoes imported annually into this country, and in 1888 there were imported 1,942,864 bushels of beans and peas and 100,269 tons of hay, 7,000,000 pounds of hops, 55,000 bushels of buckwheat, 1,583,941 bushels of flaxseed, 16,000,000 dozen eggs annually; $54,230 worth of sauerkraut, $4,100 worth of peanuts, $2,564 worth of sweet potatoes; 200,000 barrels of turnips, besides cabbage, cauliflower, and other vegetables which our Eastern farmers can raise at much greater profit than they can wheat and other cereals. It has been estimated by competent and careful authority that if our own farmers were properly protected, so that they could produce all of the farm products imported, some of which I have enumerated, they would require nearly 70,000,000 acres of land for that purpose.

The farm products of this country are all consumed here except about 10 per cent, and, excluding cotton and tobacco, it is estimated that we do not export of agricultural products to exceed 5 per cent; but, on the basis of sending abroad nearly 10 per cent of all farm products, the amount that we annually export does not require over 44,000,000 acres of land to produce—26,000,000 acres of land less than is required to cultivate and produce what was imported into this country prior to the enactment of the McKinley law. These figures show that it is as important to the farmer to be protected from Canada, Mexico, and other foreign countries as it is to protect our cotton, wool, and iron industries. I trust that in the future those who make a study of this great subject will cease their declaiming against protective tariff legislation upon the ground that it is against the interests of the farming and producing classes. Henry C. Carey, the great protection writer, gives us the idea that there is a perfect harmony of interests among all the different classes of producers in this country; you break down the protection to one, and you impair the whole edifice; you maintain all of the parts in their relative positions, and you have a structure not only beautiful in its symmetry, but grand in its proportions; a structure which has brought the most marvelous results in this country that have been witnessed or experienced in any nation since time began.

When the Republican party came into power the wealth of this country aggregated $16,159,616,068. Under the fostering influences of Republican protective legislation, that wealth has increased in the thirty years of Republican rule 288 per cent. If we judged of the benefits of the system by grand totals alone, here is an increase in wealth that should paralyze the tongue and silence the lips of every opponent of American protection.

Our Democratic friends have endeavored to ridicule protection out of existence by charging that it was only asked in the first instance on behalf of "infant industries," and that the larger the infant has grown the more nourishment he requires, and that if a halt is not declared somewhere his demands will be so great that the very life of the parent will be taken in giving nourishment to the child. If they are to treat of protection in this figurative style, they should at least give a truthful picture. The infant industry is not the cormorant they would have us believe; but a ray of sunshine that is let into the hearts and homes of the laboring people of America; a ray that reinvigorates the hopes and ambitions of all American citizens, and gives promise of that social well-being and industrial independence which alone can insure the happiness and improvement of the race.

As an argument of ridicule it has its place in the Democratic arsenal from which to draw ammunition to meet the claims of the friends of the American system; but protection is neither asked nor given on that theory. The productions of America do not need protection against those of England or any other foreign country because the industries are younger, but as is well said by an eminent writer on political economy—

> They are asked for because the industries in America are carried on under a higher civilization, a civilization in which the human element in production is more expensive than it is in other countries.

It goes without saying that the factory hands and wage-workers in America are better housed, better clothed, and better fed than in any other civilized country in the world. They receive for the same number of hours of labor a much higher rate of wages, and they are thus enabled to live in better style, and give better advantages to their families than like workers in any other country. If this question were a contest simply between American machinery and capital, and that of foreign machinery and capital, I grant you there would be no reason in maintaining import duties for the protection of either. This question has resolved itself into one of labor, and the contest that is being waged by the Democratic party to pass this Wilson bill is a war upon the laboring class of America.

No person can dispute the proposition that where the foreign competitor has as perfect machinery as we have in this country, with capital that can be secured at a lower rate of interest, that we must have discriminating import duties of a sufficient amount to make the difference between what is paid for labor here and labor abroad; or else there is a discrimination against the American manufacturer in favor of the foreigner. No man who has his capital invested in manufacturing industries in America can afford to come to Congress and ask to have legislation enacted for his special benefit, where he will receive rights and privileges that are not enjoyed by other citizens.

When he asks, however, to have an import duty upon articles that are brought from abroad and sold in the markets here that he is manufacturing sufficient in amount and character to make up for the difference between what he pays his employés, and what his foreign competitor is paying, he is not asking for any special privileges or benefits, and is only demanding what should be accorded without argument to any man or set of men who may be willing to invest their capital in enterprises that will give employment to the vast army of unemployed men in this country to-day.

In the interests of civilization that country which has accorded the highest privileges to the laboring classes, and where you find their social conditions the best, should be made the standard on all industrial questions; and in the contest between the laboring classes of such a country, and one of a lower grade of social standing or civilization, the contest should be made equal by legislation which will protect those living in the superior, from their competitors living under inferior social conditions. For example: The laboring people of America are living under better social conditions than like employés in England. It costs the English employé less to live than it does the American. If we have no protection in our commercial intercourse with England, the English laborer will not be elevated to the standard of the social condition of the American laborer, but the American laborer will be degraded to the social condition of the English workman.

A still more marked illustration can be found in our commerce with Japan. The Japanese Government in many respects is a progressive government, but her people work for less than one-tenth the amount for which the American laborer should be asked to give his services. In the silk industries, and in many others, the Japanese are as expert in operating machinery as the English or American laborer. Now, in any industry that is carried on by the aid of machinery in Japan of a like character to any that we have in this country, the Japanese manufacturer has an advantage over the American manufacturer to this vast difference in the pay roll of his employés. I trust there is no Democrat in this House, or in this country, that would be willing to see the American laborer or mechanic degraded to the condition of the Japanese laborer.

How, then, are we to maintain our manufacturing interests, and how are we to give employment to thousands of laboring men unless we maintain a protective tariff duty sufficient in character to make up for this difference in the wages paid in the two countries? Some enthusiastic free trader may say that if the Japanese manufacturer can furnish these products cheaper than they can be furnished in America, it is the part of wisdom to yield the markets to the Japanese manufacturer and importer. But if this were done what would be the result? Fifty-three thousand people who are now engaged in manufacturing silk would be thrown out of employment, and either made a charge upon the public for support or else they would be compelled to seek employment in some other calling.

The next industry that would likely be attacked would be our cotton industries, and the 221,000 people that find employment there would follow the fortunes of those engaged in the silk industry; and thus one industry after another would be destroyed by this low-priced labor abroad, and pauperism would be increased in America. These hundreds of thousands of workmen who under this kind of competition would be driven out of employment, would cease to be consumers of the products of the farms, and instead would be competitors of the farmers in the cultivation of the soil. The disastrous effect of this upon the markets for all farm products can not be estimated. The Democrats say that the markets of the world will then be open to the American farmer; but I ask them what market will be open for the wheat of the American farmer?

Under existing conditions there are now practically only two European governments who furnish any market for the wheat that is grown in America—England and Belgium. Within the last few years Russia, India, and Roumania have become sharp competitors in the English and Belgian markets on wheat and other farm products. With their cheap labor and cheap lands, they will in the future drive the American farmer out of all European markets, as the Japanese laborer, under the conditions of free trade, would drive the American laborer from our mills and factories. An honest and a candid consideration of the true interests of all of the people of this country, leads to the logical and inevitable support of protective tariff laws.

In the discussion of this subject people are liable to forget that the primary object of import duties is to raise money to pay the expenses of the Government. With our rapidly increasing population and growing importance in all departments of Government, we year by year increase the necessary expenses incurred in maintaining the Government. Four hundred and sixty million dollars are required annually to pay the expenses of the Government. This makes, as you will see, a daily expenditure of more than $1,260,000. If we are to remove the duties upon all products that have given us the marvelous success that has marked the career of this country under Republican administration this vast sum of money must be collected by some kind of internal or domestic taxes.

The cutting down of import duties under the present bill does not lessen the amount of money that must be raised to support the Government. One would infer from the talk that is so freely indulged in by the Democratic members of this House that the reduction of about $70,000,000 that is made upon import duties in the bill now under discussion is that much money saved to the taxpayers of this country. Not so. That amount of money is taken from the foreign manufacturer and the foreign importer, and is an added burden to the American citizen. For weeks after the schedules relating to import duties were prepared by the Committee of Ways and Means, they wrestled with the great problem as to how they could tax American products, American industries, and American citizens in a manner to raise this large amount of money.

I have grown weary listening to the talk of the friends of this bill about the burdens of taxation. One would suppose from arguments they make that they regarded taxation as an evil, and that it is something that has been imposed upon the people of this country by this terrible monster known as "import duty." The facts and figures which I have already given have demonstrated the falsity of their position; but I wish to take issue with those who deride and cry out against all taxation. Like any of the blessings that have been bestowed by a kind Providence upon the human race, it may be misapplied and become an engine of evil; when properly considered and administered it results in the social, spiritual, and intellectual improvement of our people.

The only interest the public have in taxation is, that the taxes assessed shall be economically collected and wisely expended. I have already shown that to support the Government, regardless of which political party is in power, requires the expenditure of more than $1,260,000 per day. It is important in the collection of this large sum of money that methods should be adopted that will bring this revenue into the Treasury of the United States at the least expense; and it is still more important that this daily sum of money be wisely expended. A government differs but little in this respect from the proper administration of one's home affairs. It has been truthfully as well as eloquently said, that the home is the unit of government.

To the average citizen there is a time of intense application, rigid economy, and a denial of many of the pleasures and luxuries of life; but as he advances along the highway of life and accumulates property the love and affection he bears for his wife and children lead him into the expenditure of larger sums of money in providing for their comfort and convenience and social and educational improvement. That he spends more money under these conditions than when he started in life is no evidence that he has grown extravagant or wasteful; or that he has deteriorated in any of the relations that go to make up the good citizen, but just the contrary is true. If he is a progressive, highminded, and Christian citizen, his greatest delight is in surrounding himself and his family with the superior advantages that his accumulated wealth will warrant.

A collection of such citizens makes the township or the municipal government; and the same reasons that have actuated the citizen in providing these superior comforts and advantages for his own home, will prompt him to expend the public money in the building of schoolhouses, the improvement of streets, and all matters that relate to a well-ordered town or municipal government. When this principle is extended from the few hundred people, or the few thousand, as the case may be, who form the small municipality, into the 67,000,000 who form this great Republic, we can readily see that the people's great interest lies, not in the amount of money that may be raised for public purposes, but that whatever sum is raised shall be, as I have stated, economically collected, and then wisely expended.

It is the duty of this Government to maintain a Navy commensurate with the dignity and character of our people. This, of itself, requires a large expenditure of money. In the interest of humanity it is important to establish and maintain a life-saving service with proper light-houses, and all the attendant improvements that modern civilization has developed for the protection of those who go down to the sea. When we turn our attention to the interior of our country, we can then see how the people can be benefited by proper mail facilities, by the construction of public buildings, in improving the great rivers that are freighted with the commerce of our country, and in making expenditures upon the Great Lakes and upon the harbors that dot our Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Another great expenditure that some cry out against, but which I think is the chief glory of our Government, is the millions of dollars of money that is annually expended in the way of pensions to the veterans of the late war. Grand and noble men who, in the great crisis of our National Government, left the comforts of life and the endearments of their firesides and dedicated their lives to the service of their Government should in their old age be properly and adequately protected by this Government which their services saved from disruption and destruction.

There are many other subjects which I might enumerate where the public money could be wisely expended. I have indicated enough here to show that a proper system of internal improvements and governmental expenditures not only enriches our country, but gives employment to vast numbers of what might otherwise be idle men. Our Government is formed and maintained for the benefit of the people. This is the principle upon which the Republican party has ever acted. Those who cry out against all taxation and the expenditure of money for public improvements seem to hold that the people are not interested in the Government and that the less money that is expended by it is wise statesmanship.

A poor and miserly government can represent no different spirit among its people. Such a government crushes out all feelings of patriotism and all pride in national honor. No country ever acquired or maintained an honorable position among the nations of the earth where such a spirit prevailed among the people and controlled the actions of its legislators. This Government has attained its proud position, not by practicing the back-action miserly economy that is preached by some of the leading and distinguished members of the Democratic party, but by administering its affairs upon broad and liberal principles.

Mr. Chairman, the bill which we have under consideration, if it becomes a law in the form in which it is now presented to the House, will deal a deadly blow to that spirit of improvement which has not only characterized our National Government for more than a generation, but which has extended to and controlled the action of the individual citizen. This bill, if it becomes a law, is a long step toward that free trade which has been the dream of the visionary and the hope of the foreign manufacturer. The condition of the people of this country during the summer and fall which have just passed is but an earnest, in my judgment, of what we shall experience if this vicious measure is enacted into a law.

I am amazed that men who ought at least to be familiar with the hardships and privations, the want and the hunger, that will be the lot of the working people of this country if the friends of this bill are successful in their efforts in making it the law of the land, should feel bound by fealty to their party to give it their support and their votes. Our country should ever be above party consideration, and the rights and the best interests of our fellow-citizens should never be placed in the scale against party expediency. Believing these principles as I do, I am but discharging a duty that is imposed upon me by my constituents in opposing this measure and in doing what I can to challenge the attention of the House and the country to its dangerous character. I voice not only the sentiments of the people who have repeatedly honored me with a seat on this floor, but I believe, also the sentiments of the great majority of the people of this country when I say that I trust it will never become a law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PASCHAL].

Mr. PASCHAL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state, in relation to the joint resolution (H. Res. 93) which was reported this morning for the concurrence of the House in the Senate amendments, that when it was presented I was absent at a committee meeting. I had intended to ask the concurrence of the House in the amendments, and had spoken to my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON], who kindly looked after the matter. I wish simply to explain where I was at the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, we of the Democratic party went before the country in 1892, asserting that the existing tariff was wrong in principle and unjust in operation; declaring the policy of protection a fraud and robbery; charging it with creating trusts, stifling commerce, throttling industry, causing enforced idleness, lessening wages, impoverishing labor, and creating a few monstrous fortunes, and pledging ourselves to abolish it if the American people gave us authority. They did give us authority, and then our haste to repeal oppressive taxes subsided, and instead of flying at the throat of protected barons and robber trusts the great Democratic party began, as it were, to wag its tail and look for crumbs.

It was the duty of a party coming into power on such pledges and at such a conjuncture to have proceeded without a moment's delay to the radical revision of the tariff. If Mr. Cleveland had shown the sagacity and courage the situation demanded the ink would not have been dry on the commissions of his Secretaries ere Congress would have been called into extra session to relieve the country of its burdens of taxation. But instead of that we proceeded to rest on our laurels and divide the spoils, and the nation was treated to the spectacle of a President and a Congress having power to remove crushing burdens, devoting their energies to the discussion of personal claims to petty places.

The first clear duty having been neglected there came the opportunity of the extra session. It was the imperative need of the Democratic majority to have been prepared with a tariff bill by the time the silver question was settled, so that instead of adjourning we might at once have gone to work upon it, and by this time have had it through the House and far on its way in the Senate, thus saving, at least as far as we are concerned, all these weeks of disastrous delay and uncertainty. But again, General Timidity led the Democratic hosts, and again we procrastinated.

And as the climax of all this delay come the shameful days we have just passed through, in which the House has stood paralyzed because, despite our overwhelming majority, we Democrats would neither furnish a quorum to be counted nor count the one that was really present. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I, for one, am a convert to the doctrine that we should count men as present who are here. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Fifty-first Congress applied that rule to us when we were in the minority. We should now follow it, and show that the Democratic party have ingenuity enough to devise for themselves a way of counting a quorum, if they do not like the way of the gentleman from Maine. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

It is not merely that we have yet done nothing. It is that we have done nothing where we had promised much. The worst possible situation of business is not that of a high tariff, but that of a high tariff threatened with certain but indefinite reduction. This is the situation our delay has for nearly a year imposed on the country. Up to the present, thanks to our inaction, the victory of the Democratic party in November, 1892, has worked evil, not good. The McKinley tariff still exerts its strangling power, and worse than the McKinley tariff is the depressing effect of the uncertainty as to what tariff will succeed it.

While we have been fiddling Rome has been burning. While we have been seeking offices and peddling offices the very disasters that we predicted from Republican misrule have come upon the country. Who shall sell stamps at Stringtown Cross Roads and who shall play ambassador at the court of Italy have been settled, but the burning question of the tariff is yet at sea and in the dark. And now when, after the Christmas turkey and the New Year wine, we meet to consider at our leisure what shall be done to carry out the mandate of the people given us almost a year and a half ago, the cry of distress goes up from all parts of the land, and American citizens by the hundred thousand are being fed by charity to prevent starvation.

But at last the committee charged by this House with the duty of bringing in a bill for the abolition of a system which the majority of us have declared a fraud and a robbery, have been heard from. They have given us a Democratic report and a Republican bill. "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau." [Laughter.]

"The American people," say the committee, "after the fullest and most thorough debate ever given by any people to their fiscal policy, have deliberately and rightly decided that the existing tariff is wrong in principle and grievously unjust in operation." And then the committee go on to present to us a bill based upon this same wrong principle and perpetuating this same grievous injustice—a bill for which they have taken the McKinley bill as a model, and of which the best that can be said is that it is the McKinley bill shaved down; or a redistribution of the spoils of protection.

Mr. Chairman, I am like the man who could eat crow. I will vote for this bill if I can get nothing better. But I do not like it. That it does contain some good points is true. The McKinley bill contained some good points; it put raw sugar and some other things on the free list. This bill goes further, and puts wool, coal, iron ore, and undressed lumber on the free list, and in so far makes some show of redeeming our pledge to abolish protection. This is its little sprinkle of saving salt, which commends it to me. Even if it were a proposition to re-enact the McKinley bill, with the single exception of free wool, I would still vote for it if I could do no better, for every addition to the free list is a step towards free trade; every break in the link of protected interests lessens the power of the league of plunder to further squeeze the people.

But, though I might vote for this bill with pleasure if it came from a Ways and Means Committee representing a Republican House, I am disgusted and dismayed that it is presented by a Democratic committee to a Democratic House, as representing their idea of what the Democratic party, with all branches of the Government in its hands, proposes to do for a suffering people.

Put before a Republican House by a Republican Ways and Means Committee it would fitly represent the idea of "protection amended by the friends of protection." But proposed by a Democratic Ways and Means Committee to a Democratic House, as representing the idea of an Administration elected on a platform declaring protection an unconstitutional fraud and robbery, it is an evasion of promise and a political blunder of the gravest kind, a confession that the Democratic party lacks courage and honesty. [Applause from the Republican side.] It will not satisfy protectionists, for your protectionist is as bitterly opposed to you if you cut down his protection a little as if you cut it out altogether. It will not satisfy free traders, for it no more acknowledges the free-trade principle than did the McKinley bill. Perhaps it may satisfy what are called tariff reformers, but if this is a tariff reform bill I am all the more rejoiced that I am not now and never have been a tariff reformer. I am only a plain free trader. [Laughter.]

I am satisfied that this bill does not really represent the views and wishes of the chairman. He evidently has reluctantly consented to it from two considerations: first, the number of Democratic protectionists on the committee who could not be induced to join in a more radical measure; and, second, the fear that such a measure could not pass the Senate. For the first he is not responsible, but as to the second I think he has made a mistake. It is not our business to consider now what the Senate will do. The bill that passes this House ought to represent the judgment and wishes of this House. If the Democrats of the Senate refuse to join with us in carrying out the Democratic pledges let them take the odium.

No man could make the speech that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee made here the other day, no man could portray the iniquities of protection so vividly as he did, and yet heartily indorse this bill. It was a great speech. Oh! Mr. Chairman, if we could only adopt the speech instead of the bill, how much better it would suit me. [Laughter.]

As it now stands the central idea of this bill is protection—the taxing of all the rest of our people for the benefit of a particular class—the manufacturer, that is to say, the capitalist. From A to izzard this privileged class has been kept carefully in view, and in all reductions of duty care has been taken that it should not be deprived of any substantial part of its un-Democratic privilege of taxing the rest of the community. The result is a bill so protective that it would have startled Hamilton or Clay. A bill which, taken as a whole, will give to the manufacturers of this country a more substantial protection: will allow them to make greater profits at the expense of their fellow-citizens than the bill of 1883, and in many cases more than the McKinley bill. In fact, if I did not know better, I should be obliged to suppose that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and his fellows of the minority had hypnotized the majority and written the bill for them, and were making a pretense of opposing it in order to induce the Democrats of this House to accept a Republican measure under the delusion that it was a Democratic one. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. On the contrary, I called the attention of the committee to that very bad break the first time I got a look at the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Then I must relieve the gentleman of all responsibility. This bill does put wool and coal and iron ore and undressed lumber on the free list. For that I render thanks, and this part of the bill I will heartily support. But men do not eat or drink or wear or shelter themselves with wool, or coal, or iron ore, or undressed lumber, and the forms into which these natural products must be changed before they can be used by the consumer are in this bill carefully taxed. Blankets or clothing, steel rails or bicycles, lumber manufactured into the forms in which it is fitted for human use, or the articles for the manufacture of which coal supplies power are not put on the free list. Its reductions on articles the consumer can use are, so far as I can see, mere nominal reductions, which still leave the people a prey to the trusts.

We can not abolish trusts by laws condemning them and providing for their legal prosecution; we can only abolish them by abolishing the monopoly on which they are based, and where they depend on the tariff, as most of them do, by putting on the free list every article in which we have reason to suppose a trust has been or is being formed. [Applause.] Yet our committee seems to have taken the trusts under its special care, and in this bill to have been as careful not to hurt them as though it had been organized by and for them.

One trust this bill will hurt, but the exception proves the rule. For this is a trust so outrageous, so clearly created by a duty levied for the purpose of enabling it to pocket millions, that the committee could hardly ignore it. That is the sugar trust. For its special benefit the McKinley bill, which properly made raw sugar free of duty, imposed a tax of half a cent a pound on refined sugar, a tax that yields to the Government some $80,000 a year and to the Havemeyers and Spreckels over $20,000,000. What does the committee do? Abolish this tax? Deprive the sugar trust of $20,000,000 a year these hard times? No; it cuts the tax in half, and leaves the trust only the power to tax the people $10,000,000. Could the committee have more forcibly emphasized its tenderness to trusts if it had left intact to the Havemeyers and Spreckels the full amount of the McKinley gift to them?

The only reason I have heard given why the bill reported by the committee should not have made refined sugar free is that the whole force and power of the sugar trust would then have been exerted against the bill. And this fear of irritating the trusts seems to run through the bill. I can see no trust that it has struck at, or at all injured, except this sugar trust. The nominal reductions made on many articles still leave so high a duty as to close our market to foreign importations and secure to combinations of American manufacturers as full power to squeeze the American consumer as they have under the present tariff. The whisky trust and the steel rail trust, the cordage trust and the bicycle trust, the lead trust and the starch trust—in short, the whole brood of vampires which rob the people through the agency of the Government by means of the tariff are left free to pluck the tariff-bound American consumer. He has no lobby to represent him; he has only his Congressman, and from the way some of these Congressmen are pleading for an increase of duty on special articles I must confess that from my standpoint some of these consumers are very poorly represented. [Laughter.]

Take steel rails, of which I happen to know something, as I am a manufacturer of steel rails. I appeal to the Democrats of the House to join me in putting steel rails on the free list. The present duty on steel rails is $13.44 per ton, which is estimated to be equivalent to 50.44 per cent ad valorem. The committee have reduced this to 25 per cent. This seems like a great reduction. But it is only nominal, for 25 per cent is all the steel rail trust want. It is as good to them as 1,000 per cent, for it is practically a prohibitory duty.

Steel can be made here as cheaply as anywhere else in the world, and would not now be imported, save in exceptional cases, even if there were no duty; while the tendency of invention and improvement is in favor of the United States as against Europe. The steel made into rails in this country is from native ore. What pig metal, billets, and blooms are imported are used entirely in other iron and steel manufactures. Now it costs less than $2 a ton to make steel rails from blooms, including straightening and punching. On to-day's market steel blooms are selling at less than $17; steel rails should therefore not bring over $19. They did fall nearly to that price a few weeks ago, during a temporary break in the steel rail pool. But that pool was quickly reorganized, and the price of steel rails was put up and is now maintained at $24 a ton; so that by virtue of the duty which keeps out foreign rails, the pool is compelling the users of steel rails to pay them 25 per cent more than a fair price.

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman speak now from the attitude of a steel rail manufacturer?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I do. Our mill makes about one-thirtieth of all that are produced in the United States.

This new steel rail pool is composed of seven manufacturers, headed by Carnegie, who absolutely control the product of more than one-half of the rolled steel produced in the United States, and who have combined together to pay other large manufacturers heavy annual sums to close their works, discharge their men, and make no steel.

Now, observe, the 25 per cent duty of the committee's bill is just as good to the steel rail pool as the greater nominal duty of the existing law, and will enable the pool to keep the price up to the highest point that they deem safe. For, with a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem, steel rails can not be imported from Europe and sold in competition with the pool at $24 a ton, the highest price it now chooses to ask. So that the nominal reduction made by the committee is actually no reduction at all. It will not add 1 cent to the income of the Government. It will not reduce 1 cent the price of steel to American users of steel rails, and it will not diminish by 1 cent the profits of the Carnegie pool. Hence Carnegie's satisfaction, expressed the other day, when about to sail. It is true that if the proposed reduction had come earlier it would have been of some benefit to the American consumer, for the present duty of $13.44 a ton enabled the steel-rail pool up to a recent time to keep the price of steel rails higher still. But a greater internal competition, caused by reductions in the cost of production, has of itself compelled them to come down to $24 a ton, and a duty of 25 per cent will enable them to maintain that price as snugly as does the McKinley law.

Mr. DALZELL. Is the gentleman a party to the steel rail trust?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I am not; but whether I am or not would make no difference. Outside of this Hall, as a steel manufacturer, I might be perfectly willing to enter a trust, but I will not defend trusts here. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. I want to ask the gentleman whether he does not manufacture steel rails under the protection of one hundred and two patents taken out in the name of Arthur J. Moxham?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I am very glad the gentleman gives me an opportunity to answer that question. I could not have brought the matter in this debate otherwise. Our steel rails are not protected by a single patent. We had at one time several patents covering steel rails. Upon two of them the courts, very wisely I think, decided against us; and the others relate to sections that have gone out of fashion. If steel rails were put on the free list to-morrow, we would be open to the competition of the world upon every pattern we make.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not want to intrude upon the gentleman, but if he will allow me I would like to ask another question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Go on.

Mr. DALZELL. Is not Arthur J. Moxham president of your company?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. He is.

Mr. DALZELL. Has not Mr. Arthur J. Moxham one hundred and two patents covering the manufacture of steel rails and various appliances in connection with steel rails?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I think the gentleman underestimates the number of patents that Mr. Moxham has taken out. I think they number nearer two hundred. Not one of these on the process of manufacturing rails has been taken out abroad, and consequently would not interfere with the making of rails in England or Germany, and so could not interfere with English or German manufacturers in bringing into this country rails made in competition with us. I will repeat, that two concerns in this country infringed on several patents that we thought we had on rails and in the infringement suit we were beaten—I think rightly.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, will the gentleman answer another question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. Is not the gentleman paying his workmen to-day in scrip?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I will answer that question and as many more as you may ask. In Johnstown, where our mill is located, we have been paying for years in wages 30 or 40 cents a day more than our neighbors. I do not say this with the view of arousing any sympathy or claiming any credit. We did it not because we loved our men better than others loved theirs, but for the plain business reason that it paid us to do this. We had the pick of the men. To-day we are paying for common labor $1.50 a day, while our neighbor, the Cambria Iron Company, member of the steel-rail pool, is paying 85 cents a day. We do this because we believe that we get a better return by paying $1.50 a day than we would if we paid 85 cents.

Now, we are not paying our men in "scrip." During this panic we found that our customers, the street railroad men, had plenty of bonds, but no money. After consultation with the Cambria Iron Company and others, from whom we bought some of our materials, we agreed to take our pay in bonds. We then called our men together and said, "We have this opportunity to make some rails by taking our pay in bonds. We will do this if you will take two-thirds of your pay in the same thing we are paid in, and we will pay you one-third in cash. Will you go on this way, or shall we shut down?" Our men, after we had withdrawn from the meeting, decided unanimously that they would like to go on at the old rate of wages, taking one-third of their pay in money and the other two-thirds in that form in which we took all of our pay, namely, in bonds. [Applause, and cries of "Good!" on the Democratic side.] As a result of this arrangement we have issued to our men some twenty or thirty thousand dollars of what you call "scrip," but what is really the evidence of their interest in these bonds. The first series of these certificates has already been redeemed at par. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether that scrip is not to-day at a discount at Johnstown?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. That can not be possible, because the first series was redeemed to-day at par.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman a question. Does he deny the existence of the steel rail pool?

Mr. DALZELL. I do deny the existence of a steel rail trust.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Well, you make no quibble on the word "trust," or "pool?"

Mr. DALZELL. There was a combination between the steel rail manufacturers. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Go on, I will wait for you.

Mr. DALZELL. There was a combination between certain steel rail men, which was broken up by the refusal of a large number of firms to go into it, and it fell of its own weight. There was no condition in it for keeping up prices, and as a matter of fact the prices continued to fall from the time of the formation of the trust until its termination. The prices of rails steadily fell all the time; and in addition to that——

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Go on.

Mr. DALZELL. A large proportion of the steel rail mills to-day are in the hands of receivers. The gentleman knows that to be a fact.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. But you deny that there is a pool?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Well, here is a copy of a contract with the Maryland Steel Company, which proves its existence. (See Exhibit A at close of remarks.) [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, in the Iron Age, the official organ of the steel producers, in the issue of November 16, 1893, page 880, you will find a synopsis of the agreement forming the old steel rail pool. At Baltimore the other day, on the 22d day of November to be exact, in the circuit court room No. 2, there was a petition presented by the Maryland Steel Company, asking the privilege of selling 300,000 tons of steel rails at $25 a ton to one Robert F. Kennedy. The contract was presented in legal form. Here is a copy (Exhibit A, above referred to), which anybody can inspect for himself. It has a condition that in case Kennedy fails to take the rails each month he shall pay a dollar a ton, or about a thousand dollars a day, as a forfeit. This is the real point in the contract, and shows the existence of the pool. It is in reality not a contract for making rails, but a contract not to make rails.

Now, I have been endeavoring to discover who this Mr. Kennedy is. I find he is a large stockholder, director, and member of the executive board of the Cambria Iron Company, a rival concern to the Maryland Steel Company. He is also secretary of the board of control of the present steel rail pool, which went into existence about the 22d of November last. Mr. Kennedy, the secretary of this pool, makes a contract with a rival concern at Sparrow's Point to pay them about $1,000 a day to close up their mill and make no steel. The effect of retaining a duty of 25 per cent on steel rails, as the committee propose, will be to perpetuate the pool. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This Sparrow's Point mill, I understand, is in the district represented by my friend, Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. He should feel some interest in a contract which would discharge the workmen in his district.

But that is not all. At Steelton the Pennsylvania Steel Company, really the same concern as the Sparrow's Point establishment, get from the pool $80,000 a year to stop making steel rails above 50 pounds to the yard.

As to the breaking of the pool, it seems that the Maryland Steel Company was not considered very reliable by the other members of the pool, who suspected that it was underselling the pool rate, which last spring was $29; therefore Mr. Carnegie broke the price and carried it down to about $21.80. This went on but a short time, and then the new and present pool was organized.

Mr. DALZELL. I am not prepared to deny the statement the gentleman makes, for I have no personal knowledge of the facts, and am therefore bound to accept his statement. But if that be true, I want to say to him that I reprobate trusts just as much as he does, and will coöperate with him in any proper way for their suppression.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I shall be glad to have the coöperation of the gentleman. As far as I am personally concerned I am a thoroughgoing monopolist [laughter], and would be willing, outside of this Hall, to take advantage of any of the bad laws that you put upon the statute books; but I will not defend them here. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Structural iron and steel have been treated in the same way as rails. A 35 per cent duty has been left on them, which is more than enough to permit the steel pool, of which again the Carnegie concern is the leading member, to compel American builders to pay them the highest price they could safely ask if the importation of structural steel and iron were absolutely prohibited. It is but mockery to call such changes in the tariff reductions. So with the lowering of the duty on bicycles from 45 per cent to 35 per cent. This lower rate will suffice to keep out foreign bicycles, except for those to whom price is no object, and will enable the bicycle trusts or pool to continue to deprive hundreds of thousands of American boys of the opportunity to avail themselves of an innocent, invigorating, and useful amusement.

From the standpoint of a free trader, or perhaps even from that of a tariff-for revenue man, the Wilson bill is some improvement on the McKinley bill. But it is a very small one. The committee have not even been consistent in striking out specific duties, those devices for compelling the poor to pay more than the rich, and they have slavishly copied many of the tricks and devices which interested parties had put into the McKinley bill, in some cases, doubtless, without the knowledge of the author himself. Such, for instance, is the little trick about the rebinding of books, which was shorn of its effects in the McKinley bill by the decision of our courts. It appears again in the Wilson bill, so fixed as to pass the courts. Governor McKinley in a recent speech in Ohio denounced free traders as theorists and tariff tinkers who had got their knowledge out of books. No wonder he wanted to tax books. But what could have induced the scholarly chairman of our Ways and Means Committee, a Democrat and a book lover, to not merely continue the odious McKinley tax on books, but to make it worse, so that under the provisions of his bill a man who has a few stitches put in the binding of an old book may be taxed at the rate of a dollar and a quarter on a five-dollar book that he might otherwise import for nothing.

But it is useless now to take up the time of the House with details. I propose at the proper time to offer some amendments to the bill, in the effort to get some of the protection out of it and some real reduction of taxes into it. As I have said, I will vote for this bill so long as a shred of reduction is left in it; but I object to its whole spirit, to the timidity and cowardice that breathes through it, to its tenderness with trusts, and its reluctance to reduce protection.

Mr. Chairman, the concession that there can be any vested right in the privilege of taxing the many for the benefit of the few, and that those who have profited by robbing the people must not be shorn of their unjust power too quickly, is a denial of the first principle of Democracy. The admission that there could be any injury to the country were we to abolish protection too quickly is the admission of the Republican charge that the mere talk of reforming the tariff has already brought disaster. Either protection is good for the country or it is bad. If it is good, we can not have too much of it. If it is bad, we can not cut it off too quickly or too entirely.

To admit that there is any good reason for keeping up one tariff tax other than that of raising revenue; to admit that there is any special business or interest entitled to consideration in reducing taxes, is to stultify the Democratic position; it is to admit that we are wrong in attempting to reduce the tariff at all.

This is the illogical position in which the committee have put themselves. They have made a logical and political mistake in listening to the pleas of the beneficiaries of protection, and instead of the simple, clear-cut measure they might have proposed had they tried only to carry out the Democratic platform, they have been worrying themselves with the attempt to discover what reductions could be made with the least harm to private interests.

Can you stamp out fever without lessening the profits of doctors, nurses, and undertakers? Can you stop robbery without withdrawing the hand of the robber from the pockets of the robbed? The committee ought not to have listened to the advice to deal carefully and tenderly with protected interests, and we ought not to. We should not have begun the fight against protection unless we were ready to carry it to the end. The Republican way of making a tariff is simple. It is to impose on the people whatever tax is asked for by any one who says such a tax would benefit him. The true Democratic way of amending a Republican tariff is equally simple. It is to abolish every tax any private interest wants to maintain. For where private interests object to the remission of a tax, it is certain that the Government is not getting all that that tax costs the people.

That you can injure industry and hurt labor by abolishing tariff taxes too quickly and too completely, I deny. You will injure monopoly and hurt trusts; but you will stimulate industry and give labor relief. Take the business in which I am interested. If you put steel rails on the free list, as I intend to move, you will not shut up mills; on the contrary, you will open them, for the steel-rail pool can then no longer, out of the extra profits the tariff gives it, afford to pay for keeping mills idle. There will be greater activity and a greater demand for labor in the making of rails. And so with structural steel. But the benefit will not end there. The men engaged in making steel rails and structural steel are but a handful compared with those engaged in laying rails and erecting buildings and bridges, and even they are few, compared with the men such erections set at work. You will lessen the profits of some of us steel manufacturers, but you will stimulate industry, give idle labor a chance for employment, and so tend to raise wages.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman ought to make it clear as to the cost of steel rails as long as he has entered into that subject. I understand the gentleman to say that the raw material for the steel rails costs $16 a ton and that it costs $2 a ton to make steel rails. Does the gentleman include in that the interest, wear and tear, repairs on plant, etc., or is it simply what it costs in the mill after the mill was constructed to make the rails?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. The gentleman has not quoted me quite correctly.

Mr. WALKER. I did not intend to misquote you.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I know that. What I said was that the price of blooms was $16.50. In the process of manufacturing steel rails, the bloom is the product immediately preceding the finished rail, and from the bloom to the rail it costs $2 a ton. That includes all the items the gentleman names. But it does not cost Mr. Carnegie that much, because he does not start with the bloom. You protectionists talk about the reduction in the price of steel rails from $100 a ton down to the present price. That was not due to the tariff, but to the inventions of such men as Bessemer and the inventors who followed him, which enable the manufacturer to day to start with the ore and coke in the blast furnace, and with one heat run it through into the converter, and from there to the ingot, and from there to the bloom, and finish it into a steel rail without stopping once to reheat. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WALKER. Do you know how many mills there are in the world that are making steel rails substantially in the same manner as the Carnegie works are making them?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I suppose in this country there are but two. There were three, but one is now closed by the pool. That is the Sparrow's Point Mill I have spoken of. The Cambria Iron Company are changing their mill; and since you have brought me into this discussion, I will say that we are about to change our mill, and will do it whether you put steel rails on the free list or not. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WALKER. I still want an answer, if it is within the gentleman's knowledge, how many mills there are in the world that are making steel rails substantially as Mr. Carnegie is making them?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I think probably he has the best mill in the world, but there are six or eight——

Mr. WALKER. How many would there have been if it had not been for protection? This industry has had the benefit of protection, and under protection Mr. Carnegie has advanced the manufacture of steel rails in all the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Do you believe that is the result of protection?

Mr. WALKER. Yes; I believe it as much as that you and I are talking.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Do you believe that our custom-houses made the inventions? Why, Bill Jones made most of the inventions for Carnegie; and if Bill Jones were living to-day he would repudiate your idea. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WALKER. I hope the gentleman will allow me one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. WALKER. I will ask the gentleman whether Bill Jones had the capital to develop his patents, or whether the capital of Mr. Carnegie did not develop and make available, in cheapening the cost of steel rails, the patents of Bill Jones. Can not he prove that by Bill Jones?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Bill Jones was no myth. He was one of nature's noblemen. Bill Jones was one of the men who stood side by side with us in relieving the people after the Johnstown flood, and he helped in that when rich men were shirking. [Applause.] Bill Jones furnished the brains and Carnegie furnished the money that made Carnegie's mill what it is to-day. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, what is true of steel is true of all industries. If we could abolish the whole tariff on the 1st of February I do not believe there is a single manufacturing industry that would close. On the contrary, all that were not purely exotics, kept alive by taxes, would be greatly stimulated. Foreigners would want more of our products, and foreign markets would be open to our goods. Wheat would bring more to the grower, and labor would bring more to the laborer, and the masses of our people would want and could pay for more manufactured goods. You can not depress industry and impoverish labor by remitting taxes; that is done by imposing taxes.

Manufactures need no protection. It was not manufacturers who settled this country, and were the pioneers of its Western growth. It was farmers. Import duties on what is received in exchange for farm products shipped abroad are equivalent to export duties on those products. If you want to help manufactures repeal them. Let the farmers be prosperous and manufactures will thrive. It was not the tariff that made Cleveland and Toledo and Cincinnati and St. Louis and Chicago manufacturing centers. No seaboard tariff could protect them. It was the growth of the western agricultural population.

Of all the nonsense talked against the reduction of tariff taxes, the claim that they benefit the workingman is most transparent. The effect of these taxes is to increase the price of everything that the workingman sells his labor for, since the money he gets is only the medium with which he obtains what is the real object of his labor. Granted, which is only true in a comparatively few cases, that such taxes increase the profits of his employer. Do employers pay larger wages when they get larger profits? I do not [laughter], and even philanthropists do not.

Take Mr. Andrew Carnegie, who gives like a prince out of the millions the tariff has enabled him to take from his fellow-citizens. He gives like a prince from his more than princely income, but he does not raise wages unless he has to. Before he started for Jerusalem a few days ago, he utilized the tariff to reestablish the steel-rail pool and pay other manufacturers to shut up their works and throw their men out of employment; then a general cut in wages was made in all his great establishments; and then he announced himself ready to give as much as $5,000 a day to feed the unemployed in Pittsburg—a place that, if there were any truth in the theory that protection is good for labor, ought to be a very paradise for workingmen. Now, which is best for labor, plenty of charity soup-houses or plenty of employment? There is the question between protection and free trade. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why should we fear free trade? Why should we talk of it as some deadly drug of unknown power that can only be introduced slowly into the social system? Is not this the greatest free-trade country in the world? If a foreign enemy were to cut the railroads between Pennsylvania and New York, or blockade the lake trade between Ohio and Michigan, would we listen to those who told us that we must be careful not to reopen freedom of trade too quickly.

All this talk about injuring industries and depriving workingmen of employment by reducing taxes too fast is protectionist talk, and the true place for the man who believes it is in the Republican party. We heard it all before election, and if we did not believe it then, why should we believe it now? The majority of American voters did not believe it then, or Mr. Cleveland would not be in the White House, and we would not have a majority here.

Mr. Chairman, there is no use in my wasting effort on gentlemen like the signers of the minority report who still think a tariff an invention for taxing foreigners, and that the way to raise wages is to let employers impose what taxes they want to. But I wish to address myself directly to my fellow Democrats.

I believe the result of the next election hangs on the action of this House in this matter. We Democrats were sent here as the result of what the committee have truly styled the "fullest and most thorough debate ever given by any people to their fiscal policy." We met the Republicans on this tariff question and defeated them. All that the trusts and rings and protected interests could do against us was done, but we triumphed so overwhelmingly that for the moment the Republican party seemed to be destroyed. What would be the result of a similar election to-morrow? The November elections have told us we would be beaten out of sight. And the reason of this is that we have done nothing to redeem our pledges or shown any disposition to do so.

The time may have passed very pleasantly with us, meditating on what we should do after awhile, and listening to gentlemen who tell us how dreadful it would be if we did not keep on paying the bounties and maintaining the war ships and supporting all the useless officials the Republicans saddled us with, and how even still more dreadful it would be if we were too quick in cutting off Republican taxation, and were to happen to cut off more than the people who have to pay it like. But with wheat at 50 cents a bushel and soup-houses in every city, the masses who feel the burden are in no mood for delay. It is only a matter of months now when the elections will be on again. If we do not want to be politically swamped we must act quickly and act strongly.

I am far from asserting that the bottom cause of the present distress is the tariff. It is something greater than that—it is the monopolization of land, the natural opportunity of all employment, the natural prerequisite of all wealth, and such distress must recur again until we come to the only true mode of raising revenue, the only full free trade—the single tax. But a quick and sharp reduction of taxation and breaking down of the trusts and monopolies that have grown up from the Republican tariff will give large present relief and start again the wheels of industry. The people who elected us demand some measure of relief; not something cautious and slow, but something quick and large. Our danger is not in reducing taxes too far and fast; it is in not reducing them far enough and fast enough. It is the part of political sagacity for us to cut off taxes so quickly as to make the head of every trust in the country swim.

It is bad politics to ignore the friends who voted for you in order to please enemies who opposed you. That is what the majority of the committee have done in reporting such a protectionist bill. What have they gained by their "moderation"? Simply the sneers of the minority. Every Republican member will oppose their bill; every Republican paper will denounce it; every ring and trust will fight it just as strongly, just as bitterly, just as persistently as they would oppose the bill that I would like to introduce. That bill would be short and simple. It would read:

SEC. 1. All import duties and corresponding internal-revenue duties are hereby abolished, and all officials engaged in collecting such duties are hereby discharged.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to sell all custom-houses and revenue cutters, and pay the proceeds into the Treasury.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect immediately.

Such a bill would excite no more protectionist opposition than this poor, timid, little Wilson bill will. But it would not be sneered at, and it would arouse a mighty support, that this bill can not get.

Such a bill as that I do not hope for now, but if we want to see another Democratic victory let us stand up to the platform of our party, and retaining what free list the committee have proposed, add to it such things as steel rails and bicycles, and strike out all the protection they have filled into the bill.

Mr. Chairman, it is political folly for us to be timid about cutting down protection. The men who beseech Congress not to reduce duties will only laugh at our concessions and hate us as much for a reduction of 1 per cent as for that of 100 per cent. They represent the class we defeated in 1892. We fought them like lions on the stump and defeated them then. Why should we like lambs listen to their appeals for a longer time to rob our constituents, in order to put part of the money in the next Republican election fund, as they surely will do? It is political folly for us to be timid about cutting down protection. If we do not do that so quickly and decidedly as to give the masses relief no Democrat will again for many a day fill the Speaker's chair or occupy the White House. We will be beaten, and will deserve to be beaten.

Mr. Cleveland missed the golden opportunity to give quick response to the popular will by not calling us together to abolish protection on the day of his inauguration. The serious question is whether it can now be done in time to have effect before the next election. If it can not, the Democratic party will lose one branch of Congress if not two, and will begin its travels into the wilderness again, to stay there, I hope, till a party having the courage of Democratic conviction arises.

In the timid course we have hitherto pursued, and that is outlined in this bill, we are estranging the men who in every doubtful State and district hold the balance of power. One important body of these men, important in their growing numbers and more important in their intelligence and influence—the single-taxers—you can count on supporting you so long as they can not get a more radical party; for they support, not men nor parties, but a principle. Yet they dislike a whitewashed protectionist more than they do a thorough-going one, and will turn against a timid Democracy the moment they can get a real Democrat to vote for. And there is a great class whom you can not count on—those who have no settled conviction on the tariff question, many of whom voted for you in 1892 because they felt a deep wrong somewhere and wanted a change.

Now, in hesitating to carry out the party's pledges, in admitting that we must go slow and easy in abolishing protection, and that disaster would follow if we cut away too much taxation, you are showing them that Democrats do not believe what the Democratic platform said, but do really believe what the Republican platform said. Can you wonder that, as the November election indicated these men will believe the Republicans—that the suffering and distress are, as they assert, the result of the Democratic victory, and the next change they seek will be to send us to private life?

I know that there are many Democrats here who are not in sympathy with the Democratic platform, and are at heart protectionists. The part of political wisdom for them is to go over to the Republican party where, in the struggle now beginning over economic issues, they really belong. But while they remain with the Democracy they must share its fate; and whether they may deem it politically wise or foolish for the Democracy to have begun this fight against protection, they must certainly see that the only safety now is in going forward.

But at the worst there are some of us who believe what we have professed, and to whom Democracy means nothing if it does not mean free trade. Let us at least stand together to cut the protectionism out of this bill. If we can not succeed, we can at least show our hands. There is political destruction in timidity. The only political safety is in courage. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman has given us the bill that he would like to enact, repealing all the present revenue laws; will he be kind enough now to give us also the brief bill he would put in their place to raise revenue for the support of the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Oh, yes. I would put the tax upon the monopolization of natural opportunies; upon land values irrespective of improvement—the values which are created by the community and which the community have the first right to. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know it is a long way from a protective tariff to the single tax, but I want to make the start. Of all the known methods of raising revenue the worst is a tariff, and of all tariffs the worst is a protective tariff.

The best of all taxes is the one I have indicated—the single tax. I will vote with you, gentlemen, on every step between the worst and the best. If, on the way, you want an income tax, I will vote for it, though I do not like income taxes. But any tax on what men have is better than a tax on what men need. [Applause.] Any tax on wealth in any form is better than a tax on consumption in any form. I am far from charging that our present difficulties—this great depression through which we are passing—is due to the acts of either political party. I do not believe that the tariff cuts anything like the figure in this distress that people generally give it credit for.

We have to look further than that to find the cause, for there is no civilized country on the globe, except perhaps New Zealand, where the single tax has been begun, that is not suffering at this time from depression. We must look further than tariffs. But the measure I would propose in answer to the gentleman from Illinois would go to the heart of this world-wide question, would solve the labor problem—it is the single tax. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

EXHIBIT A.

1.

This agreement, made this 21st day of November, A. D. 1893, by and between Robert F. Kennedy, party of the first part, and F. W. Wood, receiver of the Maryland Steel Company, party of the second part, witnesseth:

Whereas the said Robert F. Kennedy, party of the first part, is desirous of purchasing of the said F. W. Wood, receiver, party of the second part, 300,000 tons of first quality railway bars of present standard sections, none of which shall weigh less than 50 pounds to the yard and of the weights and patterns as the said party of the first part shall hereafter, from time to time, during the continuance of this contract determine, and the said F. W. Wood, receiver, party of the second part, is desirous of selling the same to the said Robert F. Kennedy, party of the first part.

Now, in consideration of the premises and a further consideration of $1, in hand paid by each of the parties hereto, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, it is hereby agreed as follows:

First. That the said Robert F. Kennedy, party of the first part, hereby purchases of the said F. W. Wood, receiver, party of the second part, and the said F. W. Wood, receiver, party of the second part, hereby sells to the said Robert F. Kennedy, party of the first part, the said 300,000 tons of first quality (their present standard sections) the railway bars of 50 pounds to the yard and upwards, at the price or sum of $25 per ton (2,240 pounds) upon the following terms and conditions:

Second. The deliveries of the said railway bars shall be in twelve equal monthly portions of 25,000 each, and said delivery shall commence in January, 1894, and continue in like monthly portions of 25,000 tons per month till the completion of this contract. The said Robert F. Kennedy agrees to pay for the said monthly shipments or portions of 25,000 tons at the rate of $25 per ton, as follows: One-half of said price to be paid in advance when and as he shall furnish specifications and shipping directions for said bars, and the remaining one-half of said price upon the 10th day of the month next succeeding the month in which said bars are delivered.

Third. The said Robert F. Kennedy, party of the first part, shall on or before the 1st day of December, A. D. 1893, and on or before the first day of each succeeding month, up to and including November 1, 1894, furnish the said F. W. Wood, receiver, party of the second part, with written specifications and shipping directions for the 25,000 tons of railway bars that is to be furnished under this contract during the month next succeeding the month on which such notice shall be given (it being the intention that the party of the second part shall have at least one month's notice of the specifications, etc., on each month's shipments previous to the month in which delivery is to be made) and in case the said Robert F. Kennedy, party of the first part, shall neglect or fail to furnish such specifications and shipping directions as aforesaid, on or before the first day of the respective months, as herein specified, then, in every such case, this contract shall be considered as abrogated in so far as it relates to the purchase and sale of 25,000 tons of railway bars purchased and sold for delivery in the month next ensuing the month in which notice should have been given, as aforesaid, on the first day thereof. It being understood that this default of notice shall apply to the whole 25,000 tons which is to be delivered in any month and in every case of the failure by the said Robert F. Kennedy, party of the first part, to give to the party of the second part the notice of specifications and shipping directions as hereinbefore provided, then the said Robert F. Kennedy, party of the first part, shall be considered in default of his contract for the month for which he so fails and on the tenth day of the month next ensuing the month for which he so fails to give notice of specifications, etc., as aforesaid, he, the said Robert F. Kennedy, party of the first part, shall pay to the said F. W. Wood, receiver, party of the second part, the sum of $1 per ton upon the 25,000 tons of railway bars on which he, the said Robert F. Kennedy, party of the first part, shall be in default, as aforesaid, and upon the payment of the said $1 for each ton of railway bars so in default, then this contract shall be construed as having been fully carried out by both the parties hereto up to the last day of the month (and including the same) for which settlement and penalty for default has been made.

It is to be understood, however, that if the said Robert F. Kennedy, party of the first part, shall fail to make payment on the 10th day of the month next ensuing the month for which he has failed to give notice of specifications, etc., as aforesaid, or if he shall fail to make payment on the 10th day of the month succeeding the month in which any deliveries shall be made of railway bars under the terms of this contract, then in such case the said F. W. Wood, receiver, party of the second part, shall have the right to cancel this contract, and upon his written notice given by the said party of the second part, to the party of the first part, of his, the said F. W. Wood, receiver, party of the second part, election to so cancel this contract by reason of the failure of the party of the first part to comply with these conditions, this contract shall determine, cease, and end, and immediately thereupon shall be due and payable by the said party of the first part, to the party of the second part, a penalty equal to $25,000 per month for each and every month intervening between the month for which the last settlement had been made under this contract and the month of January, 1895, which penalty shall at once be collectable.

Fourth. In consideration of the payment herein provided to be made the party of the second part hereby agrees not to manufacture, during the continuance of this contract, any railway bars of 50 pounds weight to the yard and upwards, except such as he manufactures under this contract for the party of the first part.

Fifth. If the said party of the first part shall well and truly pay to the said party of the second part the contract price of $25 per ton for all railway bars delivered in accordance with his specifications and shipping directions, or shall pay all penalties that may or shall accrue under this contract, for default in not furnishing specifications and shipping directions, then in such case all further liability under this contract shall cease and end.

Sixth. This agreement shall be binding upon the executors, administrators, successors, or assigns of the parties hereto.

In witness whereof the said parties hereto have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year aforesaid.

Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of—

——— ———. [SEAL.]
——— ———. [SEAL.]

2.

EARNSHAW VS. THE MARYLAND STEEL COMPANY.

In circuit court No. 2 of Baltimore City.

To the honorable the judge of circuit court No. 2 of Baltimore City:

The petition of Frederick W. Wood, receiver in the above cause, respectfully shows:

I. That he has been offered the contract filed herewith, by which said contract the Maryland Steel Company would dispose of 300,000 tons of steel rails during the year 1894, in monthly deliveries of 25,000 tons, at the price of $25 per ton, delivered free on board at Sparrows Point.

II. That there would be a profit on said contract much greater than in any other manner the works for the manufacture of steel rails could be carried on by the plant of the Maryland Steel Company.

III. That it would be greatly for the interest of all parties of the Maryland Steel Company, either as creditors or as stockholders, that the said contract should be entered into by your petitioner, and he prays your honor to pass an order in the premises authorizing your petitioner to execute said contract.

And as, etc.

J. ALEXANDER PRESTON,
Attorney for Petitioner.

FREDERICK W. WOOD, Receiver.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, a justice of the peace of said State in and for said city, this 22d day of November, 1893.

GEORGE MCCAFFRAY,
Justice of Peace.

Ordered by the court, this 22d day of November, 1893, that Frederick W. Wood, receiver of the Maryland Steel Company, be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to execute the contract filed herewith as part of this petition, and marked "Exhibit R. F. K."

PERE L. WICKES.

Mr. DALZELL was recognized.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] proceeds, Mr. Chairman, I understand that he may desire a little more time than would be accorded to him under the arrangement, and I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to speak without limit.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, the election of 1892, which resulted in the ascendency in all branches of the Government of the Democratic party, worked a political revolution in this country. It stripped of power the party whose rule has been coincident with the most brilliant chapter in our history, and to whose liberal and progressive policy we owe the most beneficent results that have been achieved in the onward march of the Republic.

On the other hand it clothed with authority a political party that during this generation has known nothing of the responsibilities and has had none of the experiences of governing, and whose retirement from power a third of a century ago is inseperably connected with the attempted overthrow of the Constitution and dismemberment of the Union, in order to build an empire upon the corner-stones of slavery and free trade. In the light of recent and existing events it is impossible of belief that this revolution was the result of careful thought and deliberation on the part of the American people.

No sooner had the smoke of partisan conflict risen, and the result of their action been revealed to them, than a crisis ensued, amongst the most appalling in our economic history. All our industries suffered immediate collapse, trade, foreign and domestic, became paralyzed, the ghost of distrust stalked threatening in all the avenues of commerce, and fear fell on all men, rich and poor alike. As a people we walk to-day in the valley of desolation.

Furnace fires have gone out, and fires upon humble hearthstones as well, while throughout all our borders factory and workshop and the various implements and appliances of industry remain idle and unused. Hungry and homeless men and women and children, hopeless of the future, shivering amid the blasts of winter, appeal to a benevolence that taxed to its uttermost can not make satisfactory answer. Worse even than that, if possible, the desperation of the unemployed nerves some of them to the open advocacy of political doctrines at war with the canons of civil freedom, threatening the stability of social order, and presenting problems whose solution call for all the resources of a wise, conservative, and patriotic statesmanship.

DEMOCRATIC INCOMPETENCE.

To these complications that disturb our peace and make us fearful of the future, must be added the fact that the doubts engendered by Democratic accession to power have been justified and aggravated by experience of Democratic rule. In the few months that the dominant party has held the reins of Government it has proved itself conspicuously incompetent to deal with a single important question presented by the responsibilities of civil administration. The Executive, with an ignorance of the limitations of his office, inexcusable in an intelligent American citizen, has usurped the functions of Congress, not to meet any exigency or for any justifiable end, but to undertake, and miserably fail in, a foreign policy which would be grotesque if it were not contemptible. [Applause on the Republican side.]

A member of his Cabinet, trained in an environment which, whatever his character may be, necessarily disqualified him for any position that has to deal with the men who saved his country, has demonstrated how unfair the policy of the Democratic party can be in its hostility to the Union soldier.

This House has been organized on the basis of antebellum days, so that the section of country which is least familiar with American industries and enterprise dominates the policy of the nation, while it doles out as of yore to its servile Northern contingent the crumbs that fall from the party table. [Applause.]

In this deplorable condition of things, clouds and darkness all around us, what do those who rule our destinies propose by way of relief?

AN INFAMOUS BILL.

A tariff bill that if enacted, I predict posterity will pronounce the most infamous legislative crime of our history. Instead of relief it brings aggravation. To the manufacturer whose idle capital is bringing him no returns, whose plant disuse is depreciating, and whose income has been sadly narrowed or entirely cut off, it offers the deceptive lure of free raw materials and the ignis fatuus of the world's markets, while it strips him of the ability to compete in any market and be just to his employés. To the farmer it offers instead of protection an enlarged competition from abroad in the products of his farm; instead of a vast and growing home market, a market abroad in which his increased surplus can not but degrade prices.

To the cry of the laboring man clamoring for work at American wage rates, to the end that he, his wife and his children shall live like Americans, its brutal answer is, lower wages or war with your employer. And for the empty American Treasury, depleted beyond the power to meet current expenses, what relief? Oh, shame to tell it! further depletion by reducing national revenues by from seventy to one hundred million dollars per annum. To be made up how? By an issue of bonds in time of peace; by laying on the backs of the American people, now of all times least able to bear them, direct taxes never heretofore in all our experience sought to be justified save amid the roar of cannon and the clash of arms.

UNNECESSARY: ADEQUACY AND BENEFICENCE OF EXISTING LAW.

If this bill, instead of being a monstrosity, were wise in its provisions, its enactment at this time would be unwise. Under the most favorable circumstances, even in prosperous times, a revision of our tariff laws inevitably unsettles business, and requires a general readjustment to meet new conditions.

Why, then, I ask, in the present exigency, in this period of distress and uncertainty, induce further complications by change of our revenue system? Is it the part of wise statesmanship to ignore its surroundings and blindly push to legislation in the abstract, merely to exploit a theory; or should it in imitation of a beneficent power "temper the wind to the shorn lamb"?

Does any necessity exist for the enactment of the law proposed? I answer emphatically, no. The existing tariff law meets all the demands of the Government and of the people, and in its relation to national prosperity has proved itself the wisest ever written upon our statute books. It has been maligned, abused, purposely misrepresented and misunderstood. But no intelligent man willing to give its operation honest examination will be misled into condemning it.

It has fully answered every object intended by its framers and justified in all particulars the wisdom of its enactment. The reason for its passage was a surplus in the Treasury. While other nations were seeking objects to tax, we were seeking subjects for exemption. So wisely were its schedules devised that our revenues were reduced so as adequately to meet our needs, but not beyond the limit of safety. Its opponents predicted that it would ruin our foreign trade. Their predictions have been falsified. Under its operation our foreign trade has increased to enormous proportions—proportions never before dreamed of in the history of the nation.

While our imports in 1890 were $789,310,409, they were in 1891 $844,916,196, an increase of $55,605,787; and in 1892, $827,402,462, an increase over 1890 of $38,092,053.

While our exports in 1890 were $845,293,828, they were in 1891 $872,270,283, an increase of $26,976,455; and in 1892 they reached the enormous sum of $1,015,732,011, an increase over 1890 of $170,438,183. And with this immense trade our free list has been the largest in our experience. The percentage of free imports in 1891 was 54 per cent.

Under no previous tariff was any such proportion of free imports known. Under the tariff of 1824 our free imports amounted only to 5¼ per cent; under the tariff of 1833 only to 24¼ per cent; under the tariff of 1842 only to 20¼ per cent; under the low tariff of 1846 to but 12 per cent or thereabouts, and under the tariff of 1857 to only 18 per cent. Prior to the election of 1892, and the threat that it implied of tariff reduction, there had been fewer idle men, more work at remunerative wage rates, more happy homes, contented people, and better attended schools than were ever known in any previous period of our career as a people.

Under the fostering care of this wise law new industries have sprung up, enlarging the field for both capital and labor, substituting home for foreign goods, and pouring into the channels of our own trade, to the enrichment of our own people, millions of money that theretofore had gone abroad, to the enrichment of other peoples. I shall not go into this matter at length, but choose only for illustration a single example.

Had it no other monument the American tin-plate industry would alone forever proclaim the wisdom and beneficence of our existing tariff law. The establishment of that industry has multiplied the opportunies for thousands to enjoy the advantages belonging to the social conditions of our American life.

The production of American tin plates in the first quarter of the establishment of the industry ending September 30, 1891, was 826,922 pounds; in the quarter ending June 30, 1893, less than two years after, 39,543,587 pounds, or forty-eight times greater in that quarter than in the first. Has the industrial world ever known a more magnificent tribute to the beneficence of law than that?

And withal, under the provisions of this law prices to the consumer have been cheapened. Read the evidence given before the Ways and Means Committee in the two weeks so grudgingly given to the discussion of the industries of seventy millions of people. Capitalist and laborer, Democrat and Republican, even the importers, all agree to the proposition that prices have been lowered under the tariff act of 1890, while wages have been maintained.

Let me quote to you the testimony of an educated and intelligent English free trader traveling in this country. I refer to Mr. Lascelles Carr, editor of the Western Mail, published at Cardiff, Wales.

He says:

The more I see of this wonderful country and the further my inquiries reach, the more satisfied I am that it is the paradise of the workingman, and especially of the working woman. Wages are high and the cost of living comparatively low. The margin between the amount of money necessary for a bare subsistence and the ordinary wage rate is larger than anywhere else in the world. If a workingman and his wife and family were content here to live as they live in England, they could save money very rapidly. But they are not so content. Except in the matter of house accommodation their circumstances are in every respect better than are those of their English brethren; they eat better and more varied food; they dress better; they have at least as good means of education and other sources of intellectual and social recreation. They are free from any sense of the indignity of labor. Class distinctions are practically unknown.

In another letter, he says:

I have several times alluded to the condition of the workingman in this country. The further my inquiries extend the more convinced I become that the real truth of the matter is that in this country a workman earns nearly twice as much as he would in England, and the cost of his living, except in the matter of rent and clothing, is about the same. Even in the matter of clothing the difference is not great, except in so far as it is brought about by the general use of much better clothing by the artisan in this country than in England. As for the rate of wages prevailing here, the waiter at my table to-night told me he was an Englishman who had settled in America for ten years. His earnings, he said, were double what they were in the old country, and whereas his wife, a forewoman in the scarf department of Messrs. Morley, in London, earned 25*s.* a week, here in Philadelphia, in a similar capacity, she earned $10 (over 40*s.*) a week, and had all Saturday and one other afternoon in the week to herself. What nonsense to compare the condition of this family with that of an ordinary waiter in England, and say the Philadelphia man is worse off because he has to pay 5s. a week more rent! It is true he does pay an increased rent here, but what does that matter when, as a matter of fact, he lets off enough of his house to leave him rent free.

Mixing as I have done of late amongst all classes of Republican workmen and manufacturers; having witnessed the phenomenal prosperity alike of capital and labor; informed as I have been of the extent and strength of the enormous interests created by the American policy of protection, I can not help realizing the fact that those of our English people are living in a fool's paradise who believe that the result of the recent Democratic victory in this country, although based on the cry of tariff reform, will result in any measure that will open the markets of the United States to the manufactured goods of England or the continent of Europe. There is no American statesman living who dare precipitate such a national economic crisis. It would not be reform—it would be revolution.

Revolution, and so the chairman of the committee characterized this bill in his speech opening this debate.

But to continue, Mr. Carr further says:

I am, as you know, a convinced free trader. Protection is to me an economic heresy, the fraud and folly of which are capable of mathematical demonstration—demonstration as absolutely convincing as that by which the solution of a problem in Euclid is arrived at. And yet throughout the length and breadth of this vast continent one is almost daily brought face to face with solid, indisputable facts that seem to give the lie to the soundest and most universally accepted axioms of political economy.

Let me give you just one example. Under the shadow of a stringent protective tariff the manufacture of paper was commenced in the United States. Paper is still subject to a heavy import duty. According to our theories that ought to enhance its price to the consumer in this country. As a matter of fact the New York newspaper proprietors buy their "news" at a less price than that at which it could be supplied to them in London, and some of the paper mills in New Jersey are actually exporting paper to the old country. Unless it can be shown that this paper industry would have grown up without the aid of a protective tariff it is futile—nay, it is an impertinence—for an outsider to say that the Americans have acted unwisely in taxing themselves for a few years in order to establish in their midst a great industry, giving occupation to a great quantity of highly paid labor. And it seems to me that this set of facts and the arguments based on it apply to many of the other industries which are assuming such colossal proportions throughout the length and breadth of the land.

This gentleman called on the President of the United States. With respect to this call he relates, amongst other things, this incident:

When one of the newspaper correspondents told the President chaffingly that I had come from Wales to look for some of the tin-plate works which the Republican party declared to have been established under their protective tariff, he replied, "Well, Mr. Carr, when you do find them be sure and let me know their exact location, for we have been searching for these tin-plate works for some years now and have failed to find them."

If the President's Secretary of the Treasury had promptly made public the reports of the Government agent charged with the returns of this industry the ignorance of the President would not have been so dense and conspicuous. But there are none so blind as those who will not see. Let me illustrate.

I have a letter from a constituent of mine. He is an humble man who earns his bread in the sweat of his face. He writes me:

In the Transportation Building at the World's Fair, Chicago, there is an exhibit of fine harness from the factory of Woods & Son, St. Ives, Hunts, England, upon which I noticed a large show card reading, "These are duplicates of the harness made by our firm for Mr. Grover Cleveland, the President of the United States." It was impossible for me to read this card without a protest in behalf of American products and manufacturers, considering the above advertisement at our present crisis an insult to the American mechanics. Have we no hides or barks or tanneries, malleable iron foundries, silver-platers, or harness-makers in this country? I know that the President and the Democratic party have not been able to discover a tin-plate factory up to date, but there is no earthly excuse for them when it comes to leather and its products.

Any man chosen by the suffrages of the American people to be their Chief Magistrate who can not find as the product of American skill and American labor good enough harness for his horses, but must go to England therefor, would not be able to see an American tin-plate factory, though it covered an hundred acres of ground. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I shall not pursue this subject any further. I submit that, having regard to all the requirements of a tariff law in its relation to governmental revenue upon the one hand, and in its relation to national and individual prosperity on the other, the proposition must stand as established that no necessity exists for interference with our existing law.

If, then, I am right in saying that under present conditions it is unwise to pass this bill, and if my proposition is proven that no material governmental or popular interest calls for its passage, we are brought face to face with the inquiry: Upon what ground can its passage be asked for or justified?

PROTECTION CONSTITUTIONAL.

It is claimed by the Democratic majority that it came here by virtue of a demand upon the part of the American people that the doctrines of the Chicago platform of 1892 should be embodied in legislation, and that this bill meets that demand. Is that true?

The language of the Chicago platform on the subject of tariff is very explicit. It says:

We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties, except for the purpose of revenue only.

In the light of the majority's claim and of this party declaration, I propose now briefly to address myself to two questions:

First. Is protection unconstitutional?

Second. Does this bill propose a tariff for the purpose of revenue only?

One would suppose, in the light of our history, that the question as to the constitutional power of the Federal Government to levy duties for the protection of American interests was not an open one. Nothing short of the declaration by a great party in its national platform to the contrary would justify an argument on the subject. And in the limited time allowed here for debate I can not hope to do more than state, and briefly refer to, some of the propositions in support of the constitutionality of protection, and quote a few only out of the almost innumerable authorities upon the subject.

I submit the following propositions:

1. The American Union was founded originally to secure industrial protection.

2. The right to secure it was an original right in each of the individual States as inherent in those States as is the right of self-defense in the individual.

3. Without any intention to abrogate such right it was ceded to the General Government when the Union was formed.

4. The power to secure it is expressly included in the taxing clause of the Constitution.

5. It is just as expressly included in the power to regulate commerce.

6. Contemporaneous construction of the Constitution by its makers proves its existence.

7. A century and more of its exercise adds to the proof.

8. The opinions of all our statesmen, with scarcely an exception, from the beginning till now affirms it.

9. And so do the decisions of our highest tribunal, the Supreme Court of the United States.

We owe our national existence to the necessity of protection for our home industries. Long before any American of the eighteenth century had dreamed of an independent nation on this side of the Atlantic, the necessity for relief from the industrial thraldom of Great Britain had made itself apparent. The story of the American Revolution is primarily a story of revolt against industrial wrongs. Pursuit by the colonists of that simple economic law which induces a man to utilize his own, not to buy, beg, or borrow when he possesses, was forbidden by the English Parliament in the selfish interest of English products. English by blood, and heirs of English traditions, we come well by our protective policy. The long and brilliant story of British conquest and British wealth illustrates on every page persistent and vigorous protection to her home industries.

From 1699 forward, British legislation was directed to the stifling of native industries in the American colonies, and resulted at last in the American Revolution. We could not abide that we should not be allowed to develop our own resources and become our own manufacturers. I can not better sum up the whole matter than it is summed up in the words of Daniel Webster:

If we go back—

Said he—

to the history of the Constitution, and of the Convention which adopted it, we shall find that everywhere, when masses of men were assembled and the wants of the people were brought forth into prominence, the idea was held up that domestic industry could not prosper, manufactures and the mechanic arts could not advance, the condition of the common country could not be carried up to any considerable elevation, unless there should be one Government to lay one rate of duty upon imports throughout the Union, from New Hampshire to Georgia; regard to be had in laying this duty to the protection of American labor and industry.

I defy the man—

He continued—

in any degree conversant with history, in any degree acquainted with the annals of this country from 1787 to the adoption of the Constitution in 1789, to say that this was not a leading, I may almost say, the leading motive, South as well as North, for the formation of the new Government. Without that provision in the Constitution it could never have been adopted.

The demand for protection was the motive for the new constitution. Prior to its adoption the right of protection existed in and was exercised by the individual States. My own State of Pennsylvania, as early as 1785, passed a protective tariff act, and in the light of the experience of to-day there is wisdom to be found in its preamble. It says:

Whereas divers useful and beneficial arts and manufactures have been gradually introduced into Pennsylvania, and the same have at length risen to a very considerable extent and perfection, insomuch that during the late war between the United States of America and Great Britain, when the importation of European goods was much interrupted and often very difficult and uncertain, the artisans and mechanics of the State were able to supply, in the hours of need, not only large quantities of weapons and other implements, but also ammunition and clothing, without which the war could not have been carried on, whereby their oppressed country was greatly benefited and relieved.

SEC. 2. And whereas, although the fabrics and manufactures of Europe and other foreign parts, imported into this country in times of peace, may be offered at cheaper rates than they can be made here, yet good policy and a regard for the well-being of divers useful and industrious citizens who are employed in the like making of goods in this State demand of us that moderate duties be laid on certain fabrics and manufactures imported, which do most interfere with and which (if no relief be given) will undermine and destroy the useful manufactures of the like kind in this country, for this purpose, etc.

The whole doctrine of protective tariff as the Republican party advocates it to-day is contained in that preamble.

Mr. BRYAN. What is the date of that?

Mr. DALZELL. Seventeen hundred and eighty-five. The introduction into this country free of duty of those things with which we do not compete and the protection of the home market and the home producer by levying duties on those things that we do or can make here. From that day to this Pennsylvania has never swerved in her loyalty to that principle. In 1785 she was found following after the banner of protection, and she is found following after it to-day. Only a few days ago, in a State election, where no national issue was necessarily involved, but where the people of Pennsylvania believed that their voice might be potent in this House with respect to the great issue which it was then considering, she rolled up the magnificent majority of nearly 138,000 for the party of protection, and I venture the prediction that within a month, when she comes to select a Congressman-at-large to take part in our deliberations here, her majority testifying her continued loyalty to the cause will reach well towards 200,000. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It is impossible of belief that the Colonies gave up such power as that of protection to the Federal Government, and that that Government does not now possess it. Let me quote an authority upon this subject that no Democrat will call in question.

Andrew Jackson said:

The object of the tariff is objected to by some as unconstitutional. * * * The power to impose duties on imports originally belonged to the several States. The right to adjust those duties with a view to the encouragement of domestic branches of industry is so completely identical with that power that it is difficult to suppose the existence of the one without the other. The States have delegated their whole authority over imports to the General Government, without limitation or restriction, saving the very inconsiderable reservation relating to their inspection laws. This authority having thus entirely passed from the States, the right to exercise it for the purpose of protection does not exist in them; and consequently if it be not possessed by the General Government, it must be extinct.

Our political system would thus present the anomaly of a people stripped of the right to foster their own industry, and to counteract the most selfish and destructive policy which might be adopted by foreign nations. This surely can not be the case; this indispensable power thus surrendered by the States, must be within the scope of the authority on the subject expressly delegated to Congress.

In this conclusion I am confirmed as well by the opinions of Presidents Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, who have each repeatedly recommended the exercise of this right under the Constitution, as by the uniform practice of Congress, the continued acquiescence of the States, and the general understanding of the people.

Article I, section 8, of the Constitution is in these words:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

In terms, then, Congress has express power to tax by means of impost duties. This power is either limited or unlimited—that is to say, it is either an absolute power to levy duties, or it is a power to levy them with the limitation that they shall be to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

Whether the grant of power be limited or unlimited will not in this matter affect the result. If the power be an unlimited one, then, in accordance with the principle laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Loan Association vs. Topeka [20 Wallace, 655] "in determining for what objects taxation can properly be employed, regard may be had to the practice of the Government as tacitly ratified by the acquiescence of the people; and uses that have customarily been treated as public in England and the United States by successive legislatures may be presumed to deserve the character which they have so long borne, unless they are manifestly at variance with the letter and spirit of the Constitution."

The question then is, whether at the time of the adoption of the Constitution any other object than the raising of revenue was recognized as the legitimate function of tariff duties. To this there can be but one answer. Tariff duties have been by all nations, from time immemorial, recognized as an available and proper means to regulate commerce. They have been used as a means of retaliation in trade between various nations, as a means of reciprocity, as a means of prohibition, and for the accomplishment of various ends. It is matter of history that in our relations with Great Britain, the power of the English parliament to levy taxes was recognized by the colonies so long as the taxes were regulations of commerce; when they were levied for revenue then the Revolution followed.

Nor does it make any difference that the power in question may be held to be limited by the terms "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare."

Upon what principle shall it be determined that the only way to provide by taxation for the common defense and general welfare is by limiting its amount to the bare purposes of revenue? I quote from Judge Story on this subject:

May not the general welfare in the judgment of Congress be, in given circumstances, as well provided for by prohibitory duties, or by encouragements to domestic industry of all sorts? If a tax of one sort, as on tonnage on foreign vessels, will aid commerce, and a tax on foreign raw materials will aid agriculture, and a tax on imported fabrics will aid domestic manufactures, and so promote the general welfare, may they not be all constitutionally united by Congress in a law for this purpose?

If Congress can unite them all, may they not sustain them severally in separate laws? Is a tax to aid manufactures, or agriculture, or commerce, necessarily, or even naturally, against the general welfare or the common defense? Who is to decide upon such a point? Congress, to whom the authority is given to exercise the power? Or any other body, State or National, which may choose to assume it?

Whether, then, the power to lay impost duties be, under the Constitution, absolute or limited by the terms of the grant, in either event it may be constitutionally exercised, not for the purpose of raising revenue only, but for such purposes as in the judgment of the legislative body to which its exercise has been intrusted are necessary for the common defense and general welfare.

It may be urged, however, that the power is restricted to such specific objects as are contained in the other enumerated powers.

But the answer to this is that many of these enumerated powers have other objects and other means to effectuate them than revenue. Here again I quote Judge Story:

Revenue may be one mode, but it is not the sole mode. Take the power, to "regulate commerce." Is it not clear, from the whole history of nations, that laying taxes is one of the most usual modes of regulating commerce? Is it not, in many cases, the best means of preventing foreign monopolies and mischievous commercial restrictions? In such cases, then, the power to lay taxes is confessedly not for revenue. If so, is not the argument irresistible that it is not limited to purposes of revenue? Take another power, the power to coin money and regulate its value, and that of foreign coin: might not a tax be laid on foreign coin for the purpose of carrying this into effect by suppressing the circulation of such coin, or regulating its value?

Take the power to promote the progress of science and useful arts; might not a tax be laid on foreigners, and foreign inventions, in aid of this power, so as to suppress foreign competition, or encourage domestic science and arts? Take another power, vital in the estimation of many statesmen to the security of a republic—the power to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia; may not a tax be laid on foreign arms, to encourage the domestic manufacture of arms, so as to enhance our security, and give uniformity to our organization and discipline?

Take the power to declare war and its auxiliary powers, may not Congress, for the very object of providing for the effectual exercise of these powers, and securing a permanent domestic manufacture and supply of powder, equipments, and other warlike apparatus, impose a prohibitory duty upon foreign articles of the same nature?

If Congress may, in any or all of these cases, lay taxes, then, as revenue constitutes, upon the very basis of the reasoning, no object of the taxes, is it not clear that the enumerated powers require the power to lay taxes to be more extensively construed than for purposes of revenue?

Of course, if Congress has the power to tax for the purposes of protection, the question as to the wisdom or expediency of its exercise is a political and not a judicial question. As Chief Justice Marshall said in the case of McCulloch vs. Maryland, 4 Wheaton:

Where the law is not prohibited, and is really calculated to effect any of the objects intrusted to the Government, to undertake here to inquire into the degree of its necessity would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department and to tread on legislative grounds.

But whether protection be defensible or not under the taxing clause of the Constitution it is clearly so under the clause which gives to Congress the power to regulate commerce.

Such has been the opinion of most of our distinguished statesmen from Washington's time until the present, and such has been the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States in a number of cases. No clearer or more convincing exposition of this proposition has ever been made than was made by James Madison, one of the framers of the Constitution, in letters written by him to J. C. Cabell, on September 18 and October 30, 1828.

I have no time for anything more than a mere summary of his position. He says:

It is a simple question under the Constitution of the United States whether "the power to regulate trade with foreign nations," as a distinct and substantive item in the enumerated powers, embraces the object of encouraging by duties, restrictions, and prohibitions the manufactures and products of the country. And the affirmative must be inferred from the following considerations:

1. The meaning of the phrase "to regulate trade" must be sought in the general use of it: in other words, in the objects to which the power was generally understood to be applicable when the phrase was inserted in the Constitution.

2. The power has been understood and used by all commercial and manufacturing nations as embracing the object of encouraging manufactures. It is believed that not a single exception can be named.

3. This has been particularly the case with Great Britain, whose commercial vocabulary is the parent of ours. A primary object of her commercial regulations is well known to have been the protection and encouragement of her manufactures.

4. Such was understood to be a proper use of the power by the States most prepared for manufacturing industry while retaining the power over their foreign trade.

5. Such a use of the power by Congress accords with the intention and expectation of the States in transferring the power over trade from themselves to the Government of the United States.

6. If Congress have not the power it is annihilated for the nation; a policy without example in any other nation.

7. If revenue be the sole object of a legitimate impost and the encouragement of domestic articles be not within the power of regulating trade, it would follow that no monopolizing or unequal regulations of foreign nations could be counteracted, etc.

8. That the encouragement of manaufctures was an object of the power to regulate trade is proved by the use made of the power for that object in the first session of the first Congress under the Constitution, when among the members present were so many who had been members of the Federal Convention which framed the Constitution, and of the State conventions which ratified it; each of these classes consisting also of members who had opposed and who had espoused the Constitution in its actual form. It does not appear from the printed proceedings of Congress on that occasion that the power was denied by any of them. And it may be remarked that members from Virginia in particular, as well of the anti-Federal as the Federal party, did not hesitate to propose duties, and to suggest even prohibitions, in favor of several articles of her production. By one, a duty was proposed on mineral coal in favor of the Virginia coal-pits; by another, a duty on hemp was proposed to encourage the growth of that article; and by a third, a prohibition even of foreign beef was suggested as a measure of sound policy.

Many other suggestions are made by Mr. Madison in support of his position, but what I have read will sufficiently indicate the ground upon which he stood.

I might cite the opinions and arguments of many other distinguished statesmen whose authority on this subject ought to be conclusive. But I refrain. He who in the face of what I have already produced will still adhere to the doctrine of the Chicago platform could not be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

With respect to the attitude of the judiciary on this subject, it remains to be said that—

The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Head Money Cases, 112 U. S., 580, fully sustains the views advanced by Mr. Madison.

In 1882 Congress passed "An act to regulate immigration," which imposed on steamship companies a tax of 50 cents a head for every foreign passenger brought into the United States from any foreign country. The constitutionality of this act was assailed by certain steamship companies which refused to pay, on the ground that such a charge could not be levied under the taxing power. The act was not passed for the purpose of raising revenue, but to restrict immigration and aid poor immigrants out of the funds realized. The Supreme Court held, in an opinion to which there was no dissent, that the statute was a valid exercise of the power to regulate commerce, and therefore constitutional and binding. To the same effect are many other cases that I might cite, but this one covers the whole field of controversy. If under the power to regulate commerce Congress may restrict or prohibit, by the imposition of a money burden, the immigration of human beings, he would be a bold man who would deny that Congress has the power to restrict or prohibit by the same method the importation of merchandize.

PROTECTION A MEANS OF INDEPENDENCE.

The importance and value of the taxing power and its applicability to other purposes than raising revenue are made very clear by a report of Mr. Jefferson made in 1793, when he was Secretary of State. He was called upon by Congress "to report the nature and extent of the privileges and restrictions of the commercial intercourse of the United States with foreign nations, and the measures which he should think proper to be adopted for the improvement of the commerce and navigation of the same." In his report, which will be found at length in the first volume of Wait's State Papers, page 424, he shows that in our commercial relations with European nations some of them discriminated against us with respect to one article and some with respect to another. He then goes on to say:

Such being the restrictions on the commerce and navigation of the United States, the question is, in what way they may best be removed, modified, or counteracted? As to commerce, two methods occur: (1) By friendly arrangements with the several nations with whom these restrictions exist; or (2) by the separate act of our own Legislature for countervailing their effects.

After discussing the desirability of regulation by friendly arrangement, he says:

But should any nation contrary to our wishes suppose it may better find its advantage by continuing its system of prohibitions, duties, and regulations, it behooves us to protect our citizens, their commerce and navigation, by counter prohibitions, duties, and regulations also. Free commerce and navigation are not to be given in exchange for restrictions and vexations; nor are they likely to produce a relaxation of them.

Mr. Jefferson then proceeds to lay down certain principles which "being founded in reciprocity, appear perfectly just and to offer no cause of complaint to any nation."

He recommends:

That where a nation imposes high duties on our productions, or prohibits them altogether, it may be proper for us to do the same by theirs, first burdening or excluding those productions which they bring here in competition with our own of the same kind; selecting next such manufactures as we take from them in greatest quantity, and which at the same time we could the soonest furnish to ourselves or obtain from other countries, imposing on them duties, lighter at first, but heavier and heavier afterward as other channels of supply open. Such duties having the effect of indirect encouragement to domestic manufactures of the same kind, may induce the manufacturer to come, himself, into these States, etc.

* * * It is true we must expect some inconvenience in practice from the establishment of discriminating duties. But in this, as in so many other cases, we are left to choose between two evils. These inconveniencies are nothing when weighed against the loss of wealth and loss of force which will follow our perseverance in the plan of indiscrimination. When once it shall be perceived that we are either in the system or in the habit of giving equal advantages to those who extinguish our commerce and navigation by duties and prohibitions as to those who treat both with liberality and justice, liberality and justice will be converted by all into duties and prohibitions. It is not the moderation and justice of others we are to trust for fair and equal access to market with our productions, or for our due share in the transportation of them, but to our own means of independence and the firm will to use them.

It is thus apparent that in 1793 Thomas Jefferson not only believed in the constitutional power of Congress to impose tariff duties, not for the purposes of revenue only, but even to the extent of prohibition, and that he regarded this power as "a means of independence" in our commercial and navigation interests.

And it is further more apparent, it seems to me, that if he were here to-day he would be an earnest opponent of the repeal of the reciprocity clause of existing law, and the surrender without reciprocal advantages of our markets to the coal and other products of Canada and the ores of Cuba, Africa, and Spain.

NOT A "TARIFF FOR REVENUE ONLY."

But to advance a step further, let us concede for the purpose of the argument that "the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue only;" then this bill, already shown to be objectionable because of present industrial conditions, uncalled for by either governmental or popular necessity and destructive of revenue, is indefensible on the ground of its unconstitutionality, for it is not a bill for revenue only, but a bastard protection bill. Whatever evils the protective system has, it has without having any of the advantages of that system.

What is a tariff for revenue only? I will tell you what it is not. It is not such a tariff as beggars the Treasury. It is not such a tariff as reduces the national income so as to compel a prosperous people to borrow money in time of peace for the ordinary current expenses of government. It is, on the other hand, characteristically and conspicuously such a tariff as will raise revenue. Revenue to the sacrifice of all other considerations is, as its name signifies, its supreme aim, object, and purpose. Its constitutionality from the standpoint of the Chicago platform rests upon its being designed to raise revenue and to do nothing else. The bill under consideration does not propose such a tariff. It is a retreat from the manly, if mistaken, declaration of the Chicago platform. It is a legislative repudiation of the pledges of the party on the faith of which that party says it came into power.

There is not a Democrat in this House who can not decline to vote for it on the ground that it fails to answer the professions of his party.

I am not the keeper of any man's conscience but my own, but I venture the suggestion that no Democrat who believes that protection is unconstitutional, if there be any such, can vote for it without violating his convictions and stultifying himself in the face of the whole American people.

The characteristics of a revenue tariff have been well defined by Robert J. Walker, Secretary of the Treasury under President Polk, and the high priest of the doctrine of revenue tariff. This bill violates every principle laid down by him as characteristic of such tariff. In his report to Congress in December, 1845, he said:

The only true maxim is that which experience demonstrates will bring in each case the largest revenue at the lowest rate of duty, and that no duty be imposed on any article above the lowest rate which will yield the largest amount of revenue. The revenue from ad valorem duties last year exceeded that realized from specific duties, although the average of the ad valorem duties was only 23.57 per cent, and the average of the specific duties 41.30 per cent, presenting another strong proof that the lower duties increase the revenue.

Scan the schedules of this bill and show me a single one that will bring, under the rate of duties proposed, the largest possible revenue. Is it the chemical schedule? Why, thirty of its leading articles have been put on the free list, and a quarter of a million of revenue thrown away. Is it the wool schedule? Why, wool itself has been put on the free list, while the manufacturer is still protected by a duty reaching to 40 per cent. Is it the metal schedule? Why, iron ore that gave us last year over a half a million of revenue is put on the free list, and tin plate bears a duty equal to about 40 per cent.

But why press these questions to which there can be no reasonable answer? Manifestly, if revenue be the object at the lowest rates of duty the primary subjects of taxation are those things that we do not produce and yet must have.

Do you find any duty in this bill on tea or coffee or sugar? There are no sources of revenue so sure as these. Why are they not taxed? They are the necessaries of life, and a tax on them will certainly raise revenue. Has the getting of votes anything to do with the framing of a tariff bill? If so, I warn you, gentlemen of the majority, that in the opinion of the poor man the exemption of his breakfast table will not compensate him for the deprivation of his opportunity to labor under such conditions as to earn American wages.

I have said that this bill violates every principle laid down by Secretary Walker as constituting a tariff for revenue only. I repeat the assertion. It does not raise revenue. It does not in any case impose the lowest duty that will raise the greatest amount of revenue.

It has a free list of large proportions. Will you tell me what right a revenue bill has with a free list?

Let me answer you in the language of that great Democratic daily, the New York Sun:

Free raw material or free anything is out of the question in a constitutional revenue tariff. A free list is as impossible under the Democratic platform as a prohibitory tax. Revenue is the supreme principle and revenue only to be exacted from the whole field of importation without omission and without favor. The reformers have been proclaiming earnestly for years past that any other than a revenue tariff robs some one, and now the Democratic platform says the same thing. What any Democratic statesman therefore thinks individually of the free raw-material principle can have no more standing before a Democratic Congress or a Democratic Administration than advocacy of highway robbery direct and simple.

The tariff must be for revenue only, without humbug, backsliding, or delusion. Otherwise the people will say the Democracy is a fraud.

They have already said it; Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Iowa have said it in tones so loud and deep that all the world has heard, and every intelligent Democrat understands. [Applause on the Republican side.]

A SECTIONAL BILL.

One of Secretary Walker's maxims was "that the duty should be so imposed as to operate as equally as possible throughout the Union, discriminating neither for nor against any class or section." This bill can make no truthful pretense to conformity with that maxim.

Copper ingots are raw material and free, but pig iron is dutiable at 22½ per cent ad valorem as a manufactured product. Tennessee rough marble is protected by a duty of 40 cents per cubic foot, but Massachusetts rough granite is free as a raw material. Combed wool is dutiable at 25 per cent, but combed silk is free. Cleaned South Carolina rice is dutiable at 1¼ cents per pound, but sawed shingles and lumber from Maine are made free. Binding twine is free, while bagging is taxed. Agricultural implements are free, while the steel from which they are made bears a duty.

Cotton ties, one of the last finished products of steel, seem to be raw material and go untaxed, while the hoop iron of which they are made is subject to duty. The Southern planter is paid a bounty on his sugar, and protection is provided the sugar trust on its refined product.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Who imposed the bounty that you complain of on sugar?

Mr. DINGLEY. You do not take it off.

Mr. DALZELL. The Republican party, when in control, pursuaded by evidence that a bounty for a certain number of years would result in enabling our people to raise sugar in this country in quantities sufficient to meet our wants, provided a bounty which saved to the taxpayers of this country some $60,000,000 a year in the way of taxation.

Mr. COOMBS. How did it save it?

Mr. DALZELL. The difference between the taxes and the amount of the bounty. Anybody could see that. The duty on sugar was a revenue duty, and hence a tax on the consumer. The Democratic party now, instead of standing by its principle that bounties are unconstitutional, simply cuts the bounty in half, and, without any hope of establishing the industry, makes a gift to the sugar-planters of this country of the bounties that they are to realize for the next eight years to come. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Was there ever a more sectional bill? Was there ever such a bundle of palpable absurdities presented to a body of intelligent men seeking their suffrage?

And yet gentlemen on that side of the Chamber will march up and vote to put upon the statute book of their country these very absurdities, and do it without a blush.

I need pursue this subject no further. The committee itself confesses that this is not a revenue bill. It says, in its report, speaking of the bill: "It no more professes to be purged of all protection than to be free of all error."

Why, then, ask us to vote for a bill confessedly, under your theory, beyond the constitutional power of Congress to enact? You will find the answer in that same report, and its ingenuousness gives away the whole of the Democratic case. Because it is no part of our reform to "imperil or curtail the existence and prosperity of great interests that do exist," says the committee. That is to say, according to the committee, the existence and prosperity of great interests depends on protection; their reform if carried into execution according to their platform would destroy them. That is good Republican doctrine to which I subscribe.

THE CALAMITY TARIFFS OF 1846 AND 1857.

The committee appeal for vindication of their wisdom in framing this bill to our experience under the tariffs of 1846 and 1857. The committee say in their report:

The history of American industry shows that during no other period has there been a more healthy and rapid development of our manufacturing industry than during the fifteen years of low tariff from 1846 to 1861, nor a more healthy and harmonious growth of agriculture and all the other great industries of the country.

If there is one subject above another about which it seems impossible for tariff reformers to tell the truth it is that which relates to the tariff of 1846. With one acclaim they describe the period from 1846 to 1861, in the words of a certain college professor, as "our golden age." The majority of the committee join in trumpeting the fallacious assertion.

Our golden age, indeed! No darker or more disastrous period ever cursed our experience as a people. Two things are characteristic of that period—one the amazing exceptional opportunities that it had for prosperity, the other the amazing failure of even these exceptional opportunities to save it from disaster. Look for a moment at its elements of good fortune. The Mexican war was one, increasing as it did many fold governmental expenditures and pouring money lavishly into all the channels of trade.

The Irish famine was another, creating as it did an artificial demand for our breadstuffs. The Crimean war was another, unsettling as it did the markets of England, France, and Russia, and making room for the products of our shops and fields. Still another, more dazzling than all the rest, was found in the fact that in the ten years, from 1850 to 1860, we took from the mines of California $1,100,000,000 of gold. Thus on every hand powerful circumstances conspired to crown us with abounding prosperity, but powerful as the circumstances were they could not in the end resist the blight of a revenue tariff.

I shall not ask you to take dogmatism for proof. I am willing to submit my case upon conceded facts and the testimony of witnesses whose competency and honesty can not be called in question. I call as one of my witnesses President Millard Fillmore. In his annual message to Congress December 5, 1851, he testifies thus:

The value of our domestic exports for the last fiscal year, as compared with those of the previous year, exhibit an increase of $43,646,322. At first view this condition of our trade with foreign nations would seem to present the most flattering hope of its future prosperity. An examination of the details of our exports, however, will show that the increased value of our exports for the last fiscal year is to be found in the high price of cotton which prevailed during the last half of that year, which price has since declined about one-half. The value of our exports of breadstuffs and provisions, which it was supposed the incentive of a low tariff and large importations from abroad would have greatly augmented, has fallen from $68,701,921 in 1847 to $25,051,373 in 1850, and to $21,848,653 in 1851; with a strong probability, amounting almost to a certainty, of a still further reduction in the current year.

The policy which dictated a low rate of duties on foreign merchandise, it was thought by those who promoted and established it, would tend to benefit the farming population of the country by increasing the demand and raising the price of agricultural products in foreign markets. The foregoing facts, however, seem to show incontestably that no such result has followed the adoption of this policy.

President Fillmore does not agree, you will observe, with the majority of the Ways and Means Committee. Whether he or they had the best opportunity to form a correct judgment is a question that I leave with you.

In the following year, 1852, President Fillmore enlightens us further upon this subject, and I beg your considerate attention to this. He says:

Nothing has since occurred to change my views on this important question. Without repeating the arguments contained in my former message in favor of discriminating protective duties, I deem it my duty to call your attention to one or two other considerations affecting this subject.

The first is the effect of large importations of foreign goods upon our currency. Most of the gold of California, as fast as it is coined, finds its way directly to Europe in payment for goods purchased.

In the second place, as our manufacturing firms are broken down by competition with foreigners, the capital invested in them is lost. Thousands of honest industrious citizens are thrown out of employment, and the farmer to that extent is deprived of a home market for the sale of his surplus produce.

Our golden age, indeed!

I call as my next witness President James Buchanan. His testimony is five years later than President Fillmore's. In his annual message to Congress in December, 1857, President Buchanan testifies thus:

The earth has yielded her fruits abundantly and has bountifully rewarded the toil of the husbandmen. We have possessed all the elements of material wealth in rich abundance, and yet, notwithstanding all these advantages, our country, in its monetary interests, is at the present moment in a deplorable condition. In the midst of unsurpassed plenty in all the productions and in all the elements of national wealth we find our manufactures suspended, our public works retarded, our private enterprises of all kinds abandoned, and thousands of useful laborers thrown out of employment and reduced to want.

Here again, as you will observe, our witness and the majority of the Ways and Means Committee fail of agreement.

Things seem to have grown worse; for, three years after, on December 14, 1860, President Buchanan adds to his testimony thus:

Panic and distress of a fearful character prevail throughout the land. Our laboring population is without employment, and consequently deprived of the means of earning their bread. Indeed, all hope seems to have deserted the minds of men.

I call as my next witness that grand old philanthropist, Peter Cooper, of New York, whose honesty and sincerity and ability no man will impugn. He says:

Once more, in 1846, however, did the serpent—properly represented by British free traders—make his way into Paradise, and now a dozen years elapsed, in the course of which, notwithstanding the discovery of California mines, money commanded a rate of interest higher, as I believe, than had ever been known in the country for so long a period of time. British iron and cloth came in and gold went out, and with each successive day the dependence of our farmers on foreign markets became more complete. With 1857 came the culmination of the system, merchants and manufacturers being ruined, banks being compelled to suspend payment, and the Treasury being reduced to a condition of bankruptcy, nearly approaching that which had existed at the close of the free-trade periods commencing in 1817 and 1834. In the three years that followed labor was everywhere in excess; wages were low; immigration fell below the point at which it had stood twenty years before; the home market for food diminished, and the foreign one proved so utterly worthless that the whole export to all the manufacturing nations of Europe, as I have already stated, amounted to but little more than $10,000,000.

I call as my next witness one who in his lifetime was an honored colleague from Pennsylvania. The Hon. William D. Kelley says:

The years 1860 and 1861, and from 1857 to the autumn of the latter (a free-trade period), was one of the darkest periods ever seen by the laboring people of America. Not one out of five skilled workmen of the country was steadily employed. In Philadelphia the builders of a street railroad advertised for 250 hands at 50 cents a day, and over 5,000 applied, a majority skilled artisans out of work. A rolling mill, to save its skilled workmen from open pauperism, built a turnpike, and their expert hands broke stone on it for 50 cents a day rather than become paupers, and many could not be employed even in these ways.

Now, let me add to this testimony the figures that show the failures in number and amount that took place in the years 1857 to 1861, inclusive. Here they are:

FAILURES.

Year.	Total number.	Per month.	Per week.	Per diem.
1857	4,932	411	95	13
1858	4,225	352	81	12
1859	3,913	326	75	11
1860	3,676	306	71	10
1861	6,993	583	134	19
Total	23,739

LIABILITIES.

Year.	Total amount.	Per month.	Per week.	Per diem.
1857	$291,750,000	$24,312,500	$5,610,577	$799,315
1858	95,749,000	7,979,083	1,841,327	262,326
1859	64,394,000	5,366,167	1,238,346	176,422
1860	79,807,000	6,650,583	1,534,750	218,649
1861	207,210,000	17,267,500	3,984,808	567,700
Total	738,910,000

And while American manufacturers and merchants were thus going down, and American labor was pauperized, the national debt was climbing at the rate of nearly $15,000,000 per annum. Here are the figures:

1857	$28,699,831.80	1860	$64,842,287.80
1858	44,981,881.80	1861	90,580,873.70
1859	58,496,837.80

One of my own constituents, Hon. B. F. Jones, says:

The tariff of 1846 drove into bankruptcy 90 per cent of all those engaged in the manufacturing of iron in Pennsylvania. Abram S. Hewitt wrote in 1849: "Of fifteen rail mills only two are in operation, doing partial work, and that only because their inland position secures them against foreign competition for the limited orders of neighboring railroads, and when these are executed not a single rail mill will be at work in the land."

"Employment of workmen was greatly diminished, resulting in extremely low wages for those so fortunate as to secure it. In this city of Pittsburg, famed for the industry and frugality of its citizens, as well as the skill and genius of its mechanics, thoughtful men, with strong arms and willing hands, were reduced to idleness and want. These worthy people were compelled to accept the charities of the more fortunate, and get from the soup stations, established for the purpose, sustenance for themselves and their families, and this at times when the products of the farm were absurdly cheap in Pennsylvania; when, in the Western States, corn was burned for fuel and other grain remained in stacks from year to year unthrashed. These dire consequences were not confined to the iron interests, but affected all branches of industry alike throughout the country. The Government was brought to the verge of bankruptcy by the same cause.

And I want to say in answer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON], who says that under our theory Pittsburg ought to be the paradise of the workingman, that under protection it is his paradise; but that even Pittsburg, renowned for the industry and frugality of its citizens, is no more able now than it was in 1857 to withstand the withering blight of a revenue tariff. [Applause on Republican side.]

Upon the array of testimony and figures that I have presented, "strong as proof of Holy Writ," I submit to the unprejudiced judgment of the American people that the revenue period—1846 to 1861—was the most disastrous in our history; and I submit at the same time the question, whether they are willing to tempt fortune by the adoption of a measure worse than the tariff law of 1846, because more illogical, framed as it is by men who blindly deny the patent facts of history and put dogmatism for proof.

NECESSARY RESULTS OF THIS BILL.

Now let us test this proposed law in the light of our experience under this act of 1846.

The President of the United States informs us in his message that he is—satisfied that the reduced tariff duties provided for in the proposed tariff legislation, added to the existing internal-revenue taxes, will in the near future, though perhaps not immediately, produce sufficient revenue to meet the needs of the Government.

President Fillmore tells us that the effects of the law of 1846 were twofold: (1) The large importation of foreign goods drained us of our currency; (2) home competition with cheap foreign labor bankrupted our manufacturers, and turned loose our laborers to tramp the highways and fill our almshouses and prisons.

Like causes produce like effects. This law must inevitably work the same result.

The general average of duties under this bill, the committee says, is about 30 per cent. According to the statement of the committee, the duties realized in 1892 would have been $65,407,900 less than those realized, had the proposed law then been in effect. In 1893 the duties realized would have been $75,707,784 less.

To realize the same amount of duties then, if this bill be enacted into law, as was realized in 1892, under existing law, our imports must be increased to the extent of $218,026,333; to realize the same amount as was realized in 1893, they must be increased to the extent of $252,359,280.

Will you tell me what would be the effect of thus increasing our imports? I will tell you. It will, in the first place, take just that amount of gold out of the country to pay for these imports. It will, in the second place, substitute just that amount of foreign manufactures for American manufactures. It will close as many American mines, furnaces, mills, factories, and workshops as contributed that amount to the home market, and doom to idleness just as many American laborers as kept those mines, furnaces, mills, factories, and workshops in operation. This is not a matter of rhetoric or speculation or guessing; it is a plain matter of figures, open to the comprehension of the plainest intellect outside of a tariff reformers. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

If my argument thus far has proceeded upon a proper basis, I have shown that the bill under discussion, besides being a bill to rob the Treasury, is untimely, not justified by any necessity; unconstitutional, as measured by the standard of its promoters, and therefore a false pretence, and not a bill for revenue only, but a bastard protection bill, which does not protect. And I have further shown by what seems to me to be unanswerable proof that our previous experience under low tariffs contains a warning against subjecting ourselves to a repetition of such experience. I now advance a step further to show that it is in all its aspects a pernicious bill, dangerous to the public interests, a step backward in tariff legislation. It introduces into our revenue system as its basis ad valorem in the place of specific duties.

Mr. MORSE. Except in spots.

Mr. DALZELL. Except in spots; but the general character of the bill makes it an ad valorem bill. Of course, where it suited the convenience of the committee or some of the friends of the committee, there are specific duties.

Mr. MORSE. Large Democratic contributors have specific duties, as, for instance, a chocolate manufacturer in Massachusetts.

Mr. DALZELL. That may be so.

Mr. MORSE. That is so.

Mr. DALZELL. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, the bill is an ad valorem measure, and, in the light of history nothing is more indefensible.

PERNICIOUS AD VALOREM SYSTEM.

An ad valorem duty is a tax assessed at a certain per cent on the dutiable value of the merchandise, fixed at the port of export, while a specific duty is a tax assessed at a certain sum by weight or measure without reference to value.

Theoretically but little objection can be urged to ad valorem duties, but all experience has shown, both in this country and in all others, that they are incapable of levy with any fairness in practice. This is a subject, therefore, about which it is useless to reason. We can only rely, so far as practical results are to be accomplished, upon the testimony of those who have had experience.

I know of no statesman in American history, of any party or political creed, who has advocated ad valorem duties with the exception of Robert J. Walker, and Robert J. Walker, as an authority, is buried in the grave of the unfortunate tariff of 1846.

Ad valorem duties have been condemned as impracticable by Hamilton, Gallatin, Crawford, and Van Buren; by Benton, Buchanan, and Webster, Meredith, and Daniel Manning; and by the unanimous verdict of foreign statesmen.

The committee claims that they were approved by Henry Clay, and that they worked satisfactorily under the tariff of 1846. In both particulars the committee is contradicted by the proofs. In a speech made by Daniel Webster in 1846 in the Senate, in which he denounced ad valorem duties, he said:

In every Administration, from that of Washington down, a contrary system has always prevailed; and the desire of those who have successfully formed and administered the laws in this respect has been uniformly to carry the principles of specific duties as far and as fast as circumstances allowed. That I take to have been the policy of the Government from the first, and it has been the sentiment of all connected with the Government, so far as I know. I ought, perhaps, to make an exception in the case of Mr. Clay. I said here the other day that I had never heard a public man advocate a system of ad valorem duties. The newspapers say (perhaps correctly) that I was mistaken; that Mr. Clay made remarks favorable to that idea in the year 1842. I was not in the Senate at that time, and I did not know that such sentiments had ever been expressed by him, and if they are correctly reported I am very sorry that such was the case.

At this point Mr. Crittenden arose and said:

Will the Senator pardon me while I interrupt him for a moment in order to offer an explanation? Mr. Clay's remarks had reference solely to home valuation.

And Mr. Webster continued:

Ah, that explains the whole matter, and it is a great relief to my mind.

So far, therefore, as Mr. Clay is concerned he does not sustain the committee. Nor is it true that ad valorem duties were found other than unsatisfactory under the tariff of 1846. Such is the testimony of Secretary Manning, Mr. Cleveland's first Secretary of the Treasury, who ought to be an authority here. He says:

Whatever successful contrivances are in operation to-day to evade the revenue by false invoices, or by undervaluations, or by any other means, under an ad valorem system, will not cease even if the ad valorem rates shall have been largely reduced. They are incontestably, they are even notoriously inherent in that system. One advantage, and perhaps the chief advantage, of a specific over an ad valorem system is in the fact that under the former duties are levied by a positive test, which can be applied by our officers while the merchandise is in possession of the Government, and according to a standard which is altogether national and domestic.

That would be partially true of an ad valorem system levied upon "home value;" but there are constitutional impediments in the way of such a system which appear to be insuperable. But under an ad valorem system, the facts to which the ad valorem rate is to be applied must be gathered in places many thousand miles away, and under circumstances most unfavorable to the administration of justice. One hears it often said that if our ad valorem rates did not exceed 25 or 30 per cent undervaluation and temptation to undervaluation would disappear; but the records for this Department for the years 1817, 1840, and 1857, do not uphold that conclusion.

To the same effect and equally explicit is the evidence of James Buchanan, in a speech made in the Senate in 1842:

I am not only opposed to any uniform scale of ad valorem, but to any and all ad valorem duties whatever, except where from the nature of the article imported it is not possible to subject it to a specific duty. Our own severe experience has taught us a lesson on this subject which we ought not soon to forget. I can not refrain from adverting to some of my reasons for this opinion. Our ad valorem system has produced great frauds upon the revenue, whilst it has driven the regular American merchant from the business of importing and placed it almost exclusively in the hands of the agents of British manufacturers. The American importer produces his invoice to the collector, containing the actual price at which the imports were purchased abroad, and he pays the fair and regular duty upon the invoice. Not so the British agent. The foreign manufacturer in his invoice reduces the price of the articles which he intends to import into our country to the lowest possible standard which he thinks will enable them to pass through the custom-house without being seized for fraud. And the business has been hitherto managed with so much ingenuity as generally to escape detection. The consequence is that the British agent passes the goods of his employer through the custom-house on the payment of a much lower duty than the fair American merchant is compelled to pay. In this manner he is undersold in the market by the foreigner, and thus is driven from the competition, while the public revenue is fraudulently reduced.

Again, ad valorem duties deprive the American manufacturer of nearly all the benefits of incidental protection where it is most required. When the business of the country is depressed, as it is at present, and when the price of foreign articles sinks to far less than their cost, your duty sinks in the same proportion, and you are also deprived of revenue at the time when it is most needed.

Our own experience, therefore, ought to have convinced us that whenever it is possible, from the nature of the article, we ought to substitute specific for ad valorem duties. These continue to be the same upon the same articles, notwithstanding the constant fluctuations in prices. They afford a steady revenue to the country, an equally steady incidental protection. When commodities are usually sold by weight or measure, you may always subject them to a specific duty; and this ought always to be done.

Let us, then, abandon the idea of a uniform horizontal scale of ad valorem duties, and whether the duties be high or low let us return to the ancient practice of the Government. Let us adopt wise discriminations; and, whenever this can be done, impose specific duties.

Without undertaking to theorize, I will give you testimony the weight of which you can not but appreciate. Here is the testimony of Mr. Benton:

The introduction of the universal ad valorem system in 1833 was opposed and deprecated by practical men at the time as one of those refined subtleties which, aiming at an ideal perfection, overlooks the experience of ages and disregards the warnings of reason. Specific duties had been the rule—ad valorems the exception—from the beginning of the collection of custom-house revenue. The specific duty was a question in the exact sciences, depending upon a mathematical solution by weight, count, or measure; the ad valorem presented a question to the fallible judgment of men, sure to be different at different places, and subject, in addition to the fallibility of judgment, to the chances of ignorance, indifference, negligence, and corruption.

All this was urged against the act at the time, but in vain. It was a piece of legislation arranged out of doors—christened a compromise, which was to save the Union, brought into the House to be passed without alteration, and was so passed in defiance of all judgment and reason by the aid of the votes of those—always a considerable percentum in every public body—to whom the name of compromise is an irresistible attraction; amiable men who would do no wrong of themselves, and without whom the designing could do but little wrong. Objections to this pernicious novelty (of universal ad valorems) were in vain urged then; experience, with her enlightened voice, now came forward to plead against them.

The act had been in force seven years; it had a long and a fair trial; and that safest of all juries—time and experience—now came forward to deliver their verdict. At this session (1839-'40) a message was sent to the House of Representatives by the President, covering reports from the Secretary of the Treasury, and from the Comptroller of the Treasury, with opinions from the late Attorneys-General of the United States (Messrs. Benjamin F. Butler and Felix Grundy), and letters from the collector of the customs in all the principal Atlantic ports, all relating to the practical operation of the ad-valorem system, and showing it to be unequal, uncertain, unsafe, diverse in its construction, injurious to the revenue, open to unfair practices, and greatly expensive from the number of persons required to execute it.

The whole document may be profitably studied by all who deprecate unwise and pernicious legislation; but a selection of a few of the cases of injurious operation which it presents will be sufficient to give an idea of the whole. Three classes of goods are selected—silks, linens, and worsteds—all staple articles, and so well known as to be the least susceptible of diversity of judgment, and yet on which, in the period of four years, a fraction over $5,000,000 had been lost to the Treasury from diversity of construction between the Treasury officers and the judiciary, with the further prospective loss of one million and three-quarters in the ensuing three years if the act was not amended.

The document, at page 44, states the annual ascertained loss during four years' operation of the act on these classes of goods to be: In 1835, $614,356; in 1836, $847,162; in 1837, $463,090; in 1838, $428,237, making in the four years $2,302,845; and the Comptroller computes the annual prospective loss during the time the act may remain unaltered at $800,000. So much for silks; now for linens. The same page, for the same four years, represents the annual loss on this article to be: In 1835, $370,785; in 1837, $303,241; in 1834, $516,988; in 1838, $226,375; making the sum of $1,411,389 on this article for the four years; to which is to be added the estimated sum of $400,000 for the future annual losses if the act remains unaltered.

On worsted goods for the same time, and on page 45, the report exhibits the losses thus: In 1835, $409,329; in 1837, $299,391; in 1836, $416,832; in 1838, $249,590; making a total of ascertained loss on this head in the brief space of four years amount to the sum of $1,285,142, with a computation of a prospective loss of $500,000 per annum while the compromise act remains as it is.

Such were the losses from diversity of construction alone on three classes of goods in the short space of four years, and these classes staple goods, composed of a single material. When it came to articles of mixed material, the diversity became worse. Custom-house officers disagreed, Comptrollers and Treasurers disagreed, Attorneys-General disagreed. Courts were referred to, and their decision overruled all. Many importers stood suits, and the courts and juries overruled all the officers appointed to collect the revenue.

The Government could only collect what they are allowed. Often, after paying the duty assessed, the party has brought his action and recovered a large part of it back. So that this ad valorem system, besides its great expense, its chance for diversity of opinions among the appraisers, and its openness to corruption, also gave rise to differences among the highest administrative and law officers of the Government, with resorts to courts of law, in nearly all which the United States was the loser.

In the face of a century of experience condemnatory of this system, in the face of the emphatic opinion of every statesman familiar with the subject likewise condemnatory of it, we are asked now to abandon the ancient landmarks and follow these new knights of the windmill in their illusionary chase after the markets of the world.

I have no fears, whatever this House may do, that the saving common sense of the American people can long be tied to the impracticable.

FREIGHT RATES AND WAGES.

There are two subjects essential to be considered in the framing of a wise tariff law, the subject of wages, and that of transportation under existing conditions, in utter disregard of both of which the pending bill is framed. And this may be said to be one of its chief characteristics. Any fair competition between foreign products and our own depends upon an equalization of conditions. To give the foreigner substantial advantage is to destroy competition with him on the part of our own citizens and subject us to foreign monopoly, just as to enact prohibition is to subject us to the possibility of home monopolies. The advocates of protection do not demand anything more than that conditions be equalized so as to enable us to compete in our own markets at rates just to our own capital and labor.

The national platform of the Republican party simply asks "that on all importations coming into competition with the products of American labor there should be duties levied equal to the difference between wages abroad and at home." Even the Democratic platform as originally reported to the Chicago convention recognized this important principle. It said:

That when custom-house taxation is levied upon articles of any kind produced in this country, the difference between cost of labor here and labor abroad, when such difference exists, fully measures any possible benefits of labor.

But this declaration the convention refused to adopt, and, in the line of the refusal, the bill under consideration wholly ignores the interest of Americans in the matters of freight rates and wages. He who takes no account of steam and electricity and the kindred neighbor-making factors of our modern life leaves out of his calculation one of the most important elements from a practical point of view of our present industrial conditions. Formerly distance and time had a substantial bearing upon the question of protection. When our first protective tariff bill was framed, ocean freights had a potent influence in fixing its figures. In 1792 transatlantic trade was carried on in small vessels of slow movement and the cost of transportation was very large.

Now, vessels of immense capacity and wondrous speed carry cargoes swiftly and at little cost. A bushel of wheat can be carried to-day from New York to Liverpool for 6 cents. One hundred years ago, therefore, natural protection of American products of an important character was afforded by the ocean; a fact recognized by Alexander Hamilton, who, in his famous report on manufactures in 1791, said:

The great distance from Europe imposes very heavy charges on all fabrics which are brought from there, amounting to from 15 to 30 per cent on their value.

Protection from this source has almost entirely ceased, and the duties now necessary represent only the legitimate means employed to preserve the original protection.

Freight rates by land have fallen as they have upon the ocean, but land and water rates still maintain their relative differences, as they always must. Hence the foreign manufacturer dealing across the ocean with New York has an advantage by way of freights over the inland American dealing with the same point.

Let me illustrate. An order for a hundred tons of pig iron can as readily and as quickly be given from New York to Liverpool, England, as it can to Birmingham, Ala. When given it will be as speedily filled, in all probability by vessel from abroad as by freight train at home. But the freight from Liverpool to New York may be nothing, if the iron comes as ballast, as it very frequently does, while the freight from Birmingham will be $4 per ton by rail and water, and by rail alone $5.50 per ton, a difference in favor of the foreigner on that shipment, you will observe, of from $400 to $550.

The foreigner may have to pay a shilling a ton, say 23 cents; in that event his advantage is the difference between 23 cents and $4 or 23 cents and $5.50 on each ton of his cargo, amounting in the one case to a difference of $337, and in the other to a difference of $527. But let us assume that the foreigner pays 5s., which is an extreme rate, equal to $1.15. Then he will have an advantage over the lowest inland freight rate of $2.85 per ton, or $285 on his entire cargo. The foreigner, therefore, has an advantage of from 35 to 100 per cent, as the case may be, over the domestic manufacturer in the matter of freights. He has an advantage in the matter of wages of 100 per cent.

This bill gives to the pig-iron manufacturer of Alabama a protection of 22½ per cent on his product, while freight rates and European wage conditions have given his foreigner competitor a protection of from 135 to 200 per cent. Surely I need not stop to ask the question, is this fair? My statement can be answered by the advocates of this bill in only one of two ways. Either they must deny my facts, and that they can not with truth, or they must say European pig iron is cheaper than American, and we should cease to make pig iron and rely upon the foreign product.

Are you ready to do that? Aside from any question as to rendering useless American mines, sacrificing American furnaces, American labor and capital, are you ready to subject yourselves to European monopoly of a product that lies at the foundation of the great iron and steel industries of the United States? I might pursue this illustration and offer you the same kind of proof as to many other articles as to which foreign rates have an important bearing—as, for example, steel rails, structural iron, and iron and steel manufactures of many kinds—but I refrain for the present, because in the discussion to follow this general debate I shall have opportunity to go into the subject more at length. I satisfy myself now with adding to these remarks a statement as to home and foreign freights, which I will print as an appendix to my remarks.

And now as to the subject of wages. The pending bill is a direct blow at labor in two ways—first, in its putting upon the free list raw materials (so called); and, second, in failing to provide for duties that are protective upon manufactures the products of labor.

The majority call iron ore a raw material, and yet our last census report shows that 38,227 persons were engaged directly in getting it out of the ground, and that $15,500,000 of wages were paid to them.

The majority call coal a raw material, but its mining during the last census year gave employment to 299,559 men, and the wages paid them aggregated $109,130,928.

Is it a small matter to bring this industrial army into competition with the ill-paid miners of other climes? Surely not.

But there is no such thing as raw material.

I must not stop to attempt a discussion at length of that which needs no demonstration, namely, that in all the world where man exists there is nothing in use which can truthfully be called raw materials. Robinson Crusoe found raw materials in his ocean isle, but in the absence of his labor they would have remained such, and he would have starved. The fruit on the tree, tempting and luscious, has no value until there is added the labor of its plucking.

In this great universe where no atom is added or lost in the general sum, the single and only source of wealth is labor. Let me illustrate briefly. What is a steel rail? That piece of metal which with its fellows binds the continent, yokes State to State, and makes one our Eastern and Western seas? It stands for human labor. It is the last finished product of three rude stones in the hill—a black stone, coal; a red stone, ore; a white stone, limestone. The value of a ton of steel rails in the hill is not to exceed $1.50 to $2.00. Human labor opens the mine to the sunlight; human labor releases the stone from its place; human labor loads it onto the cars, built by human labor, that human labor transports over highways constructed by human labor to the great mill built by human labor, at the instance of capital, which is but human labor stored up, and thence through all the various needed processes human labor adds value until the finished rail results, 90 per cent or more human labor, and worth many times the value of the elements of which it is composed.

This the elemental factor in all civilizations is the factor that this bill would strike down. And remember that American labor has a place all its own, apart in its character, value and results from that of any other country under the sun.

Elsewhere it is a question of dollars and cents; with us in the great Republic, founded on manhood suffrage, it is not a question of money alone; it reaches beyond the domain of dollars to homes and hearthstones and into the domain of morals and government.

There is not a single industry in which we compete with our fellows across seas in which our laborers do not reap richer rewards than their fellow-toilers abroad. All reliable statistics show this to be a fact; all reliable testimony shows it.

Read the testimony of the men asking us for fair play before the Ways and Means Committee, and then read the schedules of this bill and you can not fail of the conviction that the subject you are dealing with to-day is in the last analysis the subject of American labor.

If I had time I would read you this testimony, but I have not. Let me give you a sample only to show with what seriousness and pathos these men approach the subject.

Phillip Hagan, of Youngstown, Ohio, an ironworker, said to the committee:

I am from Youngstown, Ohio. There are five large firms there which make wrought iron exclusively. Every one of those firms employs union labor, and we always agree pretty well together; but as regards that I have nothing to say. The men working with me in our town have asked me to come here, 400 miles, and say to you gentlemen that if the tariff is reduced their wages will be reduced. This is their bread and butter. That is honest.

In regard to imported workmen, if you go into that I am imported. I was not born under the Stars and Stripes. I did not have the say-so as to that. I can tell you that I know what it is to work under free trade. I stand here to say that I worked for 20 cents a day. I had to go to work before I was 9 years of age. That deprived me of any part of an education.

As soon as I got a very limited education, enough to enable me to understand that labor in America was protected, I went to an English gentleman and discussed the matter with him, and he said to me, "The American people are not such fools as to reduce their tariff. Young man, go there." Consequently I came here, and received the benefit of it for several years. With this extra money which I made I was enabled to give myself some instruction. It was a struggle for existence over there. Here I was able to raise my family. Gentlemen, are you going to wipe it out? For God's sake, do not do anything of the kind; it is a great advantage to have citizens who are good, intelligent citizens, and if you deprive them of education they will never be good citizens.

I could stand here and talk for hours for the 6,000 men in Youngstown, Ohio. They beg of you not to reduce the tariff on bar and wrought iron. We have had current prices for years. I wish to tell you the difference between the puddlers in England, when I worked there, and the prices now. I went to work for 10 hours a day for 20 cents. When I advanced to the position of boiler in a furnace I received 5 shillings per day. I was getting 6 and 6 pence in 1869.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. What was the difference between the wages there and here of the same grade of work?

Mr. HAGAN. It was $2.60. I received there for puddling $1.20, or 5 shillings for 3,000 weight; and here I received $3.80 for 2,750 weight. I went up with the market. That is the present price. I have realized higher wages before. We have the highest in the country; there is none higher.

And so I might multiply testimony on this subject, but I refrain.

The truth is, that it is not worth while to trouble ourselves in discussing the question as to whether protection is the cause of high wages. The vital question is, Will the removal of protection reduce wages? That is the issue to be faced. The answer is so plain as to admit of no controversy. So far as the men producing so-called raw materials are concerned, it will doom them to idleness, except such a small proportion as may find work in producing coal and ore for places far inland.

If the foreigner gets his raw materials as cheap as the home manufacturer, and he gets them cheaper; if he pays his workmen less wages than are now paid here, and he does; if he has an advantage in freight rates, and he has; it amounts to a mathematical demonstration that this bill dooms the American wage-earner to one of two things: idleness or lower wages.

Mr. Chairman, I have dwelt at greater length than I had intended in the discussion of this bill. I have necessarily left many subjects untouched. I have not pointed out even, all the important reasons why the bill ought not to pass. It ought not to pass, primarily, because it is a fraud on the Treasury. It ought not to pass because it is an abandonment of the principles of our fathers and of the practice of all our previous history in the collection of our revenue mainly through customs. It paves the way for direct taxation, and the introduction to the homes of our citizens of that most odious of all men—heretofore a stranger—the Federal taxgatherer. It ought not to pass, because there is no necessity for it. It ought not to pass, because it is inconsistent with the theories that were urged as an excuse for it. It ought not to pass, because it introduces a system that makes fraud easy, puts a premium on perjury and deceit, and invites impositions upon the Federal Treasury. It ought not to pass, above all things, because it is a direct blow at labor and a step toward the degradation of the American workman. Make no mistake; the interest of the manufacturer in a tariff is only the interest that every good citizen has in general prosperity. The manufacturer can take care of himself.

It is the men whose capital is their skill and their brawn that you are assaulting. There are few manufacturers; the workmen are many. Upon their broad shoulders rests the stability of the State. In their hands is the ballot. It is they who, in the last analysis, shall make the laws and rule the Republic for good or ill. Their sons shall sit in our places. Their cause is the cause of public morals, of education, of invention, of advancement in every useful art, of peace and good order—in a word, of progress or its failure. You may triumph for a brief hour, but no longer. The American workingmen will not be deceived. They will bow to no theories. They will not be swerved from the iron logic of facts. They know that protection has been their pillar of cloud by day and pillar of fire by night. They will never cease to follow it till the end be reached and protection shall be the settled policy of the Republic. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

APPENDIX.

STATISTICS RELATING TO FREIGHT RATES.

Rail and water freight rates on Southern pig iron from Birmingham to points below.

	Per ton.
Baltimore:
Rail and water	$3.86
All rail	4.26
Philadelphia:
Rail and water	4.01
All rail	4.87
New York:
Rail and water	*4.01
All rail	5.50
Boston:
All rail	5.90
Rail and water	*4.36
Rail and water, via Providence	4.86
Providence:
Rail and water	4.36
All rail	5.90

*These rates, if added to selling price of pig iron at Birmingham, will give approximate selling price in New York and Boston.

SOUTHERN PIG-IRON FREIGHTS.

[New York Iron Age.]

The Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company have issued new rates of freight on pig iron from Southern furnaces to points in the Middle and New England States. The new rates take effect June 22, 1893, and are for carload lots of 17½ tons of 2,268 pounds. The rates from the Birmingham, Sheffield, and Chattanooga districts to some of the more important points are as follows:

To—	From— Birmingham district.	Chattanooga district.	Sheffield district.
Albany, N. Y	$5.30	$4.80	$4.05
Allentown, Pa	5.09	4.59	4.84
Ansonia, Conn	5.90	5.40	5.65
Baltimore, Md. (all rail)	4.26	.....	4.36
Bethlehem, Pa	5.09	4.59	4.84
Birdsboro, Pa	4.87	.....	4.97
Boston, Mass. (all rail)	5.90	5.40	5.65
Braddock, Pa	4.40	3.90	4.15
Bridgeport, Conn	5.90	5.40	5.65
Burlington, Vt	5.90	5.40	5.65
Cambridge, Mass	5.90	5.40	5.65

SOUTHERN PIG-IRON FREIGHTS—continued.

To—	From— Birmingham district.	Chattanooga district.	Sheffield district.
Camden, N. J	$5.02	.....	$5.12
Catasauqua, Pa	5.09	$4.59	4.84
Chester, Pa	4.87	.....	4.97
Coatesville, Pa	4.87	.....	4.97
Conshohocken, Pa	4.87	.....	4.97
Dover, N. H	5.90	5.40	5.25
Easton, Pa	5.09	4.59	4.64
Elizabethport, N. J	5.50	5.00	5.25
Elmira, N. Y	4.90	4.40	4.65
Fitchburg, Mass	5.90	5.40	5.25
Germantown, Pa	4.87	.....	4.97
Ithaca, N. Y	4.65	4.15	4.40
Jersey City, N. J. (all rail)	5.50	5.00	5.25
Lancaster, Pa	4.66	.....	4.76
Lebanon, Pa	4.47	.....	4.57
Lynchburg, Va	3.36	.....	3.46
Newark, N. J	5.50	5.00	5.25
New Haven, Conn	5.90	5.40	5.65
Norristown, Pa	4.87	.....	4.97
Norfolk, Conn	5.90	5.40	5.65
Oswego, N. Y	4.65	4.15	4.40
Paterson, N. J	5.50	5.00	5.25
Philadelphia, Pa. (all rail)	4.87	.....	4.97
Pottstown, Pa	4.87	.....	4.97
Reading, Pa	4.87	.....	4.97
Roanoke, Va	3.36	.....	3.46
Rochester, N. Y	4.42	3.92	4.17
Seneca Falls, N. Y	4.65	4.15	4.40
South Bethlehem, Pa	5.09	4.59	4.84
Sparrows Point, Md	4.36	.....	4.46
Steelton, Pa	4.41	.....	4.51
Troy, N. Y	5.30	4.80	5.05
Waterbury, Conn	5.90	5.40	5.65
York, Pa	4.42	.....	4.52

SOUTHERN FREIGHTS.

[From New York Iron Age.]

The East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railway have issued Supplement No. 4 to Tariff No. 28, applying on pig iron in carloads of 17½ tons minimum, from Southern furnaces to points north, east, and west, to take effect June 1, 1893. The rates between some of the more important points are as follows:

To—	From— Chattanooga.	Birmingham.	Sheffield and Florence.
Allentown, Pa	$5.03	$5.28	$5.38
Altoona, Pa	5.43	5.68	5.78
Bethlehem, Pa	5.28	5.53	5.63
Birdsboro, Pa	4.62	4.87	4.97
Blandon, Pa	4.65	4.90	5.00
Catasauqua, Pa	5.03	5.28	5.38
Coatesville, Pa	4.62	4.87	4.97
Columbia, Lancaster County, Pa	4.32	4.57	4.67
Conshohocken, Pa	4.62	4.87	4.97
Duncansville, Pa	5.43	5.68	5.78
Easton, Pa	5.28	5.53	5.63
Fullerton, Pa	5.03	5.28	5.38
Glasgow, Pa	4.62	4.87	4.97
Harrisburg, Pa	3.88	4.13	4.23
Lebanon, Pa	4.22	4.47	4.57
Leesport, Pa	4.65	4.90	5.00
Lewistown, Pa	5.43	5.68	5.78
Millville, N. J	5.08	5.33	5.43
Pencoyd, Pa	4.62	4.87	4.97
Phillipsburg, N. J	5.28	5.53	5.63
Pottstown, Pa	4.62	4.87	4.97
Pottsville, Pa	4.67	4.92	5.02
Scranton, Pa	5.43	5.68	5.78
Steelton, Pa	4.16	4.41	4.51
Trenton, N. J	4.92	5.17	5.27
Wrightsville, Pa	4.32	4.57	4.67

Cost of iron and steel under proposed Wilson tariff, delivered at Pacific, Gulf and Atlantic ports.

[Compiled by A. R. Whitney & Co., 29 Broadway, New York.]

	Per 100 pounds.	Per ton of 2,240 pounds.
Average rate of freight from Pittsburg to—
Pacific ports	$0.48	$10.75
Gulf ports	.40	8.96
Atlantic ports	.20	4.48
Actual rate of freight from Pittsburg to—
Pensacola, Fla	.50	11.20
New Orleans, La	.38	8.52
Charleston, S. C	.22	4.92
New York, N. Y	.18	4.03
Boston, Mass	.20½	4.59
Rate of freight from Antwerp and Liverpool to—
Pacific ports	£0.14	3.40
Gulf ports	£0.10	2.44
Atlantic ports	£0.05	1.25

Comparative statement of effect on prices of different manufactures of iron and steel, American and foreign, under Wilson and McKinley tariff bills.

Articles.	Free on board, foreign ports.		Proposed Wilson duty.		Foreign. Adding freight to— Atlantic ports.	Gulf ports.	Pacific ports.	Free on board, Pittsburg.		American. Adding freight to— Atlantic ports.	Gulf ports.	Pacific ports.	Present duty.
	Per ton of 2,240 pounds.	At $4.88.	Ad valorem.	Per ton of 2,240 pounds.	Per ton of 2,240 pounds.	Per ton of 2,240 pounds.	Per ton of 2,240 pounds.	Per pound.	Per ton of 2,240 pounds.	Per ton of 2,240 pounds.	Per ton of 2,240 pounds.	Per ton of 2,240 pounds.	Per pound.	Per ton of 2,240 pounds.
Beamed up to 20 feet deep: Angles, teas, channels, shapes	£4.00.0	$19.52	Per cent. 35	$6.83	$27.60	$28.79	$29.75	Cents. 1.5	$33.60	$38.08	$42.56	$44.35	Cents. .9	$20.16
Billets	3.00.0	14.64	25	3.66	19.55	20.74	21.70	.....	16.50	18.90	.....	27.25	.5	11.20
Rails	3.15.0	18.30	25	4.58	24.13	25.32	26.28	.....	24.00	24.80	33.60	34.75	.6	13.44
Boiler plate	5.10.0	26.84	30	8.05	36.14	37.33	38.29	1.7	38.08	42.56	47.04	48.83	.8	17.92
Bars: 1 by ¼ and larger	5.00.0	24.40	30	7.32	33.97	34.16	35.12	1.3	29.12	33.60	38.08	39.87	.8	17.92
Smaller than 1 foot wide or ¼ thick	5.00.0	24.40	30	7.32	33.97	34.16	35.12	*1.5	33.60	38.08	42.56	44.35	1	22.40
Rounds and squares: ¼ and larger	5.00.0	24.40	30	7.32	33.97	34.16	35.12	*1.4	31.36	35.84	40.32	42.11	.9	20.15
Less than ¼ down to $\frac{5}{16}$ for rounds	5.05.0	25.62	30	7.68	34.55	35.74	36.70	*1.5	33.60	38.08	42.56	44.35	1	22.40
Rounds less than $\frac{5}{16}$	5.10.0	26.84	30	8.05	36.14	37.33	38.29	*1.6	35.84	40.32	44.80	46.59	1.1	24.64
Hoops: Thinner than No. 10, not thinner than No. 20	5.15.0	28.06	30	8.40	37.71	38.90	39.86	1.7	38.08	42.56	47.04	48.83	1.1	24.64
Thinner than No. 20	6.00.0	29.28	30	8.78	39.31	40.50	41.46	1.9	42.56	47.04	51.52	53.31	1.3	29.12
Cotton ties	5.00.0	24.40	Free.	Free.	25.65	26.84	27.80	1.35	30.24	34.72	39.20	40.99	1.3	29.12
Black sheets: No. 12 G	6.00.0	29.28	35	10.25	40.78	41.97	42.93	1.65	36.96	41.44	45.92	47.71	1	22.40
No. 16	6.05.0	30.50	35	10.68	42.43	43.62	44.58	1.80	40.32	44.80	49.28	51.07	1	22.40
No. 18	6.15.0	32.94	35	11.53	45.72	46.91	47.87	2.00	44.80	49.28	53.76	55.55	1	22.40
No. 20	7.05.0	35.38	35	12.38	49.01	50.20	51.16	2.20	49.28	53.76	58.24	60.03	1	22.40
No. 21 to 24	7.15.0	37.82	35	13.24	52.31	53.50	54.46	2.30	51.52	56.00	60.48	62.27	1.1	24.66
No. 25 to 27	8.15.0	42.70	35	14.94	58.89	60.08	61.04	2.40	53.76	58.24	62.72	64.51	1.4	31.36
Galvanized: No. 20	10.05.0	50.02	30	15.00	66.27	67.46	68.42	2.05	68.32	72.80	77.28	79.07	1.75	39.20
No. 24	10.15.0	52.46	30	15.84	69.55	70.74	71.70	3.20	73.92	78.40	82.88	84.67	1.85	41.44
No. 26	12.05.0	59.78	30	17.93	78.96	80.15	81.11	3.50	78.40	82.88	87.36	89.15	2.15	48.16
Galvanized corr., No. 24	10.15.0	52.46	35	15.84	69.55	70.74	71.70	3.30	73.92	78.40	82.88	84.67	2.15	48.16

* Average.

Rates of freight for coal and iron.

[London Iron and Coal Trades Review, November 24, 1893.]

	Newcastle or Sunderland.	Newport, Cardiff, or Swansea.		Newcastle or Sunderland.	Newport, Cardiff, or Swansea.
	s. d.	s. d.		s. d.	s. d.
Aden		9 6	Genoa	6 3	6 6
Alexandria	5 0	5 6	Gibraltar	6 3	6 4½
Alexandrofsky	2 6		Glasgow		6 9
Algiers	5 6	6 8	Gothenburg	4 6	5 3
Almeria		8 6	Halifax		5 1½
Ancona	7 6	7 0	Hamburg	5 0	6 0
Amsterdam	4 2		Havannah		7 9
Bahia	15 0	13 6	Havre	5 6	6 0
Barbadoes		8 0	Holtenau		7 6
Barcelona	7 6	10 0	Hongkong		20 0
Bari	8 0	9 0	Huelva	6 0	5 9
Bastia		7 3	Iquique		17 6
Bayonne	5 9	4 9	Jamaica		6 9
Bilbao	4 10½	4 10½	Kertch		17 6
Bombay	9 0	9 7½	Kiel	5 6	6 0
Bordeaux	4 3	5 0	Kjoge	5 0
Boulogne	4 3	5 3	Korsoer	5 0
Brest		4 4½	Kustenjende		5 9
Brindisi		5 6	La Rochelle		6 6
Bremerhaven		5 3	Las Palmas		6 6
Buenos Ayres		16 6	Leghorn	6 3	6 0
Cadiz	6 0	7 0	Libau	4 9
Caen	5 6	6 3	Lisbon	6 6	5 9
Cagliari	7 0	6 3	London	5 0	5 0
Callao		15 3	Lubeck	5 0	7 6
Cape Good Hope	15 0	14 6	Madeira		7 0
Cape Town	17 6		Malta	5 0	4 3
Cape Verd		6 9	Malaga	6 6	8 6
Carthagena	8 6	9 3	Marseilles	6 9	6 8
Catania	5 9	7 3	Martinique	12 6	10 6
Cette	5 6	8 6	Maritius		17 3
Charente		5 0	Messina	6 3	6 0
Cherbourg	5 3	4 9	Milliaza	7 3
Cienfuegos		16 0	Montevideo		14 0
Civita Vecchia	5 6	6 3	Nakskov	5 0
Colombo		13 0	Naples	6 6	7 1½
Constantinople	6 3	6 6	Newhaven		4 6
Copenhagen	4 4½	5 6	Nieu Diep	5 4½	4 0
Corfu	7 9		Newfairwater	4 7½	5 1½
Corunna	6 7½		North Norway	4 1½
Cronstadt	3 9	6 0	Nyborg		5 0
Danube		9 3	Odessa	5 0	6 6
Demerara	14 0		Oporto	6 6	6 3
Dieppe	4 6	5 0	Oran	6 3	7 9
Fairwater	4 6	7 0	Padang		16 6
Gefle	4 9		Palermo	7 3	7 0

Rates of freight for coal and iron—Continued.

	Newcastle or Sunderland.	Newport, Cardiff, or Swansea.		Newcastle or Sunderland.	Newport, Cardiff, or Swansea.
				s. d.	s. d.
Panama		20 3	Santos	18 0	23 0
Para		15 0	Savona	5 9	5 9
Penang		16 0	Seville	6 9	7 3
Pernambuco		15 0	Singapore		12 0
Pillau	4 6		Smyrna	6 6	8 6
Piræus	6 9	6 3	Spezzia	7 0	6 3½
Plymouth	6 0	4 6	Stettin	4 9
Portland		4 6	Stockholm	4 3	5 4½
Puerto Rico	16 0	18 6	Sulina	8 3	8 6
Port Said		6 6	Swinemunde	4 3	5 3
Reggio	7 3	9 3	Syra	6 3	7 0
Reval	4 9		Tarragona	9 6	10 0
Rio Grande do Sul		33 6	Teneriffe		8 0
Rio de Janeiro		14 3	Tonning	50 0
Rochefort	4 10½	6 6	Torre Annunziata	6 8	6 9
Rochester	3 6	3 7½	Trelleborg	4 0
Rosario		24 6	Trieste	8 1½	5 6
Rouen	7 0	7 6	Trinidad	14 6	10 7
Sables	5 9	5 6	Trouville	5 0
St. Catherines		22 6	Tuborg	5 0
St. Jago de Cuba		9 6	Udevalla (rails)		8 0
St. Lucia		7 6	Valencia	8 0	9 0
St. Malo	5 3	6 3	Valparaiso	18 0
St. Nazaire	6 6	5 6	Venice	7 6	8 0
St. Petersburg	4 6		Vigo	6 6	6 0
St. Paul de Loando		17 6	Wismar	4 0
San Francisco		12 0

[Extract from letter from a prominent firm of importers.]

NEW YORK, December 11, 1893.

In regard to the freights you ask for, would say the average freight on iron ore from Bilbao and other points in Spain is 5*s.* per ton to all ports here. The freight on pig iron varies from nothing to 5*s.* per ton. The freight on beams is 10*s.* per ton at the outside, and have been brought here from Antwerp for 5*s.* The freight on rails is very low, and can always be gotten for half the amount on beams, say 5*s.* per ton. The freight from Liverpool and foreign points to Galveston, Charleston, Savannah, and New Orleans is governed by the return freight, and you might say the same of San Francisco, but we have had wire rods shipped at Antwerp and taken around to Puget Sound (a new town of Everett, where we have a nail factory) for 10*s.* and 6*d.* per gross ton, a full cargo of 2,000 tons. The average freight to San Francisco from foreign ports is 20*s.* for small lots; if you charter a vessel you can get as cheap a rate as we have had to Puget Sound.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I was so greatly edified by the arguments which, floated by his logic and elevated by his rhetoric, were scattered about this Chamber about this time on yesterday by my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], the leader of the Republican minority on this committee, that I could hardly restrain myself until this moment from uncorking some of the oil of consolation I had ready to pour into the wounds of which he was complaining. I could hardly sleep when I thought of the tears bedewing his pillow as he dreamed of the disaster awaiting the iron and wool interests of his beloved State of the two peninsulas. I am sure he will thank me when I assure him that the only trouble about the iron mines to which he referred so feelingly yesterday is that there has been found in the Lake Superior region in these United States of America, in the great Messaba Range, iron ore which they are now digging up with steam shovels and throwing direct into the cars.

So that all of his great fleet upon the lakes will continue to prosper; iron ore will become cheaper than ever before; Michigan and the country adjacent to Lake Superior will continue to supply the people of this country, and nobody will be hurt except the people who unfortunately have invested in other iron mines, which new American iron mines have competed out of prosperous working. And if the gentleman had but thought for a moment, sir, he would have remembered that even in consideration of those mines, which he now mourns as about to be driven from activity, the freight from the seaboard westward is such that if the ore from Cuba and from Spain were landed free of duty, for nothing, at the ports of New York, Philadelphia, or Baltimore, it still would be unable to compete.

I was almost inclined to believe, as he spoke so feelingly of the wool industry, that there might be something in the trouble that he so strenuously predicted. But, sir, if it is true that the standard wool of that part of the country, or even of West Virginia and Ohio, is to-day bringing, as he states it is, and I have no doubt he is correct, 25 cents a pound, then he is to be congratulated upon the fact that the steady decline in the price of wool we have had ever since the McKinley bill was passed has at last come to an end, and that we may look forward for a rise instead of a decrease in the price.

A MEMBER. The price has increased two cents and a half now.

Mr. WARNER. Exactly, and the gentleman will feel better, I am sure, when he hears of it. He referred to the fact that we had had a great slaughter of sheep throughout the United States. I had the pleasure on this floor two years ago to quote from the report of the Republican Secretary of Agriculture, showing that there had been no increase under the McKinley bill in the prosperity of the sheep-growing industry in any State in this country, except where such increase had been had in the raising of sheep for mutton instead of sheep for wool; and I take it that a part, at least, of the slaughter to which he so feelingly referred is an evidence of the extent to which McKinley prosperity has fed us with more and better, and I wish I could say, with cheaper mutton.

It is also a fact, sir, which it may be pertinent to cite in this connection, that irrespective of the extent to which our wool product has been increased in the amount taken from pelts of slaughtered sheep, there has been cut from the backs of sheep in this country more wool during the past year than in any other year of the last nine or ten; showing, if my friend's figures are correct, that instead of bemoaning a bad condition of the wool-growing industry, he should be congratulating us that, with the prospects before the country for the past year of somewhat more of use in this country for the wool products of this country, the wool-growing industry has thrived.

THE HEARINGS BEFORE THE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE.

I am sorry, sir, that such pleasant tasks as these are not to be the only ones upon which I must engage to-day; for, sir, I have completed the weary perusal of the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee, and as I waded through them I have been more and more impressed by the humiliation of knowing that such was the representation or misrepresentation that the manufacturers of this country had permitted to be made before a committee of Congress as to their intents and their wishes! From page after page of that record the white hand of wealth reaches out from its carriage door to clutch for a greater share of the pittance of the poor. On page after page of that record, fraud stalks so thinly disguised that the horned head shows above, and the cloven foot sticks out beneath; and when you have gotten through with that perusal, if you feel as I did, you long to go out into the street and touch elbows with professional men, with carters, with street car drivers, with the great army of self-respecting, self-supporting labor, who are not here asking Congress to tax other people to hire them to carry on a business which they swear, to start with, is unprofitable. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

"The beggars are coming to town"—mighty few in rags, mighty few in shags, but mostly in velvet gowns. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] Look at them. Here is the Pennsylvania Salt Manufacturing Company, which comes and tells you that it has built up a business in thirty years, involving six millions present investment, and 65 acres of buildings, and then gives you a list of every single article that they manufacture, showing that it is sold here 40 per cent higher than other people can buy it abroad; and then asks you to continue that tax upon our manufactures in order to protect that thirty-year old infant industry. Why, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] referred to the first tariff act passed by the United States Congress, he recalled what I might have otherwise remembered, that it started off with the preamble to the effect that, "Whereas somebody has been doing something in Pennsylvania," etc. Well, now, Mr. Chairman, after an hundred years, it seems to me it is time to start out with another preamble, "Whereas the people of the whole United States want to stop supporting Pennsylvania." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We have the ultramarine-makers coming before the Committee on Ways and Means and actually offering as an inducement for the imposition of a higher tariff upon their wares, that if we will give them so high a tariff that they can continue to supply the American market at 11 cents a pound, they will contract to sell so much abroad at 9 cents a pound as to double their product and give more employment to American labor. You have the California quicksilver miners coming before the committee and meeting, right there in the committee room, the color men of New York to whom they have charged 10 cents a pound more for their quicksilver than the rate at which they are exporting it from New York docks to supply the color-makers of Europe.

You have Mr. Wharton, the representative of the great iron and steel combine, with more frankness than men generally in this connection, who admits upon the record that they did have a "combine"—in his mild way, "something approaching" an arrangement to regulate the output and maintain the price. That gentleman proceeds to explain as a reason for not disturbing settled conditions that it takes millions of money and years of time to build up an iron or steel plant; and then, within the next half hour, he insists upon it that it does not make much difference if too high a duty is put on, since there is nothing to stop anybody from going into competition.

He also admits upon the record that the workmen in the iron and steel industries are better cared for and better paid in Europe than they are in this country; and then caps the climax by appealing to the committee in a separate communication after his first hearing, asking that the duty on ore be reduced. That is for the benefit of the Bethlehem Iron Company and the Pennsylvania Steel Company, in which he is a large stockholder. You have heard the words of the poet on the blessing that was asked by the man whose charity as well as his piety commenced and ended at home:

O Lord, bless me and my son John,
His wife, and my wife;
Us four, and no more.

It ought to have been signed "Wharton." [Laughter.]

The tin-plate Ananias appeared before us [laughter], and after he had gone through with the same old, old story about how the Britisher had raised the price of tin plate upon us every time that we did not have a tariff to protect us, and how it is much lower now on account of the tariff, he was forced to put it on the record that the price of tin plate had steadily declined during the time that we did not have any protection, that it reached its lowest period just before the McKinley act went into effect, and that it had been getting higher ever since under American "protection," that was to bring down the price of tin plate.

In cutlery a gentleman appeared before the committee and stated, and I have no doubt stated the truth, that knives could be bought in Germany just as good as those he sold for $3 at less than $1.40; and then he asked you to protect him, on the ground that he had given his labor an increase in wages of between 5 and 33 per cent. Now, I happen to know something about that very wage increase. He was one of those men who when the claim was made that the McKinley bill had not resulted in any increase of wages advertised himself as an example of the employers who had raised wages on account of the McKinley bill. I sent a special agent, a trustworthy man, for whose statement I am willing to be responsible, directly to the town in which this great wage increase had taken place and asked him to secure me the facts. Here they are:

This is a concern manufacturing pocket and table knives, employing from three hundred to four hundred men. After Mr. Cleveland's election, or sometime in the early part of 1885, there was a general reduction of wages all through this concern amounting to from 7 to 10 per cent, more nearly the latter. In the fall of 1885 the works entered upon a season of activity such as they had not known for years before. During the campaign of 1888 it was freely promised by the management that if Mr. Harrison was elected a substantial increase of wages would immediately follow. However, no steps were taken for a long time to fulfill the promise. Meanwhile the men growled very audibly and the whole town talked about it. But in April, 1892, the management announced that the increase would be made, and called in the workingmen individually and arranged the new scale with each one. The new rate of wages, however, affected only the pieceworkers, that is, about two hundred and twenty-five out of the whole number of employés.

This increase is estimated to average about 7 per cent for the number affected by it, which would be equivalent to something like 3½ per cent for the entire establishment. A further advance was obtained three or four weeks ago by the grinders in the establishment, numbering about thirty, who are members of a very close and powerful union, and who demanded an advance, threatening to strike if it were not granted. How much they actually got is not known, as it is kept secret by the union, but it has been said that they demanded an advance of 12½ per cent and compromised on an advance of 10 per cent.

If delaying until this Presidential campaign the fulfillment of promises made in the last one, and then coming to time only when workmen have arranged to strike or when forced by labor organization, is McKinley generosity, here is a case.

The leading maker of metallic bedsteads, claiming that there are five or six hundred persons employed in this industry, wants a duty of 45 per cent left to protect his labor; and illustrates the happy lot of his workmen by citing as an illustration one who last year hired a cottage by the seashore for the recreation of his family during the summer season, and this summer took them on a trip to Europe, and wound up by admitting that the price of bedsteads was falling faster in England than here.

The cane sugar advocates of a sugar bounty admit that if they do ultimately supply the country, as they promise, it will result in the Government paying $80,000,000 a year to encourage the cultivation of an area of less than 60 by 50 miles.

From Western New York and Pennsylvania come farmers who believe that growing tobacco is so much more desirable for the community than raising food that they should be hired to do it at the expense of those who manufacture and use their product.

The Suffolk County farmers have asked that the wage-earners of New York be made to pay more for their potatoes and cabbage; and to cap the climax ask that the farmers of the rest of the country be compelled to buy Suffolk County cabbage seed, whether they like it or not.

The maccaroni makers of New York City are so patriotic that they want to tax their neighbors' food 2 cents per pound, while they themselves are selling it in the West Indies and Central America to the poor people there at free-trade prices.

The makers of fast-black hosiery, who have built up a flourishing industry without any protection whatever, beg for protection now, for fear that foreigners will improve processes faster than themselves.

From Waterford, N. Y., comes the knit-shirt maker, who says that the foreigner will sell for $2.25 a shirt "as good" as he sells for $4, and that it would be a great injustice if our people were allowed to get from any one else than himself just as good clothes as they have now at half the price.

The oil-cloth makers, having procured an exorbitant tariff on the ground that their printing was done by hand, and then having turned out their men in favor of machines, now beg that they receive for money and machinery the "protection" that three years since they asked for flesh and blood.

Mr. Theodore Justice, a wool-broker of Philadelphia, asks us to tax the American people so that the railroads can get 3 cents a pound freight and he 2 cents a pound commission for selling dirty wool, which he claims is only worth 1 cent a pound. He tells a pleasant romance about our prices always being double that of foreign wool when we had adequate protection, and how wool declined in price only 3 per cent in the United States, while it declined 26 per cent abroad—conveniently forgetting that every farmer here knew wool had declined from 10 to 20 per cent each year since the McKinley bill took effect; that wool had failed to rise here in 1889, though it rose abroad from 6 to 10 cents, until it was higher there than it was here; and that in the circular of Mr. Justice's own firm for December, 1889, he informed his customers that Australian wools were worth abroad more than 30 cents a pound unwashed.

From Yonkers come the most extensive carpet manufacturers in this country, who have used their advantages under patents, just expired, to monopolize the American market, and who now want the tariff kept up in order that they may continue to charge what they please here, though they admit that they are arranging to market their goods outside at free-trade prices—and, at the same time, explaining that they do not want free wool, because they use so little of it that it would be giving an advantage to those who make better carpets and use two and one-half times as much wool to the yard.

From New York come the note-paper and envelope men, who admit that they have flourished and built up their business with no protection whatever, but who urge most logically that they be given some, so that they can share the plunder of which heretofore they have had none.

Our pearl-button friends now appear and admit that the McKinley duties are too high; do not deny that their old stories of convict labor in Austria were false; admit that just as soon as they could after the McKinley bill had passed they got their work done by convict labor here; but on their assertion that they are telling the truth now, and will behave themselves in the future, they ask for a prohibitory duty until, as they admit they will do, they can improve their machinery so as to turn adrift most of those now employed.

The climax of cheek is reached by the coal men of Virginia, West Virginia, and Maryland, who ask that the Government make the whole seaboard—Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Charleston, Savannah, San Francisco, and Portland—pay more for its coal, and claim that this is all for the sake of labor. On cross-examination they admit that it costs no more to mine coal in their own mines than in Canada; that the total amount their miners receive is less than one-half the present duty; that they are exporting largely abroad, even to Canada itself; that it is the railroads that are really interested; that these latter are carrying coal for export cheaper than for our home consumption, and that the highest price of all is charged the unfortunate people who live near the mines and right on their own line, and hence are absolutely at their mercy.

The North Carolina kaolin men urge that their clay is so good that they ought to have a tariff to teach us the good taste to use it, and the New Mexico wool-growers urge that their wool is so dirty and worthless that they need a tariff to make us use it. [Laughter.] The Virginia coal miners say that coal is so close to the ground and easy to get out that we ought to have a tariff; and the Missouri lead miners say that their lead is so far down and so hard to get out that they must have a tariff. [Laughter.] The cement men want us to help them because they are so near by, and the borax men want aid because they are so far off. The sugar men who four years ago rolled their eyes in holy horror at a sugar bounty, while they pleaded for a revenue tariff on sugar, are now urging that we retain a bounty that is all expenditure and no revenue. The Alabama iron ore owners want to cut off return cargoes of Cuban ore, and thus tax the Alabama coal export trade with freight both ways; and Virginia coal men propose to make cotton pay double freight from the whole South and Southwest in order to keep them from getting coal cheap; and the National Maccaroni Company asks for a tariff, not to raise the wages of American labor—as it expressly explains—but to employ the foreign labor that may come in.

Such a muster of selfishness and hypocrisy has never before disgraced the halls of the Capitol since the McKinley bill was framed; and, seen against such a background, a halo floats about the head and a saintly glory beams from the face of that honest silversmith of Ephesus who pleaded with his fellow craftsmen to keep out the Christian religion in order that they might retain the profitable trade that they had developed in silver idols and shrines.

WHAT THE REAL MANUFACTURERS WANT.

But, sir, I wish here and now to enter a protest on the behalf of the real industries of the country against the forging of their names and the perversion of their views by the self-appointed agents who have rushed forward to misrepresent them. My district, sir, is one of the leading manufacturing districts of the country; and of manufacturing establishments within it, as to which I have had opportunity for special inquiry, there are at least 250. With each of these, since the general tenor of the Wilson bill was known, I have corresponded in order to ascertain just what were the interests of this most important portion of my constituents. The largest single interest in this district is perhaps that of piano-making; and from not a single one, so far as concerns the special interests of that business, has aught but approval come; though in more than one case the proprietors are Republicans and protectionists so strongly wedded to the faith, that they are willing their own business, about which they do know and as to which they know the tariff does not help it, should be taxed in order to benefit somebody else in some way, they can not explain how.

Next in order perhaps come the wall-paper manufactories. All of them but one are in a trust to keep up prices and monopolize the American market. The one man outside who is fighting the trust is the largest manufacturer in that line of the trade, and employs more men and on the average pays better wages than any other. He writes me that the Wilson bill will benefit the wall-paper business by cheapening its raw materials; and that we need not hesitate to enact absolute free trade so far as wall paper is concerned. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The brewers, possibly, are the next most important employers of labor—perhaps even more so than some one of those I have already named; and from no one of them have I received other than commendation of the Wilson bill in its effect upon their business. In my district is one of the greatest carpet manufactories of the country, employing thousands of hands, and they are protesting most vigorously against the passage of this bill.

I have, however, looked somewhat into the matter, and though I frankly admit that their industry has been discriminated against as compared with the outrageous protection given to the woolen industry of New England, yet I firmly believe that if the Wilson bill is passed there will be more wage-earners than ever before employed at manufacturing carpets in my district, and that if this is not the case it will be because—as it is reported—that the firm have already arranged to go out of business rather than lose the chance of disposing of real estate whose value has become too great to be profitably used in that business when better accommodations can be secured at half the money. There are extensive jute and flax mills in my district. The protection the Wilson bill proposes to leave them is totally inadequate when compared with that accorded to New England textile manufacturers in general; and here is perhaps the one case, unless it is in the line of fine harness, where, though I do not believe it will happen, I have no doubt of the sincerity of the employers' fear that some lines at least of their business may be crippled by the passage of the bill in its present shape.

I could go on, sir, for a whole afternoon in thus running over the bead-roll of the American industries that are scattered in all parts of my district; but the result would be the same. In the majority of the cases the Wilson bill offers them decided advantages as compared with present conditions. In the remaining instances, where the gain to the country is certain, the loss to the few exceptions is problematical. But the almost universal feature of the correspondence that has been showered upon me—the word that I receive from every quarter—is that prompt action is most essential to the prosperity of my district, and delay the worst of disasters that is feared. The one demand upon which all are agreed is that we shall as promptly as possible put into law the Democratic policy in regard to tariff.

The manufacturers of my district, sir, Republicans as well as Democrats, have almost universally depended, not upon the tariff, but upon their business tact, their intelligence, and enterprise to make a living. Many of them have wagered upon Republican success by investing in directions in which they know they must depend upon a protective tariff. But they are disposed neither to keep on whining at the result of a year ago last November nor to expect the Democratic party to pay their bets against it. They want to know what we propose to do; and they will accept it joyously in most cases, resignedly in some, determinedly in all, ready to do their best to increase the prosperity of the industries in which they are engaged, to give more and more employment at better wages to the workingmen of the district, and to do more and more every year in the future, as they have done more and more every year in the past, to make of their section of the great city of New York an honor to the country, whether under Democratic or Republican rule. They ask no favors; they expect tariff reduction; all of them want to be put as quickly as possible in such a position that they can safely go ahead and develop whatever of opportunity the future may have in store for them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

WHAT WAGE-EARNERS WANT.

It may, however, be said, and rightly said, that their interests are not those which should be first consulted, and that the great mass of the people, the wage-earners, or those dependent upon them for support, should first be consulted. Well, Mr. Chairman, they have been consulted. There is not a part of the Union where labor organizations and mutual aid associations are more numerous, or more effective, or more intelligently directed than in my district. There is no place where every economic question connected with the effect of protection or free trade upon the demand and the reward for labor has been more fully discussed than among the wage-earners for whom it is my privilege to speak. And they, sir, with even greater unanimity than that shown by their employers—for among the latter are some who still claim that their advocacy of protection is for the sake of their wage-earners, but among these very wage-earners there is no one who believes such nonsense—the busy hands and the active brains of my district are eagerly waiting for the time when this bill shall become a law, and urgently praying that this be as quickly as possible. If you will only put it upon the pages at once you need bother about nothing else. We have free trade in labor now—the one thing that they have to sell, and they know perfectly well that the nearer we get to free trade in the goods they make and that they and others have to buy, the greater amount of these goods will be used, the greater will be the number of men required to make them, the more steady will be their employment, and the higher their wages.

INDUSTRIAL PAUPERS.

When there is presented to them a plea for some pauper industry they have a way of looking at it, sir, which has been as interesting to me as it has always been conclusive to them. They are acquainted, sir, with the workings of our immigrant law. They see the squadrons—even regiments—coming down the gang plank to compete with them in their several callings. They see the immigrant inspectors taking notes of one after another, and making step aside from those who are allowed to land those who for one reason or another are suspected of being unable to take care of themselves and liable to become a charge upon the country. They know what then takes place, and they approve of it. If the intending immigrant is not able to convince the officials that he is not likely to become a public charge he is unceremoniously packed home by the same steamer that brought him, to continue to curse the land which has endeavored to dump him upon us. It will not do for him to say, "Why, sirs, I have heard that you want men to develop this great country, and if you will only tax yourselves to give me, say one-half or two-thirds of what is necessary to support me, I will try to earn the rest of my livelihood."

No, sir; the only condition upon which a human being is allowed to land in this country is that he shall show to the satisfaction of those who are put at our ports to ascertain that very fact, that he is able to support himself and will probably do so. Not that he shall earn half his living or three-quarters of it, but that he shall presumably earn all his living; certainly that he shall not start out with the prospect of being a public charge. And that, sir, is just the sort of a law that my constituents approve. They are willing to go to any reasonable liberality in permitting to come here and compete with them or rival them in building up this great country every self-respecting man capable of self-support under our standards of civilization. But they want no other; they will tolerate no deadbeat immigration. And to them, sir, it seems that this great principle ought to be carried still further. It seems to them that when a capitalist, a man who has money to invest, comes here and asks permission to go into business, the one condition upon which he should be allowed to do it is that he can and will pay his own way. They have no sympathy, sir, with the capitalist who offers to condescend to do business in this country provided this country will tax itself in order to enable him to make profits. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

They don't believe, sir, in deadbeat industries any more than they do in deadbeat men; and if there is any one thing that is more contemptible in their eyes than a poor wreck of humanity endeavoring to drag along existence at the expense of his fellow-men, it is a dead dollar trying to earn dividends for its owner out of the taxation of its fellow-citizens. They know, sir, that it is not profitable to increase the number of our citizens by admitting those among us whose support will be a constant burden to others. They have never been able to see, sir, why it was not just as unprofitable to admit industries which start out with the assertion that they are not self-supporting and propose to become a public charge from the beginning. They believe, sir, that as to nine-tenths, say ninety-nine one-hundredths, of the industries that are now in operation here, the impetus given them by cheaper raw materials, by greater opportunities for export, will so increase their prosperity as to make immaterial what becomes of the insignificant number, which on inspection turn out to have been helpless paupers and a drag upon our general prosperity. They are not frightened, sir, by the threats that this or the other industry will leave our shores or discharge its workmen. They have heard just that sort of stuff before, and they have seen such predictions falsified by the event. If, however, in some cases it shall turn out to be as those who are engaged in them fear, if whenever the support of taxation upon others is withdrawn from them they find that they can not make a living here, then all that workingmen of my district have to say is this: "If you are going away, go and God speed to you, for the quicker you go the better we will be off; if you are going to die here, die, and we will plant flowers over your grave; for your room is worth more than your company." [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

ATTEMPTS TO DEADBEAT THE SEABOARD.

There is another respect, sir, in which opposition to this bill has attracted considerable attention among my constituents. They have seen one after another of the protectionist leaders come before the Ways and Means Committee and avowedly ask that this bill be defeated in order that our seaboard, and especially the eastern seaboard, and especially New York City, may be deprived of the advantages that God has given her and that they, my constituents, have been aiding to improve. They know perfectly well how they come to be on Manhattan Island, where there is neither a lumber forest nor an iron mine, nor a coal mine, nor an acre of ground that produces aught of what they manufacture. They know it is because at that point, on account of its facilities for commerce, can be most cheaply and promptly marshaled the materials with which they work, and that from that point, on account of these same facilities for commerce, the products of their labor can be most promptly and advantageously marketed all over the world. They see the quicksilver miners of California demanding a duty of 10 cents per pound in order to enable them to charge the New York color-makers just that much more than they charge those of England and Europe, and they tell me not to let them thus levy blackmail upon New York City.

They see the coal miners of West Virginia deliberately urging that unless the tariff be kept up our manufacturers will be able to get their coal more cheaply from Canada than they do now from West Virginia; and again their message is to me, "Don't let the West Virginia coal men deadbeat New York." They have heard that the iron-ore producers of Pennsylvania and Alabama have asked that New York be made to pay tribute to them in the higher price of every bit of raw material she now uses in her great manufactures of iron, and they say to me, "Don't you let self-supporting New York industries be taxed one penny to build up beggars elsewhere." They see one contemptible plea after another filed by men who admit that they have a natural monopoly of the interior of the country, and who now come begging Congress to cut off the advantages that our forefathers gained for us by settling near the seaboard; and they say to me, "Don't you connive at, don't you permit, legislation that will tend to shut up the harbor and port of New York." We are not alone in this regard. Boston and Providence and New Haven and Philadelphia to an increasing extent and Baltimore and Charleston and Savannah and New Orleans and Galveston and San Francisco and the Northwest Pacific ports are all of them explicitly mentioned in these hearings as sections of the country, the natural advantages of which those who have appeared in opposition to this bill propose deliberately to destroy.

It can not even be claimed that this policy will help the interior of the country. No one is so innocent as to believe that in the hands of men who thus avow such motives, the part of our country which is not by the seaboard will be safe from their extortion, except to the extent that rivalry in their own markets may compel them to be reasonable. For this, sir, if for no other reason, it seems to me absolutely essential to that part of our country which is within a few hundred miles from the seaboard, and scarcely less so to our whole country, that by giving greater freedom to trade we give less opportunity to monopoly, whether in the interior of our country or at the seaboard.

THE DEFECTS OF THE WILSON BILL.

It must not be understood, however, that I am in favor of all the provisions of this bill. As to the inconsistencies I have referred to, while I trust some of them may yet be remedied, yet they involve questions of detail rather than of principle. Important as they are to individuals whose interests I shall take occasion to represent in every fair way, if my colleagues differ with me in opinion I can still respect their intent.

But it is impossible to speak thus leniently of all the defects of this bill. As to some of them, if any one feels worse than I do that they find place in a bill submitted by a Democratic committee to a Democratic House, it is because his capacity for grief is greater than is mine.

WOOLENS.

In the first place, sir, it is proposed to give New England the relief that she ought to have in free raw materials, free coal, free iron, free lumber, free wool, free trade, or a reduced tariff upon nearly every material that she uses; and yet it is proposed to leave upon her principal industry, that of wool manufacturing, duties which are not merely scandalous in amount, but far beyond those which upon any consistent theory, even of protection to labor, can be for a moment defended. The duties proposed are generally 40 per cent upon the classes of woolen goods most used. As to all of these, with free raw materials given them by this very bill, a revenue tariff of 25 per cent—under which I believe a larger revenue would be collected than under a prohibitive rate—would be most generous protection.

Not merely this, sir, but the claim that the higher rates suggested will produce more revenue is not even made, while even from a protection standpoint higher duties than 25 per cent can not be justified, and can not even be argued for, except upon abandonment of nearly every economic position they have of late so stoutly defended. I will advert to but one, though a conclusive proof of this. The American Cotton and Wool Reporter is not merely one of the greatest—perhaps the leading—trade journals in the country, but it is the undisputed organ of the wool trade. It has long been discussing this question of the rate of duty, and its most complete presentation of the case was made by a well-posted gentleman by the name of Edward D. Page, whose article was so well received that it was afterward reprinted and given wide pamphlet circulation. His first position, which he supported by facts which no protectionist has attempted to question, was that the wool manufacturers of this country would prefer the total abolition of the specific duties, provided that they could have their raw material free and an actual net protection of 25 per cent—and, by the way, this statement of his is quoted almost verbatim from the manifesto of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers addressed to the Revenue Commission in 1866.

Mr. Page also explains that it is simply ridiculous to claim that this percentage would not have more than compensated for the wage rate of labor. He, however, argues that they should have a higher rate of protection, and the following are the points which he makes in support of it—each one damning by its advocacy the cause in which it is urged. His first position is that—

> Manufacturers are now in the position in which a child would be if, having been brought up by a rich father in the belief that a knowledge of arithmetic was unnecessary, he was suddenly and without preparation compelled to earn his living as a clerk. I fear that many of them do not realize even now how much improvement and economy is to be accomplished by making their goods from a mixture of the stocks most exactly suited to the qualities the goods are to possess, instead of the makeshifts which our meager market has hithertofore afforded. * * * It can not be denied that the virtue of prohibition of the use of two-thirds of the wools of the American manufacturer during thirty years of tariff discrimination has deprived him of the knowledge necessary to success in this important branch of the manufacture.

This is just what tariff reformers have all along claimed. This is just what the protected manufacturers have all along denied; and now, admitting that they have taxed us for a generation against our protest, with no better result to themselves than to make them incapable of doing business, they propose that we shall compensate them for the injury they have thus done themselves and us as well. There is no pretense of protection to labor here.

Mr. Page also suggests that the mill owners are under a disadvantage on account—> of the taxes which mill-owners have been obliged to pay, not to the Government or to the people, but to the proprietors of American mines and steel furnaces.

Precisely what tariff reformers have all the time said. But these wool manufacturers of New England have constantly asserted that we were mistaken, and that under protection the American public, including themselves, were being more cheaply served by manufactured goods than would have been the case under free trade. They now admit that they were not, and that we told the truth, but coolly ask that an additional 5 cents be added to the profits which they are hereafter to receive in order to recoup to them their share of the taxation which against our protest they forced upon us all, and which they propose that we shall still continue to pay.

But Mr. Page is not through. He urges that—> a third adverse condition is the result, not so much of the tariff, as of the condition of mind that makes class legislation possible.

And he actually proposes that another 5 cents be added to the protection upon woolen goods in order to make up to the woolen manufacturers the damage caused by the state of mind in which they have kept so much of the country for so long a time. It is these three items, in addition to the 25 per cent, which it is admitted is far more than sufficient to make up the difference in labor cost, that the manufacturers of New England have asked that we be taxed to pay—5 per cent because they have grown so lazy while living upon our savings that we ought to support them while they are learning to work; 5 per cent more in order to recoup to them the proportion which they have paid of taxation which they and their coadjutors have extorted from us; 5 per cent more on account of the state of mind into which by their misrepresentation and demoralization of Government functions they have gotten themselves together with the rest of the country. This, added to the 25 per cent, makes 40 per cent, and indicates pretty fairly the sources from which have come the suggestions that the Ways and Means Committee have adopted in reference to the woolen schedule, and the kind of arguments by which alone it can be defended.

I know, sir, that there are men on this floor, too, who tell us that if the Wilson bill is passed some wool-manufacturing establishments will fail. But I have heard such things before. You will remember that during the campaign of 1888 our protectionist friends made great capital of the fact that after having been in bad condition for many years, the campaign year in which the Mills bill was being discussed witnessed the failure of fifty-seven concerns in the wool trade, involving liabilities of $3,637,000. We were told that all this came from the fact that the mere discussion of the question had scared the woolen business to death, but that if Mr. Harrison were elected, general confidence would take charge of the demoralized battalions, and that every wheel of industry would be set running. In my own district, sir, within a few days after election had shown that protection was safe for years to come, the wages were reduced in the one establishment employing the most workers in wool, and within one year from that date there had gone into liquidation seventy-two concerns, with liabilities of $10,500,000; all of which showed how much more damaging it was to the wool business to have confidence restored under Harrison than to be scared to death by the Mills bill.

Of course I do not mean to claim that the election of Mr. Harrison did this. The trouble lay far deeper, and is the trouble that is now spreading dry rot amid so large a proportion of the woolen mills of New England; that if a committee of the manufacturers themselves were to take the matter in hand they would close up at once, whether the Wilson bill or the McKinley bill is to rule, a large proportion of the mills on the ground that as business concerns they have no right to existence. The trouble with this industry is that it has become one too largely run by grandsons, but to which the grandfathers, long ago of blessed memory, contributed the last ounce of business enterprise that made it a prosperous one. The trouble is that while wages are not so much higher in Europe as to justify even a 10 per cent tariff on the total cost of the goods, there are too many cases in which a sinecure treasurer, a member of, and nominated by, the family that owns a large proportion of the stock, is paid a large salary which he does not earn, and in which those owning smaller blocks are permitted to load the accounts of the company by similar charges. The cases are too many where plants, which sound sense would not have permitted to exist, have been erected at enormous cost, and instead of being charged off to profit and loss, are still held as the basis over which it is attempted to stretch dividends that they do not earn.

No tariff can help troubles like these. If it were raised to 100 per cent it would simply encourage them to hold on a little while longer, and involve them a good deal deeper in disaster when they found that their shrewder neighbors had forestalled their opportunity. There is no rivalry more demoralizing to legitimate business than that of bankrupt concerns like these. There is no employment more discouraging to the laboring man than that furnished by such institutions, just enough to keep him alive and hold him from leaving to better himself, and not enough to keep him prosperous or to afford decent support for his family. The quicker their demoralizing existence is ended the better it will be for every good business man, for every competent workman, and for every self-supporting American citizen. You can not adjust the tariff so as to save them. Even if you could they are not worth saving. It is simply impudent that we should be asked to try it. Twenty-five per cent upon the great mass of woolen goods is so much more than enough to make up for the total amount of labor involved that nothing but the fact that we need revenue as badly as we do, and that such is the rate which will probably produce the most revenue, can for a moment justify the extortion; and no consideration of which I am aware can for a moment excuse our attempting to go further, as is proposed by this bill. And when it is proposed, as this bill proposes, to give New England cloth-manufacturers free raw materials and 40 per cent duty on their product, and to give New York clothiers raw materials taxed 40 per cent and but 45 per cent duty on their finished product, the mere statement of such a proposition is enough to impeach it.

Of course, I understand that the duty being on the whole product really gives a margin for protection in each case far beyond that indicated by the figures. But after every allowance is made the case is one of the greatest favoritism of New England manufacturers against the great merchant tailoring trade of New York City, the most important industry of that metropolis, the one in which more men are employed than in all the woolen mills of New England combined.

SUGAR BOUNTY.

Again, sir, I note that it is proposed to continue the bounty now paid to the sugar-planters for a term of eight years under a gradually decreasing schedule. I am unaware, sir, of any principle upon which we can ask that the farmers of this country shall be taxed in order to hire sugar-planters to do business. I am not aware, sir, of anything so especially elevating or moral about the business of sugar-raising, when compared with that of wheat or cotton raising, as to justify our taxing all engaged in these great industries in order to hire men to raise sugar; and as a Democrat, sir, I have never seen any justification for our Government taxing its people to hire anybody to do anything outside of the Government service. If to the offensiveness of a bounty system in general it were possible to add, this has been done in the features which characterize this.

I shall omit mention of the beet-sugar and sorghum-sugar and the maple-sugar steals, which are too insignificant to be mentioned in the same day with the cane sugar atrocity. During the year ending June 30, 1893, we paid in sugar bounties $9,375,000, of which nearly $8,600,000 was paid to 535 men in Louisiana alone, an average of between sixteen and seventeen thousand dollars to each—this when our Treasury is bankrupt, when this Administration has been put into power upon a promise to relieve the people from taxation. I know it is proposed to mitigate it. But how? Even if the production did not increase—and no one who is posted has claimed that it will not do so for the next four or five years—the result of this bill, if passed in its present form, will be to give $35,000,000 to less than 600 men—for it is not proposed to encourage new investments in expectation of the bounty—nearly all of them residing in a small portion of a single State, thus putting the Democratic seal upon that much of a Republican crime that we have universally denounced, and this at a time when we are searching every highway and byway for additional revenue, and have pending before us a report of the Secretary of the Treasury advising us of a deficit of $50,000,000 within the current year, and begging permission to run the Government further into debt to meet it. [Applause.]

I have referred, sir, thus somewhat at length to the wool tariff and to the sugar bounty because I have appreciated that they were perhaps those defects of this bill in which the people were most interested. Among the many minor ones there are, however, two others in which I have a special interest, because, sir, the beneficiaries are not merely the most ideally undeserving of any into whose coffers tariff taxation has ever been poured, but they do my own city the honor of doing the most of their business within it, and thereby have put upon myself a peculiar duty, as it is a peculiar pleasure, to drag them out to light and ask this Democratic House not thus to insult Democracy. I refer to the Standard Oil Company and to the American Sugar Refining Company, known as the Sugar Trust. Between the lines of this bill can be recognized the fine Italian hand of each.

STANDARD OIL PROTECTION.

In its present shape the Wilson bill reimposes the present duty upon oils the product of any country which levies a tariff upon American petroleum.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from New York knows that that was put in the bill after it was reported to the committee.

Mr. WARNER. I am entirely aware of that.

Mr. REED. The reason I called the gentleman's attention to the fact was to show that it was the deliberate judgment of the committee which he was condemning.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman, of course, knows what his own deliberate judgment is, and he may be competent to speak for the committee, but in my opinion it was one of the most hasty things they ever did. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Well, but the fact that they put that provision into the bill after having left it out, would seem to show that they acted with deliberation.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman may speak for himself and for the committee, but——

Mr. REED. Oh, I am not speaking for the committee. We were not allowed to speak even in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER. I will not dwell now upon the point that—as this section is drawn—the whole of the present duty would be reimposed, no matter how slight the duty imposed upon American oil, no matter whether that duty is a discriminating duty or not; but what I specially call attention to is this, that, in order to protect the company which has constantly used its monopoly here to crush out rival dealers and keep prices here at such point as it pleased, while it was exporting oil all over the world at lesser rates, this bill, after McKinley reciprocity has been kicked out with contumely, proposes to renew the principle of reciprocity in favor of the most grasping, extensive, and pitiless monopoly that the world has ever known, and to do this in regard to an article as to which our own product is so great that we must export a large proportion of it, and therefore can use the contingent tariff only as a means to make American citizens pay more than foreigners for the article produced here. I listened to the able speech of the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee when he introduced this bill, and I heard no defense of this provision. I am rather glad that I did not, for I am sure that it indicates that he at least is willing that at the proper time amendment shall be had which shall relieve the Democratic party from the imputation of having spurned reciprocity when applied to the numerous other interests which—I believe undeservedly—it was intended to serve, at the same time that it has revived it in favor of the one organization on the round globe least entitled to it.

RECIPROCITY FOR THE SUGAR TRUST.

Strangely enough, sir, the sugar trust has been aided in the same way. Given their raw material free—as they have it—and there is no country in the world where the refiners can produce a ton of refined sugar so cheaply as in the United States. They have, however, enjoyed for the past few years a protective duty of one-half of 1 cent upon their finished product, and they have used that duty most persistently and pitilessly to pay themselves dividends upon watered capital, to keep the wholesaler squeezed between the vice of legislation on the one hand and trust manipulations on the other, with the result—although raw sugar is admitted here free, although manufacturing of sugar costs less here than in any other civilized country—of taxing the American public on an average of three-fourths of a cent to a cent per pound higher for their sugar than is paid by even the alleged to be downtrodden proletariat of diabolical Great Britain. And now, sir, instead of striking off this protective duty and leaving the sugar trust to earn its own living, a Democratic Congress has compromised with the enemy and offers them for the future half the blackmail that they have heretofore been permitted to levy.

I know there is an excuse given for this, but the trouble is that the excuse is worse than the deed. It is said that the rebate given by other nations on sugar export is such as practically to amount to a bounty for export, and that the quarter cent is not more than a fair offset to this. If this is not reciprocity, I should like to know what it is. What is the difference in principle between taking off a tariff, provided that your neighbor will do the same, and putting on one as retaliation for his imposing an export bounty? Is there any reason why the reciprocity of the McKinley bill should be given the cold shoulder, and this new member of the same family be invited to sit by the Democratic fireside? Even if the question of principle were not involved, is there any earthly reason why, if France and Germany and Austria are foolish enough to hire their producers to give us cheap sugar, we should keep our people from accepting the benefaction? Yes; there is just one reason. It would hurt the sugar trust. And that is the reason and the only reason upon which can be justified the retention of this one-fourth cent duty upon refined sugar.

The true policy, Mr. Chairman, if Germany is fool enough to spend money to give our people cheap sugar, is to let her do it and give our people the advantages Great Britain now monopolizes. By so doing she has built up her sugar-using industries until her consumption, largely for manufacture—since the average individual probably does not use a greater amount there than here—is 20 per cent higher per capita than that in our country, and she has become the world's center of the great manufactures in which sugar is an important factor. I will give one example: In Western New York, through a district of which the little town of Dundee is perhaps about the center, is the one region in all the world that is most advantageous from all points of view for the raising of small fruits, certain limited districts in Scotland and others in the neighborhood of London being its only rivals. We have had dear sugar; England has had cheap sugar. England welcomed for her people the cheap sugar that Germany and Austria and France denied theirs. As for ourselves, in the interest of the sugar trust the same sugar has been barred from our ports. The result is that wherever you go in the civilized world you will find English and Scotch jams and preserves, until the business of making them now ranks among the great industries of the United Kingdom.

There are several obstructions in the way of our jam manufacturers. There is a tariff on their tin if their goods are put up in tinware, and another upon pottery if their product is marketed in jars. But the chief item, from half to three-fourths of the total weight of the finished goods, is made up of sugar; and it is the higher price of sugar that has so effectually barred us from the markets of the world. It is folly to talk about a rebate. That is given only upon imported goods, and under certain stringent conditions, so that in by far the greater number of industries it is an absolute dead letter. It is so in this, and the result is that, with every advantage over Great Britain of supplying the world's markets with jam and the different forms of small fruit preserved in sugar, the fact is that in Dundee, N. Y., you will find used in considerable proportion the jams and marmalades that are put up at Dundee, Scotland; and all this to help the American sugar trust.

SUGAR TRUST EXTORTIONS.

But, sir, these sugar trust extortions are too fruitful a subject to be exploited at this time. How undeserving is it of consideration: how worthless are the statements which it asks you to believe may be illustrated by brief reference to the Weekly Statistical Sugar Trade Journal, a periodical which for many years has been the statistical authority for the sugar trade, and which, within the past few years, has been bought up body and soul by the sugar trust, until it is now scarcely more than an obedient echo. It is professing apprehension lest under the Wilson bill 20 per cent of our refined sugar shall be imported from abroad, and enforces its inference that the margin is very close now by noting that the imports of fine sugar during 1893 were greater than during the year previous. By reference to the statistics given in the same paper, I find that the total amount of the refined sugar imported into this country during the past year was less than 15,000 tons; while from figures also in this same paper I find that the United States consumption of refined sugar was at the rate of 1,800,000 tons per annum; in other words, the imports of refined sugar were less than five-sixths of 1 per cent of the total consumption and could scarcely have represented more than the import of special and prepared grades used for confectionery purposes; so that to attempt to cite them as evidence of danger from foreign competition is impudence rather than argument.

Again, this sheet volunteers the information, that during the past year centrifugals—that is, the sugar trust's raw material—have averaged 3.68 cents per pound, while granulated—its product—has averaged 4.84 cents per pound—a margin for refining of 1⅛ cents per pound. It is then added, in gratuitous mendacity, that such was the average margin during the time when sugar refining was carried on under free competition before the existence of the trust. This is the last issue of this valuable periodical for the year 1893. On one of its pages is given a summary of statistics for the past ten years. Upon turning to it I find a most ideal falsification of its own statement just quoted. From the figures published by this same journal during the past ten years, and now quoted as authentic, it appears that in 1884 the prices of centrifugal and granulated sugar were 5 5/8 and 5¾ cents, respectively, leaving a margin of but nine-sixteenths—a little over one-half a cent. In 1885 the prices were 6¼, and 6 7/8 to 6¾, respectively, leaving five-eighths of a cent for refining.

In the next year the corresponding figures are 5¾ and 5 11/16, leaving a margin of less than five-eighths. But during the last three years the figures stand: For 1891, centrifugals, 3.375 cents, and for granulated, 4 cents, or just five-eighths of a cent margin; for 1892, 3.44 cents and 4.60 cents, respectively, or 1⅛ cents, and for 1893, 2.875 and 4.10, leaving a margin of nearly 1¼ cents; showing that, so far from cheapening prices, the sugar trust has exacted more than twice the margin between its raw materials and its products, normally secured under fair competition.

You may say, why, then, complain of the duty of one-fourth of a cent? I will tell you why. The sugar trust now controls not merely the production, but the distribution of refined sugars in this country. The margin of profit in handling sugar is far less than a quarter of a cent to the wholesalers. So long, therefore, as you give this much leeway the sugar trust, without expense to itself, can cut the feet from under anyone who attempts to market other sugars in this country; and so long as this situation continues no one dare to compete with it here, and it is left to extort from the monopolized market any bonus they please.

How indecent—how pitiless is their practice in this regard—can best be appreciated by looking over the figures during the time of the cholera scare in 1892. It is true that in August and September of that year the price of centrifugals raised from 3⅞ to 3¾ cents per pound—this on account largely of the fact that beet-sugar exports from cholera-infested ports were then impracticable. But the sugar trust not merely raised its price of refined sugar in advance of its necessities to use high-priced raw sugar, but maintained the advance in large measure until the February following, though centrifugals meanwhile had fallen to 3⅛ cents. In other words the trust, shielded by tariff taxation, has exploited not merely the possibilities of oppression of the jobbers through whom their product is distributed, but has utilized the opportunity of pestilence abroad and apprehension at home to extort an additional bonus from an already outraged public. [Applause.]

BUT PASS THE BILL.

I hope I have indicated, sir, somewhat of the amendments to which, it seems to me, this bill should be subjected in the House. But, sir, whether amended or left with all its imperfections upon its head, I hope it may be promptly passed; and I have already indicated somewhat of the urgent reasons which inspire this wish. I do not understand that in voting for it we are assenting to a compromise with protection. We are rather carrying the outworks in order that, getting possession of them, we may train the guns we shall have captured upon every corner of the citadel that is still left standing. [Applause.]

It is with such an expectation, sir, that I expect to vote for this bill. It is in the confidence that with each position carried the next one will be taken more easily, that I am glad to join in the advancing march, even though the music to which we step is not as inspiring as that which I should like to hear played. As it stands the bill is as much better a bill than the Mills bill as that was than the Morrison bill which preceded it; but it is not as far ahead of them as will be in advance of this one the next proposal for a settlement of this question. Let us do as my friend from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON] has suggested; let us amend this bill to make it more Democratic; let us crowd into it more instances of fulfillment of the pledges which year after year we have renewed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But in any case let us reassure a waiting nation by putting it into definite form as a law at the earliest moment possible. It is not within my power to depict—it would not be worth the minutes of delay it would cause should I attempt it—the reaction of prosperity that is sure to follow its enactment. The very fact that for the last six months the remains of Republican misrule, added to the suspense of waiting for Democratic action, have in large measure paralyzed our industries and discouraged investment and enterprise, has left fewer oversanguine plans to be wrecked, has made more urgent the demand for everything that busy fingers can make, has made more conservative and safe the foundation upon which, when once we start forward, freed from all shackles by which our agriculture, our manufactures, and our commerce have heretofore been bound, we shall go forth in the name of the great Yankee nation, conquering and to conquer—opening the world as our oyster, reaping greater and greater advantages, as we shall be more free, each to do that which is most profitable to him, and shall more and more exploit our opportunities to deal with other nations, compared with which our natural resources, our ingenuity, and our enterprise give us the advantage. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There is no reason why self-supporting and self-respecting men should heed the shrill clamor of those who croak disaster. You will recall how, when Cœur de Lion escaped from his Austrian prison, and the news came westward to his kingdom, the people-devouring courtiers that stood about the usurper John turned pale and passed about the word, "The devil has broken loose." But through the length and breadth of England the same news was passed as a holiday benediction from village to village and from church to church until to the humblest subject it came as a glad cry, "The true king is coming again to his own." And so in the general downfall of the protective system, which the obstinacy of its beneficiaries is fast preparing, their startled cry, "The free-trade devil has broken loose," will be lost in the glad answer of a reënfranchised nation, "The people is coming again to its own." [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

[Mr. COOMBS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. WARNER. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PENDLETON of Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared a sketch on each article that I desired to give.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the pending session be extended until 6 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLANCY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] does not desire it.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent that the pending session be continued until 6 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER] asks unanimous consent that the recess be not taken to-day until 6 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. BRETZ. I object. I understand that the gentleman from New York does not desire the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] will discharge the duties of the Chair at the evening session; and, without objection, it being within five minutes of the hour, the Chair will declare he House in recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. BRETZ. Before that is done, I would like to know whether the time of the gentleman from New York has expired?

The SPEAKER. That is in Committee of the Whole, and the Speaker is not informed as to the status of the time allowed. The House will be in recess until 8 o'clock this evening, the evening session to be devoted to general debate only on the pending bill.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes) the House was declared in recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 p. m., Mr. BROOKSHIRE in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is in session for debate only upon the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which has just been read, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] will take the chair.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the pending bill.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, the Democrats upon the floor of this House were elected and commissioned by their constituents to relieve them of the staggering burdens of taxation and to reform and revise the tariff laws which have imposed these burdens upon them for more than thirty years. In doing this it is proper that the schedule imposing duties should be uniform throughout the whole country; but, so long as we have to raise such an enormous amount of taxes by impost duties, it is evident that, incidentally, there will be benefits conferred upon different interests and different sections.

It was impossible for the Committee on Ways and Means to have reported a bill to this House that would have met the approval of all the members. We had an illustration of that last night, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAINES] stated that if this bill passed there would not be from his district another Democratic member for a long time, or perhaps never. If that is so, Mr. Chairman, if to carry out Democratic principles or Democratic policies is to defeat a would-be Democratic Representative from that district, the Democratic party ought to hail the result with both pride and joy, because if we are to have a member from that district claiming to be a Democrat, yet who allies himself with the Republican party and seeks to obstruct legislation, it would be better for the Democratic party and for the country to have a Republican, and let the responsibility be charged to a Republican.

As I have already said, it is not probable that this bill will meet the individual views of every Democratic member of this House. It does not meet mine. For instance, the bill retains a duty upon all finished products of iron and steel which, in my judgment, exceeds the revenue limit, while it proposes to put coal and iron ore on the free list. This I believe to be a mistake. While I would not advocate or vote for an amendment retaining the duty at the rates fixed by the McKinley act, I should support, and I will support, an amendment placing a duty of 40 cents upon those two articles. But I want to state further, that if this House should refuse to adopt that amendment I shall still take pleasure in supporting the bill as reported from the committee.

Another objection I have to the bill is that instead of repealing the bounty on sugar at once and absolutely, it proposes to do it gradually, so that it will be several years before that illegal and unconstitutional feature of the McKinley act is abolished. The Congress of the United States has no more authority to pay a bounty to the sugar-growers of Louisiana and other sections of the country than it has to pay a bounty to the wheat-grower, the tobacco-grower, or the man who raises hogs, mules, cattle, or anything else.

The income tax feature which, as I understand, is to be provided for by an amendment, proposes to levy 2 per cent upon all incomes above $4,000. In my judgment that tax should be graded; beginning at a certain rate and increasing as the size of the incomes increased.

I understand also that there is to be an amendment adding 10 cents a gallon to the tax on whisky. I believe that article already carries all the tax that it can legitimately bear, and that a higher tax upon it will be an inducement to go into illegal traffic, so that perhaps the Government will not receive even as much revenue from it as it gets at the present rate.

Mr. Chairman, this is a land dedicated to human rights and liberty. There is no place so fit for freedom as that where nature is most prodigal in her bounty. Such a land is ours. There is in the grandeur of her mountains, the grace of her valleys, the sweep of her plains, and the majesty of her lakes and rivers, inspiration for the noblest attainments within all the range of human endeavor. What a magnificent estate is embraced in citizenship here! How inestimable is the birthright to such a soil as ours! How precious the inheritance of life under a flag that floats never lowered over a nation consecrated to equal and exact justice to all and special privileges to none!

Gentlemen may speak lightly of the Constitution of the United States and may be attempted on occasion of partisan excitement to take its sacred name in vain, but in every time of vicissitude it is our pillar of fire by night and our pillar of cloud by day. It is the grandest charter of civilization known to man. It is a book of revelations to all the nations of the earth. Let no man attempt to take from it or add to it.

In this spirit, Mr. Chairman, I approach the discussion of this question. Here in the outset, permit me to digress enough to say that if I have any pride of association, any pride of nativity, it is that I was born in a land and among a people against whom it can never be said that they were not devoted to the Constitution. Tennessee was the home of Andrew Jackson, who fought, suffered, and bled for his country even in the tender years of his childhood, and he and other sturdy pioneers were first to blaze the westward way of civilization, when they crossed the Alleghenies and risked their all among innumerable wild beasts and swarming tribes of savages. There they laid the foundation stones of proud and splendid commonwealths upon the enduring bedrock of popular liberty. They were devoted to it—these pioneers of the Pioneer State—and pioneers, too, of a Western breeding place for freedom that shall yet give to the world its best lessons in self-reliance, aggression against injustice, and submission to no law that does not conserve to the preservation of the peace and happiness of the community.

By the verdict of all contemporaneous intellect they understood that their Constitution was the paragon of schemes for righteous civic advancement. Its vital principle was live and let live; trust men and you will make them trustworthy. So it was like Andrew Jackson to be ever a resolute defender of his country; like him, when with his riflemen at New Orleans, he hurled back in humiliated defeat the proudest army of veterans that England could call to any field; like him, from the day he felt in his sensitive boyish flesh the cold steel of British bayonets and defied their worst.

Of the tariff Andrew Jackson thought much and said no little, but nothing he said or did is against the evidence of his fidelity to the Constitution.

Let us mark the sentiments of his farewell address, which can not too often be repeated for the purposes of this deliberation:

The corporations and wealthy individuals—who are engaged in large manufacturing establishments, desire a tariff to increase their gains. Designing politicians will support it to conciliate their favor and to obtain the means of profuse expenditure for the purpose of purchasing influence in other quarters. Do not allow yourselves, my fellow-citizens, to be misled on this subject. The Federal Government can not collect a surplus for such purposes without violating the principles of the Constitution, and assuming powers that have not been granted. It is, moreover, a system of injustice, and, if persisted in, will inevitably lead to corruption and must end in ruin.

He said—

The truth and import of these warnings are significant now that we come to contemplate the result of thirty years of Republican high tariff and legislation for "corporations and wealthy individuals." What Jackson said was said when the country was very young, when much was heard of the plea that our "infant industries" should be protected. Surely after so many years of partiality the infant has grown big enough to pay traveling fare. Let him pay as other folks do who ride on our train of progress. He has imposed on good nature so long that he has become a great lubberly deadbeat, and ought to be kicked off at the first stopping place to make room for suffering families that not only pay their way, but want room to lay down their baggage.

Nobody pays more to ride than the farmer; let us, at least, give him a living chance.

He belongs to the most conservative class of our people.

He is the first to rally to the defense of the country in its hour of trouble and the last to give it trouble. As much as has been the complaint by him, as much as he has grown restive by the disappointments of party association, as much as he has realized and spoken of his deprivation of the rightful fruits of his toil, as much as he has expressed his impatience with the lawgivers of the time, he has not half told the story of his wrongs. His note of discontent is as the sigh of the breeze to the howling blast that comes from the little class that enrich themselves by despoiling him whenever they conceive that their interests are threatened.

Why, just look at the true inwardness of the panic of 1893! How small a part has he played in it! And when the restoration of confidence comes in its fullness, how large a share he will take in the renewed maintenance of the national credit! If ours were not so largely an agricultural country—if we did not depend upon three of our products, such as wheat, cotton, and corn, even how insignificant a factor we would be in the commerce of nations! So long as we have a soil that yields abundance for ourselves and gives us plenty to furnish the rest of the world in bread and meat and clothes we are naturally strong, and should by the might of these very resources be preeminent and transcendent in the credit of the nations.

Give the farmer a living chance. He provides the first necessities of life, and if he have enough and to spare, in God's name let him exchange it freely for something that his neighbor has and does not need. To deny that opportunity, to use the taxing power against it, is worse than robbery. Robbery does not deprive the victim of a living chance after the act that violently takes away. It is more decent than taking from him who hath not to give to him who hath.

The robber's victim may go ahead by talent and industry and accumulate what will sustain and comfort him; but the law that makes the farmer pay out of his toil constant and unrequited tribute to the power that manipulates wealth is inhuman, cruel, exhausting, and everlastingly wrong. He may not apprehend the civilized brutality of direct taxation; he may not fully comprehend any of the mysteries of indirect taxation; he may not understand how the execution of the statutes for the purpose of raising revenues for the Government weighs heavily upon his energies; he can not fully understand—because he has not the prompt and true statistics at hand—whither and how far from him is going the lively evidence of his labor; but he goes on, year in and year out, living under unequal and oppressive laws, enduring and suffering, with only the grain of comfort vouchsafed to all the harshly tried of this world, that the "Lord loveth whom He chasteneth."

We would be blindly recreant to our duty as their representatives if we failed to do everything for the preservation of the constitutional rights of our farming and laboring people that it is possible for us to do. Over $500,000,000 annually of the farmers' products are exported, going to contribute to the enhancement of our national credit. This Government owes the farmer a debt large enough to render trivial all the mischief of his mistakes, and, opposed to class legislation as I am, I say that if we are going to pay off our obligations at all, let us make the farmer what he deserves to be, the preferred creditor of the Government. How can we best help him to his just deserts? It can only be done by going to and following without variation the guidance of the Constitution we are sworn to support. We can not have too often recur to us that the purpose of that instrument was to guarantee to us our liberties, property, and lives.

One of the greatest financiers this country ever had was Albert Gallatin, of Pennsylvania, twelve years of whose public service was spent as Secretary of the Treasury, twice under Jefferson and once under Madison. He had counseled with these men in the days when all our industries were young and infantile indeed. Here is the sum of his long life of reflection upon the idea of a protective tariff as he saw it in 1832.

Let it be recollected that the system is in itself an infraction of an essential part of the liberty of the citizen. The necessity must be urgent and palpable which authorizes any government to interfere in the private pursuits of individuals, to forbid them to do that which in itself is not criminal, and which everyone would most certainly do if not forbidden. Every individual in every community, without exception, will purchase whatever he may want on the cheapest terms within his reach. The most enthusiastic restrictionist, the manufacturer most clamorous for special protection, will each individually pursue the same course and prefer any foreign commodity or material to that of domestic origin, if the first is cheaper, and the law does not forbid him. All men have ever acted on the same principle. It is impossible that they should universally act in the same manner, unless it were to their interest to do so.

The tariff system is founded upon the principle that what is true of all men individually is untrue when applied to them collectively. We can not consider the adherence of enlightened nations to regulations of that description but as the last relic of that system of general restrictions and monopolies which had its origin in barbarous times. If the corn laws are the most odious of those protecting monopolies, it is because they enhance the price of that which is still more essentially necessary than sugar, salt, clothing, or fuel; and we may safely predict that their repeal will be the first result of an improved representation of the people.

"An improved representation" of the people. Ah, Mr. Chairman, we have reached a time, I fear, when we need an "improved representation" of the people. Are we but the servants of an Administration? Mere mediums of barter for petty office, the pliant tools of political interests wholly selfish and heartless? When I look over the history of legislation and its precedents for the last thirty years, and the record that has recently been making in this House, I almost shrink from the answer to the question.

Have members been truly representative of the people? When they come here upon certain promises and pledges, and by the grace of generous trustfulness of an innocent people become invested with the proud privilege of being their representatives and agents, can it become them to turn a deaf ear to the voice of the people's needs and listen only to the advice of any man who would have true representatives believe he is wiser in his generation than they? Call it demagogy or what you please, when my community, my people commission me to do certain things for them that are in my power to do, and I pledge them, impressing them that my whole nature is in sympathy with their wants and aspirations, I say I would be deserving of the uttermost depths of degradation, which is the ultimate retribution for treachery, if I should fail to keep my promise or disappoint them by a single vote. Why should a Representative have to explain to his people any vote that he has cast here? His record ought to be so clean, and it ought to be so clear as it relates to their interests that it will speak for him without the confusion of explanation or the humiliation of apology.

I heartily subscribe to the straight and honest declaration of the national Democratic platform that the Republican protective tariff is robbery. It is robbery because it is in violation of the fundamental principles of equitable taxation. It is robbery because it has taken public money, unnecessarily exacted by import duties, from the pockets of the people and applied it to private ends and selfish purposes. The Republican party has not only broken its repeated promises, which it began to hold out to the people, with the enactment of the so-called war tariff, to reduce and revise taxation, but it has increased their burdens and has gone on in this matter as it has in others in all the long generation of its opportunities, strewing its tracks with signals of brazen disregard for the Constitution and the reserved rights of the people.

That the tariff is a tax has at last been admitted by all fair and intelligent minds in every country on the face of the earth. The contrary is asserted only by those who are either blinded by prejudice or wedded to convictions that have their origin in avarice that harbors no concern for the real welfare of the whole people.

Judge Thomas Cooley, in his Principles of Constitutional Law, says:

Constitutionally a tax can have no other basis than the raising of revenue for public purposes, and whatever governmental exaction has not this basis is tyrannical and unlawful. A tax on imports, therefore (a tariff tax), the purpose of which is not to raise revenue, but to discourage and indirectly prohibit some particular import for the benefit of some home manufacturer, may well be questioned as being merely colorable, and therefore not warranted by constitutional principles.

The Democratic party has called this system of taxation "robbery," and so has it been termed by Republican courts.

In the case of The Loan Association vs. Topeka, 20 Wallace, the court says:

To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprise and build up private fortunes, is none the less robbery because it is done under the forms of law, and is called taxation

What a formidable instrument for evil is this power of taxation! How fearful may become its oppressions, when, under its cloak, is concealed the hand that can take tribute from all the people for private purposes! That can go about into the homes of the poor and take from them half their necessities—and for what? Not that the Government is in any extremity of want or danger, but simply to buy more leisure for the rich, and supply more of the luxuries for which their appetites by long indulgence have become as vitiated as they are insatiable; it is for the maintenance of a policy that can mean nothing short of a centralization of wealth so powerful that it can buy Legislatures and sway Congresses from sworn duties.

It is a burning shame that in this great Republic nearly three-fourths of its wealth is in the hands of nonproducers, and that the producing millions are compelled to go on helping to swell this monstrous corruption fund out of the meager rewards of their daily toil. We have come dreadfully near the danger line, Mr. Chairman, when less than 40,000 men may manipulate more than half the riches of our land against the good of more than 70,000,000 sovereign citizens.

The tariff is a tax, and the consumer pays the tax. This truth has dawned upon the minds of a vast majority of the voters of this country. Even the party that so long contended that the foreigner paid the tax is being forced by practical exposures of the fallacy to admit the truth. In the future discussions of the tariff question the advocates of protection will be driven to other arguments than these. On that assumption I shall discuss this question, hoping that we are to be met fairly by our opponents and the issue squarely joined.

The prime object and essential duty of this discussion is to ascertain whether there be a tariff which is levied for a public purpose or for private gain. No tax can be rightfully or lawfully imposed, if the intent be to promote the private enterprises of individuals. This is a fundamental principle of our Government; and it matters not how much a protective tariff may create wealth in any given community by some special industry, the Government does wrong to aid that industry and is utterly at variance with the guaranteed right and the natural right of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property and yielding equitable contribution to the expenses of the Government.

The Government has no right and it justly does not belong to it to assume to control, direct, or point out a business policy to any lawful industry. The Government has nothing to do with the mere matter of finding employment for individuals. It has done its whole duty in assuring them life, liberty, and the safe pursuit of happiness. It leaves them to choose their own vocations, to engage in any legitimate pursuit, holding to any religion or politics, untempted by promise of reward to one class that may not be the privilege for the asking of another class.

Only when the object of the tax to be levied is for a public purpose can it lawfully be levied and collected. Because the tariff is the less objectionable form it does not limit the application of this plain and simple maxim of the Government. It applies with the same force to indirect taxation that it does to direct taxation, and indeed, if it were proper, ought to be more inviolate as to indirect or tariff taxes because the latter more immediately and generally affects the wants of the common people. In all cases the tax can not be rightfully levied and collected except for the sole use of the Government. That, with the insistence upon honest and economical administration, is the Democratic doctrine. I rejoice that it is so plain that no sane man may make a mistake about it, and I rejoice the more because it is the gospel of hope to all the people.

So, any law that takes from the people any more money than is necessary for the legitimate expenses of the Government, is dangerous extortion and outrageous robbery of the people under legislative decree. The Republican party claims, insists, and practices this, that the Federal Government and Congress are imperial and omnipotent; that they have the right to tax the people to any extent; that they have the right to lay tribute on all the people for the benefit of a few; to lay with one hand the power of the Government upon the property of the citizen and with the other bestow it upon the creature of special favor.

If the Constitution does not guarantee to the people any limitations or restrictions upon the power to tax them, then this is far from a republican form of Government, and in reality the worst sort of despotism, which must lead to the decay of our manhood and the destruction of our independence. I deny such a power or right. If the Government can levy and collect a single dollar for any other than a public purpose, then it can levy fifty billions of dollars and collect it for the benefit of private individuals, and thus at a single blow bankrupt and ruin the country. To say this thing can be done is to hold to what is unholy, unjust, and unauthorized by the Constitution, and a monstrous usurpation of the rights of the whole people which have been expressly reserved to them.

I challenge any man to show the contrary in the Constitution, either in terms or implication of terms. Under our form of government the people are entitled to a fair race in life, with no governmental interference with any individual liberty. Tyranny and barbarity can not live in the land where such a principle is in full force. The people have a right to demand and require that they shall carry the least possible burdens of government, and to enjoy the largest degree of personal liberty compatible with the common protection of life and property. Having the right of local self-government, they should wage unceasing war upon centralization of power in all its forms and guises, certain that this course alone will preserve their liberties and perpetuate their institutions.

Mr. Chairman, it is hard to speak with patience or equanimity in the presence of such wrongs as the present infamous McKinley law was framed to perpetrate. It is not only unconstitutional, but in its operations upon the body of the people it is like a vampire whose revolting greed would drain the last drop of precious human blood. [Applause.]

Congress has no power or authority—even by the plea of the welfare clause of the Constitution—to cause any man's business to prosper at the expense of another man, no matter what his occupation or however beneficent his purposes. The emissaries of paternalism, whom we always have with us, insist that this doctrine admits of no national progress. Mr. Chairman, we would better stand still than go forward on any path that restricts the liberties of the people. We would better go backward to the days when the pioneers had to fight the savages than yield now to the insidious and dangerous tendencies of these times.

Centralization and paternalism swept the might and splendor of the old Roman republic into a maelstrom of shame, dishonor, and destruction. Thanks to the wisdom and inspiration of our forefathers, our Republic is founded upon safer and juster principles. We have the same laws, the same Constitution for all our domain, the sovereign right of local self-government for all our people, privileges that are our mainstay and hope. These the Republican party would take from the people, because it is the party that attempts to centralize all power in the hands of a few by centralization of the wealth of the nation, as I have said before on the floor of this House. If I were asked how they have done it, I have to answer:

First, by illegal, unequal, and unjust taxation.

Second, by vicious and arbitrary legislation on financial questions.

Third, by allowing common carriers or transporters to rob the masses, in violation of every principle of equity and right.

Fourth, by dishonest appropriations of the people's money.

Mr. Chairman, we should not forget that the Revolution of 1776 was caused by the exactions of centralized power in the British Government in the imposition of unjust taxes. The Republican party by gradual encroachments, and the accretions incident to its practices, has so warped the growth of the Federal Government that the very purpose for which it was founded has become obscured, and is in danger of becoming in the minds of the people a mere memory, as is now the glory of the old Roman republic in the hazy intellects of the lazzaroni that mope in the sun on the banks of the Tiber. It is time for the people of this country to call a halt on the march of centralization and paternalism here, and retrace the way back to the true meaning of the Constitution.

The distinction between the reserved and delegated powers is important to bear in mind. It is contained in the tenth amendment to the Constitution, to wit:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

This is a Government of granted and enumerated, not of original, powers. The Congress of the United States is not omnipotent, and can never be so long as the people remain independent, self-reliant, and free. This is a Government of given and normal powers. In 1 Wheat, page 304, Justice Story said:

The Government of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution, and the powers actually granted must be such as are expressly given or given by necessary implication.

Chief Justice Marshall held in 9 Wheat, page 1, that—

This instrument contains the enumeration of the powers expressly granted by the people to the Government.

Chief Justice Story held the same thing.

Supposing all parties should agree that this construction was true, but that it would be a good thing to so amend the Constitution as to allow the levying of taxes for other than public purposes, what do you think the answer would be? It would be overwhelming from all over the land. It would say to the powers of paternalism and centralization: "No; you have robbed us already too long; there shall be no more submission by us to tariff monopoly. Our cause is equality, justice, and freedom from financial oppression."

As the Representatives of the people we have no right to go for excuse or authority where the Constitution is silent. Our powers are clearly defined, and to go beyond them would be sheer usurpation and bad faith, which should visit upon us certain political damnation.

What a sweet morsel to the advocates of protection is the worn and abused "welfare clause" of the Constitution! They have no right to rest their consciences, to tie the elasticity of their guilty compunctions around this innocent clause, and parade it as authority for class legislation. That clause has been unmistakably construed, and the construction is almost universally accepted as correct. As so construed it reads:

Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises [in order] to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and welfare, but all duties shall be uniform throughout the United States.—Article I, section 8, Constitution of the United States.

There is no lawyer who will not concede that to be the true exposition. There are three branches embraced in this clause. First, laying and collecting taxes; second, paying debts and providing for the common defense and general welfare; third, a qualification on this power given in the first clause of the sentence. It would be absurd to think that the men who gave us the Constitution, the grandest and bravest document on civic government ever conceived or written by man, would have interjected as a substantive power the words contained in the second clause of the sentence, and in the third qualified the first.

We are not left to rely alone upon these clear constructions, given since the adoption of the Constitution; but I beg the indulgence of the House while I read from the forty-first number of the Federalist while this very clause was under consideration by the Convention. Mr. Madison said:

Some who have not denied the necessity of the power of taxation have grounded a very fierce attack against the Constitution on the language in which it is defined. It has been urged and echoed that the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties and imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare" of the United States amounts to an unlimited commission to exercise every power which may be allowed to be necessary for common defense and general welfare. No stronger proof could be given of the distress under which these writers labor for objections than their stooping to such a misconstruction.

The same misconstruction which Mr. Madison criticised as unworthy and unfounded before the adoption of the Constitution is the identical construction and meaning that the Republican party is attempting to give it now. For representatives to take any other view than that held by Mr. Madison and sanctioned by the courts is a reflection either upon their intelligence or upon the integrity of their purposes. Mr. Madison also says:

Had no other enumeration or definition of the power of the Congress been found in the Constitution than the general expression just cited, the authors of the objection might have some color for it, though it would have been difficult to find a reason for so awkward a form of discretion to legislate in all possible cases. A power to destroy the freedom of the press, the trial by jury, or even to regulate the course of descents or the forms of conveyances, must be very singularly expressed by the terms "to raise money for the general welfare."

Who knew and loved the Constitution better than the first President who was guided by its glorious precepts? Gen. Washington, in the serenity of his declining years, gave to his beloved country his Farewell Address, a paper fit for the first pages of deathless fame. That address, which is the crowning glory of the illustrious life of the "Cincinnatus of the West," it will do now to read and study again and again. The solid and enduring wisdom of its conclusions, the warmth of its devotion to country, the majestic height and purity of its sentiments are but weakly and coldly symbolized even in yonder lofty marble pile that seems to lift its snowy peak as though reaching through the chaste air of heaven to join the glory of the stars.

How reverently and solemnly Washington spoke of the Constitution. Thinking of all that party has done to distort its beneficent intent, or that has strained its constructions to serve any other purpose than that of the whole people, I am reminded of this that he said:

One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of government as of other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing Constitution of a country; that facility in changes upon the credit merely of hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion.

Another thing he said in that address, proper for all Administrations to bear in mind, particularly upon occasions of such unrest and excitement as attended the extraordinary session of this Congress, with one coördinate branch playing the inexorable to another coördinate of this Government, is this:

It is important likewise that the habits of thinking should inspire caution in those intrusted with its (the Government's) administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism.

There are notes of prophetic admonition in these sayings which no party or representative of party in any capacity can afford not to heed.

Leaving for the moment the discussion of the constitutional bearing of the Republican protective tariff, I can not refrain from expressing a measure of my opinion of the policy of that party toward the people whom it is my duty faithfully to represent. I give my verdict on the evidence of history and not on the fair promises and alluring declarations of that party.

A Democrat on the floor of this House, in a moment of partiality for his enemies, and of exuberant loving kindness for those who have despitefully used him and his people, said of the Republican party in a speech here, "it is a party confessedly of great achievements." The eulogy comes from so remarkable a source and in such questionable shape that I will speak to it, even though I may not conscientiously subscribe to the amiable damnation of so faint praise. Let us attend to the achievements of the Republican party to see if we can not learn a lesson or two. I give my heart and mind to the principles of the Democracy of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson, the framers of the Constitution and the defenders of it for the people's sake, the party under whose wisdom and patriotism this Republic has grown from colonial insignificance along one line of poorly defended coast, across a continent to another ocean, and embraced a domain of matchless and mighty resources, and of imperial magnificence.

The darkest and saddest periods of the history of this grand Republic have been endured under Republican Presidents, Republican Senates, and Republican Houses of Representatives. In every one of these régimes the Republican party has trampled the Constitution under its feet. It has opposed the vital, conservative principles of this Government. If it has performed any "great achievements," if it has by any act or policy invested itself with any degree of moral grandeur, I confess it has never been demonstrated to my mind either by the statesmen it has boasted or the laws for which it is responsible. I am not prepared to assume the grotesque attitude toward the Republican party of praying: "Lord I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

I have all charity for and no malice against persons; but I have no patience with the policy of the party that in all the years of its career has been one of persistent, unchanging, and unabated enmity to the peace and welfare of my people. I am not around wooing statesmanship in the Republican quarter. No, Mr. Chairman—

> The smiles of knaves
> Tent in my cheeks; and schoolboys' tears take up
> The glasses of my sight! A beggar's tongue
> Makes motion through my lips, and my arm'd knees,
> Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
> That ha'n receiv'd an alms! I will not do't,
> Lest I surcease to honor mine own truth,
> And by my body's action teach my mind
> A most inherent baseness.

[Applause.]

When the enormous taxation was imposed, ostensibly to pay the cost of the war, the Republican party promised the people that they should be relieved of its burdens as soon as peace came. Is there a gentlemen who can point to any "great achievements" in this direction? Every Congress since the war has witnessed the violation of those pledges, so that we now have cumulative evidence of that party's villainy in an average increase of taxation by from 41 to 65 per cent. Why, gentlemen, it has been as though war with all its anguish and horrors, its tears and blood, its ruin and desolation still darkened our homes. But the war that has been prolonged in this country has been more than a "thirty years' war" of cruelty against innocence, wrong against right, selfishness and avarice against the reserved rights and welfare of the whole people.

If the Republican party relieved anybody by legislation immediately after the war, it was the plutocrat; for they relieved the rich of the embarrassment of the tax collector by taking off $206,436,886.55. If the taxes on monopolies and wealth had been retained but a few years, the national debt would have been paid long ago, and the relieved people would not now have to witness the spectacle of a set of arrogant and impudent national bankers and manufacturers presuming to come here to dictate to the people's representatives. The millions of income tax alone would soon have discharged the entire public debt.

The Democratic platform declares for the same principle embraced in the Walker tariff. The theory of this law means four things: First, the highest rate of tariff taxes upon the luxuries of life; second, the lowest rate of taxes upon the necessities of life; third, that the law should be so administered as to bear equally on all classes and all sections of the country; fourth, that the rate should be no higher than was necessary to meet the expenses of the Government honestly and economically administered.

This was a just and fair tariff law. There never has been a period in our history when it was easier for the wage-earner to make a living for himself and family, because under the operation of that tariff the cost of the necessities of life reached the lowest point, and the dollar that a man earned went into his pocket to stay there or to be used, if he preferred, to buy books or purchase any of the luxuries within his reach. Mr. Blaine said this was the golden era of our prosperity. "Then the average rate of taxation was 19 per cent, while under the McKinley tariff, which Mr. Blaine vehemently denounced, the rate is 40, 60, 80, and in some instances 100 per cent. Mr. ALLISON of Iowa said in 1870, while a member of this House, that the tariff of 1846, "although confessedly and professedly a revenue tariff, was, so far as all the great interests were regarded, as perfect as any that we had ever had." On the same occasion he declared himself in favor of a 20 per cent reduction on the then existing rates.

Show me anywhere a benefit that the high protective tariff has conferred, and I will name it to you as something which has no rightful kinship with the Constitution or any principle of equal and exact justice, a creature that, like Thersites—except in honesty of admission—is bastard, "loves bastards, is bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valor, and illegitimate in everything."

Mr. Chairman, we have never had a national exhibition or exposition of our products of the farm, the shop, the mine, the mill, or of the genius of our inventions, but we amazed the world and gave to mankind new information of earth's resources and new ideas of labor-saving devices, just as we have done this year at Chicago. We have never engaged in these things, I say, but that to all intelligent foreigners who looked upon the evidences of the rich stores of our natural bounty and the shining accomplishments of American ingenuity it presented occasion at once for astonishment and inward ridicule of the policy that so powerful and blessed a people needed governmental aid in any direction of industrial advancement.

I rejoice in any success that the World's Fair at Chicago has met, even though I opposed the appropriation for it in the last Congress. I opposed it, Mr. Chairman, for the same reason that determines me to support the repeal of any law that uses the money of the people for other than a public purpose and contrary to the organic law. The conception of the enterprise was as laudable as the show has been grand and gratifying to American pride: but it was an undertaking that should rather have appealed to the patriotism and individual efforts of our citizens, who were amply able to make it a success, than to the Government, and to take the money that belongs only to all the people, many of whom are poor to privation. There was no more authority for the act than there is now for us to provide the mayor of Chicago with money to secure employment for the 125,000 idle workmen in Chicago, many of whom are the recent employés of highly protected industries. It ought to apply to governments as well as to individuals—

> Neither a borrower nor a lender be;
> For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
> And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.

Mr. Chairman, honest people look with suspicion upon a man who being able to take care of himself continually eats bread from the sweat of his neighbor's brow. So it should be with our industries. Feeding the overgrown babies with Government pap is repugnant to every manly instinct. To what does this policy tend? Debasement, injustice, mockery of honest effort, and wanton waste of the precious fruits of honest toil.

The late Justice Miller said in a decision, part of which I have already cited:

> If it be said that a benefit results to the local public of a town by establishing manufactures, the same may be said of any other business or pursuit which employs capital or labor. A system of artificial government protection leads the people to too much reliance on government. If left to their own choice of pursuits they depend on their own skill and their own industry. But if government essentially effects their occupations by its systems of bounties and preferences, it is natural when in distress that they should call on the government for relief. Hence, a perpetual contest carried on between the different interests of society—agriculturists taxed to-day to sustain manufacture, commerce taxed to-morrow to sustain agriculture, and then imposition on both agriculture and manufactures to sustain commerce. And when government has exhausted its invention in these modes of legislation it finds the result less favorable than the original and natural state and course of things.

He could hardly conceive of a policy worse than that which would place the great interests of this country in hostility to each other; a policy which would keep them in constant conflict, and bring them every year to fight their battles in the committee rooms of the House of Representatives.

Henry Clay said long ago in the Senate:

> No one, Mr. President, in the commencement of the protective policy ever supposed it was to be permanent.

The protective Whig President, Fillmore, in his message to Congress in 1850, used this plain and direct language:

> A high tariff can never be permanent. It will cause dissatisfaction and will be changed. It excludes competition and thereby invites the investment of capital in manufactures to such excess that when changed it brings distress, bankruptcy, and ruin upon all who have been misled by its faithless protection.

Now, which shall we legislate for? A class of a few hundred of manufacturers, whose only participation in politics is to corrupt the ballot box, or for the seventy millions of our citizens. The former have been receivers of goods stolen from the people by the Republican party. Let them suffer the penalty of complicity in the offense, let the consequences be what they may. Even Andrew Carnegie, the richest beneficiary of high protection in the land, has confessed at last that he has had enough; that if the people want tariff reform they should have it.

> It may not be; it can not last,
> The visions of enchantment past,
> Like frostwork in the morning ray,
> The fancied fabric melts away.

Let me cite you some of the late "great achievements" of the Republican party, as I find them told in Republican protective tariff newspapers. I take some from the New York Press, one of the most ardent protectionists of them all, a paper which in an editorial of recent date utters the blatant falsehood that under the Republican protective tariff "wages have grown higher in every calling, both in amount and purchasing power," and that "the popular standard of comfort and of intelligence has steadily risen." Yes, gentlemen, if there is a grain of truth in that statement it is that the standard of popular intelligence has risen, for it rose in its might last November a year ago and declared that the murderous robber Tariff must die.

But here are those news notes. They are taken from a column headed, "The World of Industry."

> Cincinnati furniture hands are still out.
> Fall River textile workers will resist a cut.
> Fall River idle spinners receive financial aid from the Union.
> Boston hoisering and portable engineers want higher wages.
> Idle Poles and Italians visited the Buffalo poormaster and demanded work.
> A Buffalonian suggests the building of State roads to give work to idle men.
> New Bedford speeder tenders struck against a cut of 18 per cent.
> Gompers has informed Governor Flower that the workingmen want work, not advice.
> A Pittsburg ironworker, after hunting work two months, was sent to the penitentiary as a tramp.

We are told by our Republican friends that such "achievements"—these "short and simple annals of the poor"—are merely the result of apprehension that this Democratic Congress is going to play smash with the tariff. Do you not think that a system that could in any emergency bring so much discontent, distress, ruin, and misery ought to be destroyed root and branch?

But let us see about how the protected industries fared immediately after the McKinley act was passed, and when every branch of the Government was in the hands of the Protection party. The act passed October 4, 1890. Strikes, lockouts, and reductions in wages followed almost daily from October 16, 1890, in over three hundred instances, as the files of the daily newspapers of the period will show up to July 1, 1892. The reductions ranged all the way from 3 to 60 per cent. It is a fact that has already been established, that the only increase in wages has been by industries not affected by the McKinley act.

The Senate subcommittee on the tariff investigated the subject of wages from October 1, 1889, to July 1, 1891. Senator Carlisle, in speaking of the report of the committee, uttered a cardinal truth in this:

> The man who wants to employ labor does just what is done by every other man who wants to procure anything, he gets it at the very lowest rate at which the law of supply and demand will enable him to get it, tariff or no tariff. The employer pursues the same course, whether he is in a free-trade country or a protective country.

A popular protective tariff lie is that under protection we have had great demand for labor, wages have been high, and money cheap. I agree with Mr. Henry George that—

> The direct object and effect of protective tariff is to raise the price of commodities, but men who work for wages are not sellers of commodities, they are sellers of labor. They sell labor in order that they may buy commodities. How can an increase in the price of commodities benefit them?

The poor, idle wage-worker, locked out of the protected industry, when he comes to buy the protected commodity has more reason than any being I know to ask, in his sad bewilderment, "In God's name, where am I?" There are in this country more than two million men idle who are willing to work and can get no work. This is one of the greatest of the "achievements" of the Republican party. If it does not lead to general bread rioting, it will be because the intelligence of the people counsels patience until the Democratic Congress goes to their relief and wipes off from the statute books the most infamous and infernal laws that ever cursed a free people.

Along with those laws have been all those which have been continually striking at silver and stabbing the credit of the people, all to bring this country to the single standard of gold. Woe is the day when it shall drive the money of the people from their hands! Poor old deserted Timon, wandering to the woods, where he expected to find "the most savage beast kinder than mankind," found a piece of the cunning metal, and said, as he held it in his hand:

> Gold? yellow, glittering, precious gold? No, gods,
> I am no idle votarist. Roots, you clear heavens!
> Thus much of this, will make black, white; foul, fair;
> Wrong, right; base, noble; old, young; coward, valiant.
> Ha! you gods! why this? What this, you gods? Why this > Will lug your priests and servants from your sides;
> Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads:
> This yellow slave
> Will knit and break religions; bless the accurs'd;
> Make the hoar leprosy ador'd; place thieves,
> And give them title, knee, and approbation,
> With senators on the bench.

Mr. Chairman, the Democratic party has always been steadily on the side of the people in financial legislation. Here is history:

In 1863, when the vote on the bill providing for the charter of national banks was taken, the Democrats voted 6 to 1 against it. The Republicans voted more than 2 to 1 for it. In the House the Republicans voted for it 75 to 22, and the Democrats 42 to 3 against it. On April 14, 1864, what was known as the supplemental banking bill was before Congress. It was a repetition of the evils of the charter act, and was to extend and foster the national banking system. The Democrats in the House voted solidly against it, 65; the Republicans voted 80 for it and but 1 against it. In the Senate the Democrats voted 7 against it and none for it; the Republicans voted 30 for and 2 against it.

In March, 1869, when the act to strengthen the public credit was before Congress, only 1 Democrat voted for it and 34 against it, while 96 Republicans voted for it and only 12 against it; in the Senate the Republicans were 42 for it and 7 against it. The Democratic Senators voted solidly no. Bonds made payable in greenbacks were made payable in coin by the act. On March 29 Mr. MORGAN, Democrat, offered a resolution to exempt salt, tea, coffee, sugar, matches, and tobacco from taxation, and to tax bonds. The resolution was defeated by the Republicans, the Democrats voting solidly for it and the Republicans solidly against it.

Thus the Republican party voted invariably against taxing the bondholder and in favor of taxing the necessaries of life.

In 1880, when the act to refund greenbacks into coin bonds was pending, an act that increased the burdens of the people $500,000,000, the Democrats in the House voted solidly no, 54; the Republicans voted only 2 no and 139 for it. In the Senate the Democrats were solid against it and the Republicans solid for it.

There were seven minor amendments made in the Senate which necessitated a conference committee. When the House committee was announced Mr. Brooks called attention to the fact that the committee was composed of Republicans only. Mr. Blaine answered: "It is not essential that it should not be." Thus a set-up committee of the House of Representatives agreed upon the bill as it was finally passed.

In July, 1870, when SHERMAN'S proposition to increase national bank circulation $54,000,000 was pending, no debate was allowed. A vote was taken; only 4 Democrats voted for it and 44 against it, but it passed by Republican votes. Mr. Randall offered a substitute which proposed to take up national-bank notes and issue $300,000,000 in greenbacks in their stead, and upon this substitute the Democrats voted—noes 6, ayes 41; the Republicans—ayes 10, noes 105. At the same time Mr. MORGAN, Democrat, offered in the Senate a substitute which provided for repealing the national-bank act and substituting $400,000,000 in greenbacks in their stead, with full legal-tender qualities for national-bank notes. The Democrats voted aye and the Republicans no by the same overwhelming majority.

The manner in which silver was demonetized in 1873 has been fully made known to the country. It was done by a Republican Congress in the interest of the bondholders of the country, whose bonds thus became payable in gold, and made the debt of the country harder to pay.

On July 10, 1882, a bill to extend the charter of national banks, known as the Carp extension bill, passed the House by 110 ayes to 79 nays. On this vote there were Democrats voting for it only 11, the rest, 99, being Republicans. Against it, Democrats 76; Republicans 3. While this bill was under consideration, Mr. BLAND offered a substitute for it, which provided for issuing Treasury notes for bank notes. It was defeated by Republican votes, 68 Democrats and 3 Republicans being for it, against 19 Democrats and 119 Republicans against it!

On December 19, 1878, Mr. Fort moved to suspend the rules to pass a bill declaring the standard silver dollar a legal tender, and preventing discrimination against it; but, failing to get the required two-thirds vote, it was lost. The vote stood, for it, Democrats, 106; Republicans, 45. Against it, 16 Democrats and and 73 Republicans.

On April 8, 1888, on a bill providing for the free coinage of silver, there were voting for it 96 Democrats and 30 Republicans. Against it, 68 Democrats and 95 Republicans.

The bill that passed the House November 5, 1877, providing for free coinage, received 97 Democratic votes and 67 Republican. Against it, 10 Democrats and 24 Republicans. In the Senate the bill was amended, striking out the free-coinage feature, and making it a limited-coinage bill: On that substitute there were 16 Democrats and 33 Republicans for it, and 18 Democrats and 4 Republicans against it: On the passage of the amended bill, 25 Democrats and 23 Republicans voted for it, and 7 Democrats and 14 Republicans against it.

On June 5, 1890, on the question of adopting a rule to prevent debate and amendments to the bill providing for the purchase of silver bullion and issuing coin notes, a vote that showed exactly how the two parties stood on the subject of free coinage at that time, there was only 1 Democrat voting for it and 119 Republicans; voting against it, 106 Democrats and 11 Republicans. On the final passage of the bill there were for it 112 Democrats and 23 Republicans; against it, 22 Democrats and 130 Republicans.

The record shows that every law on the statute books complained of by the people was put there by the Republican party against the votes and over the protest of the Democratic party.

The people are familiar with the methods adopted by the Republican party and a minority of the Democrats, by which the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law was effected. But I rejoice that of all the Democratic members in the House from the South only about twenty lent themselves to the scheme to further the policy of the Republican party to contract the currency and destroy silver as one of the standards of value as money in this country; and of our Senators from the South all but about six stood by the record and declarations of the Democratic platform in favor of a bimetallic standard and against the policy and right of Congress to displace silver as one of our standards of value as money, which was guaranteed to the people in the Constitution of the United States.

A party of great achievements, indeed! It was begotten by fanaticism, and its first success in life was the triumph of accident and the luck of a minority of the people. It has lived as long as it has by grace of opportunity to deceive the people, whom it has robbed for thirty years. There was not a statute enacted by it touching the rights of local self-government that was not designed to perpetuate its hold on power rather than to promote the "general welfare," about which it prates so much. By force and by fraud, by bargains and by bribery, by flagrant and continued violation of laws even of its own creation, it fastened itself upon the body of this people and has left them suffering from disorders so deep-seated and alarming that it must require the utmost wisdom and ingenuity of legislation to give them any certain relief. Its system of financial and tariff legislation has made the rich richer and the poor poorer and more numerous; it has created and maintained a pension system that it has permitted to become so honeycombed with rottenuessas to cause the brave and honest soldier to be ashamed of the degeneracy of his countrymen.

Mr. Chairman, the war between the States is over, but I have heard with surprise, during the present debate, many of the gentlemen who oppose this bill as hotly engaged in reviving its dead issues and refighting its bloody battles as they were fought from 1861 to 1865 by the boys in blue and gray. If that war settled anything, it settled that this is an indestructible Union of sovereign States, under one Constitution, with one bill of rights for the Federal Government and another bill of rights for the States, distinct and separate in their respective spheres, but both conforming to the broadest principles of freedom and justice. When the last banner of resistance to the Union was furled, it was furled in good faith. The Southern people reentered upon the duty of allegiance to the Union and began anew their share of contribution to the common destiny of all the States and all the people with the same honesty of purpose as did the soldiers of the North when they returned triumphant to happy homes that had not been desolated by war.

The bitterness and the animosities of the strife have long ago faded from the breasts that in 1865 heaved with heartsickness at the sight of a land of ruined homes. No money, property devastated everywhere, and everywhere beset by a multitude of a suspicious, an ignorant and an inferior race, the Confederate had little left but the rags he wore and his integrity. How well he has taken his place in the ranks of faithful citizenship and applied himself to honorable and industrious effort I need not attempt here to demonstrate.

Speaking as one of them, and for all I know of those who fought for what they believed even unto death was right, I declare we join hands with patriotic citizens from whatever quarter of the compass of our land in preserving untarnished the genius of American institutions for the fullness of all time. I say we stand for the Constitution and just laws under it, and I oppose a violation of it in the administration of the pension laws with the same earnestness that I devote to any purpose which I believe to be right.

We have under the pension system 856,000 names on the roll, thousands of which ought not to be there, and to pay all of whom the people are taxed $150,000,000 a year, a tax which must be increased under the act of 1890 to meet inevitable additions to the roll. Millions of this money goes to foreigners who came to this country, not because they were in love with our institutions, but for the amount of money they were to receive as bounty in addition to pay for services: they were foreigners who were not citizens of this country, and who never made an attempt to become such. The pension rolls should be so revised as to strike from them the names of every one of these aliens, and thus far, at least, relieve the people of a burden they are not in any sense of justice or honor bound to bear.

There is another class of pensioners who should be treated likewise. They are the men who joined the Army, who went not for patriotism but for the mean and paltry lucre of the substitute hirer.

Mr. Chairman, my people and the Southern States have to share the burden of this enormous taxation, receiving in return for the money that comes through this channel to our States the most insignificant benefit that it confers upon the circulation of the community. The eleven Southern States which seceded pay an average of $50,000,000 annually to keep up pensions. This, divided among the voting population of those States, shows that the qualified voter would actually pay in this taxation more than he pays in poll tax which entitles him to vote. In my State the qualified voter would pay nearly twice as much as he has to pay in poll tax.

I believe I truly represent my people when I say I protest against giving pensions to aliens, bounty-jumpers, and deserters, but all honor, real benefits, and good purposes of the system to every soldier who while fighting for his country received a wound or contracted disease in the discharge of his duty, disabling him from self-support.

Another one of the "achievements" of the Republican party in the line of unlawful payments of pensions was in the practice of paying the rich widows of deceased Presidents $5,000 a year as long as they live, the widows of deceased judges of the United States Supreme Court $10,000 as a donation, and those of generals of the Army $2,000 per annum. I can conceive of no privilege or immunity that these widows should possess superior to that of the widow of the poor private who gave up his life resisting the high tide of the Confederacy on the flaming heights of Gettysburg or who fell to molder in an unknown grave in the thicket of Chickamauga. The country that practices this, especially such a Government as ours, with its inhibition of class legislation against special privileges, is neither just, decent, nor magnanimous to those who have suffered for it.

Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt there are members in this House better versed in the various theories of the tariff and their instructive elucidation than I, gentlemen who may be more ready and skilled in debate, and adroit and entertaining in the conclusions they draw from hopeful premises; but if I am halt and lame in discussin, I will be sure and swift in acting up to the letter of what I told the people who sent me here and what I say to you now.

I have had, and shall have, little to do with the theories of the prosecution of the party of "great achievements." I confine myself mainly to the law and the evidence. The Republican party has outraged justice and violated the laws that protected my people in other years in the preservation of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. I appear for every one of the victims of these wrongs, rich or poor, white or black, strong or weak, sanguine or depressed. Like many another part of the land and the people that inhabit it, we have suffered most for lack of the necessities of life upon which the taxes fall heaviest. If there are any luxuries down there, they are mostly in the visions of the future, when our great stores of mineral resources shall be developed.

Mr. Chairman, there is distress all over the 3,000,000 square miles of this land, wherever there is a toiler and wherever there is a sympathetic ear to listen to the story of human want and sorrow. Mark this, there is wheat and corn in our country, more than enough to feed all our people and have abundance to spare; yet there are thousands of American people suffering almost to starvation. Wheat and corn rotting, weevil eaten in the barns; men, women and children hungry on the streets and on our storm-washed and pestilence-plagued shores! Million-dollar stone and marble palaces building at Newport and in picturesque nooks of the Hudson. Enough money spent in building and maintaining pleasure yachts alone to buy a million bushels of wheat. Men in throngs, howling like maniacs for work with which to buy bread for wives and children at home.

These things have occurred in our country, and are occurring now, Mr. Chairman.

To my mind one of the most wonderful "achievements" of the Republican party has been the effrontery with which it has gone on telling the afflicted country that everything was all right, when in fact everything was all wrong. Republican Presidents in their messages to Congress were wont to congratulate the country upon its progress, and Republican politicians have harped upon the growth of the United States—poor, pock-marked daughter of protection. Republican conventions have always "pointed with pride" to any channel that floated boodle their way, and always "viewed with alarm" any symptom of revolt against the deviltry of the party which was the result of courageous Democratic agitation against Republican compounded rascality.

It is really one of the marvels of the age that this country has advanced so rapidly under so heavy a handicap as has been put upon it by unwise rulings. Let us take a glimpse into the bewildering mazes of results that have been the dispensations of Providence rather than the decrees of Satanic power. The general prosperity has been affected from time to time by numerous causes, some favorable and some unfavorable.

An enormous public debt, incurred in a few months, was paid off with unparalleled rapidity; paper money was issued and redeemed after a long struggle; vast sums were borrowed abroad and repaid on a proportionate scale after the crashes of 1873; railways were built over thousands of miles and with magical swiftness of enterprise; great areas of virgin forests and of arable fertile tracts were opened to settlement; more of the splendid riches of our mineral resources were discovered and developed; the arts and sciences advanced in all directions, revolutionizing many branches of industry and supplying new comforts and luxuries; with all this there came an extraordinary immigration, and I believe, finally, that the excesses of our high import duties would have operated with frightful force but for the rapid improvement both in the means of communication and the methods and vehicles of rapid transportation on land and ocean, annihilating so much of time and space that it could but be a very material and important factor in the growth of the United States as a whole.

But if wealth has been added to the sum of the nation's treasures; if the bulk of the money credited to our people in the balance of nations has been augmented, it has been with the enrichment of small classes and the impoverishment of large masses. The manual laborers of the country, who have constituted its real and genuine wealth-producers, have suffered while the nonproducers have prospered.

Without the fruits of the wage-earner's toil, we would have gained nothing. With them, under such laws as we have to endure, we have received scarcely a benefit that has not come from rare inventive genius, which is always born out of the necessities and wants of striving mankind.

Ex-Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, when he was in the Senate, a "statesman," not "without a job," said in a speech, in January, 1891, much to the grave concern of his Republican colleagues:

By some means, some device, some machination, some incantation, honest or otherwise, some process that can not be defined, less than a two-thousandth part of our population have obtained possession, and have kept out of the penitentiary, in spite of the means they have adopted to acquire it, of more than half the accumulated wealth of the country.

That was all true, as it was fine in the sweep and procession of its polysyllables. It is true of the conditions now, "only more so," but I do not see any mystery involved in the process of defining the cause of the serious condition of things so deep and baffling as to require the use of terms so fanciful as those Mr. Ingalls employed. Read again the Democratic indictment of the Republican party for the imposition of its robber tariff, and its vicious financial legislation, employing the most mighty and insidious agencies for the depreciation and degradation of the people's silver money, and you will find such a summing up of "achievements" as will leave no cloud of doubt upon your understanding.

But Mr. Ingalls told more truth when he added on the same occasion:

That is not the worst. It—

This collossal concentration of wealth—has been chiefly acquired by men who have contributed little to the material welfare of the country, and by processes that I do not care in appropriate terms to describe.

And he said, too:

A financial system under which one-half of the wealth of the country, derived from the bounty of nature and the labor of all, is owned by a little more than 30,000 people, while 1,000,000 American citizens, able and willing to toil, are homeless tramps, starving for bread. A social system which offers to tender women the alternative between suicide and begging is organized crime, for which some day unrelenting justice will demand atonement and expiation.

The explanation of the saddest pictures of our times, seeing nowhere else under heaven to look for it, I read between the lines of the statute books for the last thirty years; I read it in the narrow, dingy precincts of Wall street; in the mysterious recesses of Lombard. I glean new hints of robbery, wrong, and oppression in the marble halls of Andrew Carnegie's castle in Scotland, and I hear the voice of heartless exultation over power purchased out of honest sweat and blood in the crack of the coachman's whip lashing the steeds that draw this American lord afield in the land that gave to humanity the poet who said:

The rank is but the guinea's stamp—
A man's a man for 'a that.

We need not go into argument or array of figures to show that improved machinery and appliances to fields of industry have contributed materially in lessening the cost and measurably easing the burdens of labor; we need not dwell on the fact that one man can by these agencies produce as much now as half a dozen could a few years ago, reducing the cost to the manufacturer in proportion and cheapening production any more than we need to point to the fact that we now have electric lights in our cities where formerly we had tallow candles, questioning if this advancement has not been one of the "achievements" of the Republican party.

There are published in the foreign edition of the Mail and Export Journal advertisements by 166 American manufacturing firms whose goods are protected by the tariff. The articles are to be delivered on board ship at New York at the prices I shall name. I copy from the prices of the advertisements of the same manufacturers in the American and foreign editions of the paper:

Articles.	Foreign price.	Home Price.
Advance plow	$9.00	$18.00
Hay tedder	30.00	45.00
Mower	40.00	65.00
Horse rake	17.00	25.00
Cumming feed-cutter No. 3	60.00	60.00
Ann Arbor cutter No. 2	28.00	40.00
Ann Arbor cutter No. 1	16.00	28.00
Clipper cutter	9.50	18.00
Lever cutter	4.25	8.25
Cultivator	22.00	30.00
Sweep	60.00	90.00

It will be seen that the average excess of the home price of these home manufactured articles is nearly 60 per cent more than the foreign price. And yet we excel the world in the manufacture of these implements of husbandry. Such are results of the "achievements" of Republican greatness.

I have also before me the export edition of the Engineering and Mining Journal for May 3, 1890, containing advertisements of agricultural and other implements for the foreign trade, with discounts on the American price to foreign customers. The following will be sufficient:

Agricultural implements, S. L. Allen & Co., Planet Junior No. 2 seed drill, $9; discount, 30 per cent. Combined drill, cultivator, rake plow, etc., $12; discount, 30 per cent. Fire-fly single wheel hoe, cultivator and plow, $5; fire-fly hand plow, $2.50; discount, 30 per cent, free on board at New York.

Plows.

Oneonta clipper, reversible iron-beam cutter	$14.00
Oneonta clipper, reversible iron wheel and cutter	15.00
Oneonta clipper, reversible cutter	15.00
Oneonta clipper, reversible iron beam and cutter	16.00

Discount, 30 per cent.

Rakes.

22-teeth rake	32.00
26-teeth rake (25 per cent discount)	34.00
Waldron's pattern, oiled	8.50
Silver steel, painted	8.50
Western Dutchman, bronzed	9.00
Fine cutlery steel, full painted	10.00
All steel, full polished	11.00

Grain scythes.

Waldron's pattern, oiled	11.25
Silver steel, painted	11.25
Clover, oiled	11.25
Clipper, bronzed and painted (discount, 40 and 10 per cent)	11.50

Anvils.

Eagle anvils, weighing 100 to 800 pounds, 10 cents per pound: discount, 10 and 20 per cent.

Then follow pistols and rifles manufactured by Colt and Smith & Wesson, with a discount to the foreigner of 10 and 25 per cent. Also table and butcher knives, scissors, spoons, forges, drills, duck and twine, electrical appliances, explosives, mills, boilers, flue cleaners, augers, wrenches, vises, black tools, jackscrews, pails, watercoolers, washtubs, keelers, milk pans, lamps, miners' tools, etc., on which the discount to foreign purchasers ranges from 10 to 70 per cent.

In the face of all this we are told by the advocates of high protection that this enormous leap in the increase of tariff taxes made by the McKinley law, was made necessary in order to enable our home manufacturers to sell their products at home, in competition with foreign manufacturers, who make and sell like products in our markets. I propose to demonstrate the falsity and unreasonableness of this claim by reference to a few other items.

In The Carpet and Upholstery Trade Review of November 15, 1893, we find the following advertisement of a shipment and sale of American Axminster carpeting:

3*s.* 3*d.* the yard.
Made and laid free. Honestly worth 5*s.* 6*d.* the yard.
Lovely for bedrooms.
Lasting for drawing rooms.
Reliable for dining rooms.

A. R. Dean invites the public to see these extraordinary carpets at once, as there will certainly be a quick sale.

A. R. Dean has secured the rights of all the best designs of these Axminster carpets for Birmingham.

No others firms in Birmingham have got these carpets—direct from the American agents—neither can they procure them, as they are private to A. R. Dean.

The patterns and designs and colorings are splendid—second to none. The majority of them have been brought out by British work people.

Please note the price—3*s.* 3*d.* the yard, made and fitted free. Worth 5*s.* 6*d.*

A. R. Dean,
The leader of the carpet industry,
Bull street and Corporation street.

Which shows that this particular kind of carpet sells in foreign countries and to foreign consumers for 3*s.* 3*d.*, or 79 cents per yard, while the English product of like quality and grade sells at home at 4*s.* 3*d.*; so that the American product is sold at 25 per cent over the English article in English markets. This, too, after paying all freights and commissions. Yet with this and other well-authenticated instances of the same state of affairs staring them in the face, the Republican party still insists on keeping up this tax on the common people to enrich their pets and favorites. The same English journal, commenting editorially on the condition of her markets, mentions heavy consignments of fine American carpeting to several European countries, and says the low prices at which it is placed has completely disorganized the European markets.

But this does not show the worst phase in the practical workings of the tariff. It prohibits all foreign competition and enables these monopolists to sell at their own figures—these articles of prime necessity to our own people at their own prices, and they do not scruple to do so. A quotation which I insert below from an American price list of the same date of that taken from the English Trade Review last quoted shows that our American manufacturers and dealers sell to American consumers the same carpeting at the price of $2 to $2.25 per yard:

Wiltons, 5-frame	$2.00	Extra superfine	$0.90
Brussels	1.02½	C. C. extra superfine	.90
Manchester (stouts)	.87½	Saxony rugs, 4-4 each	7.00
Axminster	1.35	Saxony rugs, 30 inches each	5.00
Kandahar	.72½

[Applause.]

This is from the public price list of American manufacturers and dealers, and shows that an American consumer pays from 200 to 300 per cent more for this same article, of like grade and quality, than the foreigner has to pay for it—and that, too, after freights and charges have been deducted.

It is difficult to conceive of a greater crime—I use the word advisedly—against the rights and liberties of this American people than they suffer under the operation of this infamous class legislation embodied in the present McKinley tariff act. It forces the common laboring element of our country, which is its most vital part as a nation, to pay tribute to the few rich monopolist class, the manufacturers; but under its protecting care, as we have demonstrated, these favored infants and wards of the Government are able to ship their products into the markets of all Europe and place them in fatal competition with like articles produced by the so-called pauper labor of those countries.

Is it any wonder then that these pauper laborers, finding themselves deprived of work at any price, should at once seek the country where work would seem to be so plentiful? Let the statistics of our immigration bureau answer this question. Thousands and tens of thousands of the poorest of the population of Europe have flocked to our shores since the present tariff bill went into effect, whose starving condition compelled them to get work at merely nominal rates, thus displacing a like number of our own native citizens, and enabling the unscrupulous manufacturer to make a horizontal cut in wages, owing, as he states, to a stringency of the times. Its real cause lies deeper. It is owing to an oversupply of cheap foreign laborers, that he has ready at a moment's notice to step into the place of the native workman, who finds it impossible to live at the reduced wages, while a Swede, a Norwegian, or a Italian or Chinaman will keep fat and save money to send out of the United States to his pauper family across the sea.

No feudal lord of the middle ages ever wrested from his vassals, under color of law, his fines and fees than do our unscrupulous manufacturers from their helpless fellow-citizens their sweat-earned wages; and no proud baron was more secure in his outrageous robbery when within his strong castle's walls, with drawbridge raised, than are our shrewd and conscienceless manufacturing autocrats behind the hitherto impregnable fortress known as the McKinley bill and encased in the proof armor of their combines and trusts.

I would like for some well-informed gentleman on the other side to tell me, Mr. Chairman, where the 9,000,000 farmers of this country get any benefit out of such Republican "achievements." According to the latest and most reliable statistics, the farmers are not making a cent of profit. No wonder, when they are not only swindled by extortionate taxation but directly discriminated against by the men to whom they are yielding tribute, and this, too, on the prices of the implements and tools they use, as well as upon the necessaries of life, all going to swell the coffers of the allies of the swindlers.

Yes; this country has grown, remarkable as it is, under a Republican protective tariff. But take any two periods, one of a low tariff and the other under a high-tariff system, and then let us see which shows the greater percentage of growth. The increase of the value of farm lands from 1850 to 1860 was $3,333,469,586, or a yearly rate of increase over $337,000,000; total increase from 1860 to 1880—twenty years—$3,552,051,769, or a yearly rate of increase of less than $178,000,000. Ten and a half per cent increase for the low tariff ten years and only 2½ per cent increase for the high tariff twenty years, yet in these twenty years the population has more than doubled. From 1850 to 1860 our agricultural exports increased yearly 25 per cent, under a free-trade tariff; the average increase for thirty-two years since has scarcely been 3 per cent.

And how have the 9,000,000 dwellers and tollers on our farms fared during these thirty-two years? The answer comes out of the blight and gloom of mountains of mortgaged indebtedness, and the achievements of the Republican protective tariff that steals from the farmer the moment he opens his eyes to life until they are closed in a tombless grave. A tariff, forsooth, to give him a home market, when he is more dependent than he ever was upon a foreign market! In 1860, under a free-trade tariff, 170,000,000 bushels of wheat were grown in this country, and the farmer had to export only 2½ per cent of the crop. In other words, he had use or market at home for 97 bushels out of every hundred.

In its very comprehensive article on the agricultural resources of America, the Encyclopedia Britannica concludes that if the resources of our farm lands alone were developed, they would furnish food to a number "five times as great as the entire mass of human beings upon the globe!" Never shall the honest delvers in this most fruitful garden of the earth by any vote of mine be taxed to their hurt on a single necessity or comfort of life. But they have suffered, and they are asking us for relief.

Why, we had a few millions of chattel slaves in 1860 who did not lack for food, clothing, and shelter, and the common comforts of life, as do now millions of white American slaves to the system of purse-proud plutocracy that lives in castles on land and floats in palaces on water. It is a plutocracy that crowds us with tramps, threatens us with anarchists, and that would laugh if one-half the people were driven to ruin, desperation, and suicide. It thinks it can go on importing its pauper labor, so loudly anathematized by Republican press and oratory, and so eagerly welcomed by Republican mine and mill owners; but the day of wrath will come as surely as that language may pronounce the doom of remorseless murder. Accursed be the spirit that robs, and not only robs, but inflicts long-drawn-out torture upon humanity!

We need not go deep into the subject, Mr. Chairman, to learn how heavily we in the Southern States are taxed on articles of prime use and necessity, and how all classes there, white and black, where industry is diversified little beyond the cultivation of the soil, pay tribute to the rule of Republican "achievement."

One of the great staples of the South, in the production of which a large majority of our farm labor is employed, is cotton, that must be picked, ginned, and baled before it can get to market. Besides a tax on the machinery of the gin, there is an unnecessary and exorbitant tax on the hoop iron with which the cotton is baled, as well as on cotton bagging, which consumes all the profits. On this item I adopt the eloquent words of Senator VOORHEES of Indiana, who though living in a State that produces no cotton is broad and patriotic enough to appreciate our needs and sympathize with us in our adversity:

> For the proposed startling increase of duty on iron hoops for baling cotton, or cotton ties, as they are commonly called, there is not even the excuse of a desire to protect some manufacturer in getting rich out of the daily toil of men, women, and children, white and black, in the South. There is not a cotton tie manufactured in the United States, and this tremendous leap in the tax on that article appears simply as an unworthy piece of sectional malice aimed at a people laboring faithfully, bravely, patiently, and loyally, and often under the most trying circumstances, to do their whole duty as American citizens.

And this industry, Mr. Chairman, is one in which the laborers are almost exclusively negroes, a majority of them voters for the Republican tickets and comprising the strength of what is left of the Republican party in the South. God pity the poor deluded creatures! Taxed on nearly everything they have on this earth, and the fruits of their hard labor reduced to so pitiful a minimum that three-fourths of them are far worse off for the necessities and comforts of life than they were as chattel slaves. The party that clamors for their rights, and wails that the white man of the South denies them opportunities of progress, practices as palpable a hypocrisy to them now as it did when, just after the war, it told them it went to war expressly to free them. But their white fellow-citizens in the South share with them the burdens of taxation, and more, they paid from January, 1869, to January, 1893, $12,455,469 for the education of the negro race, my State alone paying $1,037,946 of this amount, which is more than any Caucasian people on the earth have done for the negro.

A gentleman on the other side during the discussion of the elections bill gave vent to the remarkable theory that the white people of the South deprived the negro of his vote because they wanted to hold him down and keep his labor cheap. That there is not the semblance of truth in the idea goes without even calling a black witness to prove. It is the white people of the Republican party that hold the negro down and keep his labor cheap. The Republican party taught the negro, through Republican carpetbaggers, his first lesson in politics, and that was one of such foul corruption as never entered his wildest suspicions and superstitions about his white Democratic neighbors. Republican dispensers of office never gave him an office save with the notion that it might chagrin or humiliate some white Southern Democrat, and the negroes of the North never knew what it was to receive honorable recognition at the hands of any party until it was accorded them by a Democratic Administration.

The false pretenses, the massive deceit, and the grinding oppression of their laws upon the humble labor and deplorable ignorance of the negro constitute the crowning infamy of Republican "achievement." The manacles he wore in 1860 are as jeweled bracelets to the flesh-cutting shackles that Republican protection has fastened upon his limbs. He needs a new emancipation. He wants a freeman's reward for a freeman's labor. If he ever gets it, it will be through the Democratic party enacting laws that will enable him to sell his labor for all the commodities he needs, and more than are included in his simple wants.

Let us take the iron ball and chain from his feet and make him a free man indeed.

Mr Chairman, in proportion to population, perhaps the people of the South more than any other have use for tin. It is an article about which the people of the whole country have been shamefully swindled and humbugged in a way that was enough to make the most incredulous ashamed of the gullibility of human beings.

The tin plate tariff has been a tax without any excuse in any principle of protection, even, because there never has been in this country a tin-plate establishment that was not a howling failure from the very start. Let us see. In 1862 the duty was 25 per cent; in 1872, 15 per cent; in 1875, changed to 20 per cent; in 1883 to about 30 per cent, and in 1890, by the McKinley tariff, a duty of 2.2 cents per pound, or 70 per cent, was imposed. A tax of over $15,000,000 per annum.

Why, we manufacture 1,800,000 boxes of tin into 600,000,000 cans, to hold the products of the field, orchard, and medicinal waters. We pay for this stillborn babe of protection over $2,000,000 per year. Therefore that appreciable amount of money either goes into the garbage heap or into the remorseless bowels of our rich few. With all of this wrong I leave the subject, contenting myself with the reflection of John Quincy Adams, made in 1832, that the doctrine that the duties on imports cheapen the price of the article upon which they are levied conflicts with the first dictates of common sense.

There is nothing so much the matter with this country as to require such enormous protection for our iron and steel manufactures. We lack nothing of the component parts of the highest and finest forms of products. For many years the manufacture of iron and steel has been in that part of the country where the natural conditions were not of the best. For a long time Massachusetts led, and now, although Pennsylvania is in the van, her place must soon be taken by other States more capable of cheaper production. Look at the scale of progress for the past ten years and see what Alabama and Tennessee have done, against all sorts of adverse circumstances, including greater remoteness from the markets than the Eastern shops and mines and mills.

These States teem with metallic treasures, and ask no privilege but to live and let live. Their development would be sure to result in benefit to the whole country. To enact any law to delay it would be against the interests of all the people. Take my State and Alabama. We have iron ore of the best quality and in the greatest abundance, coal almost incalculable in quantity for forge and furnace, limestone for fluxing, and the best timber, stone, and marble for mining and building convenient, durable, and beautiful. Interest will overcome prejudice, break down all barriers whether they be savage or civilized, and capital will come where enterprise can pursue its lively course the whole year round without interference either by winter's cold or summer's heat.

And, Mr. Chairman, coming as I do from the richest mineral district in the South, perhaps, in quantity, variety, and accessibility of ores, and intrinsic value, or to be found in the United States, and representing the most populous Congressional district in Tennessee, I desire to say something as to coal and iron.

I favor reducing the duties to a revenue basis, first, because every political principle I prize is inimical to class legislation, and for the imposition of a protective tax for protection's sake on the consumer of these useful articles is certainly of that kind. It is in opposition to the spirit and letter of that instrument which I venerate more than any other emanating from the intelligence of man, the Constitution, which I hold second in importance only to the revealed law of God.

My vote has never been recorded, since my public service began, for any measure which embodied the sophistry of "protection for protection's sake." It will never be given for such a measure. But, while the Third Congressional district of Tennessee extends from the Blue Ridge on the east across the Cumberland on the west, including large areas of both these mountain ranges, from every fissure and gulch of both stands out in plain view the finest and richest coal and iron strata, and while it borders on the mineral laden districts of Western North Carolina on the east and Northern Georgia and Alabama on the south, its interior is dotted with thousands of other industries—agricultural, manufactories of cotton and woolen goods, furniture, etc.—which should all be considered and given fair play in our legislative action.

Of those engaged in the production of coal and iron some desire the retention of a tariff on iron and coal, while others advocate that they come in free.

In the issue of the Chattanooga Times for Sunday, December 3, 1893, in an interview covering nearly two columns of that paper, Hon. W. M. Nixon, a native of Tennessee and a citizen of Chattanooga, who is connected with most of the furnaces in the Chattanooga mineral district, and whose furnace at Gadsden, North Alabama, is making an output of 80 tons of iron per day, says:

The Wilson tariff bill is in strict accord with the Democratic platform, which was indorsed by a majority of the voters of Tennessee, and is not a mistake in any sense. * * * There is no probability of the importation of coal into the United States, unless it be from Manitoba and Australia into the territory west of the Rocky Mountains, which can not be supplied from the States, not even from Colorado, on account of the great distance and expensive transportation East of the Rockies there is nothing to fear from free coal. The United States exported in the year 1892, 831,045 tons of coal to Canada in competition with coal from Nova Scotia and the balance of the world. We also exported as much more to other countries, our total exports of coal in 1892 being 1,757,137 tons, * * * which was sold in competition with the entire world. * * *

Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Alabama all export coal against the competition of the world. * * * and furnish coal for our Navy and Merchant Marine wherever vessels touch on the Atlantic coast, and this business is enormously increasing each year. This coal is supplied to railroads in South America and other countries. Alabama is building up enormous coal and coke export business through southern ports to the West Indies, Mexico, and Central and South America. Southern coal operators require more reciprocity in trade with the countries with which they deal and return cargoes for their vessels than protection against foreign coal. Coal operators certainly do not want an import duty on coal to enable them to charge higher prices inside the United States than they sell it to foreigners.

While I think we should have a small duty, as hereafter explained, I want to say, "There speaks the patriot." There spoke the lover of the laboring people of his own country and friend of the freezing families of those who consume the product of his mines. If all those who have, through moneyed influence, procured the enactment of invidious protection laws had been actuated by this Christian spirit, how much it would have mitigated the sufferings of the people—how much lessened the ill-gotten gains of the more unscrupulous class of operators, who count their millions of profits made by "charging consumers at home more than they required foreigners to pay for their goods," and how many dark stains would never have appeared on our public records that now deface them

Again, Mr. Nixon says:

Very little ore of the South is sufficiently low in phosphorous for steel-making purposes, under present steel manufacturing processes, without additional manipulation. The steel ores of the United States which can be used under present conditions are west of the Alleghanies. Ores east of the Alleghanies require a mixture of Lake Superior, Cuban, or Mediterranean ores to make steel. This was announced publicly a few days ago by a vice-president of one of the largest steel mills in the United States. The foundry ores which can be used under present conditions come from the Lake Superior district, Alabama, Tennessee, and Virginia. Cuban and Spanish ores worked alone make Bessemer or steel iron, not foundry iron. This Cuban and Spanish ore is of entirely different character from the foundry ores of Alabama, Tennessee, etc.

Then, of course, as demonstrated above, it would not materially come into competition with our native ores, but, as Mr. Nixon further says:

If this Cuban and Spanish ore could be brought into the South as cheap as it is claimed it can be, after the removal of the duty, it can be used in combination with Alabama and Tennessee ore and produce a better grade of foundry iron, and dispense with the low-grade mill iron which is just now the bane of Southern furnace men. Cuban or Spanish ore mixed in proper proportion with Alabama and Tennessee ores would produce a Bessemer iron at lower cost than Northern furnaces can make it from Lake Superior and Pennsylvania ores.

Even after the removal of the duty of 75 cents per ton, foreign ores are not so cheap, as the import statistics of 1892 show. There was imported for the first quarter of 1892, 683,227 tons valued at $1,583,497, or $2.30 per ton at foreign port, exclusive of freight or duty. For the year 1892, we imported 806,585 long tons, value $1,795,644 or $2.23 per ton at foreign port. For the first nine months of 1893, we imported 487,179 tons, value $847,962, or $1.90 per ton at foreign ports. We imported from Spain in 1892, 236,959 tons, valued at $843,847 or $1.62 per ton at Spanish ports. From Cuba we imported in 1892 397,115 tons, value $618,232, about $2 per ton at Cuban ports. These prices do not alarm operators of Southern ore mines, who are delivering ores of standard quality at 50 to 75 cents per ton free on board cars. The superior management of American miners, and more economical methods of handling their material has never permitted foreign ores to penetrate a distance of 100 miles from the coast.

If abolishing the duty increases the importation of Cuban ore, which is of good quality, is near us, and can be cheaply transported by coal vessels returning empty, reduces the American methods, it will furnish return cargoes for our returning coal vessels from the West Indies, etc.; it can then be cheaply delivered to Alabama, Tennessee, and Virginia furnaces, and in combination with our cheap native ores produce just the grade of iron we want, and at lower cost than in any district in the United States. Grant that the removal of the duty on Cuban and Spanish ore starts up Eastern furnaces near the coast, they will not produce a grade of iron competing with Southern iron.

Even if they make foundry iron and reduce the market of Southern furnaces to this extent, the same conditions will enable the Southern furnaces to more than make up the loss * * * by access to this cheap free ore * * * and would enable and force the South to manufacture its furnace product into articles now coming from the North, which we buy at prices enhanced by freights and manufacturer's profits.

Besides—

Says Mr. Nixon—

southern furnace men and mine owners are skimming the cream in assembling the cheap material and manufacturing the iron only sufficiently to prepare it to be shipped to other manufacturers who get in the profitable work upon it. This system has already exhausted the cheapest or most easily mined ore in the Chattanooga district, and the end is in sight at Birmingham. Ten years will make cheap ores very desirable—foreign or otherwise.

The broad and liberal views here advanced show not only that the vast multitude who buy and use coal and iron products, but that even the business interests of mine owners and furnace men will be advanced by the liberal policy which has always been advocated by the Democratic party, not only in the South but even on the Northern Atlantic coast and in New England. Further, the gentleman thinks that—

The proposed tariff modification will prevent the steel rail trust, which has throttled that industry so long and almost suspended railroad building, from maintaining unwarranted prices as they have heretofore, and put an end to many other trusts and combinations in the iron and steel manufacturing line.

I hope that this last consummation, so devoutly to be wished for, may be attained through the operation of the legislation of the Democratic party to be enacted during the present term of Congress, and that the people of the iron district I represent may be, through the same medium, promoted from being the "hewers of wood and drawers of water" in the iron industry and become the manufacturers of the finished articles in iron and steel industries, with facilities and capital not only to supply their home consumers, but to enter the markets of the world as fearless competitors. Give them untrammeled access to the best markets in which to sell and the cheapest in which to buy what they do not produce, and what need have the people of this country, so rich in resources, to apprehend from competition with the known commercial world.

I am not for putting a cent of duty on iron and coal for protection's sake, and would not attempt to add a duty of 40 cents if the present bill had cut down the duties on the manufactured articles to a proper revenue limit. Mr. Chairman, it is evident that so long as we raise so much money from import duties or tariff taxes there is obliged to be incidental benefits to different interests and different sections of our country resulting from legislation. This incidental benefit ought to be uniform, and as near as possible distributed equally and without partiality among the several interests and sections. The finished products of the East and Middle States have duties on them which in my judgment exceed the revenue point, and I think it but fair under these conditions to leave a small revenue duty on coal and iron to even up and equalize things. But, Mr. Chairman, if I can not get this I will vote for the bill anyway, as it is much better than the present illegal McKinley law. And I notify all the balance of the sections that no proscription can keep the manufacturing interest of the South down. If you make our coal and iron free, you will make us your successful competitors in the manufacture of all finished products. This will enlarge our field. It will give more men work and at better wages, and what you imagine will be a handicap may be the means of our early and full development.

Where the most iron is, go to it and dig it out if you must have it. Where the conditions are most favorable for manufacturing, go there and fashion the things that will answer best the demands of utility. In addition, Mr. Chairman, I would say that the McKinley law taxes all the necessities of the people to such an extent that the burden has become more than they can bear. Shall I give my vote to heap burdens upon them, or shall I let them go on and not protest while their scanty means go to the protected luxury, idleness, and debauchery that enlists tramps, fires anarchists, raises the red flag of communism, makes skeletons and nakedness and unshriven death?

One of the most outrageous and contemptible performances of the Republican party, one of its greatest "achievements," is the sugar bounty. They threw a tub to the Southern whale with this bounty on sugar. The Louisiana sugar-growers are paid a bounty of 2 cents a pound, enabling them to make fortunes in favorable crop years by an act of Government wrongfully and unlawfully granted. Not only that, but the Republican party has been mean enough to stain the gift with partiality to the beet-sugar growers in other sections, allowing the machinery used in beet-sugar manufacture to be imported free of duty, and requiring the Louisiana sugar-makers to pay a tax on their machinery.

The brave people of Louisiana ought to spurn such favors. There is no earthly semblance of authority for the law; no possible sense in the policy. This bounty cost us about $12,000,000 per year, and the law granting this bounty ought to be absolutely repealed and at once. We can not afford to indulge any part of this crime for eight years or for any length of time. Sugar is grown in but limited sections of the country. It has always been a revenue-producing commodity. It is one of the commonest essentials of the tables of our 65,000,000 people. It is bound to come here, and we may tax it lightly and get a good revenue, that the consumer will readily pay, if relieved of the staggering burdens that are put upon his other necessities, the taxation of which is not for purposes of raising revenues.

There are four or five thousand growers of maple sugar in New York and Vermont who, for the least bit of labor, get under the bounty law almost as much as the whole business amounts to. The man who raises wheat, corn, oats, hogs, chickens, watermelons—anything, in short, that the farm produces—is as much entitled to a bounty as the sugar-grower of Louisiana, the beet-sugar grower of California, or the maple-sugar grower of Vermont; but no class has a right to tax all the people to pay their bounties. It is one of the meanest things of which the party of "great achievements" is guilty. It is like the common sneak thief that seeks to attract attention to something across the street while he steals the contents of the wayfarer's pocket. It is one of the numerous bastards of the robber tariff.

As I have plainly said before, I am in favor of a graduated income tax that will force the wealth of the country to take up some of the burdens of taxation from which it has so long escaped, thus relieving the shoulders of the people of the weight of this much at least of what has almost pressed their faces into the dust. Why should large incomes of the rich few escape bearing its part of the pensions and other burdens which are bearing so heavy on the people.

If it is not possible to dispense with the dangerous banking system, which has always been the servant and friend of monopoly, trusts, and combines, amend the laws so that the currency may be increased and put into circulation, and let the national banks stop with the expiration of their charters and then let the Government cease to delegate this power to private corporations that may—as they have recently done—prostrate at will the business of the town community and reduce the rural environments to distress and almost hopelessness, by contracting or inflating the currency to conform to speculative conditions elsewhere.

The Government of the people alone should have the privilege of issuing notes to circulate among the people. The banks may receive deposits and discount notes, but they have no right within the intent and purpose of this Government to flourish at the expense of the people who pay the taxes that enable them to exist.

In short, I am in favor of Government privileges to nobody, and I shall vote that way all along the line. We are constantly told that we have the greatest banking system known; but we have recently seen that system leaguing with the agencies that make money dear instead of convenient, obeying and harking to calamity cries, forsooth, by the rich against the poor. If we talk about taking the tax off State banks, which is eminently right, we are warned about the fate of the wild-cat banks of other days.

Mr. Chairman, as far as concerns comparison of the two systems, and the influences they engender, I would prefer the wild-cats to the cowardly hyenas that dig in the graveyards of the hopes of my people. I venture to say that during their existence the wild-cat banks as a whole, in proportion to the capital employed, did more good for the convenience of the people, and were more honestly managed, than the national banks; that where one dollar of State-bank money was lost, ten dollars of money in national banks have been sunk.

I give you now some statistics that I have used before. If they are not exactly up to date they will, I am sure, be borne out by the latest Government authority. We pay as gratuity to manufactories, $4 for every $1 of import taxes. Figure it out for yourself, and you must be amazed to find out what Republican achievements in tariff legislation have cost us for the past thirty years. It is an amount that is nearly one-half the present value of all property in this country, which is $63,000,000,000, one-half of which is owned by about thirty thousand people against 65,000,000.

It may be interesting to know how much of the amount of tariff taxes we have been forced to pay under Republican legislation for the last thirty years, and what part of these taxes went into the Treasury; what has been the amount of increased profits which the protected manufacturers have been able to collect from us and put in their pockets of greed by means of their protected goods.

The two sums added together will be the total cost of our tariff taxation for thirty years. The amount of tariff taxes collected into the United States Treasury during this time is found in the last Statistical Abstract of the United States prepared by the Bureau of Statistics (No. 14, page 14). By adding up the column back to 1862 we find the amount to be $5,175,972,313.83. To find out the whole cost to this country of that tariff taxation, we must now add to this sum the increased profits or tribute which our protected home manufactures have made out of us. This tariff has enabled them to monopolize this country for the sale of their goods.

How much are these increased profits so paid by the people of this country to these petted and protected barons by reason of this tariff taxation? Experts and statisticians tell us that for every dollar we pay as import taxes we have paid from $2 to $5 increased profits to these protected home manufacturers. Taking the middle estimate—$4—as correct, and four times $5,175,972,313.83 makes $20,703,889,255.32, and these two sums added together give us the stupendous amount of $25,879,861,569.15. This is what the Republican legislation on the tariff has cost the people in the last thirty years.

And subsidies, Mr. Chairman. What are Republican achievements in that direction? They have robbed the people of millions to give to rich corporations to build ships.

Go look in the harbor of New York. Scores and scores of luxuriantly appointed yachts and pleasure vessels costing from $15,000 to $200,000.

There is no earthly excuse for subsidies in our policy, and certainly no warrant in our Constitution. Sum up all the ships that enter and clear in the ports of Great Britain. Her ships coming and going outnumber those of all the vast world combined. It is simply because she has no embarrassing restrictions and gives to her merchant marine no special favors.

Her free fleets carry competition everywhere and bring to her little island treasures enough to make England the creditor nation of the world.

We need freer trade, free ships, free exchange of our abundant commodities, and we ask no advice or favors of the rest of the world either as to our policy of taxation or our system of finance.

And now in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I shall give my vote to the pending bill, not because its details meet my approval altogether—far from it, but solely because it is estimated that under its operation the common people pay in the aggregate as taxes, which go into the Treasury, $76,000,000 less than they do under the McKinley law, and estimating that it will likewise save them four times that amount, which they would otherwise be compelled to pay to the monopolists, thus saving the toilers of the nation $304,000,000 annually, quite a neat sum to protect them from hunger and cold. After carefully examining the bill I laid it down with disappointment, for many radical reforms were needed that are not made, and, as stated, I only give it my support because of its aggregate net results and because it at least recognized the principle of taxation for revenue only and is a start in the right direction. Its weakest point is not in a much greater and sweeping reduction on all the raw material for textile fabrics, but on everything the common masses are compelled to buy and consume, in providing economically for their own and their families' wants, and especially all the manufactured articles.

The committee, in my opinion, should have heeded the voice of the people in preparing their schedules, and the first thing they should have considered is, "How much revenue can be raised by a reasonable tax on the surplus incomes of our people." The details of the measure to be modeled after those most approved by practical experience of our own and other enlightened governments. Only the committee should not have failed to put a tax on all incomes of $5,000 or over. After having approximately ascertained the net sum to be thus realized, then the tariff on all the common necessaries of life should have been abolished and whatever deficiency would be left should have been raised by a duty on the luxuries of life. But Mr. Chairman, we think we are coming to the true standard and test of Democracy, and I believe and trust that at an early day of this session of a Democratic Senate and House of Representative such a measure as I have indicated will be introduced as an amendment to this bill and enacted.

The weak attempt at a dodge of this measure as advocated by the best political economists of the times, and demanded by the intelligent people of the country by recommendation of an income tax on corporations alone is too palpable and must fail. What is a tax in a corporation as such except a tax on the consumer of its products when applied to a great industrial corporation, such as water, gas, coal, iron, and even railroad companies? No, sir; give us the straight tax on all incomes of individuals and corporations which exceed $3,000 to $4,000 and let the per cent of tax increase as the income increases, and I shall feel we deserve the approval of our Democratic constituents.

Typical of its progress among our people, I quote you these sentences from a Republican who used to edit a newspaper in Arkansas—the Arkansas Republican, published at Little Rock. He became disgusted in the last campaign, and here is his valedictory:

> We must confess—very well-informed and candid men will confess that the Republican party compared to what it once was has become the mere plaything of partisan tricksters, of few brains and smaller hearts, traders in politics for personal aggrandizement, for purposes of plunder and pelf alone, indeed has become literally a den of thieves, recalling what Christ said to the money-changers, who trafficked in turtle doves for gain, "Take these things hence; make not my Father's house a house of merchandise."

I have tried to arraign the long-continued, and, as I conceive, unconstitutional policy of the Republican Administration preceding the advent to power of the Democrats on the 4th of March last. To show that notwithstanding the great blessing of Providence, the wonderful opportunities it had to equalize the vastly growing wealth and prosperity of the country among all its classes of people, it has unlawfully, wrongfully, and feloniously filched from the poor classes of our people and made their labor nonproductive of a competency, and at the same time transferred the legal rewards of honest workmen into the capacious pockets of our overgrown millionaires; has persistently and openly burdened one section beyond its capacity to bear and heaped favors on another section and class, and done all this under the forms of law and the cover of the catchword "protection," and yet, Mr. Chairman, boiling with indignation as such a shameful state of affairs justly excites, I was humiliated at the opening remarks of one of our Democratic members when at the late extraordinary session of Congress, and with the purpose, no doubt, to catch the Republican voter for the measure then pending before Congress, he said:

> When the gavel of the presiding officer descended upon the desk of the House on the 4th of March last, and members of Congress returned to their homes, they found the country blessed with universal prosperity.

It is a commentary on the results of thirty years of almost absolute Republican rule to which I want to record my earnest dissent. The condition of the body politic at the time specified was like the system of a man who has for months breathed the poisonous atmosphere of an infected locality, the effect of which left the patient in a disordered and sick condition, which will require the efforts of skilled physicians to restore to a healthy, normal state. The symptoms are to be found in an almost bankrupted Treasury, mountains of indebtedness, homes covered with mortgages, half their money destroyed, a great financial upheaval, a vicious civil-service law which grants to individuals a life tenure to office, and which violates the very genius of our free institutions, and the wholesome doctrine of rotation in office, the improper and ruinous pension system, the unequal and unjust distribution of appointive offices, to whom are paid annually millions of dollars out of the taxes of the people. And of this vast benefit the West and South are proscribed as they are in everything else, the Northeast getting at least two-thirds of these offices, and yearly sending these millions home to swell the vast fund of the East, and thus help to centralize all the money of the nation in this section. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, the great party of equal and exact justice to all men and special privileges to none, is the physician the people has called to remedy these things. Shall we be equal to the task? The action of this Congress will answer the question. In the President's message we find thirty years after the war, in time of profound peace, the improper and undemocratic recommendation for the power to issue and sell bonds of the United States, and thus increase the interest-bearing debt of the people in this way, and to lay a foundation for the perpetual continuance of the infamous and undemocratic system of national banks. This should receive such an emphatic, withering rebuke at the hands of a Democratic House and Senate that no other man will ever dare put such a poisoned deformity to the lips of true Democratic Representatives. That it is unwise—yea, wrong—no Democrat can gainsay.

It is only one of the plays of the powerful money combination to overwhelm the people and to finally destroy the ancient standard of gold and silver. It will not do to insist that bonds ought to be sold to increase our gold reserve, for we must concede that it is impossible for us to maintain more than our distributive share of the world's money—gold. And such as does come to us in the course of trade will not stay, if bought with bonds, if it exceeds this.

Others may do as they like, but as for myself I shall do all in my power to prevent the consummation of this crime against the interest, rights, and liberties of the people.

To meet this deficit let us coin silver, and if necessary empower the Secretary to issue Treasury notes redeemable in coin. In this way we can meet the demand without increasing the interest-bearing debt upon the people.

I have the highest hopes for the United States, and especially the part I expect my people to play in persuading a return to the immortal principles of our Constitution.

Mr. Chairman, the tottering honors of office for me do not carry a bubble's weight in the balance against my readiness and determination to serve my people either for what I believe is right and justice to them, or resist for them what I am convinced is wrong and oppression. I speak and I shall always vote to the line of that conduct. I have suffered with them and I have rejoiced with them. We have been companions in triumph and hand in hand in sorrow and defeat. Their interests and my honor are one. Their generous hearts and manly confidence have endowed me with this trust, and brief as it may be, rather than betray them, even by the connivance of my silence, I would prefer to quit this honorable place and go to my home among them, though an alternative were to have the highest office or wear the brightest crown of public opinion at the hands of other people. [Applause.]

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, this bill deserves careful thought and consideration. I have no doubt but what the advocates of this measure are sincere and earnest in their advocacy of the same. I am sure they will not impugn our sincerity and honesty of purpose in opposing the measure. The opposition of the Republican and Democratic parties on the issue now before the House is not new, accidental, or arbitrary. It is historical and fundamental. The Republican party at its birth was consecrated to the cause of protection. As a party it has always declared that it is the bounden duty of the Government to develope and sustain our manufacturing interests against foreign competition, to protect the interests of laboring men of all classes, to enforce a policy intended to secure them employment and a proper remuneration for their toil.

The Democratic party by its history and principles has been for more than half a century committed to free trade, and in favor of a system which always degraded labor. True, it has been guilty time and again of trimming, straddling, and falsifying on this question in its efforts to climb into power and place, but back of its duplicity it has a deep-seated purpose. Its history, carefully and impartially read, will determine its position for those who wish to know the facts. In the Democratic national convention of 1848 it proclaimed to the people of the United States the "noble impulse given to the cause of free trade by the repeal of the tariff of 1842." In its platform of 1856 it declared: "The time has come for the people of the United States to declare themselves in favor of free seas and progressive free trade throughout the world"; and this is what it means by its declaration in the Chicago platform of 1892, "a tariff for revenue only."

The Wilson bill now under consideration brings the issue squarely before the country whether the American system of protection as taught and enforced by the Republican party for the past thirty-two years shall continue to be the business policy of the country, or whether we will adopt a free-trade policy, a system which has cursed and put a blight on every nation put under its baneful influence.

Mr. Chairman, the day has gone by for either free trade or protection to depend for support upon the theories of political economists. If they stand at all it must be on foundations made from the history and records of our own as well as European governments, in their march of national progress during the century now coming to a close. We no longer need the aid of college professor or political economist who lack practical knowledge of the world and its toiling millions to aid us in coming to an intelligent conclusion on the measure now under discussion. All we have to do is to study the facts gathered from the industrial history of our own and other nations.

The tariff question is not, as many suppose it to be, an abstruse and difficult subject. The principles involved are plain and clear. This question so full of interest has for almost a century entered into the homes and daily life of our people. Let us look at this question as it affects governments, especially our own country. If we take the facts of the past, they will aid us to understand and comprehend the present, and legislate for the future welfare of our people.

The Republican party "refuses to reject the teachings of a century's experience during which protective revenue tariffs have an equal chance to exhibit the result of their operations and their relative effects upon the material interests of the country."

HISTORY OF TARIFF LEGISLATION.

Our Government at its beginning was substantially without manufactures, and almost dependent on a nation 3,000 miles across the ocean. English solicitude in relation to our manufactories is of early date. In 1717 the House of Commons declared "that the erection of manufactories in the colonies tended to lessen their dependence upon Great Britain." The board of trade and plantations in 1731 and 1732, in pursuance of an order of the House of Commons to inquire into the industrial affairs of the plantations, charged that in New York, New England, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, in the colonies northward of Virginia, "the colonies" had fallen into the manufacturing of woolen and linen cloth; that they raised flax and hemp, which they manufactured into "a coarse sort of cloth, bags, traces, and halters," to supply the domestic demand; that they had established woolen mills for domestic manufactures, and that linen and cotton for shirting were made; that they "manufactured brown hollands for women's wear," and that the Assembly of Massachusetts had voted a bounty of 30 shillings for every piece of duck or canvas manufactured in the province; that great quantities of hats and leather were manufactured and exported to Spain, Portugal, and the West Indies; that in Massachusetts they had set up a paper mill; that they had established iron works, six furnaces and nineteen forges, and one slitting mill for the manufacture of bar iron and of "cast iron or hollow ware," all sorts of "iron for ships," and "a manufactory for nails;" and that they built many brigantines and small sloops, "which they sold in the West Indies."

Parliament passed severe, preventive laws to crush all infant industries in the colonies. One of the great wrongs against our forefathers in colonial days was the determined and persistent resolve of the mother country to prevent the establishment of various industries and keep us poor and dependent upon England. This interference led our forefathers to declare for national independence. So we find that English solicitude for our great industrial and manufacturing enterprises is of early date, from 1777 up to and including the year 1893. Great Britain has been persistent and constant in her efforts to paralyze and cripple the industry and degrade the workingmen of America by propagating in our land (using the Democratic party as their agent) British free-trade principles. From 1861 to the present time the Republican party has stood like a mighty and strong bulwark against British free traders and has compelled them to keep "Hands off!"—our protective system.

Although the breaking down of our great protective system would be of much interest and benefit to the French, German, Swiss, Italians, and Russians, yet we do not now hear and never have heard of any plans of France, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, or Russia for an offensive intermeddling with our policy of protection. England alone all along the years of the century of our existence as a Republic has been offensively interfering with the domestic affairs of our people. The Republican party during the late war and ever since has entered its solemn protest against English intermeddling.

During the debate in extra session of the Fifty-third Congress, on the repeal of the purchasing clause of the silver bill known as the "Sherman law," our Democratic friends in favor of free coinage eloquently appealed to the members of the House not to legislate according to the wishes of the English people; that the time had come to call a halt and say to England, "Hands off!" My eloquent friend from Nebraska, Mr. BRYAN, who is now supporting this bill, in a burst of eloquence said, "Are we bond or free?" and then made the following impassioned appeal in referring to English intermeddling with our legislation on money matters:

> Suppose we try bringing her to terms by action. Let me appeal to your patriotism. Shall we make our laws dependent upon England's action and thus allow her to legislate for us upon the most important of all questions? Shall we confess our inability to enact monetary laws? Are we an English colony or an independent people? If the use of gold alone is to make us slaves, let us use both metals and be free. If there be some living along the eastern coast—better acquainted with the beauties of the Alps than with the grandeur of the Rockies, more accustomed to the sunny skies of Italy than to the invigorating breezes of the Mississippi Valley—who are not willing to trust their fortunes and their destinies to American citizens, let them learn that the people living between the Alleghanies and the Golden Gate are not afraid to cast their all upon the Republic and rise or fall with it. [Loud applause.]
>
> One hundred and seventeen years ago the liberty bell gave notice to a waiting and expectant people that independence had been declared. There may be doubting, trembling ones among us now, but, sirs, I do not overestimate it when I say that out of 12,000,000 of voters more than 10,000,000 are waiting, anxiously waiting, for the signal which shall announce the financial independence of the United States. [Applause.] This Congress can not more surely win the approval of a grateful people than by declaring that this nation, the grandest which the world has ever seen, has the right and the ability to legislate for its own people on every subject, regardless of the wishes, the entreaties, or the threats of foreign powers. [Applause.]

Let me add to what he has said, that out of "12,000,000 voters more than 10,000,000 are waiting, anxiously waiting for the signal which shall announce the" commercial, financial, and industrial "independence of the United States." "This Congress can not more surely win the approval of a grateful people than by declaring that this nation, the grandest which the world has ever seen, has the right and ability to legislate for its own people on every subject," and to declare for and maintain a protective policy, as well as a financial policy, which will bring to our people happiness and prosperity, "regardless of the wishes, the entreaties, or threats," of a Government, mightiest of all nations, whose "drumbeat, following the sunrise, encircles the globe."

TARIFF ACTS.

From the adoption of the first tariff act of 1779 and the levying of the war tariff of 1812, twelve additional tariff acts were passed generally increasing the rate of duty and adding to their protective power. The second tariff act was approved by President Washington on July 4, 1789. This act declared in no uncertain sound the doctrine of protection and the imposition of protective duties. The Senate gave it a unanimous vote, and the House of Representatives adopted it by four-fifths of its members voting for the bill. At the time of its passage both the Senate and the House contained a large number of men who had helped to frame and give a proper construction of the Constitution. The unquestioned result of these protective tariff acts had been to stimulate the growth of all the material inter-osts of the United States. So marked was the result that it attracted the attention of foreign governments.

President Washington, in his annual message of December, 1795, made the following statement: "Our agriculture, commerce, and manufactures are prospering beyond former example" and "every part of the Union displaying indications of rapid and various improvement." In his message of December, 1796, he urged upon Congress "the necessity of accelerating the establishment of certain useful manufactories by the intervention of legislative aid and protection."

President Jefferson, in his message of December, 1801, said: "There is now reasonable ground of confidence that we may safely dispense with all internal taxes." Dispensing with all internal taxes and relying upon tariff duties for "support of the Government and the payment of the public debt," was Mr. Jefferson's idea of a correct financial policy to raise revenue. President Cleveland and the leaders of the Democratic party of to-day reverse this policy in the Wilson bill now under consideration, by decreasing the revenue from the tariff duties $75,000,000 below the demands and "the necessities of the Government when honestly and economically administered" by themselves. This deficiency is to be made up by increasing internal taxes, levying a direct tax on our own people, at the same time reducing the tax on foreigners. Do the Democratic party stand upon and do they give allegiance to the principles of the party as formulated by Jefferson and exemplified by Madison and Jackson, as they declared they would do in the Chicago platform of 1892?

Mr. Jefferson, in his message of December, 1807, advised Congress of the condition of the United States Treasury and of the surplus in the same over and above what was needed "for the necessities of the Government when honestly and economically administered," and said:

> There will still ere long be an accumulation of money in the Treasury beyond the installment of the public debt which we are permitted by contract to pay. The question, therefore, now comes forward, to what other object shall these surpluses be appropriated and the whole surplus of imports after the entire discharge of the public debt, and when purposes of war shall not call for them? Shall we suppress the import and give that advantage to foreign over domestic manufactories?

He was not afraid of a continuance of a protective policy, because it brought a large surplus to the Treasury.

Rather than have a healthy industrial system which was adding wealth to the nation and a large surplus to the Treasury destroyed, he answered the question in the negative and opposed a reduction of tariff rates. Mr. Jefferson, in his next message of December, 1808, in referring to the surplus in the Treasury, said:

> The accumulation of the surplus of revenue beyond what can be applied to the payment of the public debt, whenever the freedom and safety of our commerce shall be restored, merits the consideration of Congress. Shall it lie unproductive in the public vaults? Shall the revenue be reduced? Or shall it not rather be appropriated to the improvement of roads, canals, rivers, education, and other great foundations of prosperity and union under the powers which Congress may already possess.

When Mr. Jefferson delivered this message to Congress in December, 1808, the surplus in the Treasury amounted to $14,000,000, equivalent on the mere basis of population to a surplus to-day of $180,000,000, and equivalent on the basis of relative national wealth of the two periods of 1808 and 1893 of about $540,000,000. Mr. Jefferson advised adding to tariff rates to raise revenue, and the abandonment of internal taxes. Mr. Cleveland, in his message of December 5, 1893, advised this Congress to reduce tariff rates, even if such reduction causes a deficiency in the Treasury, and to levy internal taxes on incomes of corporations.

Mr. Jefferson as early as 1808 anticipated trouble with England. He had recommended the "embargo." Early in 1812, when it became evident a war would soon be waged by England against the United States, Congress passed a tariff bill in the highest degree protective, all existing duties were doubled, and 10 per cent was added to this rate upon all importations coming into our ports from foreign countries. This act was signed by President Madison July 1, 1812. Three years of war followed, and notwithstanding we had to maintain an army and shoulder the disastrous influences produced by the war, at the end of the struggle we were as a nation greater and richer than when the war began. In all our industrial pursuits we had made giant strides.

From 1779 up to 1816, when the high-tariff act of 1812 expired by its own limitation, under the protection afforded by acts of Congress our young Government prospered far beyond the expectations of the most sanguine advocates of a tariff policy to afford protection as well as the raising of revenue. Up to this period in the history of our Government we had not met with one of those, "mysterious but well-known periodical crises" the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the author of the bill now before us, told us about in his letter published in the New York Press December 10, 1893. He further stated in said letter in relation to the present industrial crisis now upon us as follows:

> Everything goes with a great swing, but suddenly we plunge into some hidden pitfall and ruin and disaster are piled around us.

Up to 1816 we had moved along in our growing prosperity in all our material interests "with a great swing" when we as a nation "fell into the hidden pitfall" dug, as I will try to show you, by the free traders in the passage of the low-tariff act of Congress of 1816. Up to this time there had been but little opposition to tariff legislation. All the acts I have mentioned prior to 1816 were passed without a division of party lines. The first struggle between the advocates of free trade and the advocates of protection began with the passage of the low-tariff act of 1816. The men who opposed this tariff bill for "revenue only" predicted that its enactment into a law would bring ruin and financial bankruptcy to our people. Disaster and widespread desolation followed its enforcement.

Permit me to quote from the speeches of two distinguished statesmen, delivered in Congress during its sessions of 1823 and 1824, giving a vivid as well as an accurate account of the condition our people were brought to by this vicious legislation. Mr. Clay said:

> The general distress which pervades the whole country is forced upon us by numerous facts of the most incontestible character. It is indicated by the diminished exports of native produce; by the reduced state of our foreign navigation; by our diminished commerce; by successive unthrashed crops of grain perishing in our barns for want of a market; by the alarming diminution of the circulating medium; by the universal complaint of the want of employment and a consequent reduction of the wages of labor, and above all, most every description of property in the nation has, on an average, sunk not less than about 50 per cent within a few years. It is most painful to me to dwell on the gloom of this picture. But I have exaggerated nothing. Perfect fidelity to the original would have authorized me to throw on deeper and darker hues.

Col. Benton, a Democrat of national fame, in the same debate, paid his compliments to the low tariff act of 1816 in the following words:

> No price for property or produce, no sale but those of the sheriff and the marshal. No purchasers at execution sales but the creditor or some hoarder of money. No employment for industry, no demand for labor, no sale for the products of the farm, no sound of the hammer but that of the auctioneer knocking down property, stop laws, property laws, replevin laws, stay laws, loan-office laws, the intervention of the Legislature between the creditor and the debtor; this was the business of the Legislature in three-fourths of the States of the Union. No medium of exchange but a depreciated paper, no change even, but little bits of foul paper marked so many cents and signed by some tradesman, barber, or innkeeper; exchanges deranged to the extent of 50 or 100 per cent. Distress the universal cry of the people. Relief the universal demand, thundered at the doors of all legislators, State and Federal

What a faithful and accurate description of the present condition of the country! President Cleveland in his message of August 7, 1893, says that the unfortunate state of affairs now hanging over our people was brought about by the following cause:

> I believe these are principally chargeable to Congressional legislation touching the purchase and coinage of silver by the General Government.

From 1816 to 1823 there was no "Sherman silver law" for the purchase and coinage of silver by the Government. But they did have the free-trade act of 1816. Since the 21st of August, 1893, we have had no law for the purchase and coinage of silver by the Government, the act being repealed on that day. Yet the pathway of ruin, disaster, and bankruptcy is broader and longer than it was prior to the 21st of August, 1893. Where we had twenty idle and hungry workmen we now have a hundred.

Therefore President Cleveland was in error when he stated that the purchase and coinage of silver by the Government was responsible for the unsatisfactory condition of the business of the country. We can, however, find the real cause in the election of a free-trade President by a free-trade party on the 8th of November, 1892, and their elevation to the full and complete control of every department of the Government on March 4, 1893. The mere threat of this party that it would wipe out all tariff legislation which gave protection to our industries, has brought our country to the same deplorable condition it was in in 1823, as described by Mr. Clay and Col. Benton under the hurtful influences of the act of 1816. Relief from the terrible condition our people found themselves in by the enactment of the low-tariff act of 1816 came through the enactment of the protective tariff act of 1824.

This act received the active and influential support of Col. Benton, Andrew Jackson, Martin Van Buren, James Buchanan, Richard M. Johnson, Gen. Samuel Houston, and other prominent Democratic leaders in the Senate and House—men who did not believe in the position taken by the men who have undertaken to shape the destiny of the present Administration, that protecting our manufacturing and industrial pursuits was unconstitutional. They were men whose broad visions and far-reaching and comprehensive minds raised them on all questions relating to the business affairs of our people far above the low-lands of partisanship. The passage of the act of 1824 increased our native exports, revived and widened the scope of our commerce. Crops again brought good prices in our markets; men again found employment at fair wages; the hammer of the forge and the humming of the spindles once more made music for busy workmen. It brought prosperity and contentment to the farmer, the manufacturer, the shipbuilder, to the mechanic and day laborer. For four years this universal prosperity continued to increase. Its influences had been so beneficial to the country, and the doctrine of protection had been so well vindicated, Congress passed another tariff bill in 1828 imposing still higher duties, and through it enforced the protective system with more vigor and zeal. The fathers of the Democratic party gave this measure their unqualified support. This act levied on wool a specific duty of 4 cents per pound and an ad valorem duty of 40 per cent, with a provision that at the end of two years it should be increased to 50 per cent.

SOUTH CHANGES TO FREE TRADE.

Shortly after the enactment into a law of the tariff act of 1828, the South for the first time began to show an aggressive and active hostility toward tariff legislation of a protective character. For some reason they had come to the conclusion that manufacturing could not be successfully conducted in the South; that free labor in the North and slave labor in the South were antagonistic to each other; that the slave would become discontented at the great advancement free labor was making in the North; that the independence and comfortable surroundings of the Northern workmen would eventually so affect the slave labor as to make it worthless and at last wipe slavery, as an institution, out of existence as an unprofitable thing.

Mr. Calhoun and other statesmen from the South, who had formerly stood by the principle of protection, began to see the change coming over their section, as well as the changed interests of the South. They established a policy to sell their cotton, rice, and tobacco in the highest foreign markets, and to receive back from foreign markets, at the very lowest prices obtainable, all manufactured goods and necessaries of life needed for their use. Upon African slavery in the South was founded the opposition of the Democratic party to the doctrine of protection. Hon. James G. Blaine, in his Twenty Years in Congress, says:

Just then and just there began also the change of the Northern Democratic party on the tariff, and of Northern "doughfaceism" on the question of slavery. Free trade and the extension of slavery formed a national partnership, and were thenceforward made the corner stones of Democratic policy.

The intense feeling that had been aroused in the breasts of the Southern people on the question of levying import duties high enough to afford protection became so strong that it caused President Jackson to finally cast the weight of his Administration against the interests of the North and in favor of the free-trade dogma (so lately embraced by Calhoun, McDuffie and other leaders of the South) by a strong and lengthy statement in his fourth annual message sent to Congress in December, 1832, and by his indorsement of the compromise act of 1833. The first reduction of tariff of 1828 was effected by the act of 1832.

I would most earnestly urge the Democratic members of this House from the North, East, and West, representing rich agricultural and manufacturing districts, to read the speeches made in the famous tariff debate of 1832, by such men from the South as Gen. McDuffie of South Carolina, Bell of Tennessee, Clayton of Georgia, Garnett and DeJannette of Virginia, because the same motives and the same reasons which moved these men in their opposition to the North and its prosperity under a protective policy are exactly the same motives and reasons that animate and dominate the Southern Democracy in their solid advocacy of the Wilson bill. The plain-spoken, eloquent reformers from the Southland for a low tariff in that debate had the full and unwavering courage of their convictions.

Some of them stood ready to urge their States to go out of the Union, as they afterward did in 1861. The same spirit which filled the people of the South in 1832 with jealousy and dissatisfaction toward the people of the North, growing out of the tariff issue, fires the Southern heart to-day as much as it did in 1832. Gen. McDuffie was the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and was the author of the tariff act of 1832. His position on the committee made him the leader of the free traders. He was a great lawyer and a man of splendid oratorical powers. He made two of the most powerful speeches ever delivered in the Congress of the United States in favor of free trade. It is said of him when "seen with the pack of his passions in full cry, he was indeed a mighty hunter, whose cause no ordinary arm could oppose."

Edward Everett said of him at the close of the debate on the tariff act of 1832 that he was "second to none" of the illustrious sons of the South; that he wished to see him in the highest office of the Government, although there was "none high enough to add to the honors of his name." Mr. Chairman, I have called especial attention to this illustrious statesman from the South for the reason that I desire to call the attention of the House to some portions of his speech and the speeches of his colleagues, so that I may present clearly the position of the Southern Democracy on the issue now before us. The free-trade battery is pointed the same way in 1893 as it was in 1832, masked now, unmasked then. The same arguments, with some coloring and shading, are being made in 1893 as were made by Gen. McDuffie and his colleagues in 1832. The South had no sympathy in 1832 for our great industrial interests in the North; they have none in 1893.

Mr. McDUFFIE (pointing to the marble statue over the main entrance to the House, now Statuary Hall, representing the Muse of History, seated in the winged car of Time, recording events as they fly). Said the record which history shall make up may present the issue between two great contending parties.

So the record which history has made up presents to-day the issue once more between the two great parties now contending for the control of the affairs of the nation and its vast and vital interests. In his speech Gen. McDuffie said:

It can no longer be disguised that there does exist under the unjust and oppressive legislation of Congress a radical hostility of interests between the two great subdivisions of this Confederacy. Strike protection to the earth, never to rise again. The ingenuity and wickedness of man could not devise a scheme more perfectly adapted to impoverish and desolate the Southern States and enrich the Northern States by their spoils.

Against what is it that the manufacturers clamor so loud for protection? They desire to be protected against a fair, equal competition with productions of Southern industry. Involve it, mystify it, disguise it as you may, to this complexion it must come at last. The real invaders against whom this clamorous uproar for protection is raised are the planters of cotton, tobacco, and rice. These are the true rivals of the Northern manufacturers.

His favorite illustration, to show why Northern labor under a protective policy should not be paid higher wages than the slave labor was paid in the South, was this: "He supposed the case of two partnerships, one producing woolen goods in Rhode Island and Connecticut, and the other raising cotton in South Carolina, which was taken to England and exchanged for a cargo of woolen goods, which was then brought back to Charleston, Richmond, or Savannah, in which ports it encountered the competing cargo of woolen goods made in Rhode Island and Connecticut, and shipped coastwise from the North. On the cargo of woolens from across the ocean there was a duty of 40 per cent; on one down the ocean, none. The planting company (raising cotton in the South) will realize from the productions af their honest and lawful industry in their own peculiar market (meaning foreign markets) $20,000 less than the manufacturing company (North) will receive for the same quantity of their products of same quality." He knows that the $20,000 was the difference in wages paid to the workmen in making both cargoes. Our American skilled labor received $20,000 more than the unfortunate and pauper laborers of England.

Mr. Garnett of Virginia made the following complaint about Northern workingmen. I wish I could burn it into the memory of every workingman of the North who votes to keep the Democracy in power; because the South holds the same opinion of them to-day. He said:

It is the free labor of the North which now controls the press, the bar, the schools, and pulpit. It is the free labor of the North which has invaded the sanctity of God's altar and compelled its ministers to acknowledge its divinity by dethroning Jehovah and worshiping Beelzebub. It is the free labor at the North which has invaded the highest judicial tribunal of justice, destroying its prerogatives and teaching men to despise its decrees. Sir, it has so shattered the framework of society that society itself exists only in an inverted order at the North. Capital at the North for a long time waged an unequal contest with labor. It looked then to the Government, and found that impotent for aid. For momentary security it seemed to sympathize in the objects of the fanatics and to point to the institutions of the South as fit objects for attack.

"Restore the peace and harmony which this system [protection of Northern labor] has destroyed," said Hayne of South Carolina, "and I will consent that every manufacturing establishment shall be razed to its foundation which has been built up and can only be sustained by this accursed system." "Were there no black slaves in the United States," said Niles, in a sentence which summed up a volume, "there would be no opposition to a protection of the labor of white freemen." The friends of protection openly declared it was their purpose to prevent the laboring men of the North from going down on a level with the slave of the South and pauper labor of Europe.

Mr. McDuffie and his colleagues challenged their right to elevate the workingmen of the North up to a higher plane than the one occupied by the black men of the South and of the poorly paid toilers of Europe. They proposed to sell or trade the products of their slave labor for goods in foreign markets made by the men and women whose daily wages were not sufficient to keep them from absolute want and distress and to bring these cheap goods to America without paying any more duties on them than was absolutely necessary to support the Government. All this was to be done without any regard to protecting the free white labor of the North. That is again the issue now before us between the same sections of our country, "involve it, mystify it, disguise it as you may."

In order to give more emphasis and strength to the position I have just stated, I will quote another statement made by Mr. McDuffie:

The aggregate—

Said he—

of all the other elements of price, except the wages of labor, is decidedly less in England than in the United States. Does it not follow with demonstrative clearness that in free competition for the market of the United States the wages of manufacturing labor in the Northern States must be reduced at least as low as the wages of the same labor in England.

Again he says:

I never will consent that the price of their [meaning laborers of the North] labor shall be enhanced to an unnatural price by the disguised appropriation of one-third of the proceeds of Southern labor for their use and benefit.

The declarations of Gen. McDuffie, reiterated and confirmed by his Southern colleagues, gave the keynote to the free-trade argument of 1832, and secured the passage of the act of 1832, reducing the duties laid under the high tariff act of 1828. The intense feeling aroused in the South by the debate of 1832 caused great alarm within the ranks of the friends of protection. Henry Clay and other Whig leaders were afraid that the South would enter into a rebellion against the Government, and in order to satisfy the South Mr. Clay brought into the Senate the compromise bill of 1833, which provided for a biennial reduction of duties on all foreign imports which should exceed 20 per cent on the value thereof of one-tenth of such excess up to 31st of December, 1842, when the residue of such excess should be deducted.

Once more in the history of tariff legislation a great wrong had been perpetrated against our people. Under the protective act of 1828 the workingmen of the North had steady and profitable employment. The enforcement of the compromise tariff of 1833 began to be felt in 1834, when the first reduction had been made, and in 1837, the year following the election of Mr. Van Buren to the Presidency, another panic came upon the country. The devastation following it beggars description. No words could be employed to truthfully paint the scene of desolation it brought in its path. Wreck of private fortunes, ruin of great manufacturing corporations, banks closed; thousands upon thousands of idle workmen were found parading the streets, having printed upon their banners, "We must have bread or blood."

The universal ruin of all kinds of business called into existence the bankruptcy act of 1841. If the Wilson bill becomes a law my friend, Col. OATES of Alabama, will have no trouble to pass a bankrupt bill before this Congress adjourns. The effects produced by the act 1833 caused a revolt in the Northern wing of the Democracy. In the Presidential election of 1840, the Democratic party was swept out of power by an indignant and outraged people, as they will be again in 1896 if this bill becomes a law. [Applause on the Republican side.] In 1836, when Mr. Van Buren was elected President, his Whig opponent, Gen. Harrison, carried but seven States, receiving 73 electoral votes. So emphatic was the rebuke the Democratic party received for forcing on the people their destructive free-trade dogma that in the Presidential election of 1840 Mr. Van Buren carried but seven States, receiving only 60 electoral votes.

The Whig party, as soon as the Departments of the Government had passed into their hands, carried out the demand for a protective tariff by the enactment of the high-tariff law of 1842. At once a phenomenal activity of all manufacturing and commercial business interests set in. Prosperity took on new life, and by 1844 the nation was once more well on the pathway to wealth and happiness. The terrific defeat of the Democratic party in 1840, the general revival of all industrial pursuits under the fostering influences of the high-tariff act of 1842, as well as the strong sentiment existing against tariff legislation for "revenue only" compelled the Democracy in the memorable Presidential campaign of 1844, between Mr. Clay and Mr. Polk, to take a position in favor of the doctrine of protection.

Mr. Polk, to save himself and his party from defeat, wrote a letter in which he declared that protection should be continued to our manufacturing and other industrial pursuits. Mr. George Dallas, a citizen of Pennsylvania, was on the ticket with Mr. Polk for the office of Vice-President, as an earnest of their purpose to enforce the collecting of duties as laid under the act of 1842 and to prevent its repeal. Mr. Dallas wrote a letter in which he pledged himself, if elected, he would, as the presiding officer of the Senate, in the event a tie vote occurred in that body on a bill to repeal the act of 1842 vote against repeal. Many men now living, and some of them members of this House, will remember the fact that upon the banners of the Democracy, carried all through the North in the campaign of 1844, was written, "Polk, Dallas, and the tariff of 1842."

Upon these pledges Mr. Polk and Mr. Dallas were elected, and once more the Democracy was returned to power. The Hon. Robert J. Walker, of Mississippi, was made Secretary of the Treasury, and under his direction the low-tariff act of 1846, including a section repealing the high-tariff act of 1842, was framed. This measure received all the support the Polk Administration could give it, and by a large vote from the South, contributed by the free-trade Democracy, aided by their Democratic henchmen from the North, it passed the House of Representatives. In the Senate the vote was a tie, and Mr. Dallas, without even an apology for his rank perfidy, cast the deciding vote in favor of the act of the act of 1846, and also in favor of the repeal of 1842.

Depression again followed. However, the downward tendency was to a considerable extent checked, a panic prevented, and the predicted destruction of our industrial pursuits delayed by certain events, or rather incidents, following the enactment of the Walker tariff of 1846. Shortly after President Polk had signed this measure, within eighteen months, war was declared against Mexico. This war caused an expenditure of about $160,000,000 in addition to the ordinary expenses of the Government. Then followed the great famine in Ireland, giving us a large export trade in flour, grain, pork, and breadstuffs, bringing back to our people vast sums of money. Before the famine had come to an end the European revolution of 1848 destroyed trade and manufacturies to a large extent throughout the continent, and gave our people a large field and demand for exports, bringing enormous sums of money into the American trade market.

In the latter part of the same year gold was discovered in California. From the Eastern States thousands of men wended their way to the land of sunsets and gold. Very soon the yellow metal flowed back across the Rocky Mountains into the business marts of the old States. New industries sprang into life. It gave a sufficient stimulus to all our commercial and industrial pursuits to make them satisfactory and healthful up to 1854. During this year the gold yield began to fail, and the impetus it had given to our business over the country was more than supplied by the great war between England, France, and Russia on the shores of the Black Sea. This terrific contest was waged for two years, during which time our tradesmen and manufacturers exported largely, and had a ready and profitable market for their goods and wares.

Peace was declared in 1856. France and England once more started the fires in their furnaces. The wheels and looms of their factories were again put in motion. Russia again sowed and reaped her grain. Within a few months after the close of the war Russia, France, and England were shipping their products into our markets. In 1857, the causes I have mentioned which contributed so largely to the welfare of our trade had come to an end. The Democratic party attributed all of the prosperity to the Mexican war, the famine in Ireland, the European revolutions, the discovery of gold in California; the war between the three leading powers of Europe had brought to our country the effects of the low tariff act of 1846. In pursuance of this belief they passed the tariff act of 1857, further reducing the low duties laid by the Walker tariff of 1846. We were once more put squarely into competition with the cheap labor of Europe. Free trade was given another fair chance to demonstrate its influence for good or evil. The result of the operation of this act was in the highest degree fatal. It took effect July 1, 1857.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. If I remember correctly, the House of Representatives elected in 1856 was Republican, and Nathaniel P. Banks of Massachusetts was elected Speaker.

Mr. MAHON. I will not dispute with the gentleman as to that, but he means Whig, not Republican. But whether the act came from a Whig or from a Democratic House, that tariff act of 1857 was passed in the hope that this country could sustain herself; but before President Buchanan had been inaugurated——

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. When did the Congress that was elected along with President Buchanan meet? Was there a special session called?

Mr. MAHON. I do not remember. I suppose it met in the December following the election.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. That Congress, unless there was an extra session, did not meet until the 1st Monday in December, 1857, I suppose.

Mr. MAHON. I suppose not.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. And the panic, if I am historically correct, began long before December in that year, with a Whig or Republican Congress in power.

Mr. MAHON. No, sir. It was not a Republican Congress; it was a Whig Congress, and one-half of it was from the South. But whether that was a Whig Congress or a Democratic Congress, the panic did not come until after the tariff act of 1857. President Pierce signed the act of 1857 on March 3, 1857. Panic came on about September 1 following.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Does the gentleman say that the low tariff act of 1857 was passed before the 1st of December in that year.

Mr. MAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. And does not the gentleman know that the panic began in September, 1857?

Mr. MAHON. No, sir. It did commence after the President had signed the tariff act of 1857, and if you read the history of your country you will find that true.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I am only asking you for information, but I do not think you are correct.

Mr. MAHON. I think I am. That was an act reducing the Walker tariff, and after that another panic struck this country which swept everything before it like a tornado.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. MAHON. I have very little time.

Mr. WARNER. Only a short one. I was about to ask the gentleman whether, having read the history of his country, he would not agree with me on this point, that the tariff of 1857 was passed in view of the then approaching crisis; that it was framed with a view to remedy the cause of the crisis; that the only trouble about it was that it did not go into operation soon enough, and that the moment it did go into operation the wheels of commerce started up again and we had general prosperity until the breaking out of the war?

Mr. MAHON. I will say to the gentleman that no man in this country ever dreamed in 1857 that the Southern people would so far lose their judgment or their reason as to break out into open rebellion against the Government. And I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] that the first tariff act made by the Republican party was the result of the action of the people of Pennsylvania, who in 1860 elected Andrew G. Curtin governor of the State. Read the message of President Buchanan in 1857–'58. It is the exact counterpart of the message sent to this House by President Cleveland in August last. It is the same story told by Col. Benton and Henry Clay in 1824; the same story that was told in 1843. Mr. Buchanan recommended tariff legislation to increase the revenues of the Government, but a Democratic Congress absolutely refused.

The result was they went out of power, the National Treasury was bankrupt, our men were idle, our industries paralyzed, and the Government of the United States was begging money at the rate of 12 and 16 per cent in the markets of the world, and refused at that.

In the mean time the Republican party had grown up out of the ashes of the old Whig party, and in 1860 that party put Abraham Lincoln upon its ticket, and in the old State of Pennsylvania we fought that campaign upon the doctrine of protection. What was the result? Although under the Democratic régime from 1844 to 1860 with but little interruption we had been under a low tariff, the people of this country turned the Democratic party out of power. But before Mr. Lincoln was inaugurated the Morrill tariff bill was passed. James Buchanan, from the great protective State of Pennsylvania, was President, and, with all his shortcomings and failings, let it stand as a monument to his credit that he signed that bill.

As to the act of 1857, during the time that law stood upon our statute book, the country was in a state of panic and business depression. President Buchanan, in his message sent to Congress in December following the passage of the act, described the condition of the country. He said: "With unsurpassed plenty in all the elements of national wealth, our manufactories have suspended, our public works are retarded, our private enterprises of different kinds are abandoned, and thousands of useful laborers are thrown out of employment and reduced to want." Mr. Buchanan appealed to his Democratic Congress to so legislate that prosperity might return, but he appealed in vain. Hon. Howell Cobb, Mr. Buchanan's Secretary of the Treasury, in his report of December 1, 1857, and his report of 1858, discussed at length the "disastrous revulsions in trade and commerce."

During Mr. Buchanan's Administration in 1857, 1858, 1859, up to December, 1860, the Government was a steady borrower of money to meet its ordinary expenses, and at the end of Mr. Buchanan's Administration the National Treasury was bankrupt, and its credit impaired. Little did the Southern Democracy and their servile allies from the North care about the condition the country was in. They had enlarged their slave territory by the acquisition of Texas and the purchase of Mexican territory. They were grasping after more power to enable them to cope successfully with the free States. The South was plotting a rebellion against the Government. Another Presidential election was near at hand; the people of the North were aroused; they determined that the free traders and slave-holding element of the South should no longer force their free-trade theories on them.

The South was determined to do so, or if they failed in retaining their control of the Government the Southern States would secede and set themselves up as an independent government. A government where no import duties would be laid except for revenue; a government where a laboring man, white or black, would not be permitted to wear the mantle of manhood and self-respect; a government where the free labor of the North could not destroy their cheap slave labor, and by so doing wipe out slavery as an institution. That which Mr. McDuffie and his Southern colleagues anticipated in their speeches in the famous tariff debate was near at hand. He spoke of open rebellion; he argued that the "South must not yield an inch or an ell to the encroachments of free labor and protection."

> My deep and deliberate conviction in the face of all the miserable cant and hypocrisy with which the world abounds on this subject, that any course of measures which shall hasten the abolition of slavery by destroying the value of slave labor will bring upon the Southern States the greatest political calamity with which they can be afflicted, for I sincerely believe that when the people of those States shall be compelled by such means to emancipate their slaves they will be but a few degrees above the condition of slaves themselves. Yes, sir, mark what I say, when the people of the South cease to be masters by the tampering interference of this Government, direct or indirect, they will assuredly be slaves. It is the clear and distinct perception of the irresistible tendency of this protecting system to precipitate us upon this great moral and political catastrophe that has animated me to raise my warning voice that my fellow-citizens may foresee and, foreseeing, avoid the destiny that would otherwise befall them.

The South was determined to nationalize slavery and force it into the free Territories and States. This new party, called the Republican party, opposed this movement. The Republican party elected Abraham Lincoln President. The South had lost. The Democratic party was once more disowned by the people of the North and turned out of power. The rebellion so long predicted followed. The Republican party promptly repealed the low-tariff act of 1857, and passed the Morrill high-tariff act of 1861. Under the benign influence of this act, which was signed by President Buchanan before he retired from office, over and above a great and cruel war, in which battles were fought before which the battles of Alexander, of Hannibal, of Cæsar, and of Napoleon "pale their ineffectual fires;" over and above a war costing the Government almost countless millions of money, and the loss of nearly a half million of men, who went down in the hell of battle in order that the best government God ever looked upon might be saved from destruction at the hands of the free-trade Democracy of the South; over and above the destruction of the loss of the trade of the eleven seceded States, the Government grandly, yes, magnificently sustained itself. [Applause on the Republican side.] The devastation of war was repaired. From 1861 up to 1890 the Republican party by various tariff acts maintained and enforced the principle of protecting our industrial pursuits, which brought to us as a nation wealth and prosperity. Prince Bismarck, in a speech delivered by him in the Reichstag, May 12, 1882, paid the following tribute to protection. He said:

> The success of the United States in material development is the most illustrious of modern time. The American nation has not only successfully borne and suppressed the most gigantic and expensive war of all history, but immediately afterward disbanded its army, found work for all its soldiers and marines, paid off most of its debt, given labor and homes to all the unemployed of Europe as fast as they could arrive within the territory, and still by a system of taxation so indirect as not to be perceived, much less felt. Because it is my deliberate judgment that the prosperity of America is mainly due to its system of protective laws, I urge that Germany has now reached that point where it is necessary to imitate the tariff system of the United States.

In the Fifty-first Congress, 1890, the McKinley bill was passed, and from the day it became a law, up to 8th of November, 1892, the growth of our prosperity was unprecedented in all our history. [Applause on the Republican side.] The marvelous onward movement of the great business interests of the country was so well and fully described in an article lately published in the Manufacturers' Journal that I beg leave to quote a portion of same. "Never before were the protected industries so continuously employed as during the period" from 1890 to the fall of 1892, "and never was the amount of product so large.

The volume of traffic exceeded all precedent. The aggregate payments of the clearing houses were the heaviest upon record; and the aggregate railroad earnings were the largest. The dimensions of our foreign trade expanded farther than ever before, both the exports and imports being greater than any heretofore recorded. We made in 1892 1,000,000 tons more pig iron than in 1891, our product of 1892 exceeding that of Great Britain by about 2,000,000 tons. The output of Bessemer steel ingots was the largest in the history of the industry, and the steel rail production exceeded that of 1891 by more than 200,000 tons. The consumption of iron by the people was several hundred thousand tons greater than in any previous year.

The prosperity of a nation may be fairly estimated by the consumption of wool. This nation now consumes one-third of the world's gross product. In 1892 the American wool clip exceeded that of 1891 by nearly 26,000,000 pounds, and the domestic consumption of wool increased in 1892 by 59,000,000 pounds. We grew more wool than at any time since 1883; we imported more than in any recent year, and we consumed more woolen fabrics while importing $24,000,000 worth less than in 1891. The high tariff increased the domestic clip, increased the imports of raw wool, put every American mill into profitable operation, so that manufacturers and laborers were fully employed and caused no advance worthy of mention in the prices of the fabric. This industrial activity was accompanied by conditions of unusual stability among producers, for the number of commercial failures was smaller than in any year since 1882.

These facts supply the proof that last year the prosperity of the American people touched high-water mark. With less idleness, greater employment of capital, larger domestic trade, larger foreign trade and unprecedented creation of wealth, there were better wages for workmen, a smaller amount of disaster, a closer approach to industrial independence, a richer development of natural resources and a lower range of prices for consumers than the nation has known since its foundation. The year 1892, in truth, was the banner year of the well-being of the Republic. [Applause on the Republican side.]

No logic is so cogent as the logic of facts, and the facts indisputably show that the most highly protected nation of the world is the nation forming only about one-eighteenth of the population of the earth, which has the largest manufactured product, which owns more than one-half of the railroads of the world, which spins one-fourth of the cotton, consumes one-third of the wool, uses three-fourths of the tin plate, one-third of the coffee, one-third of the copper, and one-half of the world's product of iron and steel; which surpasses all competitors in the production of steel rails and offers the lowest rates for transportation over those rails; which pays the highest wages to labor, and which is the only nation that ever paid more than $1,000,000,000 of debt within thirty years. The progress made during those thirty years of continuous protection has been far greater than that accomplished during the whole of the preceding seventy years, and we confidently affirm that the movement forward was due, more than to anything else, to the persistent adherence of the American people to the policy of protecting their industries from unequal European competition.

It is defiant of reason to contend that these wonderful results were attained in spite of supposed hindrances offered by protection. No nation, whatever its natural opportunities, could make headway at such a pace while persistently permitting unsound economical principles to control its policy. At the close of the year 1892 the United States was the leading manufacturing country in the world. We had in the magnitude of our industrial operations outrun all other governments on the face of the globe. President Harrison's message of December 4, 1892, fully confirms this statement. We have just laid the foundation. In natural resources we are richer than all of Europe. We have barely touched our mineral wealth. Permit the McKinley law to control the business policy of this Government for the next ten years and our greatness as a great producing and manufacturing nation will be almost incomprehensible.

When prosperity was well mounted,
She let go the bridle, and soon came Tumbling out of the saddle.

THREE GREAT FACTS.

Mr. Chairman, from our history and experience on the tariff question who will be bold enough to deny that three great facts have been proven beyond all controversy:

First. That a low tariff has never brought prosperity to our country. But, to the contrary, large importations of products of pauper and poorly paid labor have always destroyed our industries, agriculture and manufacturing suffering the most, throwing out of employment our American wage-earners.

Second. That we never recovered from the panics following low tariff until we enacted a protective tariff. That is the second proposition.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And both wrong. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHON. Well, you may prove it when I am through. Give me sufficient time and I can satisfy you on that point.

The high-tariff act of 1824 lifted the country from the effects of the low-tariff act of 1816. The high-tariff act of 1842 relieved the country from depression caused by the compromise tariff of 1833. The high-tariff act of 1861 brought us back from bankruptcy produced by the low-tariff act of 1857.

Third. From the time Mr. Calhoun and the other leaders of the Southern Democracy compelled, willing or unwilling, the Northern wing of their party to be submissive to their wishes, they have always insisted and demanded that all protective tariff laws should be repealed, even though repeal would bring ruin and disaster to all Northern interests. In the enforcement of this demand the Democratic members of Congress (with but few exceptions) from the North have helped them in destroying the welfare and happiness of the people they represented.

To-day we find Mr. Cleveland and his party following the old paths of the South, as well as its instincts, in their efforts to destroy the McKinley bill and destroy the last shred of protection. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Can anything be clearer than the fact that the solid Democracy of the South are to-day placing their opposition to protection on the same ground on which they have stood since 1832. Their views, interests, and sentiments yet live. The agricultural products of the South are yet the same. Negro labor is just as essential as ever to the raising of cotton, rice, and tobacco. The black population is yet subordinate, if not slave. Congress enacted laws to give the ex-slave the rights of a freeman and a just measure of political power. These laws are set at naught by the Democracy of the South. The black man has no real voice in the government of the Southern States. Who are the governing class of the South? They are Democrats, and not only so, but solid in their cohesion and adherence to their old policy of free trade.

To further strengthen my position that the Democracy of the South hold the same faith on the tariff question now as they did in 1832, I desire to show with what accuracy fifty-six years later, when the Mills bill was before Congress, in 1888, the same arguments made in 1832 by Mr. McDuffie and his colleagues were repeated by the Southern advocates of the Mills bill. Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi, in his speech of May 13, 1888, cited Southern authority for the assertion that "there is no new South" and that the term is a misnomer and a myth. It would seem difficult, in respect to the tariff question, to find a "new South." Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi, in his speech of May 9, 1888, said: "As has been stated long ago" (no doubt referring to debates of 1832 and 1833), "and I but repeat an argument founded upon the 'Rock of Ages' as far as its truth is concerned, when you impose unjust taxes upon imports you, by construction, impose unjust taxes upon exports"—meaning cotton, rice, and tobacco.

Mr. BOATNER of Louisiana, in a speech on the McKinley bill, said:

It is utterly impossible that the imposition of a tariff tax can do the person in whose favor the tax is imposed any good, that it can give him any advantage, unless at the same time it impose a corresponding disadvantage on some one else; and I say, sir, that the cotton-growing States of the Union ever since 1865, ever since the adoption of the protective tariff system, have been compelled to contribute to the East and the West nearly all or all of the profits of their labor by reason of the protective system, from which they have derived no corresponding benefit, either directly or indirectly.

Same old doctrine: to lower the tariff the South will grow richer just in proportion as the North, West, and East is made poorer.

Clayton of Georgia, in speaking of Northern workmen and farmers, put the Southern side with much frankness when he said:

It follows, then, that the farmer who gets a market for his pigs and potatoes, his onions and leeks, and a thousand other things that can not be carried to Europe, is well able to bear the tax upon consumption on what little he does not make himself, because he has an increased means of supply by reason of this market erected immediately at his door. It follows, also, that the laborers at the factories can willingly bear the tax of consumption, because without this employment they would be cut off from the means of support. Without this business they would have to fall back upon the agricultural pursuits; and having no market for their productions they would have to experience finally a loss of labor from a glutted country. Indeed, the whole system is an artfully devised plan to find a market for small productions and employment for paupers.

What stronger arguments can be produced to induce members of this House from the North, West, and East, regardless of their political affiliations to vote with their own people by voting against this measure. I appeal to the Democratic members who represent great manufacturing and rich agriculture States, to do as the members from the South are doing. Stand by your people, your section, and your convictions on this question, which so largely enters into their everyday life.

Constituents of many Democratic members from the North are anxiously asking, where are our members on the tariff question. I can best answer this inquiry by an old story, no doubt you all have heard. An English gentleman went to India to hunt tigers. After an absence of several months, a cablegram reached his family in London announcing the fact, that the Englishman during a hunt had been killed by a tiger, and that his body had been shipped home on a certain steamer. The casket arrived in due time, was taken to his home and opened, and to the surprise of his family all the coffin contained was a large tiger with a bullet hole through its head. His wife supposing a mistake had been made, sent a dispatch asking what had been done with the body of her husband. The answer came back. "You will find it inside of the tiger." So I answer, you will find the Northern Democratic members of Congress inside the stomach of the free-trade Democracy of the South. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side].

I want to compliment our Southern friends for the bravery and courage shown by them, in standing by what they believe to be for the best interest of their people and their section of country. They have in solid phalanx so stood on the tariff issue from 1832 to 1893, a period of over sixty years. They have voted for it in the halls of Congress. They have fought for it on the battlefields of the rebellion. Although defeated and impoverished in the great struggle, we find them here to-day with solid ranks trying to secure in the peaceful halls of legislation that which they failed to secure with the sword. I admire such devotion to one's own people and country, even if the principle they contended for is radically wrong. These people, once convinced of their error—and I hope the day is not far distant when they will see the light—no power could swerve them from adopting the system of protection.

Neither spoils of party nor any other base consideration could move them from the right or left away from their convictions and a policy they believed would be for the good of their people. Let me say to you, brave, gifted, hospitable, and generous people of the sunny South, we of the great North, West, and East, want you to share with us our prosperity, given to us by protection, a principle in every respect eternally right. Let me repeat, the issue now under consideration is a sectional one, made so by the South, hide it away as you may.

The South against the North, East, and West. The South once more making an effort to revolutionize the economic surroundings of the Government, and by so doing bankrupt two-thirds of our manufacturing establishments and cripple the other third, prevent the building up of new enterprises, and bring millions of workmen and those dependent upon them to idleness and want. [Applause on the Republican side.]

EFFECTS OF THREATENED REPEAL.

The industrial census taken by the American Tariff League, 684 reports from 44 different States, tabulated up to September 4, 1893, shows the following results: Number of hands employed November 9, 1892, 169,423; number employed September 4, 1893, 67,660; weekly wages paid to wage-earners November 8, 1892, $1,762,288.30; wages paid September 4, 1893, $549,436.94. Decrease in labor since November 5, 1892, is 60½ per cent; decrease in wages since November 5, 1892, is 69 per cent.

State.	Reports.	Hands employed.		Weekly wages.
		Nov. 5, 1892.	Sept. 2, 1893.	Nov. 5, 1892.	Sept. 2, 1893.
Alabama	7	1,009	526	$11,142.55	$2,393.56
Arkansas	4	270	212	1,800.00	1,608.00
California	4	375	345	8,374.60	8,251.00
Colorado	3	675	326	16,820.00	4,630.00
Connecticut	39	9,909	5,435	91,226.26	37,441.29
Delaware	2	1,401	889	13,282.00	8,068.00
Florida	4	37	1	294.60	8.10
Georgia	5	720	4	3,840.00	36.00
Idaho	1	25	19	225.00	136.80
Illinois	38	17,971	6,822	202,305.88	86,410.47
Indiana	27	2,711	1,188	24,639.89	8,791.69
Iowa	13	187	116	1,749.46	969.32
Kansas	17	691	165	6,311.27	1,489.57
Kentucky	4	393	71	3,179.00	490.70
Louisiana	1	125	50	750.00	300.00
Maine	13	2,340	928	18,186.07	6,395.02
Maryland	1	50	15	415.00	112.50
Massachusetts	44	16,788	8,620	127,103.68	44,808.68
Michigan	21	10,914	2,402	163,908.58	20,797.29
Minnesota	10	2,996	961	45,887.93	8,925.41
Mississippi	3	25	25	100.50	62.40
Missouri	20	1,131	578	12,204.08	5,488.00
Montana	3	3	1	63.00	17.50
Nebraska	6	524	515	5,449.50	5,332.50
Nevada	1	150	20	3,600.00	720.00
New Hampshire	10	8,992	1,148	66,016.86	7,957.60
New Jersey	23	5,662	2,462	68,490.81	26,527.97
New York	77	13,581	6,627	114,473.24	44,844.49
North Carolina	8	205	72	913.20	252.60
North Dakota	5	49	34	525.00	311.70
Ohio	90	28,838	7,483	284,035.76	69,059.62
Oregon	3	425	280	6,504.51	2,355.00
Pennsylvania	56	21,977	9,710	218,693.62	94,502.24
Rhode Island	15	4,734	2,121	34,379.19	9,718.74
South Dakota	4	74	10	379.20	115.20
Tennessee	10	216	119	1,680.90	958.92
Texas	5	38	31	325.80	275.00
Utah	10	459	173	7,472.00	2,162.30
Vermont	7	2,281	1,703	20,265.69	13,809.70
Virginia	12	551	305	3,521.10	2,305.22
Washington	2	562	105	10,980.00	1,885.50
West Virginia	26	6,132	2,289	64,656.70	16,419.54
Wisconsin	12	1,650	146	24,400.35	983.92
Wyoming	2	1,518	1,510	22,510.50	11,258.10
Total	684	169,423	67,660	1,762,288.30	549,436.94

Decrease in labor since November 5, 1892, is 60½ per cent.
Decrease in wages since November 5, 1892, is 69 per cent.
Decrease in business since November 5, 1892, is 47.2 per cent.
Number of hands out of work is 101,763.
The loss in total weekly wages is $1,202,851.36.
Average decrease in the rate of wages is $2.35 per week.

This exhibit shows that where 169,423 hands were employed during the week ending November 5, 1892, there were but 67,600 hands employed in the same business during the week ending September 2, 1893, or that 101,763 people, representing 60½ per cent of those employed last year, were out of work at the beginning of last month.

Turning to the question of wages, we find that where $1,762,288 were paid out during the week ending November 5, 1892, there were but $549,437 paid out during the week ending September 2, 1893, a loss of 69 per cent in the disbursement and circulation of money at the beginning of last month as compared with the week previous to the election of President Cleveland and a Congress pledged to the overthrow of our protective tariff.

Besides a loss of $1,202,851 every week in disbursements for wages, as reported by our six hundred and eighty-four correspondents, we also find that there has been a decrease of 47.2 per cent in the volume of business transacted in the different counties in which our correspondents live. It further appears that where the average amount of wages earned by each person working during the week ending November 5, 1892, was $10.43, the average wage rate last month was but $8.08 for each person working, thus making a decrease of $2.35 in the average weekly earnings of each person.

These are the main facts deduced from our industrial census. They show exactly what our manufacturers, wage-earners, wholesale and retail dealers, farmers, and others are deriving through the election of a party, in full control of our national affairs, that is pledged to the overthrow of protection. The details are given as follows:

Bradstreet reports show that—there are wage-earners in enforced idleness at the present time numbering more than 810,000, and that there are dependent for support upon these idle employés of industries and other establishments more than 1,956,000 persons.

The report embraces cities from the different sections and States of the country, and may be regarded as the official census. The central western States report the greatest number of unemployed, viz, 227,340, with 443,319 persons dependent upon them. New York and New Jersey are second, with 228,250 unemployed and 563,760 dependent. The figures for Pennsylvania's return are 151,500 unemployed and 449,200 dependent.

A notable fact on a glance at the returns is that in the total of unemployed the Southern States report the least number, 42,065.

A great many of these idle wage-earners are not to blame for their enforced idleness. Some are to blame in so far as they voted for the Democratic candidate for President last November.

REDUCTION OF WAGES.

If the bill now under consideration becomes a law, how can we again rebuild the fires in our forges, put our spindles and looms into action, bring back life and activity into all industrial interests, give employment to all our idle men, boys, women, and girls, and at the same time compete with the ill, low paid labor of Europe. There is but one open doorway. We must reduce the wages of our American wage-earners, and as a result surround them with the same conditions which to-day is the lot of the poor laboring elements of Europe.

Mr. WILSON, the author of this bill, in an interview with Col. C. H. Banes, of Philadelphia, when Mr. Banes called his attention to the fact "that the reduction contemplated would fall most heavily upon the laboring classes," Mr. WILSON'S reply was to the effect that as our workmen are better housed, clothed, and fed, they could do more work for the same wages than foreigners. (Interview published in Philadelphia Ledger.) The workingmen of the North are under no obligation to Mr. WILSON and his free trade party for the comforts with which they are surrounded.

Manufactured goods which will be imported into the United States in large quantities under this bill will come chiefly from Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, Holland, and Scandinavia. In these countries over 31,000,000 men and women are engaged in manufacturing and mining pursuits. The average annual income of these millions is less than $4 a week, or $200 a year. Unless they emigrate to the United States they have no hope to rise from the condition to which they were born.

The official returns of these countries bring out the astonishing fact that over 8,000,000 persons, a number exceeding one-fourth of the industrial population, are returned as paupers, and that annually the taxpayers, already burdened with the immense cost of imperial armies, have to pay the enormous sum of $150,000,000 to prevent these people from dying of starvation. Of this amount free-trade Great Britain alone contributes over one-third, or $50,200,000.

Thomas Hanlon, D. D., president of Pennington Seminary, a gentleman of much learning and culture, in an article published in the Trenton State Gazette, wrote about the working classes of Europe as follows:

I have just returned from Europe, having visited England, Belgium, Germany, and Scotland. I gave special attention to the conditions of the laboring class. I made inquiries personally from many sources as to wages in all departments of manual labor. I took pains to know for myself the condition of the laboring classes as to their habitations, their clothing, their food, and their education, and the results of these careful observations is a feeling of sadness for the laboring classes of Europe which I never had before, and which no one can have unless from personal observation for himself.

For all this hard toil and these long hours each day the wages paid were scarcely half of what is paid to our laboring classes. This is true of all kinds of labor in Europe. It is sometimes said that while wages in Europe are low the living is very cheap. They do live cheaper than we do. The poor creatures can not do otherwise. They live in the plainest manner. You rarely find a bit of carpet on the floor of even what they call their spare room. Their tables contain very few dishes of food. Meat and butter are luxuries rarely enjoyed by the workingman in Europe.

I turned my back upon Europe with feelings of sadness for the toiling millions of those lands, and my face toward this, my dear old country, feeling that our land is the earthly paradise of the laboring man.

I do not wonder that every ship from these lands is heavily weighted with strange passengers for these hospitable shores. I also felt more than ever before that it is a sacred duty of every American citizen, by voice and by vote, to perpetuate to the laboring man in this land the preeminent position which he in this country of all other countries in the world enjoys. It will indeed be a sad day for the laboring man when, by the vote of the American people, the blessings of American protection to labor shall give place to the pauperizing competition of free trade.

Gerald Massey, son of a poor English workingman, knew the feelings of the class from whence he sprang, and could utter them in impassioned words. He said:

Press on! a million pauper foreheads bend in misery's dust;
God's champions of the golden truth still eat the mouldy crust;
This damning curse of tyrants must not kill the nation's heart;
The spirit in a million slaves doth pant on fire to start,
And strive to mend the world, and walk in Freedom's march sublime,
While myriads sink heartbroken, and the land o'erswarms with crime.
"Oh God!" they cry, "we die, we die, and see no earnest won!"
Brothers, join hand and heart, and in the work press on!"

When these unfortunate people can raise money enough to escape from their bondage "their tracks are all one way," over the Atlantic to our shores. Last year over 600,000 of these half starved and destitute people landed at American ports, 118,000 coming from the British Islands, where free trade has ruled for forty years. Within the last twenty-five years over 10,000,000 of these toilers have found a home in the United States. Tempted to come here by high wages, free schools for their children, and the comforts and happiness to be obtained under the American protective system. To the land of high tariffs all come. From the land of high tariffs none go back. The American laborer never has any inclination to seek employment in another land. If it be true, as so often asserted, that a protective tariff robs the poor man as well as the rich one, we can come to but one conclusion, and that is, all foreigners who come to our shores willingly submit themselves to an outrage and oppression and our native born poor men never try to escape from it.

Mr. Chairman, we are ready to chain our workmen to the anvil and forge, to bury them in our mines, to house them up in our great mills and workshops at such wages without hope. Are we, sir, willing to bring their labor into competition in the same markets with the cheap labor of 31,000,000 of workmen in Europe?

The American workmen during the last twenty years, under Republican Administrations and high-tariff legislations, have received higher wages, have saved more money than the workmen of any other nation.

Edward Atkinson, an eminent authority among free traders, in an article in the Boston Herald of May 12, 1892, said:

Ten to 20 per cent advances in wages since 1890. The skilled laborer has secured the highest rate of earnings ever known in this or any country, and he can also buy more for a dollar.

In the Forum for May, 1892, the same writer declared:

Wages have advanced steadily. General wages were higher in 1890 than in 1880 by from 10 to 40 per cent, according to the grade of workman.

H. V. Poor, another high authority, lately said:

With the increase of wages and the fall of prices, a day's work brings to the laborer twice the amount of comforts and necessaries of life than it did fourteen years ago.

That our workmen on the day Mr. Cleveland was elected President were the best paid, the best housed, best fed, best clothed, and the most intelligent wage-earners in the world is beyond all controversy.

For comparison of wages in Europe and America I submit the following:

What protection does for the American wage-earner.

Industries.	General average weekly wages paid to all employés.
	Massachusetts.	Great Britain.
Agricultural implements	$10.25	$6.85
Artisans' tools	11.80	4.89
Boots and shoes	11.63	4.37
Brick	8.63	4.16
Building trades	14.99	7.21
Carpetings	6.08	4.11
Carriages and wagons	13.80	4.89
Clothing	10.01	6.71
Cotton goods	6.45	4.63
Flax and jute goods	6.46	2.44
Food preparations	9.81	7.72
Furniture	11.04	7.96
Glass	12.28	6.93

What protection does for the American wage-earner—Continued.

Industries.	General average weekly wages paid to all employés.
	Massachusetts.	Great Britain.
Hats, fur, wool, and silk	$11.01	$5.51
Hosiery	6.49	4.67
Liquors, malt and distilled	12.87	12.66
Machines and machinery	11.75	6.93
Metals and metallic goods	11.25	7.40
Printing and publishing	11.37	5.52
Printing, dyeing, bleaching, and finishing cotton textiles	8.67	4.94
Stone	14.39	8.58
Wooden goods	12.19	5.67
Woolen goods	6.90	4.86
Worsted goods	7.32	3.69
All industries	10.31	5.86

It will be seen from this table that the average wages to all employés for the twenty-four industries considered in Massachusetts was $10.31 a week, while that for Great Britain is $5.86 a week—the wages in Massachusetts thus being nearly double the average weekly wages paid in the same industries and to the same class of employés in Great Britain.

	Per week in—
	Scotland.	United States.
Cop winders	$3.51	$8.31
Twister tenders	2.37	6.87
Reelers	3.39	8.47
Inspectors	3.03	7.12
Skein spoolers	2.79	7.67
Spoolers	2.67	8.70
Gross parcelers	4.20	9.51
Second and section hands	7.37	13.50
Bleachers (women)	2.27	6.00
Bleachers (men)	5.80	12.00
Dyers	5.53	9.06
Total	42.93	97.27

One hundred and twenty-seven per cent higher in United States.

In England, under free trade, blacksmiths get $1.05 per day. In America they get $2 per day.

In England, under free trade, the average daily wages of carpenters is $1.28. In America they get $3 a day.

In Liverpool, under free trade, street-car drivers get $6 per week. In Philadelphia they get $12 per week.

In Sumatra, under free trade, day laborers who raise tobacco get 25 cents a day. In America they get from $1 to $1.25 per day.

In England, under free trade, the average daily wages of machinists is $1.20. In America it is $2.50.

In England, under free trade, the average daily wages of painters is $1.20. In America it is $2.60.

In England, under free trade, English bricklayers get about $1.20 a day. In America the American bricklayer gets about $3 a day.

In Wales, under free trade, the furnacemen employed in the making of tin plate get $1.75 per day. The furnacemen employed in the tin-plate works of Pennsylvania get $3.50 per day.

In Wales, under free trade, the blacksmiths employed on Welsh tin plate receive $1.32 per day. In Ohio and Pennsylvania the blacksmiths employed on American tin plate receive $3 per day.

In England, under free trade, the average daily wages of brass founders is $1.25. In America brass founders receive $2.50 a day.

In Saxony (according to the Weser Zeitung), an able-bodied weaver can not get more than $1.50 a week. In America they get $8 a week.

In Germany harness-makers receive $3 a week. In America they receive $6 a week.

In Italy women work in the field for 12 cents a day. In America the same labor would command 60 cents a day.

In Germany agricultural laborers receive 25 cents a day. In America they receive from 75 cents to $1 a day.

In India the farm laborer, during harvest time, receive 7 cents a day. In America the farm hand, during harvest time, gets from $1.25 to $1.50 a day.

In Italy farm laborers receive from 16 cents to 20 cents a day.

The wage-earner, white or black, of our great agricultural and manufacturing States in the North and West has always exercised his rights of citizenship. He walks among his fellows with all the dignity of manhood. Honest toil and labor elevates him in the respect and esteem of all our citizens. His wife and children wear good clothes. The churches and schools open their door to his family and children. Books and newspapers are found in his home. He does not crave for wealth, for that is not essential to his happiness. But he does want steady employment, fair wages, and the ordinary comforts of life. Sirs, you may take all these things from him for a short time, but you can never reduce him to the level of the workmen of the South or Europe.

A LARGE DECREASE IN BUSINESS.

As to what effect this Democratic invasion into our protective system has had upon the business of the country since President

Cleveland was inaugurated on March 4, 1893, the bank clearings report to Bradstreet gives us the following result:

Month.	1893.	1892.
April	$4,918,819,872	$5,066,679,405
May	5,244,502,329	5,014,020,107
June	4,524,607,767	4,915,758,398
July	4,137,669,864	4,627,501,773
August	3,346,213,938	4,513,163,512
September	3,311,635,037	4,779,281,710
October	3,983,596,363	5,470,307,243
November	4,051,057,546	5,443,235,918
Total	33,518,104,716	39,829,951,070

It appears that since the beginning of the month after the present Administration took control of the affairs of the nation there has been an aggregate loss of business in the circulation of money that exceeds $6,300,000,000, almost a loss of $800,000,000 monthly.

RECIPROCITY.

One of the greatest achievements of the Republican party was accomplished during the closing days of the Fifty-first Congress, by the adoption of section 3 of the McKinley tariff law. I refer to the reciprocity clause. The measure now under consideration will repeal the same, and with its repeal all of the advantages secured in the trade markets of the countries we have made treaties with will be destroyed. Reciprocity was advocated and adopted at the request of a Republican who while living held the esteem and affections of the American people; a statesman who in his day stood upon the highest pinnacle of fame; a man whose matchless public services will remain an object-lesson to the patriots of abiding government in this and each succeeding age.

The Presidential office would have added nothing to the gigantic stature of his statesmanship. His majestic head towered above its fellows "like a snow-crowned summit of the Andes." I refer to the late Hon. James G. Blaine. If there is a Democratic member of this House who questions that Mr. Blaine is not entitled to the gratitude of our people on this subject I would beg to call his attention to the following editorial from the New York Sun, which is high Democratic authority. The Sun said of him:

But if Blaine had done nothing else to engrave his name indelibly upon American annals, his title to gratitude and honor at his country's hands would be made secure by his connection with the programme of reciprocity between all the independent commonwealths upon this hemisphere; a programme which he invented, interpreted, commended to his fellow citizens, and which he lived to see adopted over a large part of the New World.

[Applause.]

This measure has received from the people a hearty support. From the moment of its introduction there was sent to Congress from every important city in the United States, from associations of farmers, manufacturers, and producers, a large number of memorials and petitions signed by members of all political parties praying for its adoption. Democratic statesmen in Congress, without reason or a decent argument to sustain them, voted to a man against it. Their opposition drew from Senator HALE the following sarcastic declaration:

It is but another illustration of what the world has seen for thirty years, that upon plain business propositions touching the common good of the country and everyday life and prosperity of the people, upon which, if anywhere, there should be no party division, the Democratic party selects the darkness rather than the light for its standing ground.

After the measure had become a law, in an unpatriotic spirit responsible Democratic statesmen and newspapers did all they could to prevent treaties being made. However, notwithstanding their opposition, treaties were made with Spain in behalf of her colonies, Cuba and Porto Rico, with Brazil and other governments. From all the facts obtainable as to the benefits derived from this measure in the short time it has been in existence I believe it to be the best law in relation to our trade and commerce ever enacted by the American Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.]

AD VALOREM.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the imposing and collecting duties on imports under the ad valorem method, and I now desire to enter my solemn protest against this feature of the bill. A great many articles in this measure now under specific duties in the McKinley law are changed to ad valorem duties. It can have no other effect than to still further weaken and lessen protection by undervaluation.

Another fault with ad valorem duties is that they are lowest when goods are cheapest and protection is most needed, but specific duties are then highest in proportion to costs, and help the home maker to keep the home market when it is most hard pressed, and to employ home labor at American wages, and invest in improved processes of manufacture.

Another objection to this system is this: Our manufacturers will have no fixed basis upon which they can afford to make goods. The ad valorem method always was a fraud upon our revenue, a fraud upon our manufacturers, and a fraud upon American labor. England is anxious for this country to adopt the ad valorem method, and Mr. Cleveland and his advisers and followers are willing to comply with England's request, no matter what the result may be to our people.

Mr. WILSON, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, says specific duties lead to greater frauds than the ad valorem method. This is a most remarkable statement when we consider it is made by men who never had any experience whatever in the collecting of import duties. If I am correctly informed, the ad valorem system has been abandoned by most of the commercial nations of the globe. The experience of our Government is against the adoption of this method; specific duties have been recommended by every Secretary of the Treasury with the exception of Hon. Robert J. Walker.

Mr. Chairman, if the House will indulge me for a few moments longer on this matter I will quote from the reports of the Secretaries of Treasury what they said.

Secretary Gallatin, 1801:

In order to guard as far as possible against the value of goods being underrated in the invoices, it would be eligible to lay specific duties on all such articles now paying duties ad valorem as may be susceptible of that alteration.

Secretary Dallas, 1816:

Articles imported to a great amount should rather be charged with specific duties upon their weight and measure, in order to guard against evasions and frauds, than with ad valorem duties on their value.

Secretary Crawford, 1817:

It is certainly prudent to diminish as far as practicable the list of articles paying ad valorem duties.

And he submitted a list of 124 enumerations to be transferred to the class of specifics. In 1819 he submitted another list.

Secretary Meredith, 1849:

Experience has, I think, demonstrated that, looking exclusively to the revenue, a specific duty is more easily assessed, more favorable to commerce, more equal, and less exposed to frauds than any other system.

Secretary Bristow, 1876:

Another remedy, and the most effective which could be adopted for correcting the evils of the appraisement system, is the substitution, so far as practicable, of specific for ad valorem duties. The change would work a great reduction in the amount of labor requiring the knowledge of experts. The entire process of ascertaining duties would be more simple, certain, and safe. Opportunities for collusive undervaluation would be greatly lessened, and if errors were committed they could not, as to specific rates and amounts, be accounted for except upon the supposition of culpable negligence or actual fraud; whereas, in respect to ad valorem duties, an error of judgment may readily be assigned as a sufficient explanation.

Secretary Sherman, 1878:

While not recommending a general revision of the tariff at the present time, it is deemed important that upon some articles the ad valorem duties now assessed should be converted into specific duties. As a rule specific duties are to be preferred to either ad valorem or compound rates, and in any future revision of the tariff it is hoped that Congress will give preference to this system of imposing duties as far as practicable.

Secretary Manning, in a report to Congress, said:

Whatever successful contrivances are in operation to-day to evade the revenue by false invoices or by undervaluation or by any other means under an ad valorem system will not cease even if the ad valorem rates shall have been largely reduced. They are incontestibly, they are even notoriously, inherent in that system. One advantage, and perhaps the chief advantage, of a specific over an ad valorem system is in the fact that under the former duties are levied by a positive test which can be applied by our officers while the merchandise is in possession of the Government. But under an ad valorem system the facts to which the ad valorem rate is to be applied must be gathered in places many thousand miles away and under circumstances most unfavorable to the administration of justice.

One hears it often said that if our ad valorem rates did not exceed 25 or 30 per cent undervaluation and temptation to undervaluation would disappear. But the records of this Department for the years 1817, 1840, and 1857 do not uphold that conclusion.

James D. Powers, a special agent of the Treasury under Mr. Cleveland, reported:

Ad valorem rates of duty afford temptations and opportunities for fraud which can not be guarded against. Under the ad valorem system fraud has prospered and demoralized the importing trade, which has passed from the hands of American citizens into the control of men who have enriched themselves at the expense of the revenue and the ruin of the trade of American wholesale firms.

Notwithstanding the opinions of these men who had a large and practical experience in the collecting of duties under both systems, specific and ad valorem, some of them Democratic statesmen of national reputation, the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee have the audacity to recommend to the members of this House a method which has been outlawed by past experience, not only by our Government, but most if not all other great commercial nations.

HIGH TARIFF DOES NOT MAKE HIGH-PRICED GOODS.

The Republican party deny that protection robs our people by compelling them to purchase manufactured goods and agricultural products at high prices. Our past and present experience demonstrate beyond all dispute that a protective tariff has steadily lowered the price of articles in common and necessary use.

In the debate in Congress in 1870, on the bill offered by Gen. Schenck, which inter alia fixed the duty on steel rails at $28 a ton, the Democratic members manifested great fear that the proposed duty would be so high that it would to a large extent cut off the importation of foreign steel rails, thus depriving our railroad companies of the opportunity to buy the steel rails that they would need, except the few made in this country, and which were sold at an enormous cost. At that time steel rails were selling in this country at $110 a ton, and the average price at which they were sold during the whole of the year 1870 was $106.75. The duty of $28 took effect on the 31st of December, 1870, and it did not produce any of the evil effects predicted for it by the Democracy. On the contrary, it wonderfully increased the production of steel rails at home, and it so reduced their price that every steel rail made in the United States since has cost our railroad companies an average of less than $50 a ton, whereas the price was $110 a ton in 1870.

Under the present duty steel rails are sold as low as $24. Protection produced competition, and competition reduced prices in the manufacturing of steel rails. This same decline in prices followed all articles manufactured from iron.

A CONTRAST THAT CONVINCES.

I hold in my hand a tabulated statement of the retail prices of articles in common use, giving the price paid in 1857, near the close of the last free-trade period; also, the prices in 1889, a year before the McKinley bill passed, and prices in 1890, and the prices for exactly same articles in 1892.

Average prices on these under Democratic and free-trade administration in 1857	$10.14
Average prices under Republican protection, 1892	5.71
Difference in favor of a Republican policy	4.43

These "averages" will hold good on all (with but two or three exceptions) articles in the McKinley bill having protective duties levied upon them.

Cost of 1,000 articles for the "home" and "farm" under Democratic administrations, 1857	$10,140
Cost for same articles under the McKinley protective tariff, 1892	5,410
Difference in favor of McKinley tariff over free-trade acts of 1857	4,730

A CONTRAST THAT CONVINCES—ARTICLES IN COMMON USE.

The first column shows prices in 1857, near the close of the last free-trade period; the second column gives prices in 1889, a year before the McKinley bill passed; the next column gives prices in 1890, while the last column gives present prices.

A COMPARISON OF PRICES.

Values of articles in common and necessary use during different periods, showing the fall of prices under protection.

Articles.	Prices under— Democrats, 1857 and prior.	Republicans, 1889–'90.	Republicans, 1891–'92, after McKinley act.	Differences in favor of protection and Republican policy.
1 Ax*	$1.49	$0.95	$0.88	*$0.61
2 Blankets	6.85	4.23	3.70	3.15
3 Blue shirting	.17	.11	.09	.08
4 Boots	4.75	3.27	2.78	1.97
5 Calico	.14	.07	.06	.08
6 Carpets, per yard	1.30	.77	.66	.64
7 Cotton hose	.47	.27	.20	.27
8 Cotton-knit goods	.98	.56	.41	.57
9 Cotton thread	.09	.05	.04	.05
10 Crowbar, per pound	.11	.07	.06	.05
11 Drawing chains	1.28	.71	.58	.70
12 File	.42	.27	.20	.22
13 Forks	.99	.56	.46	.53
14 Flannel, per yard	.70	.50	.34	.36
15 Fruit cans, per dozen	3.00	.72	.54	2.46
16 Gingham, per yard	.22	.10	.08	.14
17 Hand saw	2.42	1.62	1.39	1.04
18 Hoe	.85	.48	.37	.48
19 Hemp rope, per pound	.21	.14	.11	.10
20 Linen, per yard	.83	.48	.42	.41
21 Mowing machines	121.15	56.98	47.10	74.05
22 Nails, per pound	.08	.05	.03	.05
23 Oilcloth, per yard	.84	.38	.31	.53
24 Overalls†	1.20	.83	.70	†.50

*On first 23 articles—"ax" to "oilcloth."
†On second 23 articles—"overalls" to "woolen clothing."

A COMPARISON OF PRICES—continued.

Articles.	Prices under— Democrats, 1857 and prior.	Republicans, 1889–'90.	Republicans, 1891–'92, after McKinley act.	Differences in favor of protection and Republican policy.
25 Pins, paper	$0.11	$0.06	$0.05	$0.06
26 Plow	20.12	14.37	12.90	7.22
27 Rake	.61	.34	.26	.35
28 Reaper and binder	247.85	142.36	115.96	131.89
29 Rubber boots	4.83	3.10	2.73	2.10
30 Salt, per barrel	2.30	1.75	1.38	.92
31 Shoes	5.84	3.45	3.06	2.78
32 Sheeting, per yard	.12	.08	.06	.06
33 Shovels	1.47	.97	.80	.67
34 Spades	1.44	.96	.84	.60
35 Sugar, granulated	.19	.09	.05	.14
36 Sugar, brown	.16	.08	.04	.12
37 Scythe	1.22	.85	.68	.54
38 Tin dipper	.25	.13	.10	.15
39 Tin milk pail	.75	.46	.39	.36
40 Tin milk pan	.37	.18	.15	.22
41 Ticking (per yard)	.35	.20	.17	.18
42 Washboard	.41	.24	.22	.19
43 Washtub	1.20	.70	.65	.55
44 Wheelbarrow	2.23	1.65	1.40	.83
45 Wooden pail	.45	.24	.20	.25
46 Woolen clothing	24.00	16.75	14.25	9.75
Averages	10.14	5.71	4.73	5.41

These "averages" will hold good on any given 1,000 articles in United States.

Average prices under Democratic and "Free-trade" Administrations	$10.14
Average prices under Republican and "Protection" Administrations	5.71
Difference in favor of Republican policy	4.43

Democratic averages, $10.14.
Republican (McKinley tariff) averages, $4.73. In favor of McKinley act, $5.41.

Cost of 1,000 articles for the "home" and "farm" under Democratic Administrations	10,140.00
Cost of 1,000 articles for the "home" and "farm" under Republican (McKinley tariff) Administrations	5,410.00
Difference in favor of McKinley tariff	4,730.00

Facts like the ones I have cited are worth more to a man when he wishes to come to an intelligent and correct conclusion than a wagon load of theories concocted and hatched in the brains of men who have no practical knowledge of the subject, and who refuse to accept facts given by men having an actual experience in such matters. I defy the chairman of the committee reporting this bill, or any member on the other side of this House who intends to vote for it, to show that the statement I have made in relation to prices is not true.

PROTECTION AUTHORIZED BY THE CONSTITUTION.

I now come to the place where no one but a Democratic statesman of the present day should stand. To him the ground is sacred. If trod by Republican feet, it would be a desecration of the worst sort. Nevertheless duty impels me to do so. The construction of the Constitution. From this instrument the statesmen now guiding the present Administration draw the sledge-hammer argument against the doctrine of protection. They say, admitting the fact for the sake of the argument, that protection has always brought wealth, prosperity, and contentment to our people, it can not be the business policy of our country, because it is unconstitutional. To quote them correctly, I now read from the Democratic platform, adopted at Chicago in 1892:

We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for the purposes of revenue only, and we demand that the collection of taxes shall be limited to the necessities of the Government when honestly and economically administered.

There could be no more positive declaration made against every form of protection.

With amazing frankness they tell us that they stand on all constitutional questions where Jefferson and Jackson stood, and in the same platform say that Jefferson and Jackson were wrong in their construction of the Constitution on the doctrine of protection.

The Constitution of the United States, as construed by Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Buchanan, Clay, Webster, Benton, and other illustrious statesmen, some of them founders of the Democratic party, expressly authorizes protection to our industries. In support of this position I will quote from distinguished men, who are held as high authority by my Democratic friends on all constitutional questions. Washington, when President, believed that the Constitution gave Congress the authority to protect our manufactures. The second act passed by the First Congress had the following preamble:

Whereas it is necessary for the support of Government, for the discharge of the debts of the United States, and for the encouragement and protection of manufactures, that duties be laid on goods, wares, and merchandise imported. Be it enacted, etc.

This bill was signed by Washington July 4, 1789.

Mr. Jefferson, in his second message, said:

To cultivate peace, and maintain commerce and navigation in all their lawful enterprises, to foster our fisheries, as nurseries of navigation and for the nurture of man, and to protect the manufactures adapted to our circumstances—these are the landmarks by which we are to guide ourselves.

I will now read from President Madison's special message, May 23, 1809:

The revision of our commercial laws, proper to adapt them to the arrangement which has taken place with Great Britain, will doubtless engage the early attention of Congress. It will be worthy at the same time of their just and provident care to make such alteration in the laws as will especially protect and foster the several branches of manufacture.

Gen. Andrew Jackson, in 1824, wrote:

It is time that we should become a little more Americanized, and, instead of feeding the paupers and laborers of England, feed our own.

I now again read from Gen. Andrew Jackson's letter to Dr. L. H. Coleman, of Warrenton, Va., dated June 12, 1824, published in Niles' Register, page 245:

Heaven smiled upon and gave us liberty and independence. That same Providence has blessed us with the means of national independence and national defense. "If we omit or refuse to use the gifts which He has extended to us we deserve not the continuation of His blessings. He has filled our mountains and our plains with minerals, lead, iron, and copper, and given us a climate and soil for the growing of hemp and wool. These being the grand materials of our national defense, they ought to have extended to them adequate and fair protection, that our own manufactories and laborers may be placed on a fair competition with those of Europe.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Andrew Jackson, December 7, 1830, in his second annual message as President of the United States, said:

The power to impose duties on imports originally belonged to the several States. The right to adjust these duties with a view to the encouragement of domestic branches of industry is so completely identical with that power that it is difficult to suppose the existence of the one without the other. The States have delegated their whole authority over imports to the Federal Government without limitation or restriction, saving the very inconsiderable restriction relating to their inspection laws. This authority having thus entirely passed from the States, the right to exercise it for the purpose of protection does not exist in them; and consequently if it be not possessed by the General Government it must be extinct. Our political system would thus present the anomaly of a people stripped of the right to foster their own industry and to counteract the most selfish and destructive policy which might be adopted by foreign nations. This surely can not be the case; this indispensable power thus surrendered by the States must be within the scope of the authority on the subject expressly delegated to Congress.

In this conclusion I am confirmed as well by the opinions of Presidents Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, who have each repeatedly recommended the exercise of this right under the Constitution, as by the uniform practice of Congress, the continued acquiescence of the States, and the general understanding of the people,

James Madison, in 1828, said:

A further evidence in support of the constitutional power to protect and foster manufactures by regulations of trade—an evidence that ought in itself to settle the question—is the uniform and practical sanction given in that power, for nearly forty years, with a concurrence or acquiescence of every State government throughout the same period, and, it may be added, through all the vicissitudes of party which marked that period.

Mr. John Q. Adams, in 1832, in a report from the Committee on Manufactures, said:

And thus the very first act of the organized Congress united with the law of self-preservation, by the support of the Government just instituted, the two objects combined in the first grant of power to Congress; the payment of the public debts and the provision for the common defense by the protection of manufactures. The next act was precisely of the same character—an act of protection to manufactures still more than of taxation for revenue.

Daniel Webster, the great expounder of the Constitution, in a speech at a mass meeting at Albany, August 27, 1844, said:

The term [protection] was well understood in our colonial history, and if we go back to the history of the Constitution and of the Convention which adopted it, we shall find that everywhere, when masses of men were assembled and the wants of the people were brought forth into prominence, the idea was held up that domestic industry could not prosper, manufactures and the mechanic arts could not advance, the condition of the common country could not be carried up to any considerable elevation, unless there should be one government to lay one rate of duty upon imports throughout the Union from New Hampshire to Georgia, regard to be had in laying this duty to the protection of American labor and industry. I defy the man in any degree conversant with history, in any degree acquainted with the annals of this country from 1787 to the adoption of the Constitution in 1789, to say that this was not a leading, I may say almost the leading motive, South as well as North, for the formation of the new Government. Without that provision in the Constitution it never could have been adopted.

The Southern wing of the Democratic party are perfectly willing to violate the Constitution by affording protection to sugar, rice, and tobacco, articles used daily by the working classes of our country, and compel the consumer to pay this tax. "It makes all the difference in the world whose ox is gored." These articles are produced in the South. Not so long ago they were guilty of a flagrant violation of the Constitution, when they plotted treason against the Government and attempted to destroy it. It took the Government with all its military power, with all its wealth, four long years to save the Constitution. It was saved, purified, and made more sacred than ever by being washed in the blood of thousands of brave men from the North.

The Northern wing of the Democracy have had for many years the constitutional rabies. Every measure proposed and advocated by the Republican party to suppress and put down the rebellion was unconstitutional. All laws passed since the war by Republican Congresses for the uplifting of the nation and the betterment of our people were unconstitutional. Sirs, any legislation so adjusting and regulating our great industrial interests in favor of the working classes, giving to them work and bread, is not unconstitutional. If the Constitution does forbid such legislation, then, sirs, the time has come to make a new one. Some one has said, "So tender is the Democratic party in its love for the Constitution they love it better than its enforcement." They love the reaper better than the crops; the marriage certificate better than the wife, I really believe. Let us personify the party, that he would let his wife go and save his marriage certificate.

Imagine a married couple on shipboard in a great storm, the man rushing around the deck crying, "Save, oh! save my marriage certificate!" and his wife going gurgling to the bottom of the sea. Why, a practical Republican would put a life-preserver around his wife and his arm, too, let his marriage certificate go to the devil, and float safely to shore. To-day finds us in the midst of great business and commercial storm. The "ship of State" is being roughly tossed on the waves of distress. Listen! a shriek comes out from the darkness. It is the Democratic party, running around the deck of the old ship, crying out, "Save, oh! save, oh! save the Constitution!" at the same time all our commercial and business interests are going down to the bottom.

In answer to the statement so frequently made by the friends of this measure, that a majority of the people of the United States, at the polls on 8th of November, 1892, declared that all protective tariff legislation was unconstitutional and that it is now the bounden duty of the present Administration to enforce their wishes by appropriate legislation, I want to say that a majority of the voters did not indorse this plank in the Democratic platform of 1892:

Grover Cleveland, Democrat, for President, received	5,566,533
Benj. Harrison, Republican, for President, received	5,175,577
J. B. Weaver, People's Party, for President, received	1,122,045
John Bidwell, Prohibition, for President, received	279,191
Simon Wing, Socialist, for President, received	21,141
Total vote cast	11,964,537

These figures show that Mr. Cleveland fell short 1,031,471 votes of a majority of the popular vote.

Mr. Harrison carried the great manufacturing States of the North and West by a majority of 400,000 over Mr. Cleveland.

SOUTH NEEDS PROTECTION.

Why should the South continue to adhere to the free-trade heresy? She can, if she will, manufacture more and produce it cheaper than the States of the North and West:

Its singular advantage is in the variety of its resources—lands on the coasts and river bottoms of wonderful fertility, fitted for cotton, rice, and sugar; and plains, and mountain valleys, and hills, yielding wheat and corn and grass of finest quality, wait to be tilled; fruits, from the orange to the peach and apple, can be produced; swift streams are ready to serve man by turning many water wheels; large rivers can be navigated far up to the interior; great mines of iron and copper, beds of coal and quarries of stone wait to be opened; vast forests stand ready to serve human needs; spacious bays and noble harbors are along thousands of miles of coast, on ocean and gulf, and the mild, yet salubrious, air of its upper valleys favors vigor of body and mind. Such variety of resources and advantages can hardly be found in a similar extent on the globe.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

The rivers of the South have been during the past centuries running in waste to the sea. To your rivers and creeks "harness" cotton factories, iron mills, machine shops, looms, spindles, and water-wheels. Open up your hills, rich in ore deposits. Let the smoke of forge and furnace ascend from every valley. Utilize your great forests. Fill your streets with a busy, hustling, active people. Attract skilled artisans and capital to your States to build and operate great manufacturing establishments and populate your cities, towns, and villages. Manufacture that which you need for your own consumption and for importation; thus you will save the cost of transportation from distant markets. Enrich your soil, and with the raising of more varied crops you can give employment and good wages to all your unskilled labor, white and black.

The Republican party has always legislated for the industries of the whole country. It is now ready and willing to give protection to the iron and coal districts of Alabama, Kentucky, and Virginia; to the sugar and rice regions of Louisiana and South Carolina; to the orange orchards of Florida. Instead of sending your raw cotton into strange markets and receiving in return for it but $250,000,000, under a protective system erect great cotton mills, manufacture your raw cotton into thread, muslin, cottonades, etc., send out the product of your mills and bring back to the cotton States $750,000,000 in place of $250,000,000. This will put $500,000,000 more in circulation, make money plenty, your banks stronger. It will put new blood into your commercial life. In a few years you will be knocking at the doors of Congress asking for a duty on your cotton as well as on your sugar, rice, and tobacco. A new cotton superior to the cotton of the South has been since 1885 finding its way into the American market. Egypt sends to the United States a goodly part of her crop.

I now quote from the American Industries:

In 1885 America bought in the Liverpool markets 3,800 bales of Egyptian cotton, and in the succeeding three years a trifle more each season, until the trade amounted to 10,470 bales in 1889. Then wide-awake brokers in Boston and New York arranged for direct shipments, resulting in an importation in 1890 of 23,790 bales; in 1891, of 25,673 bales, while last year's shipments aggregated 36,755 bales, and for this year of grace the figure will be several points better than 40,000 bales.

Think of it! America buying cotton in Egypt! Is it like carrying coals to Newcastle? To the uninitiated it may be, but not so to the enterprising factory owner in Massachusetts or Connecticut. With its silky staple from an inch to an inch and a half long, he can, with Egyptian cotton, make underwear and hosiery and a dozen other things requiring a smooth finish and high luster that he could not make from American cotton alone.

Whenever the South is willing to join hands with the North and West, and together enforce the policy of protection, you will become a great and prosperous people.

The people of the North and West are not a jealous people. They want to see the South become a great and powerful people in the commercial and industrial world. Come, let sectionalism go. Let us be Americans and stand for America's industries. Jefferson said:

We must now place our manufacturer by the side of the agriculturist. Experience has taught me that manufactories are now as necessary to our independence as to our comfort. The doors of wisdom are never shut.

The free-trade Administration now in power may do as Mr. Watterson of the Louisville Courier Journal, the great champion of free trade, said it would do when he declared:

On lines perfectly clear and broad the new Administration and the new Congress will begin to remove the house that has been condemned. Time will be given its occupants to get out; to remove their effects; and then, starting with the roof, the Democratic party will proceed to raze it, story by story, to the ground, and when the rotten foundations are reached to remove them preparatory to the erection in its place of a free-trade temple.

If you do so it will not be long until the temple of protection will be rebuilt and the party which occupied it for a third of a century will come back to live in it once more.

The party of protection still lives and moves. The lifeblood coursing through its veins is the great respect it has for the right. Its determination to vindicate the honor and integrity of our nation on land or sea, at home or abroad, its defense of American industries and American wage-earners, has brought to its support the convictions and conscience of the people of the North, East, and West. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Just as long as it stands as the friend and champion of our great industrial interests and toiling millions of wage-earners of all classes, just so long will it as a party remain fixed and rooted in the hearts and affections of the American people.

Last November it started on its march to make further conquests. The free-trade party will in 1896 be again defeated and humiliated as it was at Appomattox in 1865. An outraged and indignant people will once more place the Republican party in power, and keep it in power until the free-trade Democratic party, "whose only mission has been to lie in cold obstruction across the pathway of the nation," has done like Jacob of old, "gathered up its feet into the bed and yielded up the ghost." [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the citizens of Kansas believe in giving all the protection needed to American manufactures and the American laborer, but ask protection for the products of the farm.

The laboring men of this country should be fully protected by the passage of a bill further restricting immigration, so as to exclude from the shores of this country all pauper, contract labor, vicious, and criminal classes. And all immigration laws should be strictly enforced.

There is no use of protecting the American citizens against the importation of the products of cheap labor while leaving the gates wide open for the admission of these classes.

There is no justice in protecting the manufacturer and refusing to protect the products of the farm.

Such products of this country as can be produced, either by the American manufacturer, the American farmer, or the American laborer, in quantities to supply the wants of the American people, should be protected. By this bill you place the products of the farm upon the free list under the pretext of giving free raw material, but protect many manufactured articles when it will benefit a Democratic district. This measure leaves the American farmers at the mercy of the foreign producer, and yet you pretend to be surprised at their complaint.

The farmers know full well what effect "free trade" or "tariff for revenue only" has had upon the farming and other industries of this country; they know that when tried it has been disastrous, not only to them but to every class.

They know the effects of the compromise sliding scale of 1833 and the Walker tariff of 1846.

They have no desire to pass through the hard times that followed the enactment of those measures, or to continue the distressing conditions that now exist by reason of the threats to change the present tariff laws.

Speaking of the Walker tariff of 1846, President Fillmore, in his annual message in December, 1851, said:

The value of our exports of breadstuffs and provisions, which it was supposed the incentive of a low tariff and large importations from abroad would have greatly augmented, has fallen from $68,701,921 in 1847, to $21,848,655 in 1851, with a strong probability, amounting almost to a certainty, of a still further reduction in the current year. The policy which dictated a low rate of duties on foreign merchandise, it was thought by those who promoted and established it, would tend to benefit the farming population of this country, by increasing the demand and raising the price of our agricultural products in foreign markets. The foregoing facts, however, seem to show incontestibly, that no such result has followed the adoption of this policy.

The farmers have had a little experience lately, that is enough to satisfy them that the policy of protection is a benefit to them and that a reduction of duty upon farm products is an injury.

There are four counties in the Fourth Kansas district in which sheep were handled with profit to their owners, and a benefit to the State, up to 1883; in that year there were 24,632 sheep in Woodson County, 33,861 in Greenwood County, 34,763 in Coffey County, and 52,496 in Butler County; their owners employed quite a large number of men, many acres of grazing lands were utilized, and there was a home market for the products of the farms in each county.

The reduction of the duty upon wool paralyzed this growing industry, and the number of sheep in these four counties decreased to 62,000 in 1890.

Under the benefits of the increased duty upon wool in 1890, this industry began to revive; but to-day, because of the fear that wool will be placed upon the free list, sheep are a drug upon the market, and there are no purchasers for the wool our farmers have on hand.

With unfriendly legislation you take from these farmers what little they have invested and destroy an industry that with proper protection would not only be profitable to them, but a lasting benefit to our great and growing State.

There are 389,629 sheep in Kansas to-day; in 1883 there were over 1,000,000; and while the most of our State consists of the very best of farming lands, yet we have many acres adapted to sheep-raising.

What is true of the sheep industry in Kansas is also true of it in other States where sheep are being raised.

Having had no experience in this line, I desire to have read and printed as a part of my remarks the following letters:

YATES CENTER, KANS., October 11, 1893.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your letter of the 4th instant, in regard to the price of wool and stock sheep, I sold my stock sheep last year at $2 per head and unwashed merino wool at 16 cents per pound. This year I get no offers for my sheep, and wool-buyers do not come to buy any wool. Most of the farmers have their wool on hand yet. The few who did ship theirs can not sell it in the market, and it is held at their expense.

All this disaster in the sheep and wool industry is due to Democratic free-wool scheme. Free wool is sure death to the wool industry of this country.

The damage resulting from hides being on the free list, the farmer and ranger not only lose the price on the hides of their fallen stock, but every beef that is sold is from two to three dollars less in value on the account that hides are almost worthless.

The losses of these two industries are so great that I am not able to make even like a fair estimation.

I can not see why the farmers of this country, who have no pooling combines and trusts and must pay nearly all the taxes, shall have no protection on their industry; even the manufacturer of woolen goods, with his improved machinery of this day, is more able to compete with the European industry than the farmers and wool-growers of the United States are with such countries as Australia, South Africa, etc., who need not feed during the winter, and have cheaper laborers and pastures.

Truly yours,

WM. STOCKEBRAND.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS, Washington, D. C.

LEON, KANS., October 28, 1893.

FRIEND CURTIS: Yours of the 4th received, and I will answer the best I can. Two years ago I sold my wool in the district for 18 cents. Last year they told me that Cleveland would be elected and we would have free wool, and I had to take 15 cents. This year it would bring on the St. Louis market about 5 cents; but I have not sold for I can not think that our law makers will rub out of existence this great industry by putting wool on the free list.

They call wool raw material, while in fact it comes as near representing labor, and being the product of labor, as does the wagon I drive on my farm or the clothes I wear. A pound of wool is produced by a year of constant care, and corn and hay that is manufactured by the sheep into wool.

I have no way of getting at the loss to our county, but it will be great, for the flocks of this county have given the people a better market than the shippers could make, besides receiving the crops in out-of-the-way sections.

I think hides were placed on the free list in 1872, since which time we have lost from one to two dollars on every head; a fair cowhide would weigh, say, 60 pounds; would sell from 5 cents to 6 cents green; now we get from 1½ cents to 2 cents if extra good.

What have the farmers done that they must be cursed by having in power such men as Cleveland, Mills & Co., who are willing to place our business at the mercy of Australia and other cheap labor countries, while they protect the manufacturer and his labor.

I saw sheep sell for 50 cents on the 14th day of September on foreclosure sale that one year ago were worth $3; and this low price was caused by the prospect of free wool; I have been keeping sheep for twenty-four years.

When the McKinley bill passed, I thought the question settled. I stocked up with sheep and owe some on them: it would take all now to pay for the few. I am 45 years old, with a familily, and out of a job, if Cleveland is allowed to have his way and give us free wool. I have 3,100 sheep and might realize from their sale $3,100; they are extra fine. Two years ago they would have brought $4 per head or $12,400. I believe that Cleveland through his free-wool doctrine has cost me over $9,000. I am but one of many.

Truly, yours,

H. M. COTTON.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS, Washington, D. C.

LATHAM, KANS., November 17, 1893.

DEAR FRIEND: I have been busy and delayed answering your inquiry about the price of sheep and wool.

It is discouraging enough, I assure you, and the most prejudiced Democrat in the county can date the decline of value from the advent of the present Democratic Administration.

As an illustration, last year our wool netted us 16 cents per pound; this year the best offer we can get on the same quality of wool in St. Louis is 8 cents, or 6 cents net after deducting freight, insurance, commission, and storage; a net loss of 10 cents per pound, or a loss of $7,000 on 70,000 pounds of wool.

Sheep have depreciated correspondingly. In the summer and fall of 1892, a year ago, feeding wethers sold in this county at from $3 to $4 per head, stock sheep and breeding ewes at from $2.50 to $3.25; this summer and fall feeding wethers have sold at from $2 to $2.50, and practically no sale at any price for stock sheep, ewes, and lambs.

To sum the matter up, during President Harrison's Administration of four years, Butler County wool sold at from 15 cents to 18 cents per pound; sheep at from $2.50 to $3.50 per head, and was considered good property; now prices are driven away down below the cost of production. How long the business can stand it I do not know; not long in any event, for such a sweeping and destructive depreciation will destroy in a few months what it has taken years of labor to accumulate.

This county has had from sixty to seventy-five thousand head of sheep that yearly consume 200,000 bushels of corn, thousands of dollars of rough feed, employed thousands of dollars of capital, and paid a large amount of money into the county treasury in the way of taxes, and even another year of present prices and it will be a thing of the past.

You can imagine how I have learned to fear and hate the Democratic party when I tell you that, in the last twelve months of this senseless depreciation, my brothers and I have lost over $15,000; simply a loss of value gone and no one benefited thereby.

Yours truly,

BERT ANDERSON.

CHARLES CURTIS, Washington, D. C.

By this bill you absolutely destroy this great industry in the United States; you rob the farmers of the money and property invested, and no benefit to the American people will result from it.

With proper protection the sheep industry would soon be one of the greatest in the country, giving employment to thousands of men, causing the investment of millions of capital, utilizing millions of acres of land, and in a few years American sheep-growers would be able to supply the American market with every grade of wool needed.

For my part I will never vote to tear down this industry, but will vote to build it up.

Cattle-raising is one of the greatest industries in this country, and the farmers and stockmen who are engaged in it are entitled to such protection as will give them the American market for cattle and their products.

We have in the State of Kansas 2,685,815 head of cattle, and of course are interested in this question.

In 1872 hides were put upon the free list in hopes that the people would be furnished with cheaper boots, shoes, and leather. While there has been some reduction in price in these articles, yet it is mostly due to improved machinery and competition; but there has not been a sufficient reduction in price to justify the further keeping of hides upon the free list.

There was a time when it paid the farmer and stockman to take hides to market for sale, but now it pays but little if anything.

Years ago the cow or steer that died from the effects of the Western blizzard was not a total loss, for the hides were worth something; but now it does not pay for the skinning and hauling to market; yet if you look at the list of articles imported free of duty you will find that in the last seven years we have imported hides and skins, other than fur skins, of the value of $176,777,739, or of the yearly average value of $25,253,962, and the amount is increasing every year.

The farmers and stock-raisers would be glad to see a duty placed upon hides, and there should be one.

We have imported fewer horses since the duty was increased by the act of 1890, as is shown by the following: We imported horses of the value of $4,868,862 in 1889, $4,840,485 in 1890, $3,265,254 in 1891, $2,455,868 in 1892, and $2,388,267 in 1893.

When horses are decreasing in value; when the farmers are anxious to obtain a market for the few they have; when the use of the electric and cable car lines is decreasing the demand for them, this is too great a value to import.

The farmers of Kansas who own 1,000,594 head of horses would be pleased for an opportunity to supply some of the demands that is filled by the importer.

In justice to the farmers the duty should be so fixed on all horses, except those imported for breeding purposes, as to allow them to supply the demand.

A comparison of the amount of eggs imported a few years before 1890 with those imported since will show what a benefit the placing of a duty upon eggs has been to the farmers. The following figures speak for themselves: In 1889 we imported eggs of the value of $2,418,976, in 1890 of $2,074,912, in 1891 of the value of $1,185,595, in 1892 of the value of $522,240, and in 1893 of the value of $392,973.

Up to a few years ago there was not enough poultry and eggs sold in the State of Kansas to justify keeping an account of them, but in 1891 the farmers of Kansas realized from the sale of this product the sum of $2,559,297, and in 1892 the sum of $2,679,280, and egg depots have been established in numerous towns and villages in the State.

The farmers will not thank you for returning eggs to the free list, but will condemn you.

With the large hay fields of this country there is no excuse for the importation of a single ton.

With proper protection the farmers would have their hay market increased nearly a million dollars each year.

The duty imposed by the McKinley bill caused a small decrease in the importation of hay, and no doubt did much to cause the farmers to pay more attention to this paying industry.

In Kansas the farmers produced hay of the value of $4,062,546 in 1891, and the amount was increased to the value of $8,232,251 in 1892. Hay pressing is now quite extensively followed in many of the counties, and carload after carload is shipped East every year.

There is absolutely no excuse for the importation of so vast an amount of the products of the farm as are imported yearly into this country, and the American farmers are simply robbed of the market to which they are just entitled, and the passage of this measure will greatly increase the importation of farm products.

Secretary Morton, in his last report, says:

> The time will surely come when, under the favorable condition of soil and climate which this country possesses, a very large share of the agricultural products now imported will be raised by American farmers.
>
> Our large imports of hides, fruits, nuts, and wines, aggregating the average of over $60,000,000 annually, could be all produced in this country.
>
> A considerable share of the fibers, including wool and silk, and no doubt a large portion of the tobacco now imported, could also be produced in the United States.
>
> This is true, likewise, of sugar.

He might have added that this time will never come if the policy of the Democratic party is adopted.

The State of Kansas has grown up since the war and during a period in which this country has been enjoying the benefits of the American system of protection; and, being an agricultural State, I invite your attention to the following tables, which show what it can produce and how great it has developed during that period:

STATE SUMMARY—1892.

Table showing the total acreage, amount and value of field crops, and the value of the products of live stock.

Crops.	Acres.	Product.	Value.
Winter wheat.....bushels..	3,820,013	70,035,980	$38,534,426.92
Spring wheat.....do....	209,816	4,520,926	2,157,335.11
Corn.....do....	5,603,588	138,658,621	42,889,849.01
Oats.....do....	1,559,049	43,722,484	11,140,224.70
Rye.....do....	239,173	4,042,513	1,697,057.35
Barley.....do....	138,226	3,842,964	1,407,983.08
Buckwheat.....do....	4,818	62,808	47,106.00
Irish potatoes.....do....	80,147	4,257,504	3,438,042.45
Sweet potatoes.....do....	3,502	300,000	330,000.00
Castor beans.....bushels..	11,087	81,987	102,483.75
Sorghum.....	169,105	.....	*1,935,341.00

*Sirup and forage.

Table showing the total acreage, amount and value of field crops, and the value of the products of live stock—Continued.

Crops.	Acres.	Product.	Value.
Cotton.....pounds..	666	145,300	$10,171.00
Flax.....bushels..	171,517	1,245,555	1,058,721.75
Hemp.....pounds..	47	32,900	1,645.00
Tobacco.....do....	371	22,600	22,260.00
Broom corn.....do....	75,398	34,016,950	1,105,550.87
Millet and Hungarian.....tons..	275,029	493,648	1,974,592.00
Timothy	576,315
Clover	127,994
Blue grass	114,027	700,613	8,503,065.00
Alfalfa.....tons..	62,583
Orchard grass	5,232
Other tame grasses	56,440
Prairie, under fence.....tons..	4,955,197	2,374,479	8,232,251.00
Totals	18,360,240		119,588,106.00
Wool clip.....pounds..		1,345,787	28,783.79
Cheese.....do....		540,609	59,466.99
Butter.....do....		27,705,466	4,155,819.90
Animals slaughtered or sold for slaughter			35,280,273.00
Milk sold other than that sold for butter and cheese			450,212.00
Poultry and eggs sold			2,579,280.00
Garden products marketed			672,231.00
Horticultural products marketed			1,064,368.00
Wine manufactured.....gallons..		241,232	241,232.00
Honey and beeswax produced..pounds..		543,862	108,772.40
Wood marketed			100,410.00
Total			45,060,849.08
Grand total	18,360,240		164,648,955.08

Table showing the number and value of live stock in Kansas January 1, 1893.

Stock.	Number.	Value.
Horses	1,000,594	$55,626,845.06
Mules	92,399	6,186,220.00
Milch cows	727,080	13,450,980.00
Other cattle	1,958,785	31,772,640.00
Sheep	389,629	974,033.00
Swine	2,445,341	19,329,687.00

A careful reading of the tables showing the products of Kansas for 1892 and the amount of stock on hand, will disclose why her citizens favor a policy that will increase our home market.

It will also show that Kansas stood first in the production of wheat, second in broom corn, fourth in oats, fifth in corn, and fifth in flax. The citizens of Kansas also rank high in the ownership of live stock, standing third in the number of oxen and other cattle, fourth in the number of horses, and fourth in the number of hogs.

The citizens of Kansas have built the two Kansas Cities. "Kansas City, Kans., is the second packing and meat center on the American continent, and is the second greatest live stock marketing place in the United States." This is proved by the following tables:

Yearly receipts of live stock in Kansas City, Kans.

Year.	Cattle.	Calves.	Hogs.	Sheep.	Horses and mules.	Cars.	Value.
1871	120,827	.....	41,036	4,527	809	6,623	$4,210,605
1872	236,802	.....	104,639	6,071	2,648	13,110	9,175,071
1873	227,689	.....	221,815	5,975	4,202	14,603	9,133,399
1874	207,080	.....	212,532	8,855	3,679	13,370	8,692,337
1875	174,754	.....	63,350	25,237	2,646	9,093	6,574,473
1876	183,378	.....	153,777	55,045	5,339	11,602	7,210,033
1877	215,768	.....	192,645	42,190	4,279	13,808	9,139,047
1878	175,344	.....	427,777	36,760	10,796	16,588	7,728,999
1879	211,415	.....	588,908	61,684	15,829	20,702	10,635,231
1880	214,700	.....	676,477	50,611	14,086	22,704	14,277,215
1881	285,853	.....	1,014,304	79,024	12,592	29,089	23,595,276
1882	439,671	.....	963,036	80,724	11,716	34,068	32,660,445
1883	460,780	.....	1,379,401	119,665	19,860	45,470	35,824,499
1884	583,526	.....	1,723,586	237,964	27,163	55,227	41,145,551
1885	506,627	.....	2,358,718	221,801	24,506	63,213	39,191,940
1886	490,971	.....	2,264,484	172,059	23,188	58,934	35,349,159
1887	669,284	.....	2,423,262	209,956	29,690	67,752	43,514,050
1888	1,056,086	.....	2,008,984	351,050	27,650	74,666	55,949,004
1889	1,220,343	.....	2,073,910	470,772	34,563	85,972	59,554,276
1890	1,472,229	76,568	2,865,171	535,869	37,116	108,160	75,503,119
1891	1,270,917	76,570	2,599,109	386,760	31,740	91,456	66,063,601
1892	1,492,765	97,810	2,437,884	441,822	32,831	98,282	76,600,000
Total..	11,996,758	249,648	26,794,805	3,508,951	396,930	963,317	680,501,401

Here are the figures for each year's packing in Kansas City, Kans., since its first inception. They tell a remarkable story, indeed, of the building up of a wonderful industry:

Year.	Cattle.	Calves.	Hogs.	Sheep.
1868	4,200	.....	13,000	.....
1869	4,420	.....	23,000	.....
1870	21,000	.....	36,000	.....
1871	20,313	.....	38,705	.....
1872	30,332	.....	95,806	944
1873	45,421	.....	186,964	660
1874	40,550	.....	98,145	1,663
1875	47,949	.....	47,306	1,901
1876	62,916	.....	126,916	7,568
1877	89,201	.....	177,231	32,369
1878	43,788	.....	334,684	14,004
1879	55,530	.....	380,983	6,329
1880	49,860	.....	523,928	13,375
1881	62,145	.....	819,923	14,719
1882	80,509	.....	770,581	18,770
1883	74,000	.....	1,065,126	28,056
1884	90,991	.....	1,134,254	57,201
1885	104,196	.....	1,557,865	131,241
1886	120,556	.....	1,729,318	107,333
1887	185,690	.....	1,899,054	80,162
1888	372,925	.....	1,595,313	106,365
1889	474,885	.....	1,741,880	181,684
1890	549,391	20,862	2,805,127	196,027
1891	533,166	37,605	1,995,652	199,000
1892	699,578	56,341	1,773,004	209,241
Total twenty-five years	3,869,411	114,408	20,466,625	1,884,110

Of the 4,470,000 food animals marketed in Kansas City, Kans., in 1892 the local packers handled 2,000,000 of them, 60 per cent of the total number of food animals sold in the market.

They slaughtered 699,578 cattle in 1892, as against a total of 533,166 for 1891, the increased slaughter of cattle being 166,422, or nearly 33 per cent.

Local packers in 1892 killed and dressed 56,341 calves, as against 37,905 killed in 1891, an increase for the year of 8,736, or about 33 per cent.

Of hogs they packed 1,773,004 head in 1892, as against 1,995,652 in 1891, a decreased packing of hogs amounting to 222,648 head, less than 12 per cent.

Of sheep the number killed in 1892 was 160,317, as against 209,641 killed in 1891, a decrease of 49,324, or about 24 per cent.

Kansas does not stop with the products of the farm, but has made rapid progress in other industries which are necessary to make a great State; there are to-day within her borders 2,688 manufacturing establishments, with over $50,709,400 capital invested, giving employment to 18,500 men, and producing every year material of the value of $90,066,711.

Is not this a great showing for an agricultural State? [Applause.]

The people of Kansas would be glad to have more manufacturing establishments, but have no hope if this proposed measure becomes a law.

In addition to farm products and manufacturing establishments during this period of protection, our State with its area of 52,572,160 acres has made rapid strides in everything that it takes to make a great State; it has a population of 1,423,485, an increase of 43.27 per cent since 1880; it has property of the assessed value of $348,459,944, an increase in assessed valuation of 116.58 per cent in the ten years from 1880 to 1890.

Kansas ranks third in railroads, having 8,882 miles.

There are 9,088 public schoolhouses within her borders, and there are employed to instruct our children 11,888 teachers, to whom are paid annually $3,060,457.45; the school property of our State is of the value of $10,707,708. There are a larger number of pupils enrolled for every one hundred children between the ages of 5 and 18 years, than in any other State in the Union. [Applause.]

The above does not include the State University at Lawrence, with an average yearly attendance of 700, nor the State Agricultural College, with an average yearly attendance of 585, nor the Kansas State Normal, which now has enrolled 1,400 young men and women, nor does it include the denominational schools of Kansas, which have an annual average attendance of 7,391. There are 4,539 church organizations in Kansas, and they possess property of the value of $7,487,069.

There are vast deposits of lead, coal, salt, and zinc, that will be crippled by any "free-trade" or "tariff-for-revenue-only" measure that may be enacted into a law.

Last year Kansas furnished one-fourth of the zinc output of the United States.

Why, Mr. Speaker, there is enough salt in the State of Kansas to supply the world! [Applause.]

The salt industry of Kansas is in its infancy, and yet there is 1,250,000 barrels of common fine salt and more than 2,000,000 packages of fine dairy and table salt manufactured, marketed, and shipped from the city of Hutchinson per annum. There is a solid stratum of salt 350 feet in thickness in the vicinity of Hutchinson, and the supply of native rock salt is inexhaustible.

There are at this time supported by this industry, in the city of Hutchinson, between five and six hundred families; there is consumed in the salt industry each year at least 170,000 tons of slack coal, which is furnished from the Kansas coal mines. Until salt was discovered at Hutchinson the average price was $2.50 per barrel by the carload; the same is now being sold at 50 to 55 cents per barrel, and bulk salt of the finest quality sells at 10 cents per hundredweight, and stock salt is sold as low as 5 cents per hundredweight, or $1 per ton.

If the present duty is retained upon salt this industry will grow and soon be one of the greatest in the country; but if the duty is reduced, as is proposed by this bill, it will be greatly crippled if not entirely destroyed, for they can not compete with the English salt, which is largely if not wholly carried free of freight until it reaches our shores, being carried as ballast.

In behalf of this great and growing industry in the State of Kansas, I appeal to the members of this House not to change the duty so as to destroy it.

Our citizens would be glad to derive the benefit from the greater development of the industries which would be productive of a home market.

They believe this country has been built up under the system of protection; that the building up of manufacturing establishments in the West would not only give us a market for our farm products, but would cause the great beds of salt, fields of coal, deposits of zinc and lead, and large stone quarries to be fully developed; that it would bring to our State a large number of citizens who would build up our cities and open up new farms; that it would give us a greater demand and our citizens would receive a better price for their products.

So Kansas has in her few years of statehood tried to induce enterprising men to build manufacturing establishments within her borders; in other words, the citizens of Kansas, having full knowledge of the rich soil, the water power furnished by our small but numerous streams, and the great mineral deposits, have been trying to fully develop our great State.

The railroads of Kansas extend to its extreme limit, and have opened up new markets for our numerous products, and have caught for us a desirable part of the great army of immigration and planted them in the heart of our State, where they have opened up large farms, and are making by their industrious efforts the land that was once considered worthless produce abundant harvests.

THE DEBTS OF OUR PEOPLE.

Yes, the people of Kansas are in debt. It could not have been otherwise; the men who settled in Kansas were young and without means, any purchases made by them must necessarily have been made on credit, but with a virgin soil and their invincible energy, the liquidation of this debt only required action.

They have acted, the soil has responded, and the debt was diminished 42 per cent from 1887 to 1890, and its entire extinguishment will be an event of the near future. Our citizens have had their misfortunes like those of other States. In every state of enterprise, push, and great development there are bound to be financial reverses. In newly opened districts all can not succeed; some are bound to fail. How could the citizens of Kansas have helped to build so many miles of railroad? How could they have built so many churches? How could they have built so many school houses and colleges? How could they have built so many comfortable homes and substantial barns? How could they have built up so many healthy and growing cities? And how could they have so rapidly developed our State and placed it among the first in the Union, in all that it takes to make a good, substantial, and great State, without the liberal use of money?

But where is the location of this debt of which we hear so much? At the time the statistics were gathered 34 per cent of it was on real estate in the western half of the State, which contains but 24.12 per cent of our population, and where settlements have been made but a few years, and most of them on public lands, a part of the State that to-day contains over 700,000 acres of untaken Government land, to say nothing of the large tract of untaken railroad land.

Then 17.49 per cent of all the debt of 1890 existed in the three counties of Sedgwick, Shawnee, and Wyandotte. These counties have 10.32 per cent of the State's population. Sedgwick County, containing the city of Wichita, has the largest indebtedness of any county in the State; Wyandotte County, containing Kansas City, Kans., is second; and Shawnee County, containing the city of Topeka, stands third; yet, any man who reads could explain this to you. We had a boom in 1887; it has passed away, and we are not anxious for another; but to-day these three cities are having a substantial growth and money invested in them is perfectly safe.

These cities have done much to build up the State; their citizens are enterprising, capable, and honest business men who are willing to risk their time, experience, and fortune in building up the west, and they have built up in these three cities 672 manufacturing establishments (as follows: Topeka, 333; Kansas City, Kans., 232, and Wichita, 107) that employ 11,954 hands, and to whom are paid annually nearly $7,000,000 in wages. These citizens, as well as those upon Kansas farms, believe that the American system of protection is better for them, the State, and the Nation than any free-trade policy that may be adopted. As in every debate for the last few years Kansas has been pointed to as the greatest debt-ridden State in the Union, and the claim has been made that the Eastern citizens were the only people who were free from debt, and without reflection upon any other State I ask the people to look at their debt record for a minute and give Kansas a much-needed rest.

There is Massachusetts, with all her years of development, with a real-estate mortgage per capita indebtedness of $144; Minnesota, with $152; New Jersey, $161; Kansas, $170; California, $200; Colorado, $206; the District of Columbia, where this great Government of ours pays out its millions every month and where members of Congress help to increase the volume of circulation on the 3d day of each month during the session, has $223; and the great and only State of New York, where it is supposed all the financial wizards of this Union live, has a real-estate mortgage per capita indebtedness of $268; yet the citizens of these States are honest; they are not repudiators; they will pay as large a per cent of their indebtedness as the citizens of any other State. Yes! as the citizens of any other Nation.

All that the citizens of Kansas ask is a fair show. They raise the products of the farm to sell, and do not believe the duty on them should be fixed so that nearly $200,000,000 worth of farm products can be imported annually and the farmers robbed of their market; they do not believe that the farm products should be placed on the free list under the head of raw material or any other pretense; they believe that the American producer should be allowed to furnish the American market with such articles as are produced in this country.

In this speech I have given you much of the true condition of the young, growing, and great State of Kansas; because her credit has been assaulted by those who should have defended it; her citizens have been placed before the world as a lot of borrowers who do not intend to pay their debts, when in truth and in fact we can boast of as large a per cent of honest people as any other State in the Union.

The men who say we can not, or will not, pay our debts, wilfully misrepresents the State of Kansas; she has been placed at the bottom of the ladder of States by those who should have lifted her to the top.

Men whose every interest demand that they should tell the truth about Kansas have wilfully, deliberately, and falsely represented her as a drone among States, and I challenge them to name a manufacturing State that has made a better showing in the last ten years than the State of Kansas; I challenge them to take the products of any agricultural State in this Union for any number of years, and place them side by side with the products of Kansas, and let the people render their verdict.

Now, Mr. Chairman, are you surprised at the citizens of Kansas being opposed to this measure when they must look to other States for a market? The merchants must have customers before they are justified in buying the products of the farm. The laboring men must have employment by which they can earn the "mighty dollar" before they can patronize the stores, and the various industries of this country must be so protected as to enable them to pay American wages and compete with industries of low-wage countries.

The citizens of no State who rely upon the citizens of another State to purchase their products can support a measure that will rob them of the means with which to buy the products upon the sale of which their prosperity depends.

This bill invades the prosperity of all classes in this country, and it seizes with a greedy hand every chance of comfort within the reach of the American citizen and presents it to the foreign competitors.

Should such an unwise measure be adopted the suffering of the people will be such as has not been experienced in years.

The citizens of Kansas are not opposed to this measure simply because it strikes a blow at the farming industry, but for a further reason that it is against the laboring men and the various industries of this country.

The farmers believe that the manufacturing and other industries should be so protected as to afford them a chance to live and pay living wages to the American laboring men.

When you rob the laboring men of their employment, you rob the farmers of their customers.

Then, again, the farmers believe in an American policy; a policy that will build up the various industries of this country, and not one that will destroy them and bring want, distress, and misery among the people.

There is no dodging the fact that any policy, no matter by what name it is known, that closes the factories of this country; that bankrupts the railroads; that destroys our great industries; that robs the laborer of employment and fills the country with a vast army of unemployed who know not where to look for bread; that robs the farmer of his market; that robs the people of confidence; that disturbs business and fills the people with want, misery and despair, is un-American and unpatriotic.

During the extra session gentlemen were quite free to ask "If England should legislate for us upon the silver question." They were surprised, and so was I, that the wishes of England were always to be consulted.

Why do these same gentlemen now advocate this measure, every line of which is more in the interest of the citizens of England than in the interest of the citizens of the United States? A measure that receives many times the praise from the English that it does from the American press.

Why do you support a measure the passage of which will make all classes in England rejoice and all classes in America weep?

I read in the Democratic platform that the American system of protection is unconstitutional, and quite a number of gentlemen who have taken part in this debate have made the same charge.

Now, I have no desire to support a measure that is unconstitutional, and so have examined the Constitution of the United States and find the following section:

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 8. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Surely the American system of protection comes clearly within the provisions of this section.

But in looking over constitutions I found one of what was known as the Confederate States, one section of which is as follows:

ARTICLE I.

SEC 8. The Congress shall have power (1) to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, for revenue necessary to pay the debt, provide for the common defense, and carry on the government of the Confederate States; but no bounties shall be granted from the treasury; nor shall any duties or taxes on importations from foreign nations be laid to promote or foster any branch of industry; and all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform through the Confederate States.

As the American system of protection is not in violation of the Constitution of the United States, but as it might be in violation of the dead constitution of the Confederate States, I am led to the conclusion that the gentlemen who wrote the Democratic platform at Chicago had the wrong constitution before them, and that the gentlemen who have been saying so much about the unconstitutionality of the system of protection must have gotten the constitutions mixed.

I am sorry the gentlemen upon the other side having charge of this bill have been so unfortunate in the selection of its title. I fear it was selected to grossly deceive a confiding constituency.

They say it is "A bill to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes."

It should have been entitled "A bill to promote home idleness and home poverty as among the people of the United States, and to deprive the people of the power to provide a comfortable maintenance for themselves, or to contribute to the wealth, the greatness, and the defensive power of this nation."

For, Mr. Chairman, this bill is formulated and presented to this legislative body for enactment for the avowed purpose of taking employment away from American producers and giving it to the producers of foreign countries; thus forcing American labor into a condition of idleness and abjectness, the contemplation of which is most deplorable. And its enactment would be to take the market from American farmers, rob American laborers of employment, and assassinate American industries, and would be unfair, unjust, and cruel to American citizens. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. BROOKSHIRE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MAHON, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness in his family.

And then, on motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WARNER: A bill (H. R. 5122) to amend section 3449 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, prescribing penalties for removing any liquors or wines under other than trade names—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DINSMORE: A bill (H. R. 5123) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the Kansas and Arkansas Valley Railway to construct and operate additional lines of railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes,'" approved February 24, 1891—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CURTIS of New York (by request): A bill (H. R. 5158) to define and to provide for the execution of the provisions of sections 1390, 1476, and 1480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BLACK of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 5159) to reduce the expenses of collecting customs revenue—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HOUK of Tennessee: A resolution requesting report from the Postmaster-General as to why he fails to obey a certain order of the Court of Claims—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota: A resolution for the restoration of the United States flag on the United States Capitol building at Washington—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MUTCHLER: A resolution for the payment of Henry G. Clement for his services rendered as clerk to the late Charles O'Neill, deceased—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. WISE: A resolution to pay the widow of James R. Fisher, late assistant librarian of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to one year's salary—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. CRISP (by request): A memorial from the Legislature of Idaho, praying that certain waters in that State be drained—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BAILEY: A resolution requesting the Secretary of State to communicate to the House certain information regarding appointments made since March 4, 1893—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALDWIN: A bill (H. R. 5124) for the relief of Nelson Dalbeck—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CATCHINGS: A bill (H. R. 5125) for the relief of the estate of B. S. Hallum, Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5126) for the relief of Solomon Geisenberg, Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5127) for the relief of Levi M. Loewenberg, administrator of S. R. and C. W. Strong, deceased, late of Warren County, Miss., as found due by the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5128) for the relief of Rebecca L. Bolling, of Warren County, Miss., as found due by the Court of Claims under the act March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5129) for the relief of Allie V. Askew, administratrix of W. W. Neeley, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5130) for the relief of W. S. Lum, executor of Ann Lum, deceased, late of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5131) for the relief of Rebecca L. Bolling, administratrix of Emily R. Martin, deceased, late of Vicksburg, Miss., as found due by the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5132) for the relief of Patrick Sheehan, of Warren County, Miss., as found due by the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CRISP (by request): A bill (H. R. 5133) for the relief of D. W. Massee—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GEISSENHAINER: A bill (H. R. 5134) to extend the patent granted to William Farr Goodwin for improvement in railway tracks and trucks—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HAINER of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 5135) to pay James L. Willett arrears of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOUK of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 5136) for the relief of William W. Carson—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5137) for the relief of Mary Jane Hubbard, of Jefferson County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5138) to pay members of certain military organizations—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5139) granting a pension to Nancy Reynolds, widow of Joseph Reynolds, of Huntsville, Tenn.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5140) for the relief of A. D. Rutherford—to the Committee on Military Affairs

By Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 5141) for the relief of James Madison Martin—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5142) to increase the pension of H. S. Mayhall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5143) for the relief of Mary A. Holland—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5144) for the relief of James M. Clowers—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5145) for the relief of Simeon H. King's executrix—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5146) for the relief of Larkin H. Penny—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5147) for the relief of the heirs of H. Scott—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McDANNOLD: A bill (H. R. 5148) appropriating $50,000 for improvement and maintenance of Quincy Bay, Illinois—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. McDEARMON: A bill (H. R. 5149) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause to be placed on the volunteer roll of Company I, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry, of the late war, the name of George W. Gill, with rank of private, etc.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STONE of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 5150) for the relief of holders of certain District of Columbia tax-sale certificates, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. TAWNEY: A bill (H. R. 5151) for the relief of Thomas J. Kelly—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WISE: A bill (H. R. 5152) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen H. Smith, of King William County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 5153) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Strother, of Louisiana—to the Committee on War Claims.

By WHEELER of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 5154) to pension John Morris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 5155) to place Henry Zell on the retired list of the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 5156) for the relief of Eli G. Fleming, late captain of Company F, Fifth Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRANCH: A bill (H. R. 5157) for the relief of Mary E. Hughes, heir of D. L. Pritchard, deceased, late of Camden County, N. C.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BOATNER: A bill (H. R. 5160) to refer the title of the heirs of Don Juan Filhiol to certain lands in Arkansas to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOOKER of New York: A bill (H. R. 5161) granting a pension to Ann Adams, dependent mother of Thomas Adams, deceased, late of Company K, One hundred and twelfth New York Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 5162) granting pension to Mathilda S. Lawler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 5163) for the relief of Mary H. McReynolds and others—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5164) for the relief of D. L. Carmicheal—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5165) granting an honorable discharge to Jesse Roberts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELTZHOOVER: Protest of lead miners of Missouri and other States, against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of Wells Branch, W. Va., against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest by lithographers of New York City and Brooklyn, against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of the furnace owners of Southwest Virginia, W. Va., against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of Workingmen's Protective Union, against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of citizens of Big Stone Gap, Va., against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BURROWS: Protest of 1,100 citizens of Western Texas, against the placing of wool on the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COBB of Missouri: Protest of 500 miners of lead ores in Missouri and other Western States, against the provisions in the tariff bill which prescribes 15 per cent ad valorem on lead ores and admits duty free all ores in which the value in silver is greater than that of lead—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CRISP (by request): Petition of J. B. and G. R. King, praying that the present duty on calcined plaster be retained—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DINSMORE (by request): Petition of George Glenn, of Madison County, Ark., for his relief—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of James Fanning, for his relief—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DRAPER: Protest of employés of Ray's Woolen Mills, of Franklin, Mass., against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DURBOROW: Protest of employés of Kuh, Narlean & Fischer Company, of Chicago, Ill., against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of the employers of labor, workingmen, and others, of Chicago, Ill., against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ELLIS of Oregon: Petition of Rawlins Post, No. 31, Grand Army of the Republic, asking that all suspended pensions be speedily adjusted, and protesting against the charge that wholesale frauds exist in increasing pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER: Letter from Governor Nelson, of Minnesota, touching balance of direct tax to State of Minnesota, treated as a memorial, with accompanying letter from First Comptroller of the Treasury—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. FYAN: Petition of 700 persons in St. Francois County, Mo., for modification of duties on lead under the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GEISSENHAINER: Petition of William Farr Goodwin, for extension of patent for an improvement in railway tracks and trucks—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. GILLET of New York: Protest of 118 workingmen, constituting the entire force employed in the cut-glass works of I. Hoase & Co., Corning, N. Y., against a reduction of tariff on cut glass—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HARMER: Memorial of Winter Ball Manufacturing Company, William Harvey & Co., Warwick, Newberry & Co., manufacturers of umbrellas, parasols, and walking canes, protesting against the provisions in the Wilson tariff bill which would destroy their industries—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HARTMAN: Petition relative to the retirement of enlisted men of the United States Army and Marine Corps—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HARE: Remonstrance of 53 citizens of Bucyrus, Ohio, against the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HAYES: Petition of dealers in cigars and others, of Muscatine County, Iowa, asking for the duty of 35 cents on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of citizens of Scott County, Iowa, for tariff on barley—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Frank Doubrawa, sr., and others, of Maquoketa, Iowa, asking for duty of 35 cents on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of C. J. H. Witt and others, of Davenport, Iowa, asking a duty of 35 cents on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Herman Jacker and others, of Davenport, Iowa, asking a duty of 35 cents on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Charles Mueller, of Davenport, Iowa, for retention of duty on lumber—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Iowa soldiers for service-pension law—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Ben Van Heinberg for increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania: Resolutions of the Board of Trade of Reading, Pa., protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa: Paper from Bart E. Linehan, esq., Dubuque, Iowa, praying for the reduction of postage to 1 cent an ounce—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, paper from Austin McNally, esq., Cascade, Iowa, praying for the reduction of postage to 1 cent an ounce—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolution by Dubuque Trades and Labor Congress, Dubuque, Iowa, favoring Government ownership and control of telegraphs—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HOPKINS of Pennsylvania: Petition of the Central Labor Union of Williamsport, Pa., against erecting the Government Printing Office by contract—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HOUK of Tennessee: Petition of certain dealers of Knoxville, Tenn., for a uniform rate of 35 cents on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition to refer claim of administrator of estate of Blackmore H. Blackenship, deceased, to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HULL: Petition of L. R. Glenn and 80 others, citizens of Polk, Iowa, asking the restoration of suspended pensions and that no further suspensions be permitted until after proof of fraud—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of L. R. Glenn and 80 others, citizens of Polk, Iowa, asking the enactment of an equitable service-pension law—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana: Remonstrance of 22 citizens of Henry County, Ind., wool-growers, against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of 70 citizens of Rushville, Rush County, Ind., against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. JOSEPH: Petition of citizens of New Mexico, praying Congress to pass bill to establish a bureau of public health within the Treasury Department of the United States—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LYNCH: Remonstrance of C. C. Davidson and 100 others, of Florence County, Wis., against putting iron ore on the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MAHON: Protest of the farmers, growers of cigar leaf tobacco, their employés, and others interested in the cultivation of that product, of Snyder, Pa., against the reduction of duty on foreign wrappers—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MARTIN: Affidavits of Timothy Curby, Francis Stephens, Isaac Pengo, and Barberry Collins, and other papers to accompany House bill 5117, to correct the military record of Frank G. Gardner—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of William Beheimer and 104 other citizens of Grant County, Ind., to accompany House bill 5118, granting increase of pension to Louis McCaskey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McALEER: Petition of Love & Co. and others, asking for a uniform rate of duty of 35 cents on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MEIKLEJOHN: Resolutions adopted at a public meeting of citizens at Big Stone Gap, Va., protesting against the provisions of the Wilson bill, which proposes to place iron ore, coal, and lumber upon the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial and resolution of the lithographers of New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City, praying for a specific duty on lithographic goods, instead of the existing or proposed ad valorem duty—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MERCER: Fifteen petitions for a reduction of letter postage to 1 cent an ounce—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of Ezra Dimen and others, overseers and operatives in the Kotch Spinning Corporation Mills, New Bedford; of William Nixon and others, overseers and operatives in City Mills; of James F. Whalen and others, overseers and operatives in Sanford Spinning Co. Mill; of John J. Heron and others, overseers and operatives in the City Manufacturing Mills, New Bedford; and of Charles A. Serpa and others, overseers and operatives in mills in New Bedford, all of Massachusetts, against the passage of the proposed Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Thomas F. O'Connell and others, overseers and operatives in the Davol Mills, Fall River; of George Allen and others, overseers and operatives in the Narragansett Mills, Fall River; and protest of employers of labor, workingmen, and other citizens of Wareham, Mass., against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the New Bedford (Mass.) Cotton Mule Spinners' Association, against the reduction of duties on cotton yarns and fabrics and the substitution of ad valorem for specie duties—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Cotton Yarn Spinners of America, protesting against the cotton-yarn schedule as proposed by the Ways and Means Committee in the measure known as the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Petition of Edward S. O'Conner and other employés of Utica (N. Y.) post-office, asking for passage of House bill 56—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SNODGRASS: Petition of Jacob Mann, for reference of House bill 1506 to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SPERRY: Petitions of the farmers, growers of cigar leaf tobacco, their employés and others interested in the cultivation of that product in Newington, Broad Brook, Windsor Locks, Suffield, Granby, Enfield, and East Windsor, all in Hartford County, Conn., and also of those of Ellington, Tolland County, Conn., all protesting against the proposed reduction of duty on foreign wrappers to $1 per pound for unstemmed and $1.25 for stemmed—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEPHENSON: A memorial from 53 employers, workmen, and citizens of Forsyth, Mich., protesting against placing iron ore on the free list, and affirming that such action would entail great hardships upon the people of that section—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEPHENS: Petition of Michael Keating and 26 other employés of Henry Klous, of Lawrence, Mass., protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. THOMAS: Petition of R. Stafhea & Co., I. P. Tichenor & Co., A. Grossenbusch & Co., and 79 others, commission merchants and wholesale merchants of Milwaukee, Wis., asking for the improvement of Saugatuck Harbor, Michigan Bay—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WALKER: Petition of 34 employés of Ramshorn Woolen Mills, Millbury, Mass., protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of 125 employés of Thayer Woolen Company, North Oxford, Mass., protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WANGER: Protest of Ellsworth McDonnell, W. L. Bell, and 55 other employés of Lewis Jones, manufacturer of hosiery, etc., at Bristol, Pa., against any legislation adverse to to the policy of tariff protection to American industries and American workingmen—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama: Petition of Mary H. McReynolds and others, of Colbert County, Ala., praying that the Committee on War Claims refer her claim, together with all papers submitted, to the Court of Claims, under act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of D. L. Carmichael, of Franklin County, Ala., praying that the Committee on War Claims refer his claim, together with all papers and proofs submitted, to the Court of Claims, under the act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WRIGHT of Massachusetts: Remonstrance of Isaac E. Wittan and 86 other employés of the S. N. & C. Russell Manufacturing Company, of Pittsfield, Mass., against the passage of the so-called Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, remonstrance of George W. Gibson and 27 others, farmers and tobacco-growers, of Tyringham, Mass., against the passage of the so-called Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, remonstrance of Samuel Chapman and 4 others, of West Deerfield, Mass., against the passage of the so-called Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York: Protest of 150 business men of Charlotte, N. Y., against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 11, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORT OF NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the National Academy of Sciences for the year 1893; which, on motion of Mr. MANDERSON, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of 9 soldiers of the late war, citizens of Dawn, Ohio, praying for an investigation of the Pension Bureau; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Federal Labor Union, No. 5335, of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the governmental control of the telegraph service; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented memorials of 700 citizens of Wilmington; of 82 citizens of Clay Township; of 170 citizens of Cleveland; of 57 citizens of Richland Township; of 17 citizens of Cincinnati, and of 50 citizens of Crooksville, all in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented the memorial of S. W. McConnell and 88 other citizens of Gogebic County, Mich., and the petition of H. E. Hosking and 103 other citizens of Forsyth, Mich., remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial of the St. Botolph Club, of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the clause in the Wilson tariff bill proposing to place paintings and statuary on the free list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of W. B. Allen and other citizens of Attleboro, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. QUAY presented memorials of manufacturers of green and flint glass bottles of Everett; of sundry citizens of Elk Creek; of Local Assembly, No. 22, American Flint Glass Workers, of Philadelphia; of the Philadelphia Board of Trade; of sundry wage-earners of Allentown; of cigar-manufacturers of Wells Township, all in the State of Pennsylvania, and of lead miners of Missouri, Idaho, Indiana, Illinois, Nevada, New Mexico, South Dakota, Utah, Indiana, Kansas, Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin, and Colorado, remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Foundrymen's Association of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against a further agitation of the tariff question; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of cigar manufacturers of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the imposition of a uniform duty of 35 per cent on unstemmed leaf tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of cigar manufacturers of Ephrata, Pa., remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on cigars; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, praying that an appropriation be made for the purchase of ground adjoining the post-office at Philadelphia, Pa., for increased postal facilities; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOAR presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Boston (Mass.) Society of Water Color Painters, held January 6, 1894, unanimously indorsing the free-art clause of the Wilson tariff bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McMILLAN presented the petition of Rudolph Kunath and other cigar manufacturers of Lapeer, Mich., praying for the imposition of a uniform duty of 35 per cent on unstemmed leaf tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Winamac, Ind., praying that Robert A. Stuart, late of Companies B and C, First Regiment Delaware Cavalry Volunteers, be granted a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a memorial of prominent citizens of Hastings, Nebr., remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 8) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cause the settlement of the accounts of Special Agents Moore and Woodson, under the treaty of 1854, with the Delaware Indians, etc., reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 299) to extend the time for the construction of the railway of the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company, to report it favorably, and to submit a written report thereon. It is important that this bill should pass at an early date, but I do not ask consideration for it this morning. I ask that it may be put on the Calendar and the report printed, and I shall ask the Senate to consider it on Monday morning next. It is very essential that the bill should be considered early.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 985) to extend the time for the construction of the railway of the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company and to confer additional powers upon said company, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 507) providing for the collection of fees for furnishing certificates of title to vessels;

A bill (S. 587) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea," approved August 2, 1882;

A bill (S. 511) providing for the establishment and enforcement of rules and regulations for the use and navigation of the United States canals and similar works of navigation, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 495) to establish a marine board for the advancement of the interest of the merchant marine;

A bill (S. 509) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 4178, Revised Statutes, in relation to the marking of vessels' names at bow and stern, and also to provide for marking the draft," approved February 21, 1891;

A bill (H. R. 156) for the establishment of a light and fog signal station near Butler Flats, New Bedford, Mass.;

A bill (S. 588) to repeal section 4145 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to amend sections 4146, 4320, also section 1 of the act amending section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, approved March 3, 1883, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 1306) to establish a port of delivery at Bonners Ferry, Idaho.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 497) to amend "An act to amend section 4400 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning the regulation of steam vessels," approved August 7, 1882; and also to amend section 4414, Title LII, of the Revised Statutes, "Regulation of steam vessels," to submit a written report thereon. The committee have also instructed me to present an amendment to the bill, which I shall do and file with the bill within a day or two.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. ROACH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 175) granting a right of way to the Jamestown and Northern Railway through the Devil's Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of North Dakota, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1060) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Alsea and other bands of Indians located upon the Siletz Reservation in the State of Oregon, and to make appropriation for carrying the same into effect, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 897) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Depredations; which was agreed to.

Mr. CAFFERY, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 694) for the relief of Fanny B. Randolph and Dora L. Stark, for stores and supplies taken by the military forces of the United States for their use during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, as found by the Court of Claims, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 1412), for the relief of Fanny B. Randolph and Dora L. Stark; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1209) to regulate enlistments in the Army of the United States, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1363) for the relief of Francis Scala, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1312) for the relief of the heirs of Charles B. Smith, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

INSPECTOR OF BOILER PLATES.

Mr. QUAY. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1920) to amend section 4430, Title LII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to report it favorably, without amendment. As it is a departmental bill and was passed unanimously by the other House several months ago, I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4430 of the Revised Statutes of the United State be amended by adding thereto a paragraph, as follows:

"And the Supervising Inspector-General may, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, detail assistant inspectors from any local inspection district where assistant inspectors are employed, to inspect iron or steel boiler plates at the mills where the same are manufactured; and if the plates are found in accordance with the rules of the supervising inspectors, the assistant inspector shall stamp the same with the initials of his name, followed by the letters and words, 'U. S. Assistant Inspector;' and material so stamped shall be accepted by the local inspectors in the districts where such material is to be manufactured into marine boilers as being in full compliance with the requirements of this section regarding the inspection of boiler plates; it being further provided that any person who affixes any false, forged, fraudulent, spurious, or counterfeit of the stamp herein authorized to be put on by an assistant inspector, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and shall be fined not less than $1,000, nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than two years nor more than five years."

Mr. QUAY. The object of the proposed amendment of the law is very succinctly stated in the report of the Supervising Inspector-General in a paragraph which I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

The object of this amendment is to provide for testing plate at the mills where manufactured instead of at the boiler works, and thus save the expense frequently incurred of returning plate that has been rejected to the mill, besides saving valuable time to the boiler manufacturers, whose workmen in many cases are kept idle whilst waiting for new plates to take the place of rejected ones.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 4430, title 52, of the Revised Statutes of the United States relative to the inspection of iron or steel boiler plates."

DES MOINES RAPIDS POWER COMPANY.

Mr. CULLOM. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1126) granting to the Des Moines Rapids Power Company the right to erect, construct, operate, and maintain a wing dam, canal, and power station in the Mississippi River in Hancock County, Ill., to report it with amendments, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 6, after the word "canal," to strike out "within 500 feet of the shore line of" and insert "along."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after the word "River," in line 17, to insert:

Provided, That the constructions hereby authorized do not in any way interfere with the existing low-water channel over the Des Moines Rapids, or with any interests of navigation: And provided further, That until the plans and locations of the work herein authorized, so far as they affect the interests of navigation, have been approved by the Secretary of War, the canal shall not be commenced or built.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add after section 1 the following additional section:

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the works herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Now, let the whole bill be read as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read as amended.

The Secretary read the bill as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the Des Moines Rapids Power Company, a corporation created and organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, to erect, construct, operate, and maintain a canal along the east bank of the Mississippi River, between Nauvoo and Hamilton, in Hancock County, in the State of Illinois, to erect, construct, operate, and maintain a power station thereon, and to project, erect, construct, and operate, and maintain a wing dam 500 feet into the river from the head of said canal, and to make such other improvements as may be necessary within said limit for the development of water power and the generation, use, and transmission therefrom of electric energy and power at, in, and upon the Des Moines Rapids of the Mississippi River: Provided, That the constructions hereby authorized do not in any way interfere with the existing low-water channel over the Des Moines Rapids, or with any interests of navigation: And provided further, That until the plans and locations of the works herein authorized, so far as they affect the interests of navigation, have been approved by the Secretary of War, the canal shall not be commenced or built.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the works herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date hereof.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to state for the information of the Senate that the bill was referred to the Secretary of War and by him referred to the local engineer, Maj. Mackenzie. He reported upon it, and then the Chief of Engineers, Gen. Casey, reported to the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War reported on it. I have all the letters here indorsing the bill as amended.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. If this is a good thing to do, what is the necessity to give the parties two years' time in which to commence the work? Is not that an unusually long time?

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose they are ready to commence work now, but generally in such cases we give a little time for the parties to get the machinery to the place and to get ready.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The bill gives them four years?

Mr. CULLOM. No; four years for the completion.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Two years in which to commence the work?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; and four years in which to complete it.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the letter of Maj. Mackenzie be read, that we may learn what he thinks about it.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well. The Senator may have all the letters read if he wishes.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have them all printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CULLOM. I will put them in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter of Maj. Mackenzie will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Rock Island, Ill., November 7, 1893.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of Senate bill 1126, Fifty-third Congress, first session, granting to the Des Moines Rapids Power Company the right to "erect, construct, operate, and maintain a wing dam, canal, and power station in the Mississippi River, in Hancock County, Ill." This bill is referred to me for report by indorsement, dated Office Chief of Engineers, United States Army, November 3, 1893. (File number 4323-1893.)

The bill authorizes the construction of a canal within 500 feet of the shore line of the east bank of the Mississippi River, between Nauvoo and Hamilton, Ill., with power station, wing dam, etc. The legend attached to the map accompanying the papers provides for constructing outside embankment nearly parallel to high-water shore line, and for a width of canal of from 300 to 450 feet.

Previous to the construction of the Des Moines Rapids Canal steamboats used a low-water channel through the rock reef forming the Des Moines Rapids. Such channel is not much used at present time, boats preferring the canal at low or ordinary stages. But in case of any accident to the canal, an urgent necessity for the use of such channel might arise. Any works constructed on the east side of the river, as proposed, should not, therefore, interfere in any way with such channel; or, if they do so interfere, a new and equally good channel should be given elsewhere before the existing channel is closed.

If the proposed outer embankment is built parallel to the high-water shore line, and not to exceed 400 feet from it, it is thought there will be no such interference at any point, while if built 500 feet from shore line, as proposed by act, there might be such interference at one or two points. There are points at which the width could be greatly increased without any interference with channel.

To protect the interests of navigation, I would respectfully suggest the following modifications in the bill as proposed:

Section 1, line 6, omit the word "within."

Section 1, line 7, omit the words "five hundred feet of the shore line of," and substitute the word "along."

Section 1, line 17, add the words: "Provided the constructions hereby authorized do not in any way interfere with the existing low-water channel over the Des Moines Rapids, or with any interests of navigation: And provided further, That until the plans and locations of the works herein authorized, so far as they affect the interests of navigation, have been approved by the Secretary of War, the canal shall not be built."

It is suggested that a time limit, such as has been inserted in modern bridge acts, would be proper in connection with the proposed authority, and such modification is recommended, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the works herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within three years from the date hereof."

Then follow with section 3:

"SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. MACKENZIE,
Major, Corps of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. THOMAS L. CASEY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CULLOM. I will insert in the RECORD the letters of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers. I will state that the Secretary of War suggested five years as the limit of time, but the committee put it at four.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letters will be inserted in the RECORD.

The letters are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., December 4, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to return Senate bill 1126, Fifty-third Congress, first session, "Granting to the Des Moines Rapids Power Company the right to erect, construct, operate, and maintain a wing dam, canal, and power station in the Mississippi River, in Hancock County, Ill.," which was referred to this Department on November 2, 1893, and to invite your attention to the accompanying letter from the Chief of Engineers dated the 1st instant, and to the copy of the report on the bill from Maj. A. Mackenzie, dated November 7, whose views are concurred in by the Chief of Engineers.

The bill has accordingly been amended by the Chief of Engineers, who remarks that as amended no objection, so far as the interests of navigation are concerned, are known to his office to its passage. The amendments meet with the approval of the Department, except the one proposed in section 2, which provides that the act "shall be null and void if actual construction of the works herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within three years from the date hereof." This time seems rather short. If the work is commenced within three years and completed within five years, it will be soon enough.

The petition and tracing which accompanied your communication are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN of the Committee on Commerce,
United States Senate.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY.
Washington, D. C., December 1, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith, with its inclosed petition and drawing, the letter of the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, dated November 2, 1893, inclosing, for views of the War Department thereon, a copy of S. 1126, Fifty-third Congress, first session, "A bill granting to the Des Moines Rapids Power Company the right to erect, construct, operate, and maintain a wing dam, canal, and power station in the Mississippi River in Hancock County, Ill.," with the following report:

A copy of a report upon the bill, dated November 7, 1893, by Maj. A. Mackenzie, Corps of Engineers, the local engineer officer, is also transmitted herewith, and attention is invited to his views, which are concurred in by this office.

It is recommended that the bill be amended as follows:

Section 1, lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "within five hundred feet of the shore line of," and substitute therefor the word "along."

At the end of section 1 add, "Provided, That the constructions hereby authorized do not in any way interfere with the existing low-water channel over the Des Moines Rapids, or with any interests of navigation: And provided further, That until the plans and locations of the works herein authorized, so far as they affect the interests of navigation, have been approved by the Secretary of War, the canal shall not be commenced or built."

Change the existing section 2 to section 3, and insert a new section 2, as follows: "Sec. 2. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the works herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within three years from the date hereof."

A copy of the bill with these amendments indicated thereon is inclosed, and as so amended no objection, so far as the interests of navigation are concerned, is known to this office to its passage by Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. D S. LAMONT, Secretary of War.

Mr. BATE. Will the Senator in charge of the bill state what committee it was before?

Mr. CULLOM. The Committee on Commerce had charge of the bill.

Mr. BATE. What is the width of the Mississippi River where it is proposed to extend the dam 500 feet?

Mr. CULLOM. It is a mile wide, I presume, at that point. I do not remember exactly.

Mr. BATE. Are there any other dams like it above or below?

Mr. CULLOM. No, sir; not that I know of.

Mr. BATE. Is this to be the only dam of the kind in the Mississippi River?

Mr. CULLOM. It is to be the only one in that section. I do not know whether there is another anywhere else on the river or not.

Mr. ALLISON. This bill is a new matter to me, but if it does not interfere with the existing canal on the west side of the river——

Mr. CULLOM. It does not.

Mr. ALLISON. A canal which the Government has constructed at a very heavy cost and which it is now maintaining, I do not object to it. But it is a very delicate matter, it seems to me, to be granting to a private corporation an important franchise like this, which may at some time interfere with the water of the canal on the west side.

Mr. CULLOM. It can not possibly do so, because the bill is guarded so that if the dam should in any way interfere with navigation through the canal or any other channel there the act would be regarded as null and void. It is subject to repeal.

Mr. ALLISON. I know; but after a large expenditure has been made for the purposes indicated it is not an easy thing to deal with a matter of this character. However, I shall not object to the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are certain rules of the Senate, business rules, founded upon common sense. They are wise regulations drawn from experience. This important and interesting bill comes here with no written report, with riders and amendments pasted on, and immediate consideration is asked for it. I think there should have been a written report, including in it the letter from the Chief of Engineers, and that the bill and report should have been printed. I shall make no objection to the consideration of the bill at any other time, but if it is still open to objection I object to-day.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not object to this measure. It is not an uncommon thing for the Committee on Commerce to ask for the consideration of such bills when they are reported. The report of the Chief of Engineers is here; the local engineer's report is here, and the letter of the Secretary of War is here. Everything is here, and the bill has been amended exactly according to the requirements of the Chief of Engineers and the local engineer and the Secretary of War. It is even a little more stringent in its provisions than the Secretary of War required.

Mr. HAWLEY. All that matter is very good, and it might have appeared quite properly in a report. Just as strong an argument can be made for nine-tenths of the good bills that come here; but it is the usage and the rule that there shall be a report, and that the bill as proposed to be amended shall be printed. I insist on my objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the further consideration of the bill, and it will be placed on the Calendar.

ARANSAS PASS HARBOR COMPANY.

Mr. COKE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1378) to amend an act of Congress approved May 12, 1890, granting to the Aransas Pass Harbor Company the right to improve the Aransas Pass, to report it favorably. I am instructed by the committee to ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Aransas Pass Harbor Company, which is engaged in the improvement of the Aransas Pass under the provisions contained in act of Congress entitled "An act for the improvement of Aransas Pass," approved May 12, 1890, is hereby relieved from the conditions of said act which require the construction of said work to be commenced within one year from the date of its approval, and to be diligently prosecuted by the expenditure of at least $300,000 per annum thereafter, and to secure a navigable depth over the outer bar of 15 feet of water within three years after the date of approval of said act, and of 20 feet within five years from said date; and the said company is hereby authorized to continue and complete its work of improvement as set forth in said act: Provided, That work shall be resumed by the said Aransas Pass Harbor Company within six months from the date of approval of this act, and shall be diligently prosecuted to completion; and said company shall secure a navigable depth over the outer bar of at least 20 feet of water within two years from the date of approval of this act. And in the event of said company failing to resume said work within the said six months, or failing to diligently prosecute the same, or to secure a navigable depth of 20 feet of water over the outer bar within the time required by this act, then Congress may revoke the privileges herein granted in relation to said improvement.

SEC. 2. That the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COKE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1139) to amend an act of Congress approved May 12, 1890, granting to the Aransas Pass Harbor Company the right to improve Aransas Pass, to report it with a recommendation that it be postponed indefinitely.

The report was agreed to.

STEAMER EL CALLAO.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 432) to provide an American register for the steamer El Callao, to report it favorably, and to submit a written report thereon.

As the bill provides for an American register for a foreign-built vessel, as the spirit of the law has been very much more than complied with, and as the company is in very great need of the vessel for its coastwise line, I ask the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MILLS. I think that bill had better lie over for one day. I should like to look at it.

Mr. FRYE. There is a written report accompanying the bill and there has been expended in American shipyards on that vessel as much as the appraised value of the vessel to-day. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. MILLS. One day will not be much, and we shall then have an opportunity to look at the bill. I will ask the Senator if the bill is reported unanimously by the committee?

Mr. FRYE. The bill is unanimously reported.

Mr. MILLS. Then I withdraw my objection.

Mr. PERKINS. I call for the reading of the report which accompanies the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator will not delay the passage of the bill for that. There was expended in American shipyards on this wrecked vessel more money than the vessel is actually worth.

Mr. PERKINS. After that statement, I withdraw the request for the reading of the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS BŒUF RIVER, LOUISIANA.

Mr. WHITE of Louisiana. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4414) to amend an act approved September 4, 1890, authorizing the New Orleans, Natchez and Fort Scott Railroad Company to construct two bridges across Bœuf River, in Louisiana, to report it favorably. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. Let the bill be read.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill be read at length for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to object to this bill, and I presume it is now too late to do so, but I wish simply to say that I do not believe in committees reporting their bills here and passing them immediately, unless in case of emergency. If there are any more bills of this kind, I shall feel at liberty to object to their consideration after this bill is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year 1892.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 93) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owners of cattle and horses transporting them into Mexico to reimport same into the United States at any time within twelve months from date of the passage of this resolution, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon introduced a bill (S. 1413) granting a pension to Robert Markwood, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am requested by a leading member of the bar of the District of Columbia to introduce a bill, which I ask may be read the first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 1414) to amend section 4 of the act entitled "An act to define the jurisdiction of the police court of the District of Columbia" was read twice by its title.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not sure if the bill should not go to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Does the Senator desire it to go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. A similar bill, or practically the same bill, has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary in the House of Representatives, and it was suggested by the member of the bar who handed me the bill that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I am not particular as to its reference.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not object to the Senator's request that the bill go to the Judiciary Committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary in the absence of objection.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 1415) to restore to the pension roll Mary B. Christopher, and grant her a pension as widow of James Bringhurst, late a surgeon of the Twenty-eighth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1416) granting a pension to John W. Starr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committeee on Pensions.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 1417) for removing the charge of desertion standing on the records of the War Department against Bernard Brennan, late of Company H, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1418) for removing the charge of desertion standing on the records of the War Department against John Scanlin, late of Company F, Eighty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1419) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Bernard Stueber; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 1420) for the relief of J. Floyd Johnston, administrator; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAFFERY introduced a bill (S. 1421) granting a pension to Jane M. Anderson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1422) granting a pension to Mrs. Sophia Lessing; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1423) to provide an American register for the steamer Goldsworthy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 1424) to amend section 8 of "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Calumet River," approved March 1, 1893; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, it was Ordered, That Joseph Hague have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate, there not being any adverse report made or action had thereon.

COLUMBIAN MEDALS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select):

Resolved, That the Select Committee on the Quadro-Centennial be directed to ascertain what progress has been made in the preparation and issue of the Columbian medals for which appropriation was made by section 3 of the act of August 5, 1892, and to examine into the suitableness of the design and the method of striking the medals, and to inquire whether any further legislation is necessary on the subject.

HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] January 3, 1894, proposing to declare as the opinion of the Senate that, pending the investigation by the Committee on Foreign Relations, there should be no interference on the part of the Government of the United States with affairs in Hawaii; on which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it is always to be considered in weighing testimony in this matter, and especially in considering the action of Minister Stevens, that there was as to American residents in the island a dual citizenship, that of the United States and that of the Kingdom of Hawaii. The constitution of Hawaii of 1887, which the Queen unconstitutionally attempted to abrogate, conferred upon all male residents of Hawaiian or of European or of American parentage, of a certain age and possessing the requisite property qualifications, the elective franchise and the right to hold office. The question might possibly arise, indeed had arisen, as to what the effect of such a provision would be upon the right of a citizen of the United States to be regarded thereafter as a citizen of the United States after his taking advantage of the privileges conferred upon him by the constitution of Hawaii, and whether he would be entitled to protection as an American citizen.

So far as that question is concerned it had received ample decision by the State Department, first by Mr. Frelinghuysen, whose views upon that subject are found in Senate Miscellaneous Documents of 1885–'86, vol. 10, page 177. The case arose long before the adoption of the Constitution of 1887, and was decided upon general principles. Jones was an American citizen domiciled in Hawaii; but in order to obtain the registry of a merchant vessel under the Hawaiian flag he was compelled by the statute of the Kingdom to take an oath of allegiance to the Kingdom, which he did, and the question arose in that particular instance whether by so doing he had abrogated or could have been held to have renounced his privileges, rights, or status as an American citizen. Mr. Frelinghuysen says:

Your inquiry is as to what effect this proceeding may have upon the staust of Mr. Jones's American citizenship.

In becoming a citizen of the United States the law requires that an alien shall not only swear to support the Constitution and laws of this country, but also to renounce all other allegiance, and especially that of the country of which he may be then a subject or citizen. In the oath taken by Mr. Jones there is no such express renunciation of his American citizenship, nor do the circumstances manifest any intention on his part to expatriate himself.

It may, however, at some future time, become a question for judicial investigation in his case.

The doctrine of the executive branch of the Government on this subject is thus expressed by the Attorney-General:

"To constitute expatriation there must be an actual removal, followed by foreign residence, accompanied by authentic renunciation of preëxisting citizenship" (8 Op., 139), and this view finds support in some judicial decisions (Juando vs. Taylor, 2 Paine, 652).

In the absence of a direct judicial determination of the question, I do not feel disposed to deny to Mr. Jones any right or privilege pertaining to his character of American citizenship, and therefore, while the Department will not undertake to express an authoritative opinion on the effect which his course in Hawaii may ultimately have on his status in that regard, you are authorized to extend to him such protection as may be properly due to a citizen of the United States residing in and having acquired a commercial domicile in a foreign state. This protection must, of course, be limited and qualified by the liabilities and obligations incident to such commercial domicile.

But the question directly arose under the operations of the constitution of 1887, and was passed upon by Mr. Bayard. (Vol. 1, House Ex. Doc. Second Session, Fiftieth Congress, page 833.)

MR. BAYARD TO MR. MERRILL.

No. 61.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 30, 1887.

SIR: Your No. 134, of the 25th of July last, in reference to an oath required of foreign residents in the islands, is received.

This question was brought to the notice of the Department by Mr. Putman, in his No. 125, of the 1st ultimo, and in reply he was instructed on the 18th ultimo that citizens of the United States who take the oath of fealty prescribed by the new constitution of Hawaii remain citizens of the United States, and are entitled to be regarded and treated as such by our consular and diplomatic officers.

That such a result is contemplated by the Hawaiian Government appears evident from the last sentence of the oath, which reads:

"Not hereby renouncing, but expressly reserving all allegiance and citizenship now owning or held by me."

This Department is informed that this oath is indiscriminately required of citizens of other nations, who are nevertheless understood by their own governments to retain their own nationality of origin. Inasmuch also as this oath is a requisite condition for exercising any political privileges on the island, it is evident that a refusal on the part of this Government of the assent to taking it granted by other governments to their citizens would result in the destruction of any political power previously possessed by our citizens and its transfer to citizens of other assenting nations.

The Department, therefore, desires that you will consider the above instruction as addressed to yourself, and that you will relieve the minds of all bona fide American citizens who, while honestly desiring to retain their American nationality, are, in order to obtain the privileges necessary for a residence in the islands, obliged under local law to take an oath to support the constitution of the Hawaiian Kingdom.

I am, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

Mr. President, I shall proceed as rapidly as may be consistent with a very superficial examination of the testimony which is contained in Mr. Blount's report, repeating that I am limiting myself to that testimony strictly in my consideration of the events that I was discussing when the Senate adjourned yesterday. On Monday, the 16th day of January, the situation upon the island had become more critical. It was known to be such, and indeed had been recognized to be such, as it had been before, by the Queen's ministers. Accordingly, at 10 o'clock on Monday morning a meeting of the cabinet was called which resulted in the drafting and adoption of a proclamation to be signed by the Queen, stating that she would not attempt to modify the constitution of 1887 except by the methods prescribed therein. But she had gone too far. The fate of the monarchy was settled, and, although the cabinet visited the committee of public safety and showed that proposed proclamation to the committee, it was replied what faith could be put in the promises of the Queen after what had taken place? The cabinet was notified that it was too late.

It is always the case when thrones are falling under the blows of revolution that the tottering monarch offers that which he should have offered long before. If I am correct in my recollections of history, Lord Howe in the darkest period of the American Revolution sent a letter to Gen. Washington, addressing him as Mr. Washington, offering exemptions and privileges to the colonies and to the American people which for years before he had obdurately denied, and which denial had resulted in the glorious rebellion which gave us our independence. Gen. Washington's reply to those letters was the victories of Trenton and Monmouth. I am reminded by the learned Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that in that connection George III sent over commissioners, of whom I think Lord Howe was one, authorized and plenarily empowered to make those promises.

Now, on this occasion, somewhere about 11 o'clock on Monday, Mr. Wilson made his way to the meeting of the committee of public safety and told Mr. Thurston, the master spirit in this singular rebellion, where those ministers who were intrusted with the preservation of the Kingdom were associating on the most familiar terms, terms almost of intimacy, with those who were termed the plotters, that this thing ought to stop, that there would be a proclamation issued. Mr. Thurston replied that it had gone too far; that they were standing on a volcano; that they would not trust the word of the Queen. Wilson then threatened him with arrest, and Thurston defied him. That is the nearest approach to the use of physical force to repress the revolution in all these four days of intense excitement.

On Monday the committee of public safety, knowing and having been informed that the United States minister would order the troops to be landed from the ship at 5 o'clock that afternoon, found that it did not accord with the then condition of their plans and purposes, that it would be too early for what they intended to do. Accordingly, they sent to Minister Stevens and asked him to postpone the landing of the troops until the next day, and his reply was that "As a precautionary matter I have ordered the troops be landed at 5 o'clock for the protection of American life and property, and landed they will be." And they were landed at that hour. That does not look much as if the minister were playing into the hands of those who afterwards became the Provisional Government.

I have no doubt that, as on such occasions always is the case, those who were back of the revolution endeavored to make it appear that the United States authorities and troops were to be in actual sympathy with them, but the United States was not responsible for that, and this evidence can be searched in vain for any instance where Mr. Stevens did not expressly say to every attempt to put him even in an equivocal attitude in this respect that he should land the troops for the protection of American life and property. What was he to do? Suppose he had not landed the marines and the results had been as everybody feared? He would have disobeyed the standing instructions of his office; and, as I said yesterday, if the Queen by her revolutionary acts, whereby she had absolved from allegiance to her every subject who chose, had created the situation which made it necessary to land troops for the protection of American life and property, she (having created that necessity) can not complain because its necessary exercise had the collateral and incidental effect of contributing in some degree to overthrow the monarchy. That it did so contribute I deny. I merely suppose the case.

Great stress is laid in Mr. Blount's report upon the use of troops. One would think from it that a corps d'armée had been marshalled in the streets of Honolulu. Mr. President, 162 marines were landed, and of those 14 were musicians, 9 were officers. It can be fairly inferred from Mr. Blount's report that those troops were massed in a commanding position with refer ence to the capitol building of the Hawaiian Kingdom. But the facts are, as appear from the testimony submitted by Mr. Blount, that when they marched from the landing up to Merchant street, the principal street of the city as I should judge from the map, a detachment was left at the consular office on that street, a company of marines went to the legation, where they remained, and the remainder of the force, being the main body, the number of which is not stated, went off towards Arion Hall seeking shelter. Not being able to find it there at once, application was made for the opera house. That building could not be had. The armory was otherwise occupied, and that could not be had. At a later hour they went on beyond Arion Hall to the residence of Mr. Atherton, a place which I should judge from the map is somewhere out in the suburbs; probably obtained refreshment there, and late in the evening came back and were quartered in Arion Hall.

Mr. PLATT. At what hour?

Mr. DAVIS. I can not tell exactly; probably it was 8 or 9 o'clock.

At this point another matter in my notes attracts my attention. It is the statement or testimony of Mr. Cornwell, found on page 27. He was the minister of finance. He says in substance that on Monday, having learned that United States troops were landing, Parker and Peterson called on Stevens and requested him to keep the troops on board. Stevens replied that he had landed the troops to protect American life and property, and proposed to keep them on shore. There was a distinct announcement by the minister of the United States to the Queen's ministers, consistent with all that he had said before and with all that he said afterwards, and with all that the naval officers said or did, owing to the necessity which had been created, and which he did not create, and for which he was in no degree responsible, namely, he would land troops solely to serve the purposes of that necessity, which was the protection of American life and property.

As I have stated, during the meeting of the committee of public safety on Monday, Marshal Wilson made his way to the meeting, and in his testimony, commencing on page 552, he details his interview with Thurston. I think I stated that a few moments ago, but something else took place there which is corroborated by the testimony of Mr. Waterhouse about which Mr. Wilson says nothing, namely, the threat which Wilson then made to arrest Thurston, and Thurston's defiance.

It would be inferred from the report of Commissioner Blount that everything was serene and peaceful in Hawaii on this Monday; that there was no public alarm; that this situation so universally known to everybody had not created a ripple on the placid surface of business or municipal affairs.

It frequently happens, when testimony, given under the disturbing impulse of passion and discordant views is conflicting, that some incidental, some collateral circumstance comes in, some fact proved by unimpeachable testimony and not contradicted, which settles the entire controversy. Such a circumstance is not lacking here. I refer to the testimony of Mr. Scott, on page 480. Mr. Scott testifies in substance that he was the principal of a public school in the city of Honolulu, the number of pupils being 300 white children; that shortly after school began on the morning of Monday the mothers of those children from all parts of the city came to the school in their carriages to take them away. He was so impressed by the gravity of the situation that he dismissed the school before noon. Nothing but the existence of great alarm and the prevailing sense of impending danger could have carried that impression of insecurity into a hundred separate homes that morning. The feminine instinct in that case, as it so often is, was unerring. There was danger; it was so felt.

Tuesday, the day of final action came, and Mr. Cornwell, on page 27, testifies that Tuesday "We were informed that the Provisional Government would be proclaimed that afternoon." Wilson testifies or states in substance, on page 552, that he knew on Tuesday before 11 a. m. that the committee had agreed to proclaim a provisional government; to put Chief Justice Judd or Justice Dole at the head of it, and that they were to hold another meeting at noon; that they would move on the Government building at 3 p. m. and on the police station at 4 p. m. "I immediately sent for the cabinet, but there was no sign of cabinet."

Now, here was a meeting of the committee of public safety announcing that at certain hours of that day they would seize the Government of Hawaii and depose the Queen, giving the very line of action and the place and time of it. They were holding their meetings in a place not commanded or guarded or threatened in the least degree by United States troops, or defended by any forces of their own. Here, on the other hand, was the Queen's Government, with this amount of power behind it, of which Mr. Blount talks, and yet no motion was made to put this irresistible power into operation; not one of the Queen's guards nor one of Marshal Wilson's police force was sent to arrest those thirteen men, and there was no sign of the cabinet to be found. They had vanished

> Into thin air; and what seemed corporal melted
> As breath into the wind.

The substance of Mr. Bolte's statement, found on page 249, is that at 2 p. m., Tuesday, when they arrived at the Government house, there came up others of the revolutionary party, bringing rifles and pistols. He says this was premeditated; that the committee had notified the volunteers that they would go to the Government house at 2 o'clock, and that they, referring to the volunteers, arrived before the finishing of the reading of the proclamation. The testimony shows that before that reading was finished Capt. Ziegler, a German, brought on his company, he being the first, and by the time it was through the rest were there, so that when the act by which these gentlemen announced their determination to seize on the Government of Hawaii was finished, by reading the proclamation, the military force, which it was concerted should be there at the time the committee on public safety went to the public building, had arrived. They came from the armory, a place not at all commanded or dominated by any force of United States marines upon the island. They could have been met by this vague and yet invincible and irresistible royal force of which Mr. Blount tells, and the factions could have fought it out to their heart's content, without the least interference, so long as the contest did not result in or threaten violence and danger to the lives and property of American citizens.

It could be inferred, and I think it is expressly stated in Mr. Blount's report—and such is the desire to dwell upon minute matters for the purpose of making good the attack upon the Administration of President Harrison and upon Mr. Stevens—that the committee on public safety furtively and by separate streets went to the Government building. In that he is squarely contradicted by the testimony of Mr. Waterhouse, page 47. My recollection of that testimony is that the committee of thirteen, with one other gentleman whose name is not given, making fourteen, started from the meeting place of the committee of public safety to go to the Government building, and my recollection is positive that the testimony of Mr. Waterhouse is that twelve of them went in one body, up the same street, of course, and the other two, for some reason not explained, took another street.

I infer that the twelve went up Merchant street, the principal business street of the city, upon which the police station is situated. They had no guard; no soldier went with them. The names of the committee of thirteen were known, and had been known since Monday, and perhaps before; yes, Saturday is the testimony, if my recollection serves me, and yet not one of this imposing military force which was at the back of the Hawaiian Government was invoked to stay or detain or arrest them.

Mr. Waterhouse states that they expected to meet resistance at the Government building; he had heard a report that there were 100 men there. He thinks that if the Queen's forces and the military forces had got to fighting, the United States troops would not have interfered except to protect American citizens. That was the conception of the situation which the committee of safety had when they set out for the Government building. He says that when they were going into the door of the Government building various volunteers kept coming into the yard with their rifles.

Mr. President, they took possession of that building. They found one government clerk there, making up some official figures.

Mr. Damon states in substance, on page 39, that some of the provisional troops came on the ground before the reading of the proclamation was finished. Immediately after the proclamation Dole and others met at the office of the minister of the interior, and Cornwell and Parker came up from the station house and held a conference, the result of which was that Damon and Bolte were requested to return with Cornwell and Parker to the station house (this was another of the amenities of this revolution) and recommend and urge upon the parties in power at the police station to surrender to the Provisional Government. They held a conference in the room occupied generally by the deputy marshal, at which were present Peterson, Colburn, Parker, Cornwell, Bolte, and, later, Neumann.

The President of the United States has stated in his annual message, as Mr. Blount had stated in his report, that this Provisional Government was established with the active aid of the United States minister, and by the puissant intimidation of the American troops. I have shown how they were distributed.

I say the United States troops were not drawn up in line, or at all in a menacing or military attitude or array.

Let us see whether Mr. Blount did not overlook some most important testimony as to what took place right there at the time when the Provisional Government was coming into being by reading the proclamation. If the testimony of any witness is to be regarded respecting the military situation at the time, it is the testimony of Mr. Wilcox, the military man who was educated by the Hawaiian Government in the military schools of Italy, and who at the time of this revolution was passively favorable to the cause of the Queen. Mr. Wilcox says in regard to the attitude of the troops—I can not give the page exactly——

Mr. GRAY. Who is the witness?

Mr. DAVIS. Robert Wilcox. I read this question and answer in the examination of Wilcox, on page 542:

Q. Where were the United States troops at the time of the reading of the proclamation?
A. Right behind the opera house, in a building they called Arion Hall.
Q. In the house or on the street?
A. Some inside and some outside. They took possession of that quarter.
Q. Were they formed or not?
A. No; they just guarded the place.
Q. Had they arms?
A. Yes; and one or two Gatling guns—one or two, I am sure of that.

What becomes of the claim that the United States marines were there drawn up in military array and menacing the operations of the Queen's Government or of her forces? They had been stationed at the Arion Hall because there was no other place in the city where they could find shelter, although other places had been sought for in vain, hospitality having been denied in other places.

Further, to show the utter incredibility of the report of Commissioner Blount as to the implied duress even in the presence of United States troops on that occasion, or as to what anybody had any right to expect or to fear from them, I refer to the testimony of Mr. Damon, on page 39. It seems that while the proclamation was being read, some timid soul among the revolutionists—and there are always such on occasions of that kind—took it into his head that there was danger, and he wanted to know why they did not get protection from the United States troops; they were near at hand, but he did not see any protection particularly interposing between them and the danger which he feared. So Mr. Damon said in substance:

While the proclamation was being read, we were all nervous as to our safety. I asked one of the men with me there, "Will not the American troops support us?" Finally I asked one of the men to go over and ask Lieut. Swinburne if he was not going to send some one over to protect us. The man returned and said to me: "Capt. Wiltse's orders are, 'I remain passive; I will not support it in any way.'"

"I remain passive; I will not support in any way," was the response which the commander, Lieut. Swinburne, of the marines stationed in and about Arion Hall at the time of this transaction, made to a pressing demand for support for the personal safety of the men who were then instituting this Provisional Government. It all consists with the invariable declaration of Minister Stevens that he landed troops to protect American life and property, and that the incidental and collateral transactions might take care of themselves, provided American life and prop were not put to peril.

Is it not passing strange, Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. GRAY. I am trying to follow the Senator, and I am very much interested in what he is saying. Will it interrupt him if I call his attention——

Mr. DAVIS. I am making what I regard as a close statement from notes, speaking under that disadvantage, and I would rather not be interrupted. The Senator can reply to me when I shall have concluded.

Mr. GRAY. All right. I only wanted to call the Senator's attention to a piece of testimony which he could not find.

Mr. DAVIS. It is in the testimony of Mr. Damon.

Mr. GRAY. I have it before me.

Mr. DAVIS. It will be found in the testimony which is in the record, whether I have made a miscitation or not.

Mr. GRAY. Very well, I shall not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. The testimony is in the record, and that is what Lieut. Swinburne said when he was appealed to to protect and care for the personal safety of the men who were then reading the proclamation for the institution of that Provisional Government.

Mr. GRAY. Who was that?

Mr. DAVIS. Lieut. Swinburne.

Mr. FRYE. Lieut. Swinburne was in charge on shore.

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. He was acting under the orders of Capt. Wiltse.

Mr. GRAY. He said "I remain passive." What else did he say?

Mr. DAVIS. He also said, "I will not support it in any way."

Mr. GRAY. I do not find that in the testimony which I have here.

Mr. DAVIS. I am endeavoring to make this statement with absolute fidelity. Of course entire accuracy can not be expected and error may creep in in a matter so complicated as this, and of course I would not interpolate anything into the record.

Mr. GRAY. No one can be more sure of that than I.

Mr. DAVIS. It was on Tuesday afternoon at about half past 2 o'clock that this appeal to Lieut. Swinburne was made. The United States troops had been at Arion Hall from a certain hour on the evening before and had probably been there over twenty hours, within 700 feet of the palace, I should think, and within a shorter distance of the Government building. Does anyone suppose that Wilson and Cornwell and Parker and Colburn and Peterson and all persons representing the Queen being up to a comparatively recent date in the Government building and within a stone's throw of these troops, could not have ascertained from Lieut. Swinburne what his purposes and orders were, and that they would not have been given the same answer which was made to the members of the Provisional Government when they supposed they were in extremity? Can anyone doubt with the activity which Wilson displayed that he had not asked that question?

Why did not Commissioner Blount, with that thread of evidence placed in his hands, follow it up and ascertain whether it was not notified to both parties there that neither one could expect the active aid, assistance, or interference of the United States military force? The conviction is borne upon my mind so forcibly that I can not refrain from repeating that I firmly believe from their action that they had that information from Lieut. Swinburne, and had it over and over again.

It is suggested to me by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that the Queen, if she had supposed that the force there was menacing her, would have made a formal inquiry as to why it was there. No question of that kind is shown to have been asked. I presume it was asked. The fact is that in the exercise of reasonable diligence, surrounded by counselors such as she had, she and they knew, and were bound to know by inquiry, what the presence of that force meant on that occasion.

Mr. President, much has been said as to the time of this recognition. As in all cases where many events are crowded into a short time, there is confusion in the testimony and some degree of conflict, but after the Provisional Government was declared, Capt. Wiltse sent his aid to see if they were in possession of the Government building. Mr. Stevens, who had a military aid, sent him to see if they were in possession of the Government building, the British minister came over to see whether they were in possession of the Government building; Mr. Damon and Mr. Bolte went down to the station house to confer with the force that was said to be there, and, coming back, they went over to see the Queen.

About 4 o'clock Parker, the minister of foreign affairs, came to the Government building, and said, "You are in possession and we can do nothing." The others had gone to the station house to recommend the surrender. Returning, as I said, they had gone to the palace to enforce their recommendation upon the Queen, two of her ministers and two members or delegates from the Provisional Government, and after some debate, some urging, the Queen yielded. About that time Minister Stevens recognized the Provisional Government.

It is said that in the letter from President Dole to Minister Stevens he states, "We have not yet got possession of the station house." But he also states, "We expect to be in possession in a few minutes." There was undoubtedly a time which elapsed between the agreement of the Queen and her cabinet to surrender the station house and the time of the actual surrender, which seems to have taken place about 7:30 o'clock.

The capitulation had been made; but, Mr. President, in my view of all the facts and circumstances which surround the transactions of this day, taking into consideration everything which had been done, it was utterly immaterial that the Provisional Government had not possession of that municipal building known as the police station house. They had taken, occupied, and possessed the very seat of government of the Hawaiian Islands; they held the capitol building of that Kingdom, the building wherein the Legislature sat, where the supreme court sat, where the offices of the ministers were, wherein all the executive functions of the Government were conducted. The Queen's government had possibly intended at one time to defend it, for when the supporters of the Provisional Government went through the building they found it vacant, it is true, as to armed men, but they found munitions of war in the foreign office. The intention, if it ever existed, had been abandoned. The Provisional Government had possession of the very center of power and domination of the Hawaiian Kingdom without resistance, and was actually negotiating with the Queen's ministers, her responsible counselors, without whom she could do no valid act, for the surrender of the last lurking place of her illusory power.

Under such circumstances as these Mr. Stevens recognized the Provisional Government. This was on the 17th, and it was recognized on the next day by the representatives of every foreign government on that island, excepting the representative of China, and he recognized it on the 19th. If there had been any irregularity about this, with this foreign influence perpetually intermeddling in the Hawaiian Islands, is it to be supposed for a moment that the recognition by representatives of the foreign powers would have been so instantaneous?

Mr. President, I have conducted this examination through the memorable four days of this revolution. My discussion of this matter, I am aware, has been inadequate. That record will yield rich mines of information to anyone who will sit down and examine it with an impartial eye. I am aware that there is testimony on both sides of this question. I have spoken solely from the evidence presented by Commissioner Blount. What I criticise is that he has ignored and has not been impressed with preponderating evidence of the gravest character, which tends to the support of his own country and his own countrymen.

The Administration of President Harrison was in judgment, and the conduct of Mr. Stevens was to be passed upon by Mr. Blount. Mr. Stevens expressly was upon trial. Mr. Blount was sent out there to test by investigation the validity and uprightness of Mr. Stevens's action. Mr. Stevens was upon the island. Mr. Blount saw him every day. According to Mr. Blount's report, Mr. Stevens's conduct was highly reprehensible, and he is indorsed in that statement by the President in his annual message. In the name of all that is fair, in the name of all proceedings that would not have scandalized even the star-chamber, why did not Mr. Blount apply to his countryman, Mr. Stevens, then on the island, for an explanation of the circumstances the evidence of which he was so industriously gathering against him?

Suppressio veri, suggestio falsi. Everything can be inferred against such a perverse and determined effort to avoid the sources of evidence.

President Dole bore a prominent part in this transaction. He, ex officio, as President of the Provisional Government, is the minister of foreign affairs, and he was also to be judged by Commissioner Blount. Why was not his statement taken? It would have been freely accorded. It was due to him. Mr. Blount being accredited to him, as he was by letters of credence, it was due to him; due to his character and standing, which Mr. Willis certifies are of the highest; due to his official position, that he should be allowed to make an explanation of the matters concerning which he was to be so gravely compromised by the report of Mr. Blount, to be adopted as a verity by the President of the United States in his annual message.

Thus, Mr. President, the curtain fell upon the last scene of this harlequin monarchy. The stage lords and stage ladies vanished into the mass of the population. The queen of the play laid aside her tinsel crown, put off her tawdry regalia, and reentered private life through the stage entrance. The play had had its run. The engagement, which had not been successful, was ended and the theater was to be closed. The whole proceeding throughout had been imitative. The monarchy was a spectacle. It had been tolerated by the civilized world, although frequently the performance had been rudely and forcibly interrupted by the foreign spectators. The domestic audience, heavily taxed for its support, when insulted by the actors, had repeatedly resented the indignity with violence. The practical and real took the place of this pernicious mockery. A firm government, conducted by just and able men, was installed upon the abandoned stage. The whole proceeding had been spectacular. Civilization had endured it. The lord of the demesne had for a brief period conferred his functions upon Christopher Sly. But to this general and correct appreciation of the melodrama there was one exception. As the play was ending the Democratic Administration came in as a spectator, as Don Quixote and Sancho Panza entered the puppet show in Spain. To it, as to the don, the performance was real, and, like real life, it was thought to be continuous. It saw in the mammets and puppets and in the stage queen weakness overpowered and virginity oppressed and disinherited, while Sancho, against the evidence of his senses, saw through the eyes of his master. [Laughter and applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the occupants of the galleries to the requirement of the rules of the Senate. No marks of applause or disapprobation are permitted. The Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. DAVIS. And Mr. Blount was sent to the Hawaiian Islands on the chivalrous quest inspired by that delusion.

Mr. Blount was appointed on the 11th day of March, 1893. The treaty was withdrawn, I think, upon the 7th day of March, 1893. An inquiry more interesting and important than anything that I have discussed (because this Hawaiian question is fleeting; it will pass away) is whether the appointment of Mr. Blount was a constitutional appointment, in that it never received the advice or consent of the Senate.

A most important case as a precedent is immediately raised. It lays hold of the most distant future, and may affect our relations with other nations than Hawaii. The Constitution of the United States, Article II, section 1, provides as to the powers of the President:

> He shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law.

All diplomatic officers and judges of the Supreme Court of the United States are, by express provision, out of abundance of caution, named to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Was Mr. Blount a diplomatic representative? Was he a diplomatic officer? I turn to his letters of credence, dated at Washington on the 11th day of March, in the year 1893, addressed by Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, to his great and good friend, Sanford B. Dole, the president of the executory and advisory council of the Provisional Government of the Hawaiian Islands:

> GREAT AND GOOD FRIEND: I have made choice of James H. Blount, one of our distinguished citizens, as my special commissioner to visit the Hawaiian Islands and make report to me concerning the present status of affairs in that country. He is well informed of our sincere desire to cultivate and maintain to the fullest extent the friendship which has so long subsisted between the two countries—> and in all matters affecting relations with the Government of the Hawaiian Islands his authority is paramount.

I ask the attention of the Senate to the following—

In all matters affecting the relations of the Government of the United States with the Hawaiian Islands his authority is paramount. I should be pleased to hear anyone suggest language more forcible or comprehensive to confer supreme authority in all matters of diplomatic relations in any case upon any man. No matter what Mr. Stevens may have done or what he may hereafter in his office say, I, the President of the United States, by my letters of credence to you, Mr. Blount, notify President Dole that Mr. Blount's authority in all matters affecting relations between these two Governments is paramount.

I shall not discuss the instructions to Mr. Blount, because the commission comprehends it all and is broader in some respects than the instructions. What is the use of talking about names and words and trying to draw vain distinctions here when the fact, the thing, is what we are after? Mr. Stevens was instructed, I will say, that he could continue to perform the duties of his office in all matters where Mr. Blount's authority did not conflict.

Mr. President, if this right exists in the President of the United States there is not a court in Europe where his familiar can not sit down with paramount authority by the side of a duly confirmed minister and overrule him. There is not a court in the United States where his familiar can not sit down with paramount authority beside the district attorney and control him. There is not a United States marshal empowered by virtue of his commission to execute the processes of the courts of the United States who can not be accompanied by a familiar of the President of the United States with paramount authority to overrule and control him. The President is the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. There is not a colonel of a regiment, a commander of a military division, or the captain of a man-of-war who is not subject to have appear before him the apparition of a familiar of the President of the United States with a letter giving him paramount authority to overrule and control him.

It was not without reason that the framers of the Constitution of the United States provided, in express terms, that consuls and ambassadors, other public ministers, and the judges of the Supreme Court, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. They considered most prophetically what they were doing. By the terms of the Constitution they were framing (the wisest instrument of government ever prepared by the wit of man, and laying hold of more future contingencies than any such instrument ever did), they made the President the sole point of contact and means of communication between the Government of the United States and foreign powers. Congress in either body, or together, can hold no communication with any foreign power. No governor of a State nor any State authority can do it. No individual can do it. Everything must be done through the President of the United States, who makes the treaties and appoints the ministers.

It was felt that this extraordinary power, necessarily confided to the direction of a single understanding and a single will, was susceptible of the greatest abuse; for, although the President can not declare war, he can, through his foreign policy, conducted by diplomatic officers, embroil this nation in such difficulties as to bring a foreign war upon us, and compel Congress to declare a defensive war. So vast was this power that they deemed it important expressly to say in the Constitution that the names of these officers thus appointed should be submitted to the Senate, that the Senate might know what men were being sent abroad to conduct these difficult and delicate relations. They are first named as the most important, for they precede the judges of the Supreme Court.

On the other hand, as to the judges of the Supreme Court, the framers of the Constitution considered how republics and other constitutional governments have been sapped and mined by a pliant judiciary; how, while an irregular and improper exercise of the powers of appointment of foreign ministers might affect disastrously our exterior relations, similar improprieties and carelessness of appointment in judges might result in seriously compromising everything that was internal in our system of government. Accordingly with the same care with which they provided that ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls should be named by the President to the Senate, to receive its advice and consent, they made the same provision in regard to the judges of the Supreme Court.

Section 1674 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

> Diplomatic officers shall be deemed to include ambassadors, envoys extraordinary, ministers plenipotentiary, ministers resident, commissioners, charge d'affaires, agents, and secretaries of legation, and none other.

How does Mr. Blount's commission read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The Senator from Minnesota will please suspend his remarks. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business. It will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 2331) to repeal all statutes relating to supervisors of elections and special deputy marshals, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Minnesota may proceed and finish his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senator from Minnesota be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAY. I rose merely to call the attention of the Senate to my understanding in regard to the bill. I understood there was unanimous consent that it should go over until 2 o'clock Monday and then be the unfinished business.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was the order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota will proceed, there being no objection.

Mr. DAVIS. The word "commissioner" in the statute which I have just read, enumerating who shall be diplomatic officers, distinctly comprehends Mr. Blount, for the letters of credence read:

> I have made choice of James H. Blount * * * as my special commissioner.

He was a special commissioner, whose authority in all matters pertaining to the relations between the governments should be paramount. If special commissioner is not covered by the express language of the Constitution in its words of enumeration it is covered by the other more general clause, namely, the inferior officers to be designated by law.

To show Mr. Blount's understanding of his powers, my friend the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] calls my attention to his mode of signature, page 139, Executive Document No. 47, in a communication to Mr. Gresham.

Mr. GRAY. What is the page?

Mr. DAVIS. Page 139. It is always the same way, I think, "James H. Blount, Special Commissioner of the United States." This is his formal report. What was there lacking in what Mr. Blount did or in what he was empowered to do to constitute him an ambassador or public minister? He falls within the purview of the constitutional enumeration. He falls expressly within the enumeration of the statute which I have just read. In my view, in the sense of the Constitution, an officer is one who has authority to act in the name of and on behalf of the United States and by whose actions the Government may be bound. Such was Mr. Blount.

Now, Mr. President, it is said that there are precedents for this. I deny it. I say that there is no precedent in our diplomatic history that protects this flagrant violation of the Constitution of the United States. He was empowered, as my friend, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], suggests, in his instructions given to him by Mr. Gresham, to invoke the naval and military force of the United States by virtue of his paramount official character:

> In the judgment of the President, your authority, as well as that of the commander of the naval forces in Hawaiian waters, should be and is limited in the use of physical force to such measures as are necessary to protect the persons and property of our citizens; and while abstaining from any manner of interference with the domestic concerns of the islands, you should indicate your willingness to intervene with your friendly offices in the interest of a peaceful settlement of troubles within the limits of sound discretion.

He was empowered to call into force and active operation the military force, and was also empowered to use his friendly offices for a settlement. If there is anything wanting to endow him fully with complete diplomatic character, it does not at this moment occur to me.

Mr. PLATT. What greater power has any ambassador?

Mr. DAVIS. My friend, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], asks me what greater power any ambassador has. None. In fact, Mr. President, it is the only instance in our history that I recollect where any President has ever undertaken to appoint an ambassador. The distinction between an ambassador and a minister as laid down in the authoritative works upon international law is that the ambassador represents the person of his sovereign, whereas the minister does not. In imperial language in these letters of credence, the President of the United States notifies President Dole that he has appointed Mr. Blount "as my special commissioner."

Mr. HOAR. I should like to call the attention of my honorable friend to the fact that the recent statute authorizing the President to appoint ambassadors expressly provides that the functions shall not be enlarged beyond the existing functions.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; of a minister or envoy. I denied a few moments ago that there was any precedent in our history which protects this transaction, even by remote analogy. I do not believe it can be found. I do not believe it ever will be again attempted to create another one. If found, it is valueless and should be disregarded. I am aware that during the debates in the Senate upon the fisheries treaty in 1888 a list of some 438 appointments alleged to be of like character was brought forward, and that has been a fetish to conjure with ever since; and yet under the examination to which it was submitted in the remarks of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] upon that treaty it lost its charm and should no longer have any efficacy. When sifted out there were but seven in all that list (minor matters, passing unquestioned at the time, and doubtless attributable to inattention) that could with even plausibility be maintained to be precedents. And even those were not, in my judgment, cases to which the constitutional provision under consideration is applicable. I shall ask leave, for the purpose of saving time and presenting that question better than I can do, to print a short extract from the remarks of the senior Senator from New Hampshire, made in the discussion of that treaty, wherein he discussed that particular subject:

> No one has ever disputed the privilege of the President to negotiate treaties, using the Secretary of State and the regularly appointed and confirmed foreign ministers for that purpose. Why, then, do the minority particularize and parade about 438 cases of that character? Simply to obscure the flagrant nature of the case now under review and censure, and to break the force of the one great and overwhelming precedent against it, to be shortly stated. In addition to these 438 cases the report gives a list of three persons appointed by the Secretary of State and a list of thirty-two appointed by the President, and specially confirmed by the Senate to negotiate treaties. But of the three appointed by the Secretary of State, two, Hughes and Bates, were already diplomatic officers, and the thirty-two are of course all precedents against the minority and not in their favor.
>
> There is to be extracted from the list of 473 only the following cases which are of any value to the minority, being those where private citizens were employed in negotiations without the prior consent of the Senate:
>
> 1. G. Morris, private agent, October 13, 1789, to ascertain the intentions of Great Britain as to the treaty of 1783, and make a treaty of commerce.
>
> 2. John James Appleton, May 12, 1825, to arrange for the settlement of claims of citizens of the United States against the Kingdom of Naples.
>
> 3. Charles Rhind, September 12, 1829, to conclude a treaty of friendship and commerce with Turkey.
>
> 4. Edmund Roberts, January 26, 1832, to conclude treaties of navigation and commerce with Cochin China, Siam, and Muscat.
>
> 5. A. Dudley Mann, March 28, 1846, to conclude with Hanover, Hungary, Switzerland, etc., treaties of commerce and navigation.
>
> 6. Benjamin E. Greene, June 13, 1849, to conclude treaties of commerce with Hayti and the Dominican Republic.
>
> 7. Isaac E. Morse, December 5, 1856, to conclude a treaty with New Granada with reference to transit across the Isthmus of Panama.
>
> What a pitiful list among the whole 473 which are set out with such elaboration in the minority report! It is sufficient to say in relation to these 7, in the face of the overwhelming precedents the other way—the 466 cases where treaties have been negotiated by officials who had been confirmed by the Senate as required by the Constitution—that they are few in number, that the negotiations were insignificant, that the precedents were never acquiesced in, and that they constitute no real authority for or justification of the marked violation of the Constitution committed by the President in appointing Messrs. Angell and Putnam without the consent of the Senate.
>
> I have stated that the object of the minority in cumbering their report with upward of 438 cases which have no bearing upon the point in controversy is simply to break the force of the one great and overwhelming precedent against them. It is impossible to resist this conclusion or a worse opinion upon the recorded facts.
>
> On page 130 the minority give the case of the Joint High Commission which negotiated the Alabama Claims treaty, and they show Messrs. Ebenezer R. Hoar and George H. Williams as appointed while private citizens two of the five plenipotentiaries by the President alone; and the minority include the five in their number (on page 105) of 438 persons appointed by the President alone.
>
> The minority, therefore, certainly thus appear to have found a pertinent precedent, especially as the High Joint Commission held its sessions, like the Bayard-Chamberlain Commission, and with similar festivities, in the city of Washington. The only objection that can be made against this precedent is that the facts are directly the opposite of those stated in the minority report. Commissioners Hoar and Williams, as well as Secretary Fish, Minister Schenck, and Mr. Justice Nelson, were nominated to the Senate and were confirmed on the 10th day of February, 1871, before they acted.

I have indicated, and others who have preceded me in this debate have indicated with an ability that I can not hope to equal, the serious consequences which are involved in this extraordinary assumption of power. The President has endeavored to break through the walls which divide our Government into departments. He has invaded the privileges of the Senate in this particular respect, and we are advised that we ought to sit silent under this attack; that we should let it pass by without criticism or protest. So far as we are concerned, perhaps, personally we might do so, but as guardians of the constitutional rights of the people we can not.

It is not the first time in history, Mr. President, that an attack upon the privileges of a Senate has been made by an Executive magistrate, nor is it the first time in history that resentment or discussion by the Senate has been deprecated. At a time in the history of the Roman Empire, when the Emperor was Princeps Senatus, connected somewhat with that body as the President of the United States is with this, a resolute man, a man determined to overthrow the privileges of the Senate, withdrew himself into seclusion for that purpose to the island of Capri, and as the last Administration is accused, as Mr. Stevens is accused, as the American men in that island are accused, as the privileges of the Senate of the United States are ignored, so he by a message accused and brought into question the privileges of the Senate. Discussion was to be stifled. Nothing was to be said. The few remaining arches which sustained the senatorial privileges were to be broken down without question. When some one is represented by the satirist to have asked concerning the man attacked or the privilege to be overthrown, he thus said, and was answered to:

Sed quo cecidit sub crimine; quisnam
Delator? quibus judiciis; quo teste probavit?
Nil horum; verbosa et grandis epistola venit
A Capreis. Bene habet; nil plus interrogo.

My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] requests me to translate that. He does not need it, of course. But another Senator [Mr. WASHBURN] suggests that some of the rest of us do. I will not attempt to give a literal translation, but I will give an accurate paraphrase which will show its application: "Into what crime has he fallen? By what informer has he been accused? What judge has passed upon him? What witness has testified against him? Not one or any of these. A verbose and turgid message has come over from Capri. That settles it. I will interrogate no further." [Laughter.]

Mr. Blount was appointed on the 11th day of March, 1893, and he arrived at Honolulu on the 29th of April, 1893. He called on President Dole and presented the letters of credence to that "great and good brother" on the 30th day of April, 1893.

I communicated to him the friendly disposition of our Government toward him and toward the Hawaiian people. I assured him of its purpose to avoid any interference with the domestic concerns of the islands unless it became necessary to protect the persons and property of American citizens. I then offered my letters of credence.

Now, in the light of what he did immediately thereafter and what has been done since, the proprieties of language fail to properly characterize that delusive message, for he immediately proceeded, in violation of a statute of his country, which no President can dispense with, and of the precepts of international law to put himself into communication (as he wrongfully charges Stevens with doing) with an element, to wit, the royal element, which is in every way hostile to the government to which he had just presented his letters of credence, and in which he assured it of the entire friendship of the President of the United States. I refer to Section 1751 of the Revised Statutes:

No diplomatic or consular officer shall correspond in regard to the public affairs of any foreign government, with any private person, newspaper, or other periodical, or otherwise than with the proper officers of the United States.

Over and over again Mr. Blount violated that provision.

Mr. HAWLEY. He was sent to do nothing else.

Mr. DAVIS. The instructions which he had received were not the message which he communicated to President Dole. Those were concealed.

On the 30th day of March it had got out in Hawaii that Mr. Blount was there. The hopes of royalty in some way or other were excited, and a mass meeting of the Hawaiian League was held. It passed resolutions for the restoration of the monarchy and the restoration of Queen Liliuokalani, reciting that President Cleveland had sent Mr. Blount out as special commissioner. This was the next day after he arrived in the island. On the next day, March 31, he received a messenger wishing to know when it would be convenient for him to receive a committee from the mass meeting, which desired to present these resolutions. If this was not corresponding with, putting himself into communication with private persons, subjects of another power, within the prohibition of the statute which I have read, will some one tell me what would be? He avows that this raised a question whether such action would consist with a "recognition of existing authority and the policy of noninterference." (Page 6.) But he does not avow any intention of consulting President Dole on this point, nor did he consult him.

But something had to be done to smooth away the road for the audience which he proposed to give in his court to the committee of the mass meeting which was about to invoke him to aid in restoring the fallen monarchy. The American flag was floating over the government building at Hawaii at that time. It was invited to float over there by Mr. Dole's government, which we had recognized. There was no question of forcible intervention or intrusion there at all. It was properly there by the invitation of the government of President Dole, which was the only government that had any right to complain.

To make the way smooth and easy to receive this petition for the restoration of the royal power, with the inevitable effect of its raising hopes which were in direct contradiction to the assurances he had given to President Dole two days before, or one day before, on the 31st day of March, 1893, he called on Mr. Dole and notified him that he, Mr. Blount, should cause the ensign of the United States to be lowered and the troops ordered on board their ships; and he ordered Admiral Skerrit to execute such order on the 1st day of April at 11 o'clock. The flag was rightfully there. The annexation of the islands was thought to be imminent. The flag was a coming event which cast its shadow before. It was there by invitation of the Provisional Government itself. It was there under the stress of urgent and imminent danger, as appeared both to President Dole and Mr. Stevens when such request was made.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. FRYE. I desire to put in here the remarkable order which Mr. Blount gave an admiral of the United States Navy.

Mr. DAVIS. Will my friend please read it? I will adopt it as a part of my remarks.

Mr. FRYE. It is as follows:

HONOLULU, March 31, 1893.

SIR: You are directed to haul down the United States ensign from the Government building, and to embark the troops now on shore to the ships to which they belong.

This will be executed at 11 o'clock on the 1st day of April.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
Special Commissioner of the United States.

Rear-Admiral J. S. SKERRETT,
Commanding Pacific Squadron.

The history of this country may be hunted over and no other instance can be found where a civil officer or a citizen of one of our States ordered an admiral of the American Navy to haul down the flag of our Government.

Mr. DAVIS. But it is said that Mr. Blount was not an officer!

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator allow me to add that the instructions of the Secretary of the Navy to Admiral Skerrett directed him to obey the orders of Mr. Blount and placed the naval forces in those islands under the command of Mr. Blount?

Mr. DAVIS. And yet Mr. Blount was not a diplomatic officer, and did not need to have the consent of the Senate to his nomination!

Mr. FRYE. But, if the Senator will allow me, no diplomatic officer, no ambassador, no minister plenipotentiary, no officer whatever outside of the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Navy and the regular officers of the Navy, ever made any such order, nor was ever clothed with power to make any such order; and this, I am happy to say, is the only instance ever to be found.

Mr. HOAR. Or that ever will be found.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no doubt of the exact historical truth of that statement and of the verity of that prediction.

Mr. President, this is the first time in nearly thirty years that the American flag has been lowered by an American hand under circumstances which have brought a feeling of dishonor and shame to an American heart. It is the last time in many years, I predict, that that act will be done. Although the stars thus disappeared from the Hawaiian sky, that ensign will in due time, though lowered in dishonor, eventually be raised in power.

After these orders were delivered to Admiral Skerrett, and when everything was made easy for aspiring royalism by the announcement that it was to be done (for it went out that the American flag was to be lowered and the military recalled on board the ship) Mr. Blount, in the afternoon of that day, March 31, notified the committee of the league that he would receive them at 4 o'clock, April 1, five hours after the American flag was to be lowered. What was the effect of that? All that Stevens is charged with doing by way of inciting rebellion and revolution or tumult is not the tithe of a thousandth part of that which can be inferred from the action of Mr. Blount.

When Mr. Blount came to that island everything was serene and peaceful. Everybody had acquiesced, the Queen included, in the situation. He had not been there two days before by an act a thousand times more significant than anything even Stevens is charged with, he incited all of the trouble, the rebellious feeling, the insurrectionary disposition, which for a time seemed to have been laid at rest; and then under those circumstances he notified the committee of the league (which, I think, he says somewhere in his report comprised 8,000 native Hawaiians), that the flag being out of the way, the troops off the island, I here, a special commissioner, am ready to receive you; and he says in regard to lowering the flag:

This was done in order that, when the committee called, the ensign would have been hauled down and the troops ordered aboard of their vessels, and I could state freely to the committee that it was not my purpose to interfere in their domestic concerns; that the United States troops would not be used to maintain or restore any form of government, but simply to protect the persons and property of American citizens.

But the flag that he struck was there at the request of the Provisional Government, which our Government had recognized and to which he had been accredited. He met this committee, nineteen members. They presented to him the resolutions, desiring that they be transmitted to the President of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to ask him a question? If he has it before him, I wish he would point out the request made by the Provisional Government for the putting up of the flag.

Mr. DAVIS. It is in one of the documents submitted by the President to the Senate within a few days. It is in a dispatch from Mr. Stevens to Mr. Gresham, wherein he goes on at length reciting the apprehended intrigue of the British commissioner, the presence of an additional Japanese man-of-war, a translation of declarations of the Japanese captain, the wish and desire of President Dole that the marines should be landed—in short, giving a full and explicit reason for their presence there. Now, I can not give the page, and it is asking too much in the manner in which I am speaking to request it.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg leave to say that the act of raising the flag was in conjunction with the act declaring the protectorate of the United States Government over Hawaii. I was not quite certain whether the raising of the flag and the declaration or assertion of a protectorate were contemporaneous acts.

Mr. DAVIS. I hear the Senator imperfectly. The history of that protectorate was this, to go back to the beginning. In the first place, Mr. Stevens established a protectorate there, general in its character, while the treaty should be under consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, was that point of time——

Mr. DAVIS. I do not propose to be cross-examined.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I am asking——

Mr. DAVIS. That is just the amount of the interruption.

Mr. MORGAN. I am asking for information and seeking for information strictly.

Mr. DAVIS. The idea of the Senator from Alabama asking me for information!

Mr. MORGAN. Of course.

Mr. DAVIS. He is the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and his memory and capacity to assimilate and store away all subjects are marvelous to contemplate.

Mr. MORGAN. I am asking for information, and in perfect good faith. I want to know whether the flag was raised at the time the protectorate was established?

Mr. DAVIS. Which protectorate does the Senator refer to?

Mr. MORGAN. The one that Stevens asserted over the island.

Mr. DAVIS. I can not say as to that matter of detail.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the point about which I am uncertain. I wish, however, to remind the Senator of the fact that Mr. Foster distinctly disavowed the protectorate over the island in his dispatch to Mr. Stevens, and I do not know what the flag could be doing there without the protectorate, or what the protectorate could be doing there without the flag.

Mr. DAVIS. So much for the interview which Mr. Blount had with the members of the league within two days after he landed on the island, praying for the restoration of the monarchy and the deposition of the Government to which he was accredited. Shortly afterward he received a long petition from the Hawaiian political league, another affair it seems, numerously signed, which states:

> Therefore, we submit to you our humble petition and statements, as you are in possession of vast powers in your mission to do justice to the Hawaiian people, our independence, the throne, and the Hawaiian flag; we beg you to restore our beloved Queen Liliuokalani to the throne with the independence of the Hawaiian people, as you have restored the Hawaiian flag.

That no United States minister should correspond with any private citizen is the plainest dictate of international law if it were not against the plain provision of our statute. About the 26th of April (in this case he notified Commissioner Dole of his intention) he called upon Queen Liliuokalani and took her statement, negotiated with her upon the subject, took her version of the transaction and her claims. But, as I have said, he made no attempt to take the version of Mr. Stevens or Mr. Dole. On the 31st of May he did another extraordinary act. Accredited to the Provisional Government as the lord paramount in all matters concerning the political relations between the two countries, he placed himself in correspondence with the Queen in her royal character, and with her cabinet in their official capacity; received petitions in that character and in that capacity from the Queen as Queen, from Samuel Parker, as minister of foreign affairs; W. H. Cornwell, as minister of finance; John F. Colburn, as minister of the interior, and A. P. Peterson, as attorney-general. It thus concludes:

> In view of the facts stated above, which can not be controverted, and in view of the fact that your investigations concerning the matter are shortly likely to terminate, we, Liliuokalani and her cabinet, who formed the Government of the Hawaiian Islands on the 17th of January last having surrendered that Government to the superior force of the United States of America, now most respectfully ask that you use your good offices in undoing the acts of a representative of your great country and place the Government of the Hawaiian Islands as Mr. Stevens found them. Believing that the principle of justice which has ever dominated American action will prevail in this instance, we remain,
>
> Yours, respectfully
>
> LILIUOKALANI, R.
> SAMUEL PARKER,
> Minister of Foreign Affairs.
> WM. H. CORNWELL, > Minister of Finance.
> JOHN F. COLBURN, > Minister of Interior.
> A. P. PETERSON,
> Attorney-General.

Accredited to President Dole, with letters which bore assurances of good faith, and, if I construe the language correctly, an implied wish for the stability and perpetuity of the Government over which Mr. Dole presided, Commissioner Blount entered into diplomatic relations with a deposed Queen, she signing her name in royal form and in her royal capacity and her former ministers countersigning in their official character, received a petition from her and them in her royal capacity and their official capacity, requesting him to use his good offices to overthrow the Government to which he had been accredited, a government of Americans, of Englishmen, of our own blood, presided over by a man of American birth or derivation, and to turn those vast interests, these our kith and kin, over to the barbarous and revengeful administration of a government which had been successfully rebelled against and overthrown. A more glaring diplomatic malversation never was committed; and that it is plainly in violation of the statute which I have read in the hearing of the Senate can not, I think, be controverted for a moment.

And upon this testimony, this history, these transactions, the President of the United States in his annual message states that Mr. Blount's report shows his conclusions to be true beyond all question. He states that the constitutional government of Hawaii had been subverted through the active aid of the representative of our Government, and through the intimidation caused by the presence of an armed naval force of the United States, which was landed for the purpose at the instance of our minister. His conclusion is:

> Upon the facts developed it seemed to me the only honorable course for our Government to pursue was to undo the wrong that had been done by those representing us and to restore as far as practicable the status existing at the time of our forcible intervention. With a view of accomplishing this result within the constitutional limits of executive power, and recognizing all our obligations and responsibilities growing out of any changed conditions brought about by our unjustifiable interference, our present minister at Honolulu has received appropriate instructions to that end. Thus far no information of the accomplishment of any definite results has been received from him.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to ascertain and to discuss for a moment from what source the President of the United States derived his authority to arbitrate this great question. Who made him and by what processes did he become the judge of the case between an overthrown monarchy and a republic which took its place? Much has been said about the terms of Queen Liliuokalani's abdication, but when did any falling monarch ever fail to file a caveat with contemporaries and posterity to that effect? It is addressed to no person. It was never formally accepted by anybody, and no convention has ever been made between the Hawaiian Government which Mr. Cleveland, following the example of President Harrison, has recognized or the former government of the Queen and ourselves that such an arbitration should take place.

But there is a consideration back of all this, and back of anything I have said upon this subject, which to me is decisive. What the Queen of the Hawaiian Kingdom meant and understood to be meant in the letter of abdication, was that the question of recognition was to be submitted to the United States; and I assert it as a sound legal proposition, in view and in the light of all the circumstances of this transaction, that the very question which the President of the United States has reopened here was settled when President Harrison recognized the Provisional Government. The act of recognition is all-comprehending so far as bringing a nation into existence. It is a deliberate judgment by the recognizing nation that the recognized government has a valid right to be, has come into being rightfully, and has the right to continue. It is in its very nature an irrevocable act. Who ever heard of any civilized country retracting any recognition which it had given to a foreign country? Like an executed grant, it is incapable of revocation because the right has vested and can not be taken away.

Queen Liliuokalani's protest was received at the State Department on the 3d day of February, 1893, and the treaty, I think, was not concluded until the 13th day of that month. Her representatives were here at the time. The case was heard and determined, and wisely determined by President Harrison, and it does not lie in the capacity of any succeeding Administration to open it for readjudication. And the Queen passively acquiesced in that construction of her act of abdication, and in the conclusive effect of President Harrison's recognition of the Provisional Government, until she was enticed to renew her claims by the action of the present Administration.

Mr. President, it has seemed to become a propensity to restore royalty, ignorant, savage, alien royalty, over American people. But in these days of restoring monarchies, suppose the President of the United States should conceive that President Harrison has been imposed upon, misled, by the recognition of President Peixoto, who succeeded to the fallen Empire of Dom Pedro in Brazil. The recognition in that case was prompt. Suppose the President should determine to reopen the question and to send a minister there to stand before President Peixoto and say, "I have become satisfied that my predecessor was misled, that your Government was not established with the consent of the Brazilian people, and therefore you are required to relinquish your power to the lineal descendant and heir of Dom Pedro, whoever he may be."

If this power exists in the President of the United States, it exists in the successive Presidents to undo the act of a President who has recognized another government. The same thing might be done to President Carnot; it might have been done to President Thiers, who was the first President of the now existing French Republic. Suppose the President of the United States should take it into his head that the French Republic was wrongfully established and not with the consent of the French people, and a paramount emissary, emissary at once and ambassador, should be sent to France accredited to "his great and good friend," President Carnot, with authority over our Army and Navy, and that France were in distress, and that as an emissary he should consort with Bourbons, with Orleanists, with Bonapartists, with anarchists, with every political element of which French political complexion is composed. Suppose that then, having so consorted as an emissary, without giving those to whom he was accredited a chance to be heard, he should stand forth as an ambassador before the French President and say "the President of the United States is convinced that the French Republic was not established with the consent of the French people; a great wrong has been done. Therefore, you are required to relinquish the republican power which you now hold to the emperor of the Bonaparte family, or the king of the French, whoever he may be, of the other royal houses in the line of lineal descent."

Mr. President, many questions and illustrations of this kind press upon the mind while one is speaking, but the limitations of time do not warrant more extended remarks. They suggest themselves.

It is said we do not want colonies and that we do not need the Hawaiian Islands. I am not in favor of a colonial system such as Great Britain has, and such as France is striving for, but I want to see my country well defended, and her hold upon the enormous commerce of the future in the Pacific Ocean assured. That the Sandwich Islands were in time to be an indispensable element of the prosperity, protection, and defense of our country has been a cardinal theory with every statesman who ever sat in the chair of Secretary of State from the beginning of the question down to the present time, the present occupant excepted.

Humboldt predicted seventy years ago that the greatest maritime commerce of the planet would be carried on on the Pacific. If you take the globe and look north of the equator and then to the south of it you will see that the islands of the Pacific Ocean, except the Sandwich Islands and the Alaskan group, are south of the equator. Germany, France, and England have partitioned that archipelago south of the equator. They have hitherto kept their hands off the Hawaiian Islands. Those are the only islands of any importance north of the equator until we almost touch the coast of Asia, except the Alaskan group. They stand where commerce from the Nicaragua Canal, if it shall ever be constructed, must touch. They stand where ships from Callao and Valparaiso must touch. They stand where every ship that goes from San Francisco or Victoria to New Zealand or Australia must touch. They are 2,100 miles from the city of San Francisco. They are 2,100 miles from the midway island of the Alaskan group, an island with capacious harbors fit for a naval station. The Russian Government, our ancient and immemorial friend, is building a railway across the continent of Asia destined for a port near by; and her relations and ours have always been such that, under those circumstances, from the Hawaiian Islands, from the Alaskan islands, from San Francisco, we can make our commerce safe and dominate that waste of waters. That is the kind of acquisition and the kind of protection I want for my country, its future and its commerce.

Mr. President, this is a great question—great in its facts, great in its constituional aspect. The American people will be the judges in this controversy. They are adjudicating it now. In the midst of distress, of financial disorder which the panacea of legislative action has not cured; with the mine sterile, the shuttle motionless, the wheel still, the factory sending up neither pillar of cloud by day nor pillar of fire by night; with hunger and cold in thousands of homes; with the fear of a relentless party policy respecting financial and economic legislation which threatens to intensify all this distress into a deeper agony, the American people have paused to consider this subject, and they will settle it in the sublime tribunal of the nation's judgment. [Applause.]

Mr. TURPIE. I ask that the resolution heretofore submitted by me in relation to the policy respecting Hawaii be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. TURPIE on the 8th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That from the facts and papers laid before us by the Executive and other sources it is unwise, inexpedient, and not in accordance with the character and dignity of the United States to consider further at this time either the treaty or project of annexation of the Hawaiian territory to this country; that the Provisional Government therein having been duly recognized, the highest international interests require that it shall pursue its own line of polity. Foreign intervention in the political affairs of these islands will be regarded as an act unfriendly to the Government of the United States.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, the Sandwich Islands, the site of the Hawaiian people, were discovered by Capt. Cook in 1778. They are thirteen in number, four of considerable size; the rest are smaller, some of them are mere dots on the surface of the deep. They lie near together in the form of a curve or crescent, in a genial climate within the tropics, about halfway between the two continents whose opposite shores bound the North Pacific.

At the time of their discovery the inhabitants of each were under the separate government of independent native chiefs, having a tribal polity somewhat akin to that of the North American Indians. This political condition obtained until 1790, when Kamehameha the First, who seems to have been the Cæsar of this distant island group, reduced the inhabitants of all the islands to his rule. He achieved the sovereignty of the whole, united them under one government, took and maintained the title of king, and was the founder of the Hawaiian monarchy. He died in 1824 and was succeeded by his son Kamehameha the Second, and the crown afterward descended in the regular line of inheritance until 1891, when the late queen, a lineal descendant of the first conqueror, became the sovereign by the death of her brother, King Kalakaua.

During the period from 1840 to 1845 the Hawaiian Kingdom was recognized by the United States, France, England, and other foreign powers as an independent nation; its capital became the residence of a diplomatic corps more or less numerous, and has ever since continued to be such. Much progress was made by this people under the monarchy.

The natives abandoned idolatry, adopted the Christian religion and worship, discarded the costume and customs of their former life, engaged in commerce and agriculture, gradually acquired many of the traits and usages of European civilization. At the same time the islands received a large accession of population by migration from Asia, from Europe, and especially from the United States.

The Hawaiian monarchy, absolute at first, was much modified by these internal changes. It became in later years constitutional in form, with a legislative body of two chambers, one of which is chosen by the votes of the people, a cabinet, and organized departments, with a seat of government located at Honolulu, where the first King had fixed his residence.

The personnel of the monarchy had meanwhile somewhat declined. The descendants of the race of Kamehameha did not retain its old prowess, prudence, or vigor. Dissatisfaction with the administration of public affairs was rife in 1892, especially among the foreign element of the population, which had become numerous, wealthy, and influential, and at last culminated in open revolt against the royal authority.

On the 17th of January last the Hawaiian Republic was proclaimed, the Provisional Government was organized, took possession of the public buildings, archives, and other property without resistance, and has held undisturbed possession ever since. The revolution was as bloodless and peaceable as that which deposed the Emperor Dom Pedro in Brazil, or that which brought about the fall of Louis Philippe in France and the republic of Lamartine.

Nevertheless, as it was in the instances mentioned, so in this it is a fact accomplished. This Provisional Government thus established was recognized by the American minister resident a very short time after it had been proclaimed, and the same action has been taken by the representatives of other foreign governments who maintain legations at Honolulu.

The recognition of a government de facto has always been accounted an act of the gravest moment.

It is an act of one power, supreme and sovereign, respecting the existence of another of a like character. It can not be revised except upon the supposition of a power paramount, which is contrary to the postulate of sovereignty itself.

It follows, then, that although recognition may be deferred, although it may be withheld for further advisement or it may be altogether denied, yet once granted it is a finality; like the word spoken, like the arrow sped, like the shot fired, it is beyond recall. Recognition may cease after it has been given, but it ceases only when another government arises and displaces the one which had before been acknowledged.

The force of the act of recognition is not at all affected by the form of the new government, or by the means which may have been used to establish it. Who has forgotten what Victor Hugo called "The crime of December," the coup d'état of Louis Napoleon in 1851, by which the republic was destroyed and the empire built upon its ruin? Yet the United States recognized the empire so constructed, and for almost twenty years continued to deal with it as the Government of France.

By the events of last January President Dole became the head of the Provisional Government. He is the recognized chief magistrate of the Hawaiian people. He is one among the rulers of the earth. He ranks in degree with the President of this Union, with the daughter of a hundred kings who sits enthroned at Windsor.

It is true the territorial extent of the new republic is not great, but its arable area is as large as that of Switzerland—the most ancient of existing commonwealths.

It very much exceeds that of Attica, the most famous republic of antiquity. Honolulu with its adjacent territory is much larger than any of the free cities with their appendant lands, which toward the close of the feudal era gave to the Teutonic race its first lessons in civil, political, and commercial liberty.

These free cities were within their own limits independent—cosmopolitan also in their population. Strangers and foreigners were welcomed to the various guilds, were admitted to the civic franchises, enrolled in the military force, lived and labored in all respects as natives. Honolulu is just such a capital, composed of many nationalities, containing an element well versed in all the arts and interests of civilization.

The adjacent lands are inhabited by a native race—docile, tractable, very amenable to law, not averse to labor, tilling a fertile soil, worthy and capable of yet greater progress. Why may not this metropolis with its adjacent lands continue to be, and rejoice in being, the free city of the Pacific; the site of a republic truly ocean-bound?

The independence of the Hawaiian nation was guaranteed by France and England as early as the treaty of 1843 in these terms:

> Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and His Majesty the King of the French, taking into consideration the existence in the Sandwich Islands of a government capable of providing for the regularity of its relations with foreign nations, have thought it right to engage reciprocally to consider the Sandwich Islands as an independent state, and never to take possession, either directly or under the title of a protectorate or under any other form, of any part of the territory of which they are composed.

The signatory powers have always observed and the United States has carefully respected it, though not a party to it, declaring at the same time that it constantly preferred Hawaiian independence. Thus Mr. Webster, Secretary of State, says in 1842, the year before the conclusion of the treaty which I have quoted:

> The United States, therefore, is more interested in the fate of the islands and of their Government than any other nation can be; and this consideration induces the President to be quite willing to declare, as the sense of the Government of the United States, that the Government of the Sandwich Islands ought to be respected; that no power ought either to take possession of the islands as a conquest or for the purpose of colonization, and that no power ought to seek for any undue control over the existing Government, or any exclusive privileges or preferences with it in matters of commerce.

And Mr. Bayard took the same ground in 1885, in his note to the British Government, explaining the concession of Pearl Harbor, "that this contained in its terms nothing to impair the political sovereignty of Hawaii."

Mr. Blaine made the following statement in 1891 on behalf of the Government of the United States:

> It firmly believes that the position of the Hawaiian Islands, as the key to the dominion of the American Pacific, demands their benevolent neutrality, to which end it will earnestly coöperate with the native Government.

These relations, mutual and general, between the United States, other countries, and Hawaii have been of long standing, recognized by all nations, and are in full force to-day, and they are as applicable to the new republic as to the old monarchy. Hawaiian sovereignty may have been somewhat protected by international jealousy, but it is protected yet more by international indifference. Foreign governments have shown no desire at any time to acquire the sovereignty of the islands or the corresponding duties and responsibilities which would accompany such dominion.

A very formal and elaborate protectorate on paper was established during the reign of the first Kamehameha by personal negotiation it is said between that King and George III, the King of the Hawaiian monarchy being then in London. The British Government never approved of it and never took any possession or exercised any rights under it whatever, disclaiming what they stated would be the difficulties which would meet a European power stationed there as sovereign, or even in the capacity of a protectorate.

For many months—I speak now in respect of the protection afforded by international indifference—a treaty of annexation has been pending here before this body and in this Capitol. No word of objection or dissent by any foreign power has been made thereto, and no foreign power has done so much as to ask a word of explanation. When we bought Pearl Harbor, in the Sandwich Islands, the British Government addressed a note to the Secretary of State, then Mr. Bayard, asking an explanation of the transaction; but here is a treaty pending for months, having in view the absolute annexation of the whole group to this Union, and not a foreign government has said a word or addressed a note to any officer of this Government with respect to such acquisition.

Indeed it is very clear from this unanimous attitude of silence that the civilized powers interested would, if we were content with its propriety or justice, be gratified if we should assume the sovereignty of the Sandwich Islands. They would then have, what they have not always had—a tribunal permanent and responsible, to whom might be submitted the very difficult and delicate commercial and maritime differences which often arise at the ports of these islands.

Let us believe that the same stability and permanency may be realized from the rise of the new government. The autonomy of the Hawaiian country is not only secured by treaty, guaranteed by general acquiescence, but is at this time supported by the good will and friendly offices of the whole society of nations.

There is nothing in the way of Hawaiian national advancement, there is nothing of obstruction to their peaceful and prosperous progress, except those difficulties which ordinarily make the problems of statesmanship which time and patience may solve, which a wise and just ruler may compose or overcome. No protectorate can add anything to the prestige of the new government. Annexation would erase and destroy it.

The annexation of one nationality to another necessarily destroys the nationality of that annexed—it is merged into another, it henceforth disappears from among the list of nations.

Those great writers, the international statesmen of the world who have from age to age recorded and compiled the practice and usages of nations, and have so formed that code called the law of the nations, have always represented the extinction of a nation as a misfortune, a great catastrophe, to be regretted and deplored.

Public opinion among all peoples has justified this sentiment. The extinction of Poland, though long ago accomplished, is still keenly felt. The prolonged subjugation and disappearance of Greece was for many centuries the subject of regret and sorrow, and how gladly the governments and peoples of the whole civilized world have welcomed the restoration of Grecian nationality to which we were all so much indebted, and the return of this ancient people to their former place in the circle of the family of nations. This family is not large: it only embraces now within the cycle of ordinary international intercourse about forty in number. One of the number, even the least, is missed from this illustrious society.

Hence what is called annexation, according to the usages of governments, civilized and enlightened, has been at all times accompanied not only by treaty, but by some precedent action of popular national assent and approval on the part of those to be affected by it.

Of course, one nation may lawfully acquire territory from another without such assent or action, as by purchase or by absolute right of conquest, as we ourselves acquired it from France and Mexico. But these acquisitions did not touch in any way the national life or existence of the nations from which they were made. They only changed the condition and allegiance of the portion of the countries ceded.

The peaceable or voluntary merging of one nation into another is a thing of rare occurrence. In modern Europe perhaps the instance most nearly approaching our idea of annexation was the addition of Savoy and Nice to France in 1860. At the close of the war jointly conducted by the Emperor Napoleon and the King of Sardinia against the Austrian possession and dominion in Italy, the joint victors in that contest, at perfect amity with each other and having the absolute right of conquerors, desired to readjust national boundaries and to change in some degree the map of Southern Europe; in the language of the time, "to rectify the frontier." It was therefore proposed that Savoy and Nice, provinces theretofore of the Italian Kingdom, should be ceded to France, but this was made conditional expressly upon the prior assent of the people concerned.

A plebiscite was ordered, and on the 15th day of April, 1860, an election was held in each of these provinces, the question being submitted for or against annexation to France. A very full vote was polled, and a very large majority of the electors voted in each of the two for annexation, which was accordingly consummated, and these countries have ever since been and to-day are a part of the French domain.

The very celebrated instance in our own annals has a similar history, and is perhaps the only example of the annexation, pure and simple, of one nation by another in modern times. Texas was an independent republic. Its people by their vote—their ballots, expressed in due form through the legislative and executive departments of their government—tendered with entire unanimity the offer of annexation to the United States. I have been told that there were not fifty persons living within the vast dominion of the Republic of Texas who were opposed to annexation either during the pendency of the treaty or at the time that the fact was consummated.

The people of this country voted on the same question in its favor, determining one Presidential election upon that issue; so that the annexation of Texas received, as may be said, a double ratification and assent.

Thus, in accordance with these historic precedents, the first step, the imperative condition precedent to the consideration of the proposition of annexation, is the expressed desire and previous assent of the people of Hawaii.

Whatever may be the powers of the Provisional Government—and I grant that they are full and plenary, as those of the oldest and best established forms of polity—it can not be assumed that any government per se, without legislative and popular action, is authorized to conclude a treaty for its own destruction, and for the extinction of the nationality which it represents. There should be concurrent with such treaty offer an explicit prior expression of the popular will before it can rightfully become even the subject of negotiation.

The fact that this island country is weak, that they are a feeble folk, neither rich nor numerous, is only an additional reason why the Government of this nation should exhibit toward it the deference and delicacy of treatment demanded by the highest principles of justice and fair dealing.

The question is not whether Hawaii is weak or strong, whether it be powerful or otherwise; but whether its people have so lost their attachment to their own nationality as to be ready and willing to abandon their national life and being and to merge the same into ours. Let this be first determined by a free ballot of that population under their own laws. They instituted the ballot many years ago and they are accustomed to its use.

There is a native population in the islands of about 40,000. They are not illiterate; they are not ignorant. A very large majority can read and write both languages, English and Hawaiian, and they take a very lively and intelligent interest in the affairs of their own country. This is an element which on the proposition of annexation is to be consulted prior to any other; it must accompany any treaty; and any treaty which had been made without consulting this element was properly withdrawn and ought never to have been entertained.

There is another reason of the gravest character why consideration at this time of the proposal of annexation is inopportune and premature. It is believed by many, it has been extensively bruited and widely credited, that the late minister of this country at Honolulu, Mr. Stevens, was a participant in the Hawaiian revolution, aided and abetted its promoters in the formation of the new government and in the subsequent proffer of annexation.

It is quite clear that this opinion is entertained, and that it has been expressed in the most public and official manner by the present Chief Magistrate of the United States and by the Secretary of State, specially in charge of our foreign affairs and relations. Proper respect for the opinion of those in administration of the executive department of this Government must give us pause in this transaction, when it is charged that the public representative of the United States in a foreign country became the accomplice of those engaged in the design of overthrowing the government to which he had been commissioned. Such an offense is a high crime and misdemeanor against the law of nations, against the confidences and intercourse of the civilized world.

No nation, whatever may be its greatness and authority, can create an ambassador or minister. Two must concur therein. One government may send a person duly appointed and commissioned, but the government to which he is sent must receive him before he becomes such.

The act of receiving is as free and independent as the act of sending. If the government to which he is sent declines to receive him, this is no breach of amity nor cause of quarrel. The act of refusal may be with or without reasons given.

The act of reception alone fully attests and recognizes his diplomatic character. This dual condition of his creation implies obligations upon his part of a similar character. His most important and active duties are due to the country which he represents, yet he has duties more passive and negative in their kind, though of as binding obligation, to the government whereto he is sent. He owes to the government to which he is accredited, to its laws, customs, and course of administration, respectful acquiescence, deference, and assent. It is because of his presumed sense of obligation to these requirements that he is received.

Upon this subject the Nestor and father of international law holds the following language—and all writers upon that topic concur:

> The inviolability of a public minister, or the protection to which he has a more sacred and particular claim than any other person, whether native or foreigner, is not the only privilege he enjoys. The universal practice of nations allows him moreover an entire independence of the jurisdiction and authority of the state in which he resides. * * * This independency of a foreign minister is not to be converted into licentiousness.
>
> It does not excuse him from conforming to the customs and laws of the country in all his external actions; so far as they are unconnected with the object of his mission and character he is independent, but he has not a right to do whatever he pleases. * * * He must not avail himself of his independency for the purpose of violating these laws and customs. He should rather punctually conform to them although the magistrate has no compulsory power over him, and he is especially bound to a religious observance of the rules of justice. As to what concerns the prince to whom he is sent the embassador should remember that his ministry is a ministry of peace and that it is only on that footing that he is received.
>
> This reason forbids his engaging in any evil machinations. Let him serve his own master without injuring the prince who receives him. It is a base treachery to take advantage of the inviolability of the embassadorial character for the purpose of plotting in security the ruin of those who respect that character; of clandestinely injuring them, or of embroiling or ruining their affairs. What would be infamous and abominable in a private guest, shall that be allowable and becoming in the representative of a sovereign?—Vattel, chapter 6, title Am.

It will be observed, Mr. President, how felicitously the analogy is drawn between the position of a visitor at a private house and a public representative residing in a foreign country. They stand on the same footing, as they should; for, sir, when you approach a man's house, it may be the humblest home, and knock at the door, and are bidden to come in and enter in that manner, there is a tacit obligation, known of all men, that in coming you bring and in departing you leave your peace upon that house and upon all them that dwell therein. Persons acting differently are not counted as true men. "As spies, to see the nakedness of the land are ye come."

The minister should be a careful observer of, but not at all an actor in, the public affairs of the country where he is temporarily residing. Especially does this rule of conduct obtain in times of political commotion, in periods of revolution, either threatened or actual. He must observe thorough impartiality between hostile parties in the country of his residence. He can not rightfully take sides, much less can he take arms or use the same for or against either party. These are elementary principles of the law regulating diplomatic intercourse.

Now, it is clear from the tenor of the very curious account which Mr. Stevens has given of his official conduct in Hawaii during the recent revolution there, to be found on pages 177 to 181 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of date 14th of December last, that he fully understood this law laid down by Vattel and was well acquainted with these principles.

The relation which he gives of the events of the Hawaiian revolution is manifestly not that of an enemy. He speaks in the highest terms of eulogy of the conduct of its promoters, and glows in the account of its result as having given them the best government which these islands have ever enjoyed; yet he earnestly disclaims having taken any part in this action of others which he so much commends. He is convinced, he is well persuaded, that certain persons in a foreign country may do some things, with greatest credit to themselves, which an American minister could not do and could not lawfully be concerned in.

The minister claims to have acted only as the neutral representative of a foreign friendly power. Do the facts in the case place and keep him in this position?

The first document, as far as known, ever issued by the founders of the Hawaiian revolutionary government was a letter directed to the American minister by name, signed by the members of the committee of safety, and dated January 16, 1893, before the first public step had been taken in their proceedings.

I will ask my friend from Georgia to read it for me.

Mr. GORDON read as follows:

HAWAIIAN ISLANDS, HONOLULU, January 16, 1893.

SIR: We, the undersigned, citizens and residents of Honolulu, respectfully represent that, in view of recent public events in this Kingdom, culminating in the revolutionary acts of Queen Liliuokalani on Saturday last, the public safety is menaced and lives and property are in peril, and we appeal to you and the United States forces at your command for assistance.

The Queen, with the aid of armed force and accompanied by threats of violence and bloodshed from those with whom she was acting, attempted to proclaim a new constitution; and while prevented for the time from accomplishing her object, declared publicly that she would only defer her action.

This conduct and action was upon an occasion and under circumstances which have created general alarm and terror.

We are unable to protect ourselves without aid, and therefore pray for the protection of the United States forces.

HENRY E. COOPER,
F. W. McCHESNEY,
W. C. WILDER,
C. SOLTE,
A. BROWN,
WILLIAM O. SMITH,
HENRY WATERHOUSE,
THEO. F. LANSING,
ED. SUHR,
L. A. THURSTON,
JOHN EMMELUTH,
WM. R. CASTLE,
J. A. McCANDLESS,
Citizens' Committee of Safety.

His Excellency JOHN L. STEVENS,
American Minister Resident.

Mr. TURPIE. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Georgia.

Was ever a revolution before begun with such a patent, open, notorious acknowledgment of its want of power to sustain itself? "We appeal to you, to the United States forces, for assistance. We are unable to protect ourselves. We therefore pray for the protection of the United States forces."

Why was such a message sent at all, and why was it sent to the American minister? A committee of public safety inaugurated the government of the national defense in Paris after Sedan and the fall of Napoleon, but they sent no such message to Minister Washburne.

Those who attacked the Government of Balmaceda in Chile were surrounded by armed enemies, by life and property endangered, wholly without police or legal forces. Did they send such a message as this to Minister Egan? Did Admiral Mello begin his attack upon the Government of the Republic in Brazil with such a letter to the American or any other foreign minister?

The very philosophy of revolutions is that the promoters thereof do not lack, but do have and hold, the power to protect themselves and their adherents, to discharge all the ordinary functions of government for the security of life and property, and to place the administration of affairs upon new lines of right and justice better than those of the old régime.

There is only one explanation possible of this very singular missive. The men who sent it knew beforehand that it would be received, and that their request for assistance, the assistance of the United States forces, would be granted. Minister Stevens says he received and read this letter, and that he made no response.

But in this he is mistaken. He ordered the United States marines from the man-of-war Boston, then in the harbor, to land. They landed fully armed and equipped for active service, and with a train of two pieces of artillery they were marched under the direction of the minister to Arion Hall, a strategic point near the Hawaiian capitol, the same Government building which this committee entered and took possession of the next day, and from the front steps of which they read the proclamation establishing the Provisional Government.

I have called Arion Hall a strategic point. I do so upon the authority of a very brave and skillful officer of the Navy, having long experience in the service and especially in those seas. I will take the liberty of asking my friend from Georgia to read the letter of Admiral Skerrett.

Mr. GORDON read as follows:

UNITED STATES STEAMSHIP BOSTON,
FLAGSHIP OF THE PACIFIC STATION,
Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, May 20, 1893.

SIR: I have examined, with a view of inspection, the premises first occupied by the force landed from the United States steamer Boston, and known as Arion Hall, situated on the west side of the Government building. The position of this location is in the rear of a large brick building known as Music Hall. The street it faces is comparatively a narrow one, the building itself facing the Government building. In my opinion, it was unadvisable to locate the troops there, if they were landed for the protection of the United States citizens, being distantly removed from the business portion of the town, and generally far away from the United States legation and consulate-general, as well as being distant from the houses and residences of United States citizens. It will be seen from the accompanying sketch that had the Provisional Government troops been attacked from the east, such attack would have placed them in the line of fire.

Had Music Hall been seized by the Queen's troops, they would have been under their fire, had such been their desire. It is for these reasons that I consider the position occupied as illy selected. Naturally, if they were landed with a view to support the Provisional Government troops, then occupying the Government building, it was a wise choice, as they could enfilade any troops attacking them from the palace grounds in front. There is nothing further for me to state with reference to this matter, and as has been called by you to my attention—all of which is submitted for your consideration.

Very respectfully,

J. S. SKERRETT,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy,
Commanding United States Naval Force, Pacific Station.

Col. J. H. BLOUNT,
United States Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary, Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. TURPIE. Minister Stevens, in that dispatch to which I have alluded, which is placed in the record, gives a very long picturesque detail as to why Arion Hall was selected as the place for posting the troops on the evening of the disembarkation. He would have us believe that it was an accident. Mr. President, it was accident very curious; it was an accident of extreme ductility, much prolonged. This accident lasted quite a while. It continued to occur for two days and two nights, until the Provisional Government had been proclaimed, recognized, and established. Not until after that did the accident happen to cease.

These troops were landed fully armed and equipped. The committee had asked of the minister the assistance of the United States forces. This was the response. Action is stronger than ink. Mr. Stevens says he ordered the troops to land for the purpose of protecting life and property. Whose life and whose property? The life and property of those of the committee of public safety, who had engaged in the design of overthrowing the Government to which he had been accredited?

Mr. Stevens says there was for two days no government in Honolulu. If this were true it did not destroy the sovereignty of the Hawaiian people; it did not abrogate the treaty relations between Hawaii and the United States. The government is neither the people nor the nation of a country. It is only the representative of such people and of such nation. Supposing there had been no government in Honolulu for two days, did that authorize the American minister to make one, or to be concerned in its formation?

Then Mr. Stevens goes on with very lengthy magniloquence to have us infer that these two days of interregnum was a very extraordinary and unexampled thing. It is the most common, the most ordinary occurrence. Whenever revolutionary conditions obtain, it is usually much longer than two days. Within the memory of living men it has been many days in Paris, the capital of one of the chief nations in the world. I allude now to the time of the flight of Louis Philippe and his deposition, and to the fall of Napoleon after his captivity, after he was taken by the enemy.

Two days is a very short interregnum. There is always this period of political oscillation between the parties, one of whom is striving to enter and the other is striving to resist ouster from the seat of authority. It is a well-known signal of revolutionary crises. But what principle is there in international law, or what precedent is there in the action of any ambassador from any civilized country at any time for taking such a period for interference with the domestic affairs of the government where he resides? On the contrary, the law is plainly laid down that at such a period his attitude should be one of absolute, impartial indifference.

Why, sir, this interregnum is a period when that official class who hold the offices under all governments and all forms of government with elastic allegiance—even this class is at a loss. They do not find the men to report to, they do not know to whom to direct their correspondence, and the official files are lumbered with unconsidered matter until a master appears at the head of the new government, the government de facto. This interregnum is that period made sacred by the right of revolution, defined in the great Declaration, the right of the people at any time to alter or abolish their form of government, and to adopt another better calculated, as they may deem, to secure their safety and happiness.

Such was the right of the people of Hawaii during that very period. It was a right not to be questioned, not to be denied, not to be defeated, not to be interfered with by any American, and, above all, not to be interferred with by an American minister or ambassador.

Mr. Stevens says he disembarked these forces "to preserve the peace and public order." Is the United States charged with the duty of keeping the peace and preserving public order in all the countries to which we send diplomatic representatives by preventing civil war therein, by a display of overwhelming military force in aid of the combatants on one side or the other of such contest?

There is no rule of the law of nations which justifies or requires such an intervention by any foreign minister, or which recognizes the existence of such an international police. This interpretation of the law would involve this Government in a perpetual military crusade around the planet.

Much as I admire and confide in the skill and valor of our military and naval forces, I doubt if they would be equal to such an enormous service. Great as are the pecuniary resources of our country, they would soon be exhausted by the expenditures of such an extended campaign. The protection afforded by our ministers under such circumstances in a foreign country relates only to the life and property of American citizens—neutral, noncombatant—who may claim or be entitled thereto, or to the public property of the United States at the consulate or legation.

The maintenance of peace and order relates to the same persons, places, premises, and subject-matter. Mr. Stevens made a landing and disposition of the troops at a long distance from, and with no reference to, such persons or premises, or to any such object as their protection. Mr. Stevens said nothing about the protection of life and property of our citizens at Honolulu at the time of the disembarkation of the troops. I am not speaking now of official orders. Official orders under such circumstances are always and everywhere in the same language, in the same words. I am not speaking about that. They have forms for this. I am speaking of his conference with the members of the revolutionary committee. He said nothing at the time of that conference about the protection of the life and property of American citizens; he said nothing at that time about the Japanese invasion, the English invasion, or the urban perils by night or day in the city, to which he devotes so much space in a subsequent account of these events.

It is evident that all these are merely afterpieces of wretched pretense and of feigned profession, used as a mask to hide the grosser and more indelicate features of his official malfeasance. The troops were landed and posted with their arms and artillery within easy supporting distance of the armed followers of the revolutionary committee because the minister of the United States had previously engaged and undertaken to render this assistance.

I quote now the testimony of a witness, F. W. Wundenburg, from the report of the special commissioner of the President, which Mr. Stevens had evidently read when he sent his dispatch to the Senate. He controverts, or undertakes to controvert, a great deal in the report of the special commissioner; but he does not controvert one word of the statement which I shall read.

Mr. F. W. Wundenburg, a citizen of Honolulu, was an earnest enemy of the monarchy, a steadfast supporter of the revolution from the beginning. After the establishment of the Provisional Government of Hawaii he was tendered the lucrative position of collector-general of customs. During the early days of the republic he held for it a post of great responsibility.

This is his statement concerning the action of Mr. Stevens. I will ask my friend from Tennessee to read the part in print.

Mr. BATE read as follows:

The committee met at Mr. Waterhouse's residence, according to adjournment, at 7:30 o'clock p. m. of the same day, January 16. The formation of some sort of government was under discussion, and it was decided that a commander-in-chief of the forces supporting the proposed new government should be appointed. The position was offered to Mr. John H. Soper, who demurred, as he did not see any backing whatever to support the movement. Mr. Soper was answered by members of the committee that the American minister would support the move with the troops of the Boston.

Mr. Soper still doubted, so a couple of the committee escorted him over to the legation, which, by the way, was in the adjoining premises, and the three came back after a time, reporting that Mr. Stevens had given them the full assurance that any proclamation of the government put forward at the government building, or any other building in Honolulu for that matter, would receive his immediate recognition and the support of the Boston's men. This assurance seemed to satisfy Mr. Soper, and he accepted the position.

On Tuesday afternoon, January 17, the committee of thirteen, or committee of safety, proceeded from the office of W. O. Smith, up Merchant street, to the Government building, and read the proclamation of a new government at 2:40 o'clock, there being practically no audience whatever. As the reading proceeded a dozen or so loungers gathered, and near the close of the ceremony about thirty supporters, variously armed, came running into the side and back entrances of the yard and gathered about the committee.

At this moment the United States troops, in the temporary quarters in the rear of the Music Hall (less than 100 yards from where the committee stood), appeared to be under arms, and were evidently prepared for any emergency.

Mr. FRYE. Can the Senator give the page where that statemen will be found in the report?

Mr. TURPIE. I will cite the page. It is Executive Document No. 10, page 21. I will cite the page, and it will be found in the record, of every extract I read.

Any one, especially a public officer, who engages to support a movement before it is made or accomplished must necessarily have known the time and place and persons concerned in it, and the general object and purpose of the movement.

The assurance was given by Mr. Stevens that he would support the proclamation of the Government. It was given to the commander of the revolutionary forces. This proclamation of the Government is the instant turning moment of the rebellion, since called a revolution; it is the decisive crisis of action; it is the time when the old régime is crumbling and the new one is coming forth; it is the time when every motive of public propriety and every principle of international justice required and demanded of Mr. Stevens and of every other foreign representative in Honolulu that they should not interfere one way or the other; yet Mr. Stevens selects this very moment, the proclamation of the Government before it was proclaimed, before it was established—selects that time, saying that he will recognize it and that he will support it with troops from the ship Boston.

It would have been a very incautious thing, a very undiplomatic thing, a very perilous thing, for Mr. Stevens to have made such a statement even to an attaché of his own legation, or to an officer in the service of the United States; but for an American minister, on the one hand, to make this statement to a revolutionary officer on the other, is more than incautious, more than careless, more than reckless. It was an act criminative, with no example, fortunately having no model hitherto in the history of the United States. We shall have to go back to the middle of the fifteenth century, amongst the worst men of the worst times, to find where a public ambassador in a foreign country has made such an absolute betrayal of his trust.

It appears from the testimony of Mr. Damon, vice-president of the Provisional Government, that the officer named, Col. Soper, appeared in command of the military forces of the committee next day, and that they acted under his supervision—those are the words of the witness—that he massed them, armed, in front of the steps of the capitol, where the Provisional Government was being proclaimed. (Ex. Doc. 10, page 31.)

The American minister was thus in communication with the revolutionary commander, Col. Soper, as with the commander of the United States marines, and he thus assumed joint direction of the two forces.

The Hawiian monarchy in the one hundred and third year of its existence ceased to be, among other causes, for the reason that the American minister resident had engaged to support and did support the revolt against it with the military forces of the United States.

The inquiry as to whether the new government would have succeeded without this aid is beside the question. This interference without any authority did occur. The best disclaimer, the most absolute disavowal of it, is the rejection of the proposal for any further or closer connection with Hawaii. Let the new government, however formed, proceed in its career. Intervention against it would be at this time as unlawful as intervention in its favor was when it occurred.

It may be well to examine the statement of Mr. Stevens himself upon the point of his action in the premises.

In a great crime there is an awful power of illumination. It lights up the conscience of the offender with a glare, showing the full proportions of the offense.

Here was one in a great public office, in what Vattel calls a ministry of peace. He had without a word of warrant or of warning made and levied war upon the soil of a friendly power. He had sought to embroil the people of two nations long bound together in closest amity. He was loath, very loath, to make confession of a wrong so grievous. Yet the truth will break bounds and silence; it will not be disowned.

In his account of what occurred at the time of his proclamation of a protectorate in the name of the United States, which he asserts was done "at the request of the Provisional Government of Hawaii," he says, in speaking of the flag, "It remained up seventy-five days. During that time all had been accomplished which had been promised and expected when it was raised." (Record, December 14, page 178.)

Now, here is an instance where the heart and soul of verity is unconsciously expressed—discloses itself in the tense or time of the verb used. It is not said "All had been accomplished which was promised and expected," but "which had been promised and expected." This form of words necessarily refers to promises which had already been made before the time referred to. And who had been the promiser in this compact? Clearly he who could perform—the United States minister. And who was the promisee? The revolutionary committee and its adherents. Mr. Stevens takes this method of declaring that he had kept faith with the revolution, that no promises were broken; that none of their expectations were disappointed. What, then, had been these promises and expectations? The answer is: "All that had been accomplished." What, then, had been accomplished?

United States troops had been landed, armed, and with artillery in support of the anticipated movement on the day before the revolt. This is one of the things which had been promised and expected. The Provisional Government had been recognized by the American minister within an hour after its proclamation. This also had been promised and expected. Within two days after recognition the commissioners appointed by the Provisional Government had sailed by steamer en route for Washington, bearing with them a treaty providing for the annexation of Hawaii to the United States. A protectorate had been proclaimed, wholly without authority, to hold possession until the annexation could be consummated.

Minister Stevens says it is a very dull diplomatist who is not aware of the importance of retaining actual possession; and Mr. President, it is a very dull, unlettered, illiterate pillager who is not well informed upon the same point.

The military force, posted first near the Hawaiian capitol, remained on shore under arms during the whole period of these transactions. All these things had been accomplished, and according to the terms of Mr. Stevens's own statement they "had been promised and expected."

Mr. Stevens says he was distant two thousand miles from the United States; that there was no ocean telegraph for communication with his Government, and that he had no instructions. He had Vattel, he had the Constitution of the United States; they were lying open before him in the legation library at Honolulu.

The Constitution of his own country, which he was bound at least to respect, provided that Congress should have the power to declare war; that the President should by and with advice of the Senate make and conclude treaties. Yet this minister, without any action of Congress, or of the Senate, or of the President, made and levied war by an armed invasion of Hawaiian soil—an armed occupancy of the same for three months, made and concluded a treaty of protection, and proclaimed a protectorate, and maintained the same until it was disavowed by the home Government of his own Administration.

The military invasion and occupancy of the territory of Hawaii, the self-assumed protectorate, these insolent and lawless acts of violence, mark the man. They do very plainly show the man, but they disguise the minister in strange attire. They exploit the mission, but they expose the means of annexation—a gruesome plot, wherein illicit craft, a worse than punic faith, infidelity to the most sacred trust in the most exalted station, fill the whole drama with the pollution of their guilty presence.

In his relation of these events placed in the record of Congress before referred to, Mr. Stevens, alluding to the late sovereign of the Hawaiian Kingdom, uses, ten times, the expression, "The fallen Queen;" and again he says, "The justly dethroned Queen," and anon he mentions her as "The late immoral occupant of the throne," and yet again he speaks of "The Queen and her paramour."

Are these the choice phrases of official correspondence, or is this the polished language of diplomacy? It may be said indeed, in answer, that at the time he used these expressions he had returned from his mission and had ceased to be a diplomatist. But did this place him beyond the pale of manly civility and those amenities becoming one who had been in such a high and gracious station?

Was it necessary for any purposes of state, was it needed for the maintenance of the Hawaiian Republic or for the success of the Provisional Government, that he should recur with coarse and callous iteration to the misfortunes of the discrowned Queen, or that he should assail the listening ears of Christendom with his story of the frailty of a fallen woman? For years he had been the representative of the United States near the court of the Hawaiian Kingdom.

How well we may recollect—how well he may recall—that day when he was escorted to the palace, ushered with all courteous ceremonial into the throne room and made his bow of presentation, receiving and returning congratulations upon the renewal of diplomatic intercourse between the two countries so long bound together by closest ties of friendship. That day he saw for the first time her who was for many months to be his hostess, dispensing the social courtesies and attentions due to his high position as a privileged and favored guest.

Was no voice borne inward to him from afar, no whisper of remonstrance touching these cruel reproaches against the perchance erring daughter, descendant of a once mighty race, saying, "Oh, not from you—not from you should come this vilest of accusations against woman!"

We need not resort to inference for a just estimation of the minister who indites dispatches of this tenor and fashion. The official character is self-depicted, self-described. Who would attempt to touch, to mar, or to amend this full-length, faultless, perfect portrait of the international spy, ingrate, and outlaw, drawn in all the dark profusion of its native hues.

Ages ago, Mr. President, the great Grecian moralist had written the story of the inhospitable visitor. How a husbandman, one bitter cold winter day, found in his field a serpent stark and frozen. Kindly he took it up in his hands, carried it to his home, laid it upon the hearth before the blazing fire. The wife and children gathered piteously around the stranger. They watched it slowly revive in the genial warmth. They saw it move and turn and fold and twine till, fully coiled, it sprang with poisoned fangs upon the throat of the husbandman, who fell down dead and swollen. Stunned with the sudden horror of the scene, the survivors looked eagerly about them to descry the author of this fatal mischief. The reptile guest had crept away.

Wherefore, upon candid judgment of the facts set forth in the papers submitted to us on this subject, it will be concluded that at this time we can not favorably consider either the treaty or the project of annexation.

That decent respect for the opinions of mankind which we have cherished from the beginning of our history forbids it, warns us to stand afar off from this temptation. The United States can not afford to incur the suspicion of profiting by a public wrong so abhorrent to the principles of national justice.

Granting that the acquisition of the Hawaiian Islands may be ever so desirable, it must be attained in a different manner. It does not become the character or dignity of the great Republic that we should wrest from a comparatively weak and defenseless people their place and name among the nations of the earth by stealth, by means of diplomatic finesse, or by any process of furtive legerdemain or gilded larceny sprung from the bandit maxim, miscalled the policy of success.

No success can attend such a scheme of spoliation. When we desire to enlarge our national domain by the acquisition of territory in the Hawaiian Islands or elsewhere, it must come to us in the open hand, with the palm clean, pure, untainted, or if it do not come and is taken, it will be taken by the strong arm, with sword drawn in the eye of day, as lawful prize of war against a public enemy. Then shall the flag, our flag of the Republic, float as oft before, in pride and glory over many a stricken field, won in battle for the just—for the just, the free, and the brave.

REPEAL OF ELECTION LAWS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present the views of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the bill (H. R. 2331) to repeal all statutes relating to supervisors of elections and special deputy marshals, and for other purposes, and ask that they may be printed. An order of the Senate was made that the views of the minority should be printed in connection with the majority report. I find, however, that the majority report has already been printed, and to avoid delay I request that the views of the minority be printed separately as Views of the Minority, Part 2 of Report No. 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The Senate has already ordered that the views of the minority shall be printed with the majority report, but the majority report having been printed, the Senator from New Hampshire now asks that the Senate order that the views of the minority be printed separately as part 2 of the report. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

KANSAS AND ARKANSAS VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1266) to extend and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Kansas and Arkansas Valley Railway to construct and operate additional lines of railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved February 24, A. D. 1891, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill be read at length for information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Kansas and Arkansas Valley Railway to construct and operate additional lines of railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved February 24, 1891, be, and the same are hereby, extended for a period of three years from February 24, 1894, so that said Kansas and Arkansas Valley Railway shall have until February 24, 1897, to build the first 100 miles of its said additional lines of railway in said Territory.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. WHITE of Louisiana, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN on the 10th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay the necessary expenses of the investigation by the Committee on Foreign Relations, including mileage and lawful fees for attendance of witnesses, and the employment of a stenographer, in pursuance of Senate resolution of December 20, 1893, out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 12, 1894, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 9, 1894.

DISTRICT COMMISSIONER.

John W. Ross, of the District of Columbia, to be a Commissioner of the District of Columbia.

POSTMASTERS.

Henry J. Connell, to be postmaster at Belding, in the county of Ionia and State of Michigan.

John Johnson, jr., to be postmaster at Bedford, in the county of Lawrence and State of Indiana.

Flavius A. Hart, to be postmaster at Oberlin, in the county of Lorain and State of Ohio.

Frisby B. Logan, to be postmaster at Yuma, in the county of Yuma and Territory of Arizona.

Arthur F. Watson, to be postmaster at Cheboygan, in the county of Cheboygan and State of Michigan.

Eugene E. Douvelle, to be postmaster at Manistee, in the county of Manistee and State of Michigan.

Adam R. Ebert, to be postmaster at Hammond, in the county of Lake and State of Indiana.

Ossian H. Cook, to be postmaster at Pendleton, in the county of Madison and State of Indiana.

Thomas J. Davis, to be postmaster at Springdale, in the county of Washington and State of Arkansas.

William D. Covington, to be postmaster at Lehigh, in the county of Choctaw, Ind. T.

Edgar A. Smith, to be postmaster at Converse, in the county of Miami and State of Indiana.

David A. Fawcett, to be postmaster at Lagrange, in the county of Lagrange and State of Indiana.

Charles A. Downer, to be postmaster at Northville, in the county of Wayne and State of Michigan.

George M. Deady, to be postmaster at Bad Axe, in the county of Huron and State of Michigan.

Jacob Baar, to be postmaster at Grand Haven, in the county of Ottawa and State of Michigan.

Arthur J. Flynn, to be postmaster at Caledonia, in the county of Houston and State of Minnesota.

George S. Stout, to be postmaster at Lake City, in the county of Missaukee and State of Michigan.

John Fanning, to be postmaster at Albion, in the county of Calhoun and State of Michigan.

James Elliott, to be postmaster at Chatham, in the county of Columbia and State of New York.

Edward W. Renkin, to be postmaster at Hooper, in the county of Dodge and State of Nebraska.

Charles E. Hill, to be postmaster at Malden, in the county of Dunklin and State of Missouri.

Charles E. Critchfield, to be postmaster at Mount Vernon, in the county of Knox and State of Ohio.

Allen T. Cowen, to be postmaster at Batavia, in the county of Clermont and State of Ohio.

William Bleckner, to be postmaster at Oak Harbor, in the county of Ottawa and State of Ohio.

Charles A. Wyckoff, to be postmaster at Celina, in the county of Mercer and State of Ohio.

Proctor E. Seas, to be postmaster at Orrville, in the county of Wayne and State of Ohio.

James E. Montgomery, to be postmaster at Van Wert, in the county of Van Wert and State of Ohio.

John M. Carroll, to be postmaster at Hubbard, in the county of Hill and State of Texas.

Albertis E. Parmenter, to be postmaster at Scotland, in the county of Bonhomme and State of South Dakota.

Edward M. Young, to be postmaster at Gambier, in the county of Knox and State of Ohio.

Henry G. Ellsworth, to be postmaster at Barron, in the county of Barron and State of Wisconsin.

Dollie F. Thompson, to be postmaster at Pittsburg, in the county of Camp and State of Texas.

William H. Dickson, to be postmaster at Clarksville, in the county of Red River and State of Texas.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 11, 1894.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SCHOOLS IN UTAH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting the annual report of the commissioner of schools for Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Education, and ordered to be printed.

WAR CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of findings in the cases of the following-named persons against the United States: J. S. Hays, John Higgins, W. G. Saxson, deceased; John Stafford, deceased; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were read twice and referred as stated:

A bill (S. 411) for the relief of Samuel Collins—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 335) to provide for the disposal of the abandoned Fort Maginnis military reservation in Montana under the homestead and mining laws for national and other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SCHOONER HENRY R. TILTON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 901) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry R. Tilton and of personal effects thereon.

Mr. FIELDER. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be allowed to lie on the Speaker's table temporarily, a bill of similar purport having been favorably considered by a committee of this House.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, this bill will lie temporarily on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

REPORT OF COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of the Report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year 1893, 1,500 copies of Part I in quarto form; 200 copies for the use of the Senate, 400 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 900 copies for distribution by the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey; and 2,800 copies of Part II in octavo form; 200 copies for the use of the Senate, 400 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,200 copies for distribution by the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This resolution is identical with one which has been reported by the House Committee on Printing. It is the usual resolution for the printing of the report of this bureau. I ask that the resolution be now considered by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution; and it was adopted.

PERSONNEL OF THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the House resolution (with Senate amendment) relative to the appointment of a committee of the House and Senate to consider the personnel of the Navy.

Mr. MEYER. I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be permitted to lie on the Speaker's table.

Mr. KILGORE. Has the resolution been amended by the Senate?

The SPEAKER. It has been. If there be no objection, it will remain temporarily on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

SUBURBAN STREET IMPROVEMENTS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COMPTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5102) making appropriations to provide for the construction of county roads and suburban streets in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and hereby is, appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, one-half to be charged against the revenues of the District of Columbia, the sum of $43,000, to be used by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in the construction of country roads and suburban streets, as follows:

For grading and regulating Sixteenth street northwest extended, Prospect street, Crescent street, Central street, and Meridian and Ontario avenues, Meridian Hill, $10,000;

For grading and graveling Twelfth street extended, from University Heights to Austin street, $8,000;

For grading and graveling Pennsylvania avenue extended and Branch avenue, $10,000;

For grading and graveling Sherman avenue from Grant avenue northward, $10,000;

For grading and macadamizing M street extended, between Twelfth street and Trinidad avenue, $5,000: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be expended by contract, or otherwise, as said Commissioners may deem most advantageous to the public interests.

SEC. 2. That the money hereby appropriated shall be immediately available.

The following proposed amendment was read:

In line 11, strike out the words "Meridian and Ontario avenues" and insert "Meridian avenue north of Morris street, and Ontario avenue."

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to make an inquiry in regard to this matter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman will proceed, the right to object being reserved.

Mr. KILGORE. Are the improvements provided for in this bill within the limits of the city of Washington or outside of those limits? Most of them, I understand, are outside.

Mr. COMPTON. They are outside the limit of the city proper.

Mr. KILGORE. So I understand. Then, in addition to that, the prime motive which inspires this bill is that disposition to have the Government dispense charity. This appropriation is to be made as a matter of charity, and that people out of employment may be able to find work in carrying out the provisions of the bill. Is not that the inspiration?

Mr. COMPTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, conditionally I will answer yes.

Mr. KILGORE. And the proposition is to limit the day's labor to six hours a day, in order that the appropriation may be spread out among a larger number?

Mr. COMPTON. That is a question for the Commissioners to determine.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes; and they ask that authority and will have it under the bill. Now, I object to the consideration of the resolution, because the House adopted in the last Congress a general policy about the improvements of streets and highways in this District and outside of the city limits which was to operate in the future, and that policy was to charge the expense one-half to the District of Columbia and the other half to the owners of the abutting property. This resolution does not provide for that. It is a reversal of the general policy adopted by the law; and the further objection that it is an appropriation for charitable purposes. No question of charity ought to enter into such legislation.

I object to its consideration.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is this proposition before the House for general debate?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to consider the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow me a moment?

Mr. COMPTON. I respectfully submit to my friend from Texas that he is absolutely unfair in making a statement here touching this matter on its merits and then refusing to hear a statement in support of it.

Mr. KILGORE. I have stated my objections, but I did not refuse to hear any statement the gentleman desired to make in support of it. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Perhaps the gentleman from Texas will waive the objection he makes, subject to the action of the Speaker on the point of order.

Mr. KILGORE. What point of order?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. If the gentleman will consent that we take the proposition up subject to the point of order to be determined by the Chair.

Mr. KILGORE. What is the point of order?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. As I understand it, that it comes within the provisions of the act providing that the property owners of the District of Columbia, owners of property abutting on the proposed improvement, shall pay half of the expenses.

Mr. KILGORE. But the point of order would not prevent the House from reversing that principle if it saw proper. I merely suggested that that was the condition of affairs, but did not make the point of order.

Mr. COMPTON. The gentleman from Texas has seen fit to present certain reasons to the House why this should not be considered, and I ask leave to have an opportunity to reply to what the gentleman suggested.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to be permitted to say something in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas upon this proposition. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COMPTON. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, this is not an act of charity in any sense of the word. It is not a bounty. This bill simply proposes to make available at once an amount for certain purposes, which amount, to be used for said purposes, will be provided for in the regular appropriation bill for the service of the District of Columbia.

Now, the gentleman from Texas talks about charity. Mr. Speaker, he knows, this House knows, everybody knows, that an extraordinary condition of things exists to-day. Business depression exists not only here, but all over the country, and I might say throughout the civilized world. And the gentleman knows, and every other gentleman of this House knows, that it is the part of wisdom, justice, and true statesmanship, by legislation, to relieve that condition as far as possible whenever it is within the power of the legislative branch of the Government to do so.

This is no new proposition. I have on my desk six or eight precedents for just exactly the same appropriations under exactly the same conditions as that we propose to make to day.

Now, in reply to the gentleman as to the assertion that the policy of the Government has been changed by virtue of the act approved March 2, 1892, I beg to say that if the gentleman will turn to that act he will find that every provision of it looks to future acts of Congress in appropriations for the improvement of outlying streets. I hold in my hand a communication from the President of the Board of Commissioners in this District, which, if the gentleman will allow me to read, will show him that every street or road which we propose by this appropriation to repair has already been laid out long ago under different acts previous to that adopt d in 1892.

Mr. KILGORE. What is the date of the laying out of these streets?

Mr. COMPTON. I can answer that by reading from a letter which I have received from President Ross, of the Board of Commissioners.

Sixteenth street NW. extended, from Florida avenue to the north line of Morris street, in 1871. This street was widened in 1892, in pursuance of special authority granted by Congress (volume 26, page 1068).

Prospect street, Crescent street, Central street, Meridian and Ontario avenues, in 1867.

Twelfth street extended, from University Heights to Austin street, in 1887.

Pennsylvania avenue and Branch avenue, in 1891.

Sherman avenue, in 1868.

M street extended, between Twelfth street and Trinidad avenue, 1888.

None of these highways were laid out under the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1893, to provide for a permanent system of highways in the District of Columbia outside of cities.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. ROSS,
President Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

The gentleman will see that this was done from 1871 down to 1891.

Mr. KILGORE. My statement was that it was only in the last Congress that the policy of legislation on this subject was changed.

Mr. COGSWELL. That policy applied to new streets.

Mr. COMPTON. That policy refers to streets hereafter to be laid out.

Mr. KILGORE. Outside of the city limits, as I understand, and there is no more reason why it should apply to the extension of old streets than to the laying out of new ones.

Mr. COMPTON. But the act to which you refer expressly provides that it shall apply to streets hereafter to be laid out.

Mr. KILGORE. Have you the act before you?

Mr. COMPTON. I have not, but I have read it two or three times, and read the estimates very carefully. It has no reference whatever to streets already laid out.

Mr. FUNK. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest that if this bill passes, I desire to introduce a resolution instructing the chief architect to at once take measures to commence the public building at Bloomington, Ill., for which there was an appropriation made two years ago, in order to give employment to the unemployed workmen there who are now in destitute circumstances.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] to object to the consideration of the bill, so that it is not before the House. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

The committees were called for reports, but no reports of a public character were presented.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING THE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions to sit during the sessions of the House.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 93) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owners of cattle and horses transporting them into Mexico to reimport same into the United States at any time within twelve months from date of the passage of this resolution, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MARSHALL, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 4414) to amend an act approved September 4, 1890, authorizing the New Orleans, Natchez and Fort Scott Railroad Company to construct two bridges across Bœuf River in Louisiana.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 1920) to amend section 4430, Title XLII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 432) to provide an American register for the steamer El Callao; and

A bill (S. 1378) to amend an act of Congress approved May 12, 1890, granting to the Aransas Pass Harbor Company the right to improve Aransas Pass.

THE TARIFF.

And then, pursuant to the order heretofore adopted, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) "To reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," with Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I want to give notice that as there are a great many members who desire to speak upon this question, in order not to be invidious in regard to anyone, I propose, if I am present, to object in the future to any extension of time to anyone.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 432) to provide an American register for the steamer El Callao; and

A bill (S. 1378) to amend an act of Congress approved May 12, 1890, granting to the Aransas Pass Harbor Company the right to improve Aransas Pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that right without giving notice.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I just want to give that notice.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this Congress is the first Congress, and this year is the first year for thirty-five years, when the Democratic party has had the power to put on the statute book any statute, or to take from it any statute put thereon; and it comes to the discussion and legislation of these great questions under the most adverse circumstances.

Thirty-five years are more than a generation. The education of so many years is inwrought into the very mental structure of a nation; and during those years every form of paternalism has been adopted and approved, defended and advocated in the press, on the stump, in the halls of colleges, and at the fireside; so that the generation which is now about to take command has been raised and educated unconsciously to the belief that in some way, under some power, the General Government must lead in all enterprises, must aid in all industrial activities, must be the great banking institution of the country. To it must all turn who are desirous of doing anything in even the most circumscribed locality. From it must all persons who enter into enterprises seek aid, and on it must men rely for support and assistance.

The theory of the Democratic party is precisely the converse. We believe that governments came after men solely to protect them in their rights of liberty, in their enjoyment of property, for the due administration of the law, so that justice might be done, a closer union accomplished, and each, according to his thrift, his intelligence, his capacity, and his advantages, obtain the reward which he deserved.

And yet when we come to make practical these principles we are met with all sorts of aphorisms, and into our teeth is thrown the account of the growth which during these past thirty-five years has been so marvelous in this rich and new country of ours; and we are put upon the proof that such a revolution as we favor could accomplish any good.

And then underneath this, which is probably the most adverse circumstance, there are incidental, and possibly I may call them accidental circumstances, that render every step more troublesome. We are met with a depleted Treasury. Taxation is necessary to supply the deficit in that Treasury. The sources of supply have been dried up by adverse legislation. Our legislation upon the currency question has given to the country a profound and widespread uncertainty, which is always followed by business instability. Paralysis of private enterprise accompanies emptiness of the public Treasury; and every reform is met by the plea that we need the money, that we must find some other source of taxation; and the sneers of our opponents are probably the most effective argument which we have to meet, that in raising revenue under a bill designed for that purpose we are actually creating a deficit; and yet, in spite of these disadvantages, we have some very great advantages. The very prostration of industry gives us an opportunity to look at this whole question with somewhat wiser and calmer eyes than if all wheels were in motion and all furnaces were aglow.

We see around us some of the results of the opposite policy. I do not mean to say that high tariff has produced this paralysis in and of itself; but for some reason the country is in distress, and for ten months or more that distress has been growing. I am usually an optimist; but I do not see any sunshine for to-morrow in our industrial horizon. I see no reason why the distress of to-day shall not continue through the winter and spring months, until harvest comes again, when kindly nature furnishes something that we may sell abroad. When public confidence is likewise restored and our manufacturers begin operations more fully we will, of course, come back again to prosperous days. But, now in these unprosperous days, we in Congress have the opportunity of studying American industries in distress, American labor paralyzed, and we can better understand why this is and what is the remedy therefor.

There never was a time when the American people could turn their attention with more acute and painful interest to these great economical questions. In every household men embarrassed by debt and unoccupied by labor can turn to wives whose morrow is full of gloom and discuss from the heart rather than the head what is the matter and whence shall come relief. These debates may be dry and prosy here, the statistical tables may lengthen themselves out into weary figures, but in the home of the poor and unemployed all over America, aye, even in the parlors of the well-to-do and comfortable, they assume shapes which are full of life and pathos, and enchain attention; and to-day all over America they are asking at our hands to do something. What that something shall be is not so important in the extent to which it goes as it is the direction in which it goes.

In the Forty-eighth Congress, that great tribune of the people, my friend and leader, William R. Morrison, of Illinois, whose name I never speak without affection and a certain degree of reverence, began this fight over again, by that tariff bill which has been sneered at by the capitalists and unlearned, but which was modeled after the tariff reform measure of the great Robert Peel. A division in the Democratic party prevented its adoption. In the Forty-ninth Congress he changed front, with a courage that was equal to his patriotism and with a knowledge of the subject which has not been surpassed, came to the conclusion that the foundation of all tariff reform was free raw material, so that the manufacturers of America could find a permanent market wherever their fabrics might be needed; and he introduced through the report of the committee a bill based on free raw wool.

Under the lead of that vigorous and stalwart Democrat, Samuel J. Randall, the Republican party and a minority of the Democratic party prevented consideration of that bill; and it looked as if tariff reform had been blocked. It was predicted in this House by one of its most obscure members that the vote against consideration by this House was a vote of intense consideration in the country; that when we abdicated our right of consideration of the question of taxation the people, in their sovereignty and individual capacity, would take up the question and consider it for themselves. At the beginning of the Fiftieth Congress, the President of the United States, who had not known much of these questions, but who had become educated under the great responsibilities of that august office, sent in his celebrated tariff message, and under the lead of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], then chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, this House did pass a tariff bill insufficient, inadequate, but in the right direction. Those who prepared it were the most willing to admit that it was not all that it ought to be, but it was a continuance and a further attempt to carry out the purposes of the Morrison bill.

It was based upon simple principles of untaxed raw material, untaxed necessities of life, lower duties on finished fabrics, and an attempt to restore to Congress the right to tax and take it away from the manufacturers outside of this Hall. We lost the election in 1888, and then immediately there was a sublime spectacle presented to the world. The defeated party became the aggressor. The victors were put upon the defense. Our antagonists saw that the current of popular opinion had not stopped, and this House, under the lead of the Republican party and with the aid of the Senate and the President, for the purpose of settling this question against popular opinion, of preventing popular judgment from undertaking to enact tariff legislation, not only passed the McKinley act, but admitted new States and undertook to settle this question. Thank God, no question is ever settled wrongly!

In the development of human history and human civilization there is no settlement that is wrong; and in 1890 the Democratic party again took possession of this House. Whether we may not have been as determined as we ought to have been is a question that has now passed into history. We kept alive the agitation. We went to the people upon the principles involved and we won at the last election and won for the first time in thirty-five years a President, a Senate, and a House. And in accordance with the general popular judgment, my friend, Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, whom I love much as a younger brother, was put at the head of the Ways and Means Committee. That committee was enlarged. It was made to represent every section of the country. Five of its members had helped to frame the Mills bill. The others had been active and prominent in legislation. They have presented us a bill in which they have gone farther than the Mills bill, farther than the attempt of the Fifty-second Congress, not so far perhaps as I would have gone, for until yesterday I considered myself the most ultra free trader in this House. [Laughter.]

My friend and kinsman, Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio, who was born in my district, and is worthy of his parentage, who spoke here yesterday, perhaps goes one step farther than I would go, but that may be because he is some years younger than I, and the conservative influence of twenty years has not had its effect upon him. [Laughter.] Until yesterday I considered myself on the outpost of the free-trade Democracy, and therefore I can afford to say that I am not satisfied with the Wilson bill. It does not represent all of my views. There are things in it that I would have been glad had been omitted. There are omissions from it that I am sorry were not supplied. I would like to have seen the bounty on sugar repealed. I would have given almost anything to have seen tin plate put upon the free list.

Even if we had to put a little more tax on whisky, or a little larger tax on income, or something more on matches, I would like to have seen tin plate, which is the very foundation of so many industries, which is that particular material that turns the waste of the farm, of the sea, and of the rivers into the rich products upon which people feed during the winter, and gives assistance to men in more different vocations than any other material. I would have been glad to have seen no duty in that bill higher than 30 per cent. But, take it all in all, it is a step in the progressive advance by which such reformation has to be made. It is not for the advance guard—not even for the great body of the army, that we are to frame our legislation. The timid, the halting, the doubtful, the uncertain, are our brethren. The conservative is our colleague; those who feel a divided duty deserve our consideration. They represent constituencies. We depend upon voting. We can not reverse the decisions of thirty-five years immediately.

Great interests clamor at our doors; they have influence. Great industries think they will be hurt; they have friends. Therefore it is not so much a question of how much we ought to do in the end as it is a question of how much we can do with the assistance of our friends, with the support of our party, with the approval of the conservatives. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And for one I am willing to remit that question to this committee, composed of eleven gentlemen from every section of the country, who for five months have given it their earnest and undivided attention. For myself I am willing to keep, as I have kept in every speech that I have made upon this floor, my own personal record clear. I am for ultimate free trade. I am for the possession of the oceans by free ships, freed from all the navigation laws which now hamper and embarrass us.

I am for taking possession of the great, long seacoast and making it fruitful by annexing thereto the billows which unite and do not divide us from other countries. There is no extent to which men can go to which I am not willing to go with them. But, on the other hand, I am willing to lag side by side with my brethren who agree with me on general principles. We are a country of sections, and I am willing to let Louisiana, with her sugar cane, and the Northwest, with her attempt at sorghum and beet sugar, come and be heard, and to be tender with them, so that they may not feel that we have slaughtered them.

I am willing that Connecticut, with her tobacco and various districts with their peculiar interests, be heard in our councils—that we try by mutual concessions to keep together our party; for it is by our union that we are to carry this reform to its termination. And when I look at what we have done in eight years, when I look back and see how we were in 1884, and how we are to-day—when I see a Democratic Senate at the other end of the Capitol, a Democratic House here, a Democratic President in the White House—when I stand on the very eve of the day when the election laws are to be wiped from our statute books—when I see sectional animosities obliterated and the lines which divided us wiped out—I am willing to be more conservative than I otherwise might be, as I recall that it is for one country composed of diverse sections that a national party, compact and consolidated, is to govern in the coming years. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And therefore, I say to those Democratic friends of mine who do not agree with all the provisions of this bill, we can either heartily and cordially sustain it or frankly point out our objections, and thus by mutual concession and patriotism reach an agreement. For myself, it would obtain my earnest advocacy if it had nothing else in it than free raw wool.

I have heard it sneered that this bill does not raise revenue. Mr. Chairman, no bill for taxation can have for its single object the entire amount of revenue that is needed. We need $460,000,000 per annum. Where shall we get it? When we come to answer that question practically, other and most important considerations come in. Industries must not be unduly taxed; activities must not be improperly encumbered with burdens. There must be other considerations than the mere amount of money that can be raised on any particular subject of taxation. We must have a prosperous community. That lies at the foundation of all inquiry. The community which is prosperous can pay taxes easily. That community which has paralyzed industry can pay no taxes easily. What, therefore, is the amount of burden that any particular section or any particular industry can bear, is a more important question than the amount of money that can be squeezed out of it.

We are a nation divided, roughly speaking, into two great classes of laborers—those who are engaged in manufacture, and those engaged in agriculture. We must, therefore, in laying our taxes see to it that both of these great classes are made prosperous. Our factories are purchasers from our agriculturists: they are sellers to our farmers. We must, therefore, devise a system by which the farmer gets a fair price, and by which he gives a fair price. He must have a market in which to sell; he must have a prosperous man from whom he can buy at a fair price. There must be an interchange by which the material men sell to a prosperous manufacturer from whom they can readily and profitably purchase. So that at the very foundation of all inquiry about taxation is the question, what is that system of taxation which will make our manufacturing enterprises successful? How can our fires be lighted? How can our wheels be put in motion? How can our products find a market? And I believe that the committee has found the true answer—untaxed material for the laborer to put his sweat into.

I need not go over the argument so admirably put by the chairman of our committee [Mr. WILSON of West Virginia], that the higher wage necessarily accompanies the lower price. The very progress of civilization may possibly be put into the apothegm that it has been a series of lowering prices and increasing wages. It is the paradox of economical truth that the lower the product sells for in times of prosperity the higher is the wage of the man who makes the product. Cobden never said a wiser thing than that prosperity based upon plenty is permanent prosperity; based upon scarcity it is always precarious. The amount and quality make the true test of the wage. The quantity and quality of the product give the amount that the laborer gets. The higher the skill, the higher the intelligence; the higher the capacity, necessarily the higher the wage and the greater the quantity and the finer the quality.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARSH. Is the converse of the gentleman's proposition true, that the lower the wages the higher the product?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. As a rule, it is not so in our day, because the lower the wages the meaner is the product; and the want of good quality gives to it a certain lowness of price. And therefore——

Mr. MARSH rose.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Let me answer. Therefore, the low-priced labor is itself incapable of making a high-priced article; for he who has to buy that fabric of low-priced labor buys an article that is necessarily inferior.

Mr. MARSH. What does my friend think about the costly and magnificent shawls which are made in India? Does he call them a mean and low product?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. As a rule what I have stated is true. The gentleman forgets that comparison of price of wage is an element which is of course to be taken into consideration. As a rule the very labor which is put upon those fabrics is the highest priced labor in the community in which they are produced, and as to other labor is its superior. What I do mean to say in the light of the nineteenth century (and he who denies it is simply lagging in the past) is that the skilled laborer receives a larger share of the price of the product than ever before; that his labor is cheaper to his employer than ever before, and his product is, in comparison, lower in price than it ever was before. To the employer cheaper labor, to the toiler better wages, to the consumer lower prices. This is the necessary result where the bases of supply and demand have untrammeled play. This must be true, in the nature of the case, if unwise and selfish legislation does not obstruct. It is so in spite of our foolish legislation to an extent that has given much comfort and happiness. I care not what you call it. You can now go from Portland, Me., to California on the best-equipped railroads, with every appliance, for a mere song compared with what it once cost. The comforts of life are in ordinary times everywhere in the hands of the skilled laborer; and to him no tariffs give anything. Take the locomotive of Baldwin, the sewing-machine of Singer, the implements and instruments of Rhode Island, the watches of Waltham; wherever brain and skill enter into the necessity of the fabric, it goes everywhere without regard to tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Wherever there are skill and intelligence, there is a constant cheapening of the article and a constant rise in the price of wages. And this is a truth now so well established that no gentleman who prides himself on any learning or intelligence will undertake to dispute or deny. Vanderbilt discovered it when he bought a railroad run down, and which could not make money at 6 cents a mile on its passenger traffic. He put millions of dollars in it, charged 2 cents a mile for passenger traffic, and by this means made a great fortune. Stewart discovered it when he made a multiplicity of sales at small profits, gaining a great fortune, instead of large profits on small sales. The mills at Lawrence understand it, when on millions of yards of calico one-third of a cent a yard gives them a profit, an amount so small that it seems to be scarcely appreciable, but when counted by the millions it makes enormous dividends for the men who understand that intelligence and skill combined with quantity and quality are the representatives of fortune. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let us understand, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that when we give to these men untaxed material, we are giving them what is necessary to conquer the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Gentlemen, we forget that we are legislating for seventy or seventy-five millions of people, soon to be one hundred and fifty millions. We forget that we have the richest, the most fertile land, and the finest advantages nearly in the world. Our rivers run silently to the sea, when they ought to be melodious with the sound of commerce-bearing steamers. Our forests are mere solitudes, when they ought to be rich with factories today; and the reason that they have not been established is because we have chained American labor to the wheel of high tariff, and have given the commerce of the world to the British Government. [Applause.]

To-day 12 per cent only of our carrying trade is under our own flag. Do as England did forty years ago, free our shipbuilders from the embarrassments of tariffs, turn the ores of the world and the forests of the world over to the enterprise of our people, and you will find that Cramp with his genius will soon be making ships that will carry our flag, without subsidy or deadheadism, to every part of the world. The principle that lies at the foundation of this bill, as it is at the foundation of all our enterprises, is: No man has a right to avoid paying his share of our burdens, and no one has the right to confiscate from the poor man's pocket a single cent for the purpose of helping him to bear his burdens. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let us for once understand that principle and practice bracketed together bring wealth in their train. These will give us safe markets; and this, Mr. Chairman, is not theory. We have seen it tried. We have free raw material in certain things, and they have always prospered. Ninety per cent of our industries are untouched by the tariff and have always prospered. It is only when we come to those things which are burdened with tariff exactions that we find they can not carry themselves with the same degree of success. I do not mean to say that it does not give a certain market. Indubitably inside of the circle, within the barrier, the shark can fatten himself on the smaller fish. But if you give the same shark the wider market, being an American shark, my judgment is that soon he will feed as well or better on the foreign fish than he now does on the home fish in the American market. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have not the slighest prejudice——

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. WALKER. I would like to ask the gentleman who he alludes to when he speaks of the "American shark."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not mean to hurt his feelings, at any rate. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WALKER. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he considers that a proper answer to an entirely candid question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Well, the gentleman and I will not quarrel about whether it is or not, as I have but little time.

What I call the American shark is the representative of those gentleman who took advantage of the peril and distress arising from a great war; who solemnly came into this Congress and in the name of patriotism burdened American labor; who, when things began to assume their ordinary shape and substance, repealed such laws as created internal-revenue taxes, and increased the burdens of tariff taxation; those gentlemen who, in the secrecy of the conference committee chamber in 1883, passed a bill that had not received the approval of either House of Congress; those gentlemen who, in the Fifty-first Congress, by modes and methods I care not to describe, wrote a new bill, writing into it the provisions that would enrich themselves: those gentlemen who have purchased ballot boxes, who took the seat from William R. Morrison by bribery—those are the gentlemen of whom I speak. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And I do not mean to include therein my venerable friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman now allow me one further question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I have not time to yield for a speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. WALKER. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to yield.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Does the gentleman desire to ask me a question?

Mr. WALKER. I do.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I will listen to it.

Mr. WALKER. Being an American manufacturer, and being one of the gentlemen who helped make these tariffs, I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he includes me in the number?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. If you are within the description that I gave, it is with exceeding great regret that you have drawn your own picture. I did not do it. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] I have said nothing, Mr. Chairman, that was personally offensive to anybody. I trust that nothing I shall say will be held personally offensive. If I have overstepped what would seem to be the bounds of the kindest discussion of these questions, no man regrets it more than I, and surely my sensitive colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] has no reason to be offended at what I said.

But, Mr. Chairman, when you go through that great city of Boston, when you see her great buildings, when you see even her schools of charity, and when you go deeper and find that they are based on the tariff on copper, the tariff on this article and on that, you can not help having in your heart a certain feeling of regret that those princely fortunes did not rest upon the golden rule of doing unto others as you would have them do unto you, instead of upon the principle of getting out of others something for which you gave nothing in return. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, regretting this episode in this economic discussion, I resume.

I represent a district largely agricultural. It is to the interest of my district that taxation should be so laid that labor should be profitable; for it is only when labor is profitable that the agriculturist can sell his product at a good price. I represent a section, nearly all of whose products have their price fixed in a free-trade market. The 9,000,000 bales of cotton which are below me do not represent so much money, my colleagues from the Northern States, I beg you to remember. In each bale of cotton is written the peace of the white and the black race, is written the friendship of those two races. In it is enwrapt the education of their children, the development of that country, the hope of its future. The price of that bale is fixed at Liverpool.

Is it unjust for those people to ask that when they come to commute that price, when they want clothing for their children and food in their houses, when they want homes and education, that the price of the things they buy shall not be fixed in a high-tariff market, but that they may commute their labor, which is represented in the cotton bale, into the comforts of life, which are represented by various materials that shall not be taxed 46 to 190 per cent out of the cotton on the one hand, to pay for what they need on the other hand? Can you not give us better than that? Our tobacco, enough of it exported abroad for some of certain qualities to have their prices fixed abroad. Our wheat has its price fixed in Liverpool. Is it asking too much that you give to the grower of wheat, cotton, and tobacco, the same market in which to buy as that in which he sells? When I use the words "The same market" I do not mean the same locality, the same walls, I mean it in the higher sense of a market in which the same prices are to be given.

Where is a man's market, my colleagues? Is it where he buys or where he sells? I sell cotton at Liverpool, and I buy at New York. Which is my market? That in which I have sold my product or that in which I spend my money? If they be precisely alike, with the same laws, the same burdens, the same taxation, it makes no difference: but if in the one I am tolled on my purchases, and in the other I am burdened on my sales, I have the loss of both markets and the advantages of neither.

Now, I plead for a home market in its true sense. I plead that the sweat which is necessary to make a home comfortable shall buy where it sells, on the same basis and under the same advantages. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And that is what this bill does.

There is another provision in this bill which, if it was left alone and everything else in it met with my disapproval, I would cordially vote for it. It is the change from the specific to the ad valorem mode of assessing taxation. I know that it is now considered scientific for a specific duty to be laid, for in the present vocabulary of our friends scientific taxation means that under the cover of which there can be a large profit diverted from the Treasury into the pockets of the manufacturer; but the ad valorem system, with certain defects incapable of being applied to everything, is a just, reasonable, and impartial mode of taxation, and I would be inclined as a legislator to tax nothing that could not be taxed according to the ad valorem system.

The answer to the question as to how it can be done without difficulty is one that presupposes that the legislative will can not be intelligently expressed, and official duty can not be intelligently performed. There is no mode of taxation that an honest and intelligent official can not carry out, and that a legislature with brains can not formulate into a statute. It is a mere sham, a pretext for obtaining fraudulent undervaluation; this whole idea is conceived that specific taxation is necessary. The enemy of high tariff is undervaluation in the dishonest importer, substitution and adulteration in the dishonest manufacturer. I do not mean to say that all American manufacturers do adulterate their goods, but I do mean to say—and I think I proved it in the last House in the little speech which it did me the honor to listen to on the wool question—that the shoddy and adulterating manufacturers of the North had always made money when the real wool manufacturers had not.

I am not going into that question again to-day; but the ad valorem mode tends to the discovery of false valuation, and therefore aids the honest importer, and secures better chance for fair competition by the honest manufacturer.

I find my time slipping away, and the question has been put to me, If you pass this bill, where shall we get our revenue? For one, I am glad that it makes a deficit. It is no obstacle to my support that the expenses of the Government outrun a reasonable tariff taxation. I am glad we have reached the point when we have to assort our taxation under the necessities of a deficit. Where can we raise them? How can they be made lighter? From what sources shall we find them with least burden to the community?

These are questions for the country to take up and answer. These are questions that the Democratic party should solemnly, seriously, and intelligently consider. Where shall we find our revenue? With 70,000,000 people, with so rich a country, with so many sources of wealth, where shall we find it? Left to me, I would probably have found it not where this committee has found it. I would have repealed the bounty on sugar. I would have temporarily restored a part of the duty on sugar. I would have increased the duty on spirits, on cigarettes, on cosmetics, and on various other luxuries; but I am ready to go with them in the experiment of an income tax; I am ready to try those systems of taxation that build up no industry at the expense of another; that burdens no man for the benefit of a rival; that can be taken off without anybody crying that it destroys industries; where it shall be a tax, and nothing but a tax; where it shall not be obscured with the glamor of activities; where it shall not be confused with the cry of laborer's wages.

I want to reach the day when taxes are taxes which, laid by the American Congress, can be relieved when there is no further necessity for the revenues derived from them; when we shall have burdens as burdens, contemplated as burdens, lightened when our revenues allow them to be lightened. Call it income or succession tax, or tax on spirits, or tax on any other thing, I want it to come, as far as possible, as well considered taxes of themselves, isolated from embarrassing relation to industries; when they will be nothing but taxes, and will have no other consideration than the amount of revenue necessary for the support of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having taken more time than I expected, I have only to add, I came to Congress eight years ago with the hope that the time had come when economic questions could be discussed dispassionately. I have avoided as far as possible, altogether I hope, a discussion of sectional questions. Whatever may have been my past, I look solely to the future, unto a country in which my children and your children are to work out the destinies of the greatest people in the world. I believe in the success of federated republicanism. I saw the confederation of Canada formed from separate provinces, and I hope to live to see the day when it and we will be united in some organic union that will wipe out customs lines from the mouth of the St. Lawrence to the mouth of the Columbia. [Applause.]

I hope to live to see the day when the continent will be one for freedom, and in that day our children will look back upon these discussions as we look back upon some of the old discussions about the relations of the union of church and state, or the question of slavery. We have free speech, free thought, free locomotion, and beyond that, we will have free trade. We will recognize that the primal curse "by the sweat of thy face thou shalt eat thy bread," is the primary right of mankind; that the right to labor, the right to work, the right to support his family, carries with it the right to spend the fruits of his labor wherever he wants to, for whatever he pleases, according to his own will. This is freedom; that he who works has the freedom to work for whom he pleases without burden, to spend its recompense where he pleases, for what he pleases. And this is the mission of the Democratic party. We are the friends of the laboring men; aye, we are the artisans of toil, in whose name we have taken possession of sovereignty, for whose benefit we labor, whose freedom we will secure, and when the end shall come, in humble homes that name will be the sweetest that can be uttered. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RICHARDS Mr. Chairman, when the bill under present discussion was first reported I expected to remain silent and leave the arguments upon it to other gentlemen of this House, but I am one of those who believe that in this greatest of legislative bodies there should be no shrinking; that every member should be a man of decided opinions with the courage to express them, and having carefully studied the economic questions now before us, I believe it to be my duty to myself and to the people of the great district which I have the honor to represent upon this floor, to give the reasons which will direct my votes upon the pending measure.

The measure before us has long agitated the country and is bounded by party lines. One's convictions on the tariff question determines to a great degree the party to which he belongs. If a man believes in a high tariff he is a Republican, while if a man believes in levying only an amount sufficient to defray the expenses of the Government "economically administered" he is, on that point at least, a Democrat.

But we must not forget the main question before us. It is not one of protection or free trade. It is that of tariff reform. That was the battle-cry of the Democratic party in 1892. That was the demand of the people as expressed at the polls that year, and that is the doctrine that this Congress is called upon to enforce by appropriate legislation.

Believing in an economic administration of the Government, and that only an amount of revenue should be taken from the people necessary to that end, having a majority in both branches of the National Legislature, and an Executive of correct opinions on this question who has so forcibly shown that he has the courage to assert his convictions, now is the time to act.

The people of this country for many years have been unnecessarily burdened with taxation, especially indirect taxation, and seeing the Republican party in virtual control of the tariff barons they turned to that great party for relief whose wards have ever been the common people—the great masses who form the great bone and sinew of a nation.

Working with that due caution and deliberation becoming this great body, aiming not merely to change the tariff, but to reform it, bringing to bear the learning of those who by special study have come to be considered authority on the subject, studying the effects of high and low tariff in other countries as well as in our own, comparing the conditions under different tariff acts, not losing sight of other modifying factors, we will not be justly subjected to the appellation of "tariff tinkers," and the acts we shall pass while not, perhaps, perfect, will stand the test of time, and insure to the people a measure of prosperity that can not exist either with a very high or a constantly changing tariff.

THE QUESTION STATED.

A revenue tariff is constructed with the object of raising the required amount of revenue at the minimum cost to the people, but with no reference to reducing importation. A protective tariff has for its primary object a reduction or prohibition of importation for the purpose of favoring the home producer, thus lessening, and in some cases entirely cutting off, revenue.

To accomplish the object of a protective tariff only such articles as are produced both in our own as well as in foreign countries are assessed, and in this way the consumer is forced to pay more for any given article, for he will either be obliged to buy the foreign article at a price enhanced by the duty or buy the home article at about the same price. The price of the protected article being raised to correspond with that at which the imported article is sold, the home manufacturers thus receive the benefit of the protective tariff.

But a strictly revenue tariff being raised principally from articles that are only produced abroad, the increase of price by tariff goes into the national Treasury and not to individuals or corporations. None of our revenue tariffs have, however, been strictly confined to this class of articles. The best example of a purely revenue tariff has existed in Great Britain for thirty years; £100,000,000 annually being collected from sixteen articles, five of which yield 98 per cent of the whole.

THE HISTORY OF THE SUBJECT.

Before the Declaration of Independence it was resolved by a vote of Congress, April 6, 1776, to throw open the ports of the thirteen colonies to the trade of the world. In the language of Bancroft, "absolute free trade took the place of hoary restrictions." After the Declaration of Independence, during the war, and time of the Confederation, there was little restriction placed upon foreign exchange. A treaty of alliance and commerce was made between France and the United States in 1778, the basis of which was "the most perfect equality and reciprocity." Our Government endeavored to have some provision concerning commerce embodied in the treaty of 1783 with England, but failed to accomplish it.

During the revolutionary war many industries were started for the purpose of furnishing our people with articles formerly obtained from England, whence our supply was cut off. When the war closed these manufactories feared that they could not endure the competition of England, and if ever protection was needed it was at this time. Yet we find that in 1789 we had manufactories of iron, glass, paper, leather, flax, hemp, copper, hats, sugar, and cloth, which had become strong and prosperous, notwithstanding ten years of English competition, and entirely without protection or legislative assistance.

When the first Congress convened the first question brought to its consideration was how to raise money for the payment of the public debt. The necessity of levying duties on imported goods was conceded, but protection was the controverted point. Some thought it better to pay direct bounties or premiums from the Treasury rather than make the duties protective or prohibitory, and thus the idea of a revenue tariff preceded that of a protective tariff. However, when this our first tariff bill was passed it had an avowed protective principle. It intended to secure a prosperous start to our infant industries. It was a very mild bill, the duties on the whole list averaging about 8 per cent, and it was to end in 1796; but instead of ending in seven years it lasted twenty-seven years and underwent seventeen modifications.

This brings us to 1816. During the latter part of this period, the nonintercourse act and the war of 1812, by shutting our ports to foreign goods, greatly stimulated domestic manufactures, and to perpetuate these industries the tariff of 1816, sometimes called "the Calhoun tariff," and which is generally said to mark the beginning of a distinctly protective policy, was passed. Its highest rate of duty was 20 per cent, and this increase over previous acts was caused by the heavy interest on the public debt incurred by the war.

After the crash of 1819, a stronger popular movement for protection set in than had been known before. This demonstrates a disposition, always prevalent in the popular mind after a financial crisis, to seek in legislation a remedy for its consequences.

At this time the interests of the different sections began to be manifest, and the protective movement was strongest in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Kentucky. These were the great agricultural States and felt most keenly the loss of a foreign market for their products and were desirous of a home market. New England was divided, and the South having changed its views since 1816, was now strongly against protection. The clashing of the different sections caused the failure of the bill for increased duties of 1820.

A protective tariff was passed in 1824, carried mainly by the Western and Middle States, party lines having nothing to do with the question. At this time the manufactures of cotton goods were in such prosperous condition that they did not desire increased protection. John Randolph said in the debate upon this bill, "The merchants and manufacturers of Massachusetts and New Hampshire repel this bill, while men in hunting-shirts and deer-skin leggings and moccasins on their feet want protection for home manufactures." And this prosperity and firm establishment of cotton manufactures was due more to the introduction of the power loom than to protection, for notwithstanding the continued protection, they were never in so prosperous a condition before.

Although the encouragement given the woolen manufactures was very moderate, yet, after the crisis of 1819, this industry also developed, and the introduction of machinery had about the same effect upon it as upon the cotton manufactures, and during the period from 1821 the number of woolen factories greatly increased, especially in New England. Thus we find that both the cotton and woolen manufactures were firmly established and in no need of protection some years before 1828. Yet in that year the strongest and most complicated protective tariff bill so far framed was passed.

What was accomplished for cotton and woolen manufactures by the introduction of machinery, including the power loom, was, some years later, accomplished for iron manufactures by the discovery that anthracite coal could be used in the blast furnace. A patent for this process was taken out in 1833, and was in extensive use before 1836, leading to a rapid increase in the production of iron.

Thus in the development of these three great industries we see that other factors besides tariff enter into the question of their growth. The tariff of 1828, called the "tariff of abominations," did not long continue in operation. Some of its provisions were changed in 1830, and another tariff act was passed in 1832 doing away with the objectionable features of the "abomination tariff," making the protection about the same as in 1824. But public opinion was adverse to even so modified a form of protection, and in 1833 the compromise tariff act was passed. This bill provided for a gradual reduction of duties to 20 per cent. It went into effect, popular sentiment in favor of protection disappeared, and the compromise tariff lasted for nine years.

The tariff of 1842, called the "Whig tariff," was strongly protective, and was a purely political measure. It lasted but four years, when the tariff of 1846 was passed by the Democrats. This tariff, called the "Walker tariff," from the fact of its having been framed by Robert J. Walker, Secretary of the Treasury under Polk, is often spoken of as a free-trade measure. It was not, although it discriminated between articles that could and those that could not be produced in our own country. It was a revenue tariff with incidental protection. In this tariff the theory was proved to be true that moderate duties yield large revenues. It produced so large a revenue that in 1857 there was found to be a surplus in the Treasury; and for this reason all parties were agreed to a further reduction of the tariff. This is said to be the first tariff legislation since 1816 that was not affected by politics.

The Walker tariff lasted fifteen years—longer than any tariff in the whole history of the country—long enough to demonstrate the effect of a revenue tariff upon the condition of the country. Though new tariff acts were passed frequently, they all, from 1816, had been protective in principle. And in making a comparison of the condition of the country under the two kinds of tariff we may consider the time from 1816 to 1833 as one continued period of protection. That the result of the comparison is in favor of the period under revenue tariff can not be denied. That this was the most prosperous period of our history has been acknowledged by both parties from that time to the present.

The tariff of 1846 produced such good results that, as we have seen, by 1857 the Whigs were willing to unite with the Democrats and vote for a still further reduction. They saw the great prosperity of the country and were honest enough to acknowledge the low tariff as its main cause. That other factors also entered into this condition, we do not deny; but that they were only secondary is abundantly proved by the fact that both parties acknowledged the tariff as the cause. Let me quote from some prominent men on the other side. Senator (afterwards Vice-President) Wilson, in a speech in the Senate in 1857, when the proposition to reduce the tariff of 1846 was pending, said:

I wish to say to the Senate and the country, that the Commonwealth I represent has a deep interest in the modification of the tariff of 1846 by this Congress. They are for the reduction of the revenue to the actual wants of an economical administration of the Government; for a free list embracing articles of prime necessity we do not produce; for mere nominal duties on articles which make up a large portion of our domestic industry, and for such an adjustment of the duties on the products of other nations that come in direct competition with the products of American capital, labor, and skill, as shall impose the least burdens upon that capital, labor, and skill.

And in the same speech he said:

We of New England believe that wool, especially the cheap wools, manila, hemp, flax, raw silk, lead, tin, brass, hides, linseed, and many other articles used in our manufactures can be admitted duty free, or at a mere nominal duty, without injuring to any extent any considerable productive interests of the country.

Mr. ALLISON, in this House, March 24, 1870, said:

The tariff of 1846, although confessedly and professedly a tariff for revenue, was, so far as regards all the great interests of the country, as perfect as any that we have ever had.

Mr. Garfield said in this House in 1878, in answer to the charge that the year of 1860 had not been one of prosperity:

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, the decade from 1850 to 1860 was one of peace and general prosperity. Yet, to suit a theory of finance, we are told that 1860 was a year of great distress and depression of business, equaled only by the distress of the present year. I hold that the facts I have recited establish, in so far as anything can be established by statistics, that the year 1860 was a year not only of general peace, but of very general prosperity in the United States.

Mr. Blaine, in his Twenty Years in Congress, says:

The tariff of 1846 was yielding abundant revenue, and the business of the country was in a flourishing condition.

Money became more abundant after the year 1849. Large enterprises were undertaken, speculation was prevalent, and for a considerable period the prosperity of the country was general and apparently genuine. The principles embodied in the tariff of 1846 seemed for a time to be so entirely vindicated and approved that resistance to it ceased, not only among the people, but among protective economists, and even among manufacturers to a large extent. So general was this acquiescence that in 1856 a protective tariff was not suggested or even hinted by any one of the three parties which presented Presidential candidates. Much more testimony of the same kind might be adduced, but I deem this sufficient for the present.

But this prosperous condition was not to last. A Presidential election was coming on, and the Republican party, wishing to curry favor and obtain votes from States where the protective principle was strong, introduced a bill increasing import duties. This, known as the "Morrill tariff act," passed the House in the session of 1859 and 1860, but did not pass the Senate until the next session. The most important changes made by the Morrill bill were increased duties on wool and iron, and a substitution of specific for ad valorem duties. In 1861 the civil war began, and immediately were the import duties again increased. We need not follow the various steps of tariff legislation; suffice it to say that it taxed our resources to the utmost to furnish funds to carry on that war.

In 1862 two important acts were passed. The first of these was an internal-revenue act, by which specific taxes were imposed upon the production of iron, steel, leather, paper, coal, oil, etc., and an ad valorem duty upon manufactured articles; a general income tax upon railroads, express companies, and licenses were required for many kinds of business. On July 14 of the same year a tariff act was passed for the avowed purpose of compensating the manufacturers and producers for the internal revenue they were forced to pay. This was a protective measure, and levied heavier duties than was necessary even to offset the heavy internal taxes. As the war continued more money had to be raised and more internal-revenue and tariff taxes were consequently levied.

The most important of these acts were passed in 1864. Three revenue acts were passed at the same time. The first provided for an "enormous extension of the internal tax system." The second for an increase of duties on imports corresponding to and compensatory for those of the first act, and the third authorized a loan of $400,000,000. Everything was taxed and to the utmost. The average rate on all dutiable wares was 47.6 per cent, and on some articles 50, 60, and 100 per cent.

The passage of these acts was made possible only by the state of the public mind regarding the war, and that the protectionist element had control of the Legislature. It would be supposed that the country would have been relieved of such enormous burdens as soon as possible after the war, but such, unfortunately, was not the case. The internal taxes were gradually reduced, and by 1872 all those for which compensatory duties had been enacted were abolished. No one but the Government had any interest in their continuance. But the import duties which were mainly, it was claimed, to compensate for the internal taxes were continued. Not only so, they were increased, and are to-day the foundation of our present tariff system.

The protected interests had derived so much wealth from this measure that they would not willingly let it go. On the other hand the reconstruction problem, as well as the great suffering and sorrow brought to many homes, made the people less alive to these abuses than they should have been; and very unfortunately so for, at so early a period, they might have been corrected. When the matter was agitated in a mild way the demand was appeased by reducing the duties on what are called revenue articles; that is, such goods as are imported but are not produced in our own country; thus reducing the Government's income while not interfering with the gains of the manufacturer who it is plain is only interested in the duties on the protected articles that he produces.

In 1871 and 1872, when the surplus revenue, after paying all appropriations and the interest on the public debt, amounted to a hundred million dollars annually, the people became more earnest in their demands for a reduction of import duties. Consequently, a bill was introduced in this House by the Ways and Means Committee, which, in the words of the chairman, was intended merely "to divest some industries of the superabundant protection which smells of monopoly, and which it was never intended they should enjoy after the war." This bill provided for a reduction on wool, woolens, and cottons of 20 per cent, pig iron $1 a ton; coal, salt, and lumber, tea and coffee, and in fact almost all dutiable articles, were to pay less.

This bill, it is hardly necessary to say, was bitterly opposed by monopolists; but finding that the tariff reformers were much in earnest, it was deemed expedient to yield a little rather than to arouse too much opposition; consequently, a bill was passed which had been introduced in the Senate, providing for a 10 per cent horizontal reduction. Mr. John L. Hays, secretary for many years of the Wool Manufacturers' Association and president of the tariff commission of 1882, was here at the time of the passage of this act as agent for the wool manufacturers. He claims, in a speech delivered shortly after, to have been the author of "this wise and foresighted policy." The tariff reformers, not so "wise in their generation," thought they had gained the victory if they had not received all they asked for, and were quiet for a time.

Without following up this history in detail, we will say: the act of 1872 was repealed in 1875, thus putting us back to the war tariff again, and as no tariff act was passed in the next eight years, we find the war tariff of 1864 in operation in 1883. After the resumption of specie payments in 1879 there was a general revival of business and an increase of imports causing a corresponding increase of revenue. After 1879 the surplus revenue averaged over $100,000,000 annually. This state of affairs caused another demand for revenue reform. The Government being in the hands of protectionists, a tariff commission of their own ilk was appointed to examine into and report upon the subject.

This was like a jury trying a case in which each juror had great financial interest—and all the interests being on the same side. You all know how the tariff bill based upon the report of this commission was put through. It is not necessary to enter into the details of this bill; it is a part of our current history.

Its general character may be inferred from a letter written by the president of the tariff commission, John L. Hays, shortly after the passage of the act.

This letter was published in the Wool Manufacturers' Bulletin. He says:

Reduction in itself was by no means desirable to us; it was a concession to public sentiment, a bending of the top and branches to the wind of public opinion, to save the trunk of the protected system. In a word, the object was protection through reduction. * * * We wanted the tariff to be made by our friends.

In this act the tariff on some things, as wheat, corn, oats, beef, pork, hams, bacon, lard, cheese, and butter, was not changed. On barley it was lowered at the request of the brewers. On silks there was a reduction from 60 to 50 per cent, pig iron from $7 to $6.72 a ton. On cheap cotton goods, which we export in large quantities, there was a reduction. On those we import the duty was increased. The same may be substantially said of woolen goods. On the finer qualities, as dress goods, the duty was increased; on coarser qualities, which we did not import because the duty was prohibitory, it was slightly lowered, but still left high enough to be prohibitory. On wool the reduction was so slight as to amount to nothing.

Thus we see that the tariff of 1883 was still a high protective tariff; in fact, it was substantially a continuation of the war tariff. It was just such a piece of legislation we would expect under the circumstances then existing. To reduce the average per cent upon the whole schedule, the duty was lowered on some articles, but, as we have seen, in doing this the class of goods and rate of reduction were so selected as to accrue to the advantage of no one; further, though the condition of the Treasury and the sentiment of the people demanded a general reduction, yet the duty was increased on many articles where, from a protectionist standpoint, such increase "would do the most good."

As was foreseen, this farce reform bill, neither relieved the people of the burden of indirect taxes nor prevented the accumulation in the Treasury. Consequently, the very next year, 1884, a bill was introduced looking to a real reform of the tariff; but the same element that passed the bill of 1883 was still dominant in Congress, and this attempt at reform was a failure. The same may be said of the bills of 1886 and 1887. The constant agitation of the subject, however, showed how alive were the people to the existing wrong. Had the act of 1883 even in part corrected the conditions which it proposed to correct, the country would have settled down to quiet, and to a measure of prosperity commensurate with the relief so given.

In 1890 the protectionists assumed a bold front and passed the most radical protectionist tariff in the history of the country.

For it there was neither the pretext that the country needed revenue nor that an overtaxed people needed compensatory duties. Yet the rates were as high and in some cases higher than when both these conditions obtained. This law is still in force and working great injury to the country, first, by restricting commerce and diverting revenue from the public Treasury into the coffers of corporations; second, it fosters monopolies and trusts, and these, by limiting production, work the double injury of depriving the laborer of work and heaping up high prices to the consumer. That a high protective tariff is a boon to some classes we can not deny; but laws should be enacted for the people of the whole country and not for a class. It is a benefit to the manufacturer of protected articles. It enables him to amass millions, and by combines and trusts to control the commerce and business of the country like an autocrat.

MONOPOLIES AND TRUSTS.

This bill will sound the death knell of monopolies and trusts, monster evils begotten by protection and organized to prevent competition in furnishing the people the necessaries of life, thus making those articles decrease, and robbing the people by enhanced prices for the benefit of a few. The agitation of this bill began at once to affect the stocks of these infamous concerns, whose organization was against the best interests of the people, whose existence was against public policy, and which under the fostering influence of a high protective tariff grew and flourished, defying the people, defying legislation, and defying the courts.

A trust has been defined as "a combination to restrain competition among producers, formed by placing the various producing properties (mills, factories, etc.) in the hands of a board of trustees, who are empowered to direct the operations of production and sale as if the properties were all under a single ownership and management."

Active foreign competition being shut out by a high protective tariff, the different firms and companies who had heretofore competed with each other, by this cunningly devised scheme, kill competition, arrange prices to suit themselves, and regulate production according to demands at their extortionate price.

The first was the Standard Oil Trust, formed in 1869 by a combination of refiners of crude petroleum in Ohio and Pennsylvania. Next, branches of the iron and steel trade combined and formed a trust, and next came the great "American Cotton-Oil Trust." So closely had this hydraheaded monster wrapped his slimy folds around the industries of the American people, that by 1888 it had almost completely in the hands of trusts, petroleum cottonseed oil, and cake, sugar, oatmeal, pearl barley, straw, board, castor oil, linseed oil, school slates, oilcloth, whisky, rubber, steel, steel rails, steel and iron beams, nails, wrought-iron pipe, iron nuts, stoves, lead, copper, envelopes, paper bags, paving pitch, cordage, reaping and binding and mowing machines, thrashing machines, plows, glass, and shortly white lead, jute bagging, lumber, shingles, friction matches, felt, lead pencils, cartridges and cartridge shells, watches and watch cases, clothes-wringers, carpets, coffins and undertakers' supplies, dental tools, wall-paper, sandstone, patent leather, and other articles.

The very purpose of these organizations has been to advance prices and check competition, thus placing the people at the mercy of these combinations, which have reaped enormous profits at their expense. A burning iniquity, a tax for the benefit of the few upon the whole people; a wrong which would be impossible of consummation save under a high protective tariff. Take, for example, the linseed oil trust formed in January, 1887. The price per gallon of linseed oil rose from 38 cents to 52 cents, and was kept up during 1888. Thus every person having painting done paid to the members of this trust for every gallon they used 14 cents over and above the sum he would have paid if competition had been freely allowed; and estimating the consumption of linseed oil at 30,000,000 gallons a year, the trust so increased the price that it took from the people four and half million of dollars per annum.

One of the most noted, also, of these concerns is the sugar trust, whose very life will be taken by this bill.

It was supported by a duty of one-half per cent per pound on fine sugar, which practically prohibited importation.

During the year 1892 the total amount of revenue from this source was $76,000, showing that the American trust controlled the market by the aid of the McKinley tariff, and had an absolute monopoly. As a result the various refineries were put into the trust at inflated valuations and the price of sugar increased, so as to compel the people to pay dividends upon fictitious property. The protective duty levied upon refined sugar was used to increase the price, hence making the consumer pay this tax, none of which was received by the Government, but all of which went into the coffers of the holders of trust stock.

Sugar can be refined more cheaply here than in England and needs no protection. The refiners can therefore control the American market without any protective duty whatever, but under this system, which lays tribute upon the great body of the people for the benefit of the few, this wrong was brought into existence and it is now demanded by the Republican party that it be perpetuated. It was not until 1887 that public attention was completely aroused concerning these organizations, but they have gone on defiantly believing that by working upon passion and prejudice they can continue their work of reaping ill-gotten gains.

Only a little while ago, in the face of the fact that the Wilson bill would become a law, the Bethlehem, the Carnegie, and the Illinois companies, manufacturers of steel rails, agreed to pay the Pennsylvania Steel Company $400,000 as the estimated profits of one year if it would close and keep closed during the twelve months of 1894 the great works at Sparrows Point, Md.

What for the laborers in the mills at Sparrows Point, the interests of whom these gentlemen ostensibly desire to guard so well? It is enough for them that in the face of this contemplated legislation these three mills can afford to pay the profits of another's works if it remains idle and noncompetitive an amount equal to the total earnings of a large number of employés. The railroads will pay for the rails, the people will pay the railroads. The 4,000 employés of the Maryland Company can go, while the wealthy members of the steel trust who have amassed their fortunes under the cry of protection to American labor will add to their ill-gotten wealth. And now these trusts—the white-lead trust, the whisky trust, the sugar trust, the coal trust, and all the others of this infamous band of plunderers of the people, are opposing this bill and endeavoring to prevent its passage unless it shall be so tinkered as to still permit these leeches to feed upon the public. There should be no wavering in the Democratic line. Now is to be struck the first real blow at the life of monopolies, which will not yield without a struggle, but to whom the people must no longer be compelled to pay tribute in order that the wealth of the nation may be accumulated in the hands of a few. [Applause.]

WOOL.

It is claimed that this product of the farmer especially needs protection; that unless a heavy import duty is levied on foreign wools the article can not be profitably grown in this country. This subject demands careful examination at our hands, to the end that we may determine whether or not this assertion is supported by facts. I deem it my duty to stand with my party and to vote in accordance with the views of the majority; for if each of us insisted that some particular view of his own must be incorporated in this bill ere it received our votes, it could never become a law. But let us examine the subject.

If protection benefits the wool-growing industry, then it must follow: First, that the higher the duty levied upon foreign wool the higher will be the price received by the farmer for the home-grown wool. Second, that wool-growing becoming more profitable under a high protective tariff, the number of sheep would be increased not only absolutely, but relatively to the increased population. If wool-growing were a more profitable business under a high tariff than under a low tariff, each flock master would increase his number of sheep, and persons not before in the business would enter it. That the first of these propositions is not borne out by facts, and that the price of wool has constantly increased under a low tariff and decreased constantly under a higher tariff, is shown by the following table taken from the special report on "History and present condition of the sheep industry of the United States," published by authority of the Secretary of Agriculture. To this table, showing the price of wool from 1824 to 1890, I have added the price for the last three years, bringing it up to date.

Year.	Price.	Year.	Price.	Year.	Price.	Year.	Price.
1824	$0.53	1842	$0.42	1860	$0.50	1878	.45
1825	.43	1843	.30	1861	.40	1879	.35
1826	.43	1844	.30	1862	.50	1880	.55
1827	.32	1845	.40	1863	.68	1881	.49
1828	.30	1846	.35	1864	.78	1882	.46
1829	.45	1847	.40	1865	1.00	1883	.43
1830	.35	1848	.38	1866	.65	1884	.40
1831	.60	1849	.30	1867	.53	1885	.33
1832	.55	1850	.40	1868	.43	1886	.34
1833	.41	1851	.40	1869	.50	1887	.38
1834	.60	1852	.38	1870	.46	1888	.35
1835	.50	1853	.56	1871	.46	1889	.36
1836	.60	1854	.47	1872	.72	1890	.37
1837	.63	1855	.35	1873	.68	1891	.35
1838	.42	1856	.38	1874	.54	1892	.32
1839	.40	1857	.50	1875	.56	1893	.32
1840	.45	1858	.33	1876	.52
1841	.45	1859	.52	1877	.43

From 1846 to 1860 we had the lowest wool tariff in the history of the country. And during the last three years of this period wool was practically on the free list, all but the higher grades being admitted free. Although in this period there was one bad year (1858), arising from a panic in the money, market which brings down the average, yet during these fifteen years medium wool brought an average of 41 7/8 cents per pound. And during the three years that I have mentioned, omitting the panic year, wool was 50 cents, and in 1859 52 cents per pound. This is more than the average price for the last fifteen years, and much higher than any year since the McKinley tariff has been in operation. Would not the wool-grower be willing to exchange the prices under the McKinley tariff for the average of 41 7/8 cents per pound, under a low tariff, or even for the 50 and 52 cents per pound when wool was practically on the free list?

In a letter from the Manufacturers' Club, Phialdelphia, to the Ways and Means Committee, under date of September 4, 1893, we find this acknowledged in the following sentence:

Wool, for example, is much lower now than it was in 1890, or than it was even so recently as one year ago.

What magnanimity on the part of these manufacturers! They claim that the duty on woolen goods is to compensate them for the higher price they are obliged to pay for wool on account of the duty upon it. Yet this very letter from which I have quoted is written to persuade the Committee on Ways and Means to continue the present duty on manufactures, while at the same time it acknowledges that they get this raw material cheaper than when it was on the free list; asking that the duty on imported woolens be kept up in order that they may keep up higher prices.

Verily, the manufacturer is not extravagantly bedecked with the jewel consistency. But if he were, perhaps he would not live in a luxuriant mansion, surrounded by servants, and ride in his beautiful carriage driven by liveried coachmen, while the wages of the toiling laborer whom he pretends to love so well are from time to time cut down even to starvation point. And the farmer, whose prejudices he endeavors to enkindle against the party which is his best and truest friend, gets lower prices for his products and pays higher prices for the wares of the manufacturer.

One would hardly expect that under any circumstances, in peace, wool would reach the high prices of war times, when the demand was so great to supply our immense armies with clothing and blankets. Yet, in 1867, the duty on wool was so far increased above that of the war as to be 50 per cent on clothing and combing wool. Yet the price continued to fall, until 1872, when a 10 per cent horizontal reduction was made in the tariff. And as will be seen by the table wool immediately went up and remained high until 1875. In that year the tariff act of 1872 was repealed, putting us back to the high tariff of 1867. Again wool fell and has decreased to the present time. The slight reduction of 1883 can not be responsible for this. For the decrease, with the exception of one year, 1880, was as steady before as after that date; nor did the increased duty of 1890 put any check to the steady fall.

I therefore say, Mr. Speaker, that a clear examination will furnish conclusive proof to the unbiased mind of the correctness of this proposition, that a protective tariff does not increase the price of wool.

In examining my second proposition we must consider the sections of country east and west of the Mississippi separately, as entirely different conditions are found in regard to the wool-growing industry. West of the Mississippi are great tracts of land that can be had at little cost, and Government land that can be used free.

In many sections whole flocks live out of doors all winter without other food than the pasture provided by nature. And where shelter and food are provided for the most severe weather, it is done at a comparatively small cost. Consequently, very large flocks can be kept and wool grown at a profit when the price is so low as to be ruinous to the industry where different conditions obtained. That the number of sheep has increased in this section is natural. East of the Mississippi, however, the number of sheep has greatly diminished.

In the work on Sheep Industry, from which I have already quoted, we find on page 696 that in this section, notwithstanding the enormous increase in population, there were two million less sheep in 1890 than in 1860. And in my own State, Ohio, one of the most important wool-growing States in the Union, there has been a falling off of one-third the number of sheep during the high-tariff period, although the population has increased during that time over 1,000,000. This falling off can not in any way be due to overproduction. It is estimated that we consume annually about 6,000,000 pounds of wool, while we produce less than 3,000,000. In 1878, after ten years of high tariff, Ohio, Michigan, and all the great wool-growing States, had only about half as many sheep as they had in 1867. Before 1867 the number of sheep had been increasing more rapidly than our population. Since then the reverse has taken place.

Again, we are told by manufacturers that some of the best grades of goods can not be made from wool produced in this country, and some not from any one grade of wool; and if the manufacture of such articles should be attempted in disregard of this fact the result would be a mere imitation, something we all despise, and needing no expert to detect. In a reprint from the American Wool and Cotton Reporter of an article by Edward D. Page, of New York, I find this subject discussed. Mr. Page, speaking of woolen manufacturers, says:

I fear that many of them do not fully realize even now how improvement and economy can be accomplished by making these goods from a mixture of the stocks, most exactly suited to the qualities the goods are to possess, instead of the makeshifts which our meager market has hitherto afforded.

He further says:

I have been shown in an English manufacturer's wool house a mixture or blend of no less than fourteen distinct and different varieties of wool, from which he made a simple fabric in which at home not more than two or three qualities are used. Each of these fourteen varieties was found to lend some desirable peculiarity to the fabric, perceptible only in the finished piece, or else to economize the cost. And I was told that the blend used had been substantially the same for thirty years. The goods manufactured from it were perceptibly superior, in selling qualities, to our own.

Some of these qualities are durability of color, fineness, and softness of finish—all very desirable qualities. Although the import duties are very high on these fine qualities of woolen goods, those who can pay high prices will have them. And we can easily understand that if we could import wool free we could buy as much of these fine wools as we desire, thereby making these beautiful fine goods in our own country, and being able to sell them at such prices that many if not all could afford to wear them. This would be a great advantage and great saving to the consumer. And as our home-grown wools could by mixing with the imported wools be used in a greater variety of fabrics, a home market would be created for more than is now produced, and "the flocks would increase on a thousand hills."

An increased demand would increase the price, and the farmer would be benefited in a twofold manner. Nor would the manufacturer be left to suffer. True, he would not be able to charge such high prices, but he would sell more goods at home and could export them and find an abundant market where he would not have to pay duty. He would not make money so fast, but he would make it honestly. A great weight would be lifted from his conscience that has rested there, for lo, these many years. And we certainly would be doing the greatest good to the greatest number.

Here leaving this subject, let me quote from a few authorities. Senator SHERMAN said in 1883:

In the table which I have now before me, it is shown that in 1867 the price of wool was 51 cents a pound; in 1870 it was 46 cents a pound; in 1876 it was 43 cents a pound; in 1880, which was an abnormal year, 48 cents a pound. But to-day I am told that these wools are sold in Ohio at from 35 to 40 cents a pound. So the result of protecting the wool-growers has been, as it has been in all industries, to gradually reduce the price of domestic wools.

Again he said:

Under the operation of the tariff of 1867 the price of wool has gradually gone down. This was the result of the policy of protecting (?) the wool-grower—to gradually reduce the price.

Senator FRYE, of Maine, a protectionist, said:

Domestic wools have come down in price from the time the tariff of 1867 was enacted until to-day.

In short, foreign wools are imported not to compete but to combine with ours, and unless the manufacturer can get a higher price for his product he will pay less for our wool, and when foreign wool is purchased to be mixed with our wool, if foreign wools cost more, ours will bring less.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, September 13, 1893.

SIR: If you want to suit this mill, kindly put wool and all raw materials on the free list. Should this be done, we are willing to have the tariff on manufactured goods gradually reduced 25 per cent, which is sufficient. This country can never compete successfully with European manufacturers until it gets free wool.

The proper thing for your committee to do is to act quickly and settle the matter for a year or two, and whether or not you reduce the tariff the mills will start up, as they will know what they have to figure on.

Yours, respectfully,

BECKMAN & CO.

And, as showing the methods of some gentlemen, I incorporate in my remarks the following letter from one of my constituents:

CHILI, OHIO, January 6, 1894.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed you will find a copy of a petition sent me by Messrs. Justice, Bateman & Co. No doubt the House of Representatives will be flooded with such by signers. I concluded to send you it in blank. This house is doing a wool commission business, but of late years have connected politics with it. They are well known by all shippers of wool. They have made a fortune in wool, but mostly at the expense of shippers. They contributed heavily to the election of Ben. Harrison in the campaign of 1888, and were connected with John Wanamaker in raising the $600,000 campaign fund, and when confronted with the foregoing statement never denied the same. It appears they desire to control the Democratic party as well as the Republican party, only through other means. It is my earnest wish and desire that the Democratic Representatives in the House, as well as the Senators in the Senate, will not go back on the Democratic platforms, which are for reform of the ta iff, and have been so ever since 1876, when Samuel J. Tilden was elected on a tariff-reform platform. It is my opinion that all this howl now made about the revision of the tariff and the lying idle of woolen manufactories is to intimidate the Representatives of the people in order to continue the mulcting of the masses for the privilege of classes. Although you have been steadfast in your past action, and supported the Administration in the repeal bill, and we have not the least doubt you will support and vote for tariff reform, I did not think it amiss to express the sentiments which I did, and believe every true Democrat around this neck of the woods will indorse.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN LORENZ.

Hon. J. A. D. RICHARDS.

SHODDY.

But there is a wicked, insidious enemy that interferes with the price of wool, while at the same time it deprives the American people of the substantial woolen clothing which they are entitled to, and that is shoddy. The manufacturers of woolen goods gave some very interesting testimony—I do not say spontaneous and voluntary—on this subject before the Ways and Means Committee last fall. Among other things they disclosed the fact that under the high protective tariff, before the McKinley bill was passed, there was 1 pound of shoddy used in so-called woolen goods to every 4 pounds of wool; since the passage of the McKinley bill there is 1 pound of shoddy to every pound of wool, four times as much as before.

Thus the McKinley tariff, while it compels the manufacturer to pay higher prices for foreign wools necessary to blend with our domestic wools to make the better grade of cloths, and by its duty on woolen goods enhances the price of proper clothing, it invites the manufacturer of shoddy to the field. And instead of placing upon the backs of the people the pure, healthy product of the sheep, clothes them with shoddy made from the ground-up rags of the slums of the earth. These makers of bogus wool stand in mortal fear of the era of free wool.

From 1870 to 1890, under the protecting care of Republican legislation, they enjoyed prosperity, but since 1890, when, under the McKinley act, foreign wools necessary to mix with our own were driven away and our people compelled to wear such kinds of dear clothing as could be contrived from our wools, or from old rags ground up and wove and stuck together in the form of shoddy. The business of these gentlemen has been a bonanza. Need I say to the American farmer that if clothing is made from wool instead of shoddy it is better for the wearer, and also for the wool-grower? Cheap real woolen goods would destroy this iniquitous business, and the maker of this spurious stuff would rather hear the rolling of thunder or the sound of cannon than the bleating of a lamb.

It has even been said that one of these conscienceless mortals once actually blushed when he discovered a sheep looking him in the face. Yet, as showing which policy is aider and abettor of their business, we find in 1888 seventeen rag and shoddy dealers issuing a circular, which was distributed by the Republican national committee, asserting that free wool would entirely ruin their business, declaring against the "free-trade" party of Grover Cleveland and for Harrison and Morton. Their election was declared "to be indispensable to the maintenance of our business;" and now, in a petition to this Congress, wherein they protest against the placing of wools on the free list, they have the effrontery to declare that the number of plants engaged in the shoddy business "is nearly one hundred, with a combined capital of millions."

I say to this House, "choose you this day whom ye will serve," the maker of shoddy, who deprives the American farmer of a proper price for his wool by manufacturing cloth from ground-up and woven rags, and who cheats the people by placing upon the market this stuff now constituting a large part of our clothing, or will you serve the cause of common honesty, call a halt in this iniquitous business, and by proper tariff legislation give our farmer a better price for his wool and our people a better kind of cheap, warm, woolen clothing. If there be one of the children of this Republican system more unlikely than the others, Shoddy is the ugliest brat begotten by that foul parent, High Tariff. View the offspring of your pet: monopolies, combines, trusts, pools—Shoddy. [Applause.]

COAL.

Coal is a necessity to our domestic and manufacturing uses, and great is the store of this fuel laid up for our use in bygone ages, and yet this boon to civilization, this needed article, is virtually in the hands of monopolies.

Each year there is used in the United States about 120,000,000 tons of coal, which, at an average price of $4 per ton, is nearly $500,000,000 or more than $8 per annum for every man, woman, and child in the country.

The enormous coal fields are widely distributed, productive mines being in operation in many of our States. Anthracite coal, however, only occurs in a limited area in Pennsylvania, but the deposit is of wonderful richness. The total area of these fields is about 300,000 acres, of which about 200,000 acres are owned by a few (seven) railway corporations. These companies directly, or through subsidiary companies, control the market, carry on mining operations, carry the coal to market and sell it.

Many years ago these seven companies formed the famous anthracite coal pool by which they agreed to maintain a uniform selling price at all important distributing points where two or more of the companies carried competition—cities within an hour's ride of the miners were compelled to pay as much as those hundreds of miles distant, and while this pool is a thing of the past on account of the passage of a law in Pennsylvania making their acts illegal and punishable, there is a secret agreement between these companies to-day, and where two or more roads meet the same prices for coal are quoted. Hundreds of thousands of people of the North and Northwest must pay for coal, this necessity of life, whatever the managers of a single corporation demand.

We have seen the Missouri Pacific Railway Company working through subsidiary companies, encircling the coal fields of Missouri, Colorado, and the Indian Territory, and compelling private operators to sell coal at the company's prices in the market; the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe; the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy; the Denver and New Orleans; the Union Pacific, and the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Companies reaching out for the Colorado, and the Union Pacific, the Chicago and Northwestern, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, reaching out for the Wyoming coal fields. While the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, having a monopoly on the Pacific coast, from time to time kept prices at San Francisco just below the point at which it was profitable to import Australian coal.

We have seen the Hocking Valley and Toledo Railway Company in Ohio grasping the great Hocking Valley coal fields of the State. The coal of Alabama seized by the Louisville and Nashville, and the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company and Chesapeake and Ohio seizing the coal fields of West Virginia.

These facts go to show that the consumers of coal are at the mercy of corporations.

Let me quote from an article by Henry D. Lloyd in the North American Review, June, 1886:

Last July Messrs. Vanderbilt, Sloan, and one or two others out of several hundred owners of coal lands and coal railroads, met in the pleasant shadows of Saratoga to make a binding arrangement for the control of the coal trade. "Binding arrangement," the sensitive coal presidents say, they prefer to the word "combination."

The gratuitous warmth of summer suggested to these men the need the public would have of artificial heat at artificial prices the coming winter. It was agreed to fix prices, and to prevent the production of too much of the raw material of warmth by suspensions of mining. In anticipation of the arrival of the cold wave from Manitoba, a cold wave was sent out all over the United States from their parlors in New York, in an order for half-time work by the miners during the first three months of this year, and for an increase of prices. These are the means this combination uses to keep down wages—the price of men, and keep up the price of coal—the wages of capital. Prices of coal in the West are fixed by the Western Anthracite Coal Association, controlled entirely by the large railroads and mine owners of Pennsylvania. The association regulates the price west of Buffalo and Pittsburg and in Canada.

Our annual consumption of anthracite is now between 31,000,000 and 32,000,000 tons. The West takes between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 tons. The companies which compose the combination mine, transport, and sell their own coal. They are obliterating other mine-owners and the retailer. The Chicago and New York dealer has almost nothing to say about what he shall pay or what he shall charge, or what his profits shall be. The great companies do not let the little man make too much. Year by year the coal retailers are sinking into the status of mere agents of the combination, with as little freedom as the consumer.

Combination is busy in those soft-coal districts, whose production is so large that it must be sent to competitive markets. A pool has just been formed covering the annual product of 6,000,000 tons of the mines of Ohio. Indiana and Illinois are to be brought in, and it is planned to extend it to all the bituminous coal districts that compete with each other. The appearance of Mr. Vanderbilt last December in the Clearfield district of Pennsylvania at the head of a company capitalized for $5,000,000 was the first entry of a metropolitan man into this field.

Mr. Vanderbilt's rôle is to be that of producer, carrier, dealer, and consumer all in one. Until he came the district was occupied by a number of small companies and small operators, as used to be the case in the anthracite fields in the old days. But the man who works himself, with his sons, in a small mine, cutting perhaps from 20 to 40 tons a day, can not expect to survive the approach of the Manhattan capitalists. The small Clearfield producers, looking at the fate of their kind in the anthracite country, greeted Mr. Vanderbilt's arrival with the question, "What is to become of us?" "If the small operator," said one of the great man's lieutenants, "goes to the wall, that is his misfortune, not our fault."

And this kind of misfortune has, alas, overtaken many poor men that the supply might be kept down, even to the extent of creating a coal famine, with all its concomitant horrors for the poor; for a coal famine is always so managed as to happen in the severest winter weather, and when added to insufficient shelter and insufficient clothing it brings untold suffering. We have heard each party arraign the other for closing public works and putting out the fires of the furnaces, thus depriving the laborer of work.

But what shall be said of the man who "puts the fire out" on the poor man's hearth in the dead of winter regardless of the half-clad sufferer, who perhaps has crawled from her bed of rags to hover over the few scanty coals? And all that the price of coal may be raised in the interests of a Vanderbilt, thus taking the few pennies that should have bought a loaf of bread as the additional price of a pail of coal. Anyone who has visited the poor quarters of our large cities during a coal famine, and I hope many of you have, and seen the wretched, starved creatures buying coal by the pail or half pail know that the picture of their sufferings can not be overdrawn. And in the interest of such, I ask you to do away with a tax that makes possible a monopoly, which is the most grievous of burdens to the already overburdened poor.

The testimony taken before the Ways and Means Committee shows that it is only the operators of the Eastern coal mines that fear competition in case the duty is removed from coal. And the only coal dealers they mention as competitors are those of Nova Scotia and Canada. Yet it is brought out in the testimony of these men that their mines supply coal to Canada in face of the duty of 67 cents per ton we pay for selling coal in that Dominion. Also, that these same coal dealers, who are so afraid of competition with Nova Scotia coal, claiming that they can barely hold their own with the duty of 75 cents per ton, and if this duty were removed the competition would be ruinous to their business—these same coal dealers were forced to admit in their testimony that they ship their coal all the way to Cuba, where it comes into direct competition with Nova Scotia coal, where it pays no duty. And that this competition is successful and the trade profitable to American dealers is evidenced by the vast amount they ship to Cuba every year.

If this can be done, after paying freight for such a long distance, as a matter of course it can be done at home. And the claim that the wages of the miners will have to be reduced is all buncombe, calculated to excite the sympathy of the uninformed. They claim that the cost of coal is mainly labor; that being the case, Canada and Nova Scotia coals cost as much as ours, for their miners, it is acknowledged in the testimony of these operators, receive the same wages as do our miners. These being the facts in the case, free coal can work no injury to the miners and laboring men. The extensive operator of the Eastern coal fields will not reap such large profits, and will not be able to limit the output and increase the price and deprive the miner of work at his own sweet will.

I append a report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce made to this House on June 10, 1892, which is as follows:

[House Report No. 1630, Fifty-second Congress, first session].

INVESTIGATION OF RAILROADS COMBINATIONS.

June 10, 1892.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitted the following report (to accompany Mis. Doc. ——):

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have considered a resolution, a copy of which is hereto subjoined, offered by Mr. Stout, in the House of Representatives, on the 12th of February last, and referred to them, and respectfully report:

That while that resolution may be inaccurate in some of its statements, it furnishes sufficient grounds for an inquiry by Congress into a transaction which probably vitally affects the interests of the people of the United States. It is very generally and confidently alleged throughout the country; it is asserted in suits at law and bills in equity pending in the courts; it is currently believed on the exchanges, in which such things are most narrowly watched, that a combination of the three leading anthracite coal roads, the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, and the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, together with the companies which these several roads control, and a combination of this combination with the Port Reading Railroad Company and other transportation and producing companies have been effected; and that these combinations are for the purpose of creating a monopoly in the production and transportation of anthracite coal and to control its price in the market; that the market price has already been advanced without any other excuse than to further the interests of the monopoly (and this at a season of the year when the consumption of anthracite coal is at its minimum), and that said combinations propose to advance the price still further from time to time.

And as it is apparent that State legislation or action is insufficient to cope with these combinations, extending as they do, if they exist, over several States, and constituting a menace to all the people of the United States, it is of vital importance to ascertain (1) whether the alleged combinations, or any similar combinations exist; (2) whether any law of Congress and particularly whether "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" (chapter 647 of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes) have been violated by the companies and collateral companies said to form, or which may be found to form, the said combinations; (3) what additional legislation in such case, on the part of Congress, may be necessary, expedient, and proper: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or such portion of them as they may specially designate for the purpose, be empowered and directed to investigate, at the earliest practicable moment, whether the alleged combinations of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, and the Port Reading Railroad Company, or any combination between any of these roads and any other roads or canals or producers of coal, for any illegal or improper purpose, exist, and, if such combinations do exist, the effect thereof on the production, transportation, distribution, and price of anthracite coal, and upon commerce among the several States, and to report to the House any and all facts in relation to the subject-matter of the investigation which the committee of investigation herein provided for may ascertain, and to make such recommendations as the said committee may agree upon; and that said committee be authorized to sit during the session of the House or during the recess of Congress, and at such place or places as it may find necessary; to employ a clerk or stenographer, to administer oaths, issue subpœnas, compel the attendance of witnesses and examine them, and compel the production of books and papers; and that a sum, not to exceed $10,000, sufficient to pay the expenses of the committee herein provided for shall be immediately available and payable out of the contingent fund of the House on the order of the chairman of said investigating committee; and all vouchers for any such expenditures shall be likewise certified to by the chairman of said investigating committee.

The subjoined is a copy of a resolution offered in the House of Representatives on the 12th of February, 1892, by Mr. Stout, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

"FEBRUARY 12, 1892.

"Mr. Stout submitted the following; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

"Whereas the Reading, Lehigh Valley, the Jersey Central, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railways, operating lines in different States, and representing a nominal capital of $600,000,000, the plant of which could be duplicated at one-half the sum, have combined their capital: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be requested to investigate the facts of the case and report whether such consolidation should not be prohibited by national law; and whether a bureau of interstate transportation should not be organized, headed by a Cabinet officer, known as the Secretary of Commerce.

"Attest:

"JAMES KERR, Clerk."

The subjoined is a letter from the Interstate Commerce Commission in reply to an inquiry addressed to that Commission by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as to whether the Commission has entered upon any such investigation as is contemplated in the resolution of Mr. Stout, printed herewith:

"INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
"OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
"Washington, March 31, 1892.

"The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives:

"SIR: Your communication of the 29th instant, inclosing copy of proposed resolution directing your committee to investigate and report concerning the recent consolidation of the Philadelphia and Reading with other railroads, and requesting to be informed whether this Commission has entered upon any investigation of such consolidation, is received.

"The act to regulate commerce does not give the Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction of matters which relate only to dealings between railroad companies and have no bearing upon the rights of the public to impartial treatment and reasonable and equal charges in the transportation of interstate commerce. The magnitude of the railroad deal referred to is calculated to arouse grave apprehensions of resultant injuries to the public welfare, but until the attention of the Commission is called to some contravention of the interstate-commerce law, caused or made possible by the combination of railroad interests, no grounds appear to exist upon which an investigation of the consolidation could properly be instituted by the Commission under that law."

IRON.

At the beginning of the war, we had iron ore among unclassified articles, upon which a duty of 10 per cent was assessed. But as no ore was imported either then or during the war, we find the rate remained the same up to 1870, when it was raised to 20 per cent. As soon as it began to be imported to some extent, it attracted the attention of the protectionists; who were looking for new fields, and the duty was raised in 1883 to 75 cents per ton, which was about 35 per cent ad valorem. But to present this branch of the subject clearly and concisely, I can not do better than to quote from the testimony of the president of the Pennsylvania Steel Company before the Ways and Means Committee, when Mr. McKinley was chairman of that committee and they were taking testimony with a view to reform the tariff:

The demand for free ore, in my judgment, can now be presented from a commercial standpoint, which can not fail to convince all fair-minded persons that innumerable benefits to our country would follow, without working harm to a single interest which is legitimately connected with the production of American ore, iron, or the products proceeding therefrom. To systematize this permit me to present the following facts:

First. That only ore which is suitable for the manufacture of steel is ever imported; and if competing at all, can only compete with the like quantity of domestic production.

Second. The whole quantity of ore suitable for Bessemer pig iron which it will be possible to produce in this country during the year 1890 will not exceed 5,000,000 tons. This estimate includes every ton of ore that can be raised by hook or crook. Three and one-half millions tons of pig iron, it is estimated, will be required to supply the wants of the steel manufacturers in this country during the present year. To manufacture this amount of pig iron, 6,500,000 tons of iron ore of suitable quality will be required. One and one-half millions tons of Bessemer steel ore must therefore be imported into this country by our steel manufacturers, or their works will remain idle one-fourth of the year.

He further says that one-half million tons will come from Cuba, where the mines are owned by an American company; and that the importation of this ore is the direct means of securing the exportation to the West Indies and South America of American coal, as return cargo in the steamers which bring the ore to this country:

In 1889 the export of American coal has been almost equal ton for ton to the importation of iron ore. There is no reason why, by using these steamers, this country can not so develop her coal business in the West Indies and South America that she will absolutely drive English coal out of those markets. One million tons will be imported from the Mediterranean and the three hundred and fifty steamers that will be required to bring that quantity of ore to this country will leave our shores laden with wheat, cotton, and corn, carrying this outward cargo more cheaply on account of the freight received for bringing the iron ore.

He says further:

Practically the whole of the imported iron ore is used in the furnaces located at or near tidewater. Seventy-five cents per ton on these ores represents the cost of hauling one tone of ore 100 miles. Removing this duty, therefore, only enables iron ore to enter 100 miles farther into the linterior than it does to-day. On the other hand, it will enable my company as exporters to go 800 or 1,000 miles by sea to compete with our competitors abroad.

The condition of the supply and demand for Bessemer steel raw material has not materially changed in this country for the past five years. This country has never since the introduction of the manufacture of Bessemer steel imported less than 25 per cent of the material consumed in the manufacture of the steel output, and the prospect for the future, judging by the past, is that the national growth of the country will keep pace with and probably more than absorb the increased output of native steel raw material arising from the new developments that are and have been constantly projected. It used to come here in the form of pig iron, but as this country increased her furnace capacity the steel manufacturer now seeks to bring it here more and more in the form of ore.

That is, all the ore we import is of a kind of which we do not produce enough to supply the demand of our immense iron and steel trade. Not only so, but being brought here as ore and made into pig iron by our furnaces, is thus supplying more work for the American laborer. And Joseph G. Butler, of Youngstown, Ohio, in his testimony before the same committee, says that if it were not for the great development of the pig-iron industry in this country he does not know where we could get our pig iron. "We could not import a ton." Yet at the same sitting, in answer to a question, he says:

I say the present tariff does not cut any figure.

And again:

We want this tariff on everything we can produce in this country. We do not want to import anything.

Yes; and wants the tariff on pig iron, of which he says we can not import a ton. What does he want tariff to protect in this case? Very evidently he wants the tariff to protect high prices. As to steel rails, none are now imported: the duty is as prohibitory as when it was $17 and $28 a ton. The cost of transportation of steel rails is from $2 to $4 a ton. All the difference above this transportation cost is caused by the tariff tax. In 1891 the price was $8 higher in this country; last year the price was $12 higher. If steel rails were admitted free of duty they would not, owing to the cost of railroad transportation, be used, excepting near tidewater.

WAGES.

One of the most important, if not the most important, question of the tariff controversy is that of wages. The great majority of the population in all countries belong to some branch of the laboring class. That the prosperity of a country largely depends upon the condition of this class is a self-evident fact. Were all of this great class employed at remunerative wages, this one fact would conduce more to the prosperity and happiness of the world than all other conditions combined. There would be no poverty, and, best of all, no strikes and no lockouts. But to this Utopian condition we never can expect to attain. Of all the factors entering into the wage question I believe the most potent factor is supply and demand. Where there is more work to be done than there are laborers to do it, there will wages be extremely high, as in the case of the opening up of some new field in a distant part of a country, as in the early history of our Western mines.

When the supply equals the demand, a normal condition, then wages will become lower; and when the supply exceeds the demand then there will be fierce competition and wages will be reduced. We find that in our own country wages have always been high. This is owing to our vast domain and to the fact that there have always been new enterprises developing, such as the opening of mines, building of canals and railroads, reducing vast tracts of wild lands to agricultural purposes, building new towns and cities, etc. Lately the advocates of protection have claimed that we owe it to their policy that wages are higher in this than in some other countries.

This assertion would not be worth noticing were it not for the fact that many persons will believe a bare statement without proper proof to back it up. But high wages have existed in our country regardless of the rate of the tariff. Whether it was high or low has made no difference, with the exception that in the protected industries the owners of such works will sometimes lock out their workmen because, not that they refuse the higher wages protection makes, but because they refuse to submit to reductions—they lock them out and employ the so-called pauper labor imported from other countries. If protection caused wages to be higher, then in those countries where protection exists we would always find wages to be higher than in those countries having a low tariff or free trade. But that this is not the case is shown by the following table, taken from the report of the United States Tariff Commission, volume 2, page 2388:

Occupation.	Protection.		Free trade.
	Germany.	France.	Belgium.	England.
Bricklayers	$3.45	$4.00	$6.00	$8.12
Masons	4.00	5.00	6.00	8.16
Carpenters	4.18	5.42	5.40	8.25
Painters	4.60	4.90	4.20	7.25
Plasterers	4.35	.....	5.40	8.10
Blacksmiths	3.90	.....	5.40	8.12
Cabinetmakers	4.95	.....	4.80	7.70
Dyers	3.30	.....	.....	7.00
Weavers	3.00	.....	.....	5.49
Grinders in glass works	4.87	.....	.....	10.92
Common laborers	2.60	.....	3.00	5.00

This table shows that the weekly wages paid by free-trade European countries is much above the wages paid by European countries in which a protective tariff exists. But it is neither fair nor honest to say that because of protection the wages in this country are higher than in a free-trade European country, and when the statement is made that wages are higher here than in England, where free trade exists, it ought also to be stated that they are still further above the wages of France and Germany, where protection exists. Mr. Powderly says that one good labor organization does more to keep up wages than all the protective tariffs in existence, and Mr. Frick, in his testimony before the tariff commission, acknowledged that tariff has nothing to do with the question of wages.

It was the boast of the Republican party that the passage of the McKinley bill would increase the wages of the laborer. Where and when have they been increased? Has not the manufacturer, instead of the workman, derived all the benefit to be had from this law? Now, Republican speakers and Republican writers, during the campaign of 1888, proclaimed their love for the laborer. They loved him with a love passing that of David and Jonathan, and their chief desire in keeping the Democratic party from power was, that they might do something for him. All that they asked for their guardian-angel duties was, that the workingman might be benefited. The workingmen flocked to the polls and voted for Harrison and Morton, and having performed what they considered their part of the arrangement they sat down and waited for the Republican bosses to throw open the gates of the Garden of Eden and invite them to walk in.

Harrison and Morton were elected, and the McKinley bill, increasing duties to so high a figure that every wage-earner in the land was taxed, was enacted. The manufacturer counted his increased profits by thousands, but no increased benefits came to the laborer. In 1892 these same wage-earners arose in their might and rebuked the party that had thus betrayed them. The cry of tariff reform was in the air, but these nabobs were not to be so easily defeated. Jacob when hungry sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, and how easy to crush out the very life of the laborer by pinching hunger. To-day, under the pretence that if the tariff is interfered with they can not compete with foreign markets, they send the honest workman, from whose toil they have grown rich, to tramp the streets for employment and to want for food. Meanwhile, American manufactured goods, made by these same workmen, are sold in Europe cheaper than in America.

An instance of the love of these gentlemen for the workingman was illustrated not long since at the Havemeyer Sugar Refinery in Brooklyn. A committee of the firemen requested that during the heated term of three or four months they might be allowed to work eight hours a day instead of twelve. The heat is so unbearable that last year in that refinery over 500 men were overcome by it and about 100 died. It is a veritable slaughter house, and the only way to save the men from death is to allow them shorter hours during the hot weather. But how was their request met?. By a refusal. What if eight hours were enough in that seething hell of heat to exhaust the stoutest man; what cared these protected gentlemen for the long line of funerals, and the widows and orphans they were making. These men must work and die while the American people protect the trust and put millions each year into its coffers.

The McKinley bill abolished the duty on raw sugar, and thus gave the trust free raw material, but, at the same time left a protection of one-half cent per pound on refined sugar, which enabled it to extort just so much from the pockets of the people.

When it is remembered that a difference of one-sixth of a cent per pound in favor of the trust takes $2,500,000 from the pockets of the people each year, we can form some estimate of its power for evil.

The McKinley tariff does not protect labor. It enters from foreign lands without restriction. Its importation is free, and is a menace to the standard of wages and to the continuance of employment. The manufacturer protests against the introduction of any goods from abroad to compete with his, or which might be bought by his laborers at a lower price; but he demands that the laborers from all the earth may be brought in free and dumped at American factories and mines, and in front of workingmen's homes, so that when increased wages are demanded or reductions resisted these raw recruits may step in and fill the places of the old hands. This importation of labor forces wages downward while a high tariff, combines, and trusts produced thereby, force the price of goods upward. In this way wage-earners are deprived of the recompense they would otherwise receive, and from their hard-wrought earnings are compelled to pay extortionate rates for articles of everyday consumption.

The protection of labor is in organization, and every workingman well knows that throughout the country there has been a systematic effort to throttle labor organizations in order to effect the diminution of wages at the pleasure of the employer, whose alleged love for the wage-earner is a sham and a fraud. Have wage-earners already forgotten that at the time of the passage of the McKinley tariff act they were told it would bring them higher wages; that after it became a law, while the manufacturer profited immensely, determined effort was made to take the life of labor organizations; how wages were cut down, and how the earth of Homestead drank up the lifeblood of the laborer who resisted the attempt to crush out the right of American laborers to protect themselves?

AD VALOREM AND SPECIFIC DUTIES.

The champions of monopoly and high taxes attack us because we are friendly to the levying of ad valorem duties, and to hear them shout in horror one would suppose that it was a new device of the present Congress. Specific duties group a number of articles together and charge upon the cheaper as much as upon the more costly, thereby taxing the poor man upon his cheap article as much as the rich man upon his luxury. They tax by the yard, pound, or gallon, compelling the poor who use cheap goods to pay as much taxes as the rich who use dear goods. They tax cloth that costs 50 cents per yard the same as cloth that costs $5 per yard. It is equivalent to taxing land the same price per acre whether located in the heart of New York or Chicago or on the Western prairie.

When the same specific duty is collected on a low-priced as on a high-priced yard, pound, bushel, or gallon, it is self-evident that the consumers of the low-priced goods are paying an undue amount of taxes. Tariff should be charged on what a thing is worth. Those who are able to pay a higher duty and purchase the higher-priced goods, should pay more than the poor man upon his low-priced goods.

Upon this subject, Henry Clay, in a speech made by him in 1842, after nine years' experience under the compromise tariff of 1833, said:

> What are the other principles of the act? First, there is the principle that a fixed ad valorem duty shall prevail and be in force at all times. For one, I am willing to abide by that principle. There are certain vague notions afloat as to the utility and necessity of specific duties and discrimination, which I am persuaded arise from a want of a right understanding of the subject. We have had the ad valorem principle practically in force ever since the compromise act was passed, and there has been no difficulty in administering the duties of the Treasury on that principle.
>
> It was necessary first to ascertain the value of the goods and then to impose the duty upon them, and from the commencement of the act to this day the ad valorem principle has been substantially in operation. Compare the difference between specific and the ad valorem system of duties, and I maintain that the latter is justly entitled to the preference. The one principle declares that the duty shall be paid upon the real value of the article taxed; the specific principle imposes an equal duty on articles greatly unequal in value.
>
> Coffee, for example (and it is an article which always suggests itself to my thoughts), is one of the articles on which a specific duty has been levied. Now, it is perfectly well known that the Mocha coffee is worth at least twice as much as the coffee of St. Domingo or Cuba; yet both pay the same duty. The tax has no respect to the value, but it is arbitrarily levied on all articles of a specific kind alike, however various and unequal may be their values. I say that in theory, and according to every sound principle of justice, the ad valorem mode of taxation is entitled to the preference. There is, I admit, one objection to it; as the value of an article is a matter subject to opinion, and as opinions will vary, either honestly or fraudulently, there is some difficulty in preventing frauds. But, with the home valuation proposed by my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. SIMMONS], the ad valorem system can be adopted with all practical safety, and will be liable to those chances only of fraud which are inevitable under any and every system. What has been the fact from the origin of the Government until now?
>
> The articles from which the greatest amount of revenue has been drawn, such as woolens, linens, silks, cottons, worsteds, and a few others, have all been taxed on the ad valorem principle, and there has been no difficulty in the operation. I believe, upon the whole, that it is the best mode. I believe that if we adopt a fixed rate ad valorem wherever it can be done, the revenue will be subjected to fewer frauds than the injustice and frauds incident to specific duties. One of the most prolific sources of the violation of our revenue laws has been, as everybody knows, the effort to get goods of a finer quality and higher value admitted under the lower rate of duty required for those of a lower value. But if the duty were laid ad valorem, there could be no motive for such an effort, and the fraud, in its present form, would have no place.

But even under the McKinley bill more than two hundred and fifty ad valorem duties are levied. In the schedules of "Miscellaneous manufactures of leather," "Leather and manufactures of," in the button industry, in the wood-pulp industry, in Schedule L, pertaining to the silk industry, in Schedule K, relating to wool and manufactures thereof, we find the levying of ad valorem duties.

THE AMERICAN FARMER.

Goldsmith wrote long ago:

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.
> Princes and lords may flourish or may fade—
> A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
> But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
> When once destroy'd, can never be supplied.

It is admitted by all economists that the prosperity of the agricultural class is essential to the welfare of a country; and history teaches that neglect of agriculture has been the cause of the decay of the most powerful nations. That it has been the foundation of our own prosperity is proven by a glance at our early history, and in all the stages of our growth we need only to inquire into the condition of our farmers to ascertain if the nation is in a prosperous condition.

This is illustrated by what occurred in 1880 and 1881. There was a complete stagnation in manufacturing and commercial industries, and more than one million mechanics and laborers were thrown out of employment, and in their destitution and consequent misery they took to tramping in search of work.

But crops were good, although prices were not what they should have been, yet the farmers were enabled to relieve the depressed condition of the whole country. Can as much be said of the prosperity of any other class? Manufacturers have had many years of prosperity; so have the owners of extensive mines; but can we say that the prosperity of either of these classes has assured the prosperity of the whole country, much less rescued it from such conditions as existed in 1880 and 1881? The prosperity of these only redounds to the interest of the few.

For the prosperity of the farmer two things are necessary—good crops and good prices. For the first, a bountiful Providence has done all that is necessary. With our vast acreage, each one who desires it can have an abundance of land to till, and the diversity of climate allows of such variety of products that each may choose the line of agriculture he prefers, and be sure that in most years, if he does his part, he will have abundant harvests. But the prices are not so assured; they belong neither to the domain of Providence nor do they depend upon the ability and industry of the farmer. But that something exerts an influence over prices is conceded by all; and by a very large majority, if not by all, that something is believed to be legislation.

True, the Government can not fix a price for any certain articles: but by proper legislation it can remove such restrictions as hinder their regulation by the natural law of supply and demand, and repeal or reform such laws as require the farmer to bear the burden of or be taxed for the interest of other classes. But that such burdens are a great impediment to the prosperity of the farmer is illustrated by comparing the statistics of a manufacturing with those of an agricultural State, taken from the United State census report:

> These will show that the aggregate wealth of the State of Pennsylvania in 1850 was $313 per capita and that of Illinois was much less. During the low-tariff decade from 1850 to 1860 the State of Pennsylvania increased her aggregate wealth to $487 per capita, while the State of Illinois increased hers to $509 per capita. From 1860 to 1870, under the high protective tariff, when by action of Government the exchangeable values of her main products were enhanced from 40 to 50 per cent, the State of Pennsylvania increased her wealth to $1,081 per capita; while the State of Illinois, whose exchangeable value of products was regulated in foreign markets, increased hers only to $835 per capita, and during the following decade of high protection for the Pennsylvania product that State increased her wealth to $1,250 per capita, while that of the tributary State of Illinois increased to only $1,005 per capita.

Let me call your attention to the opinion on this subject of some leading men of both parties. Joseph Medill, editor of the Chicago Tribune, the leading Republican paper of the Northwest, says:

> Where, then, is the remedy from the heavy burden of a 50 per cent tax on the necessaries of life, both imported and domestic? There is only one element or class able to remove it, and that Samson is sleeping in the lap of Delilah and will not awaken. I, of course, mean the farmers—the plundered, unprotected twenty-five million of geese-like farmers who permit themselves to be plucked of almost every feather by a hundred thousand "protected" monopolists.
>
> While the plowmen act like Issachar's ass and crouch between two burdens, both will be kept on their backs. The fabricants live focalized in the cities and plot and scheme for the promotion of their selfish interests and bring their united lobby influence to bear on members of Congress; whereas the farmers live isolated and scattered and can not or do not combine in defense of their interests. Hence they are unprotected, unrepresented, and unconscious of what keeps them poor. They are captivated by the specious cry of "protection to American industry," though they get none of it, and of the value of the "protected" home markets to them, as if protected monopolists eat any more than other men.

The president of the National Farmers' Alliance, Mr. L. L. Polk, said before the United States Senate Committee on Agriculture, April 22, 1890:

We protest, and with all reverence, that it is not God's fault. We protest that it is not the farmer's fault. We believe, and so charge, solemnly and deliberately, that it is the fault of the financial system of the Government—a system that has placed on agriculture an undue, unjust, and intolerable proportion of the burdens of taxation.

It is the present system of taxation that has been cheapening not only farm products, but the price of land itself. If it exists much longer is there not danger that the prediction of the New York State assessors will come true? And—

In a few years you will see the present owners of farms in many instances tenants on them. The cities are prospering, though. New York City has added $50,000,000 property to its real value the past year; Brooklyn, between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000; Buffalo, $5,000,000; Rochester, between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000.

The following is taken from the United States census reports:

Of the total wealth of the country in 1850 the farmers owned nearly $4,000,000,000, or more than one-half. In 1860 the farmer's share was still one-half. In 1880, though half the population was still on farms, his share of the total wealth was $12,000,000,000, or a little more than one-fourth. That is, while the agricultural half of our population increased their wealth $4,000,000,000 the other half increased theirs $23,600,000,000; and this immense amount is mainly in the hands of a few millionaires and not distributed among the many, as is the amount belonging to the agricultural class.

Every farmer knows that he is more prosperous when he has enough products of his farm to exchange for all the clothing, groceries, and other necessaries his family may need for the year than when he has to draw the money out of the bank to pay for them, or give his note in case he has no money in the bank. Now, our country has to buy many things from other countries that we do not produce, and when we pay for them "in trade," as the farmer would say, we are more prosperous than when we have to pay for them with money. That is, it is a mark of national prosperity when, instead of paying for our imports with gold, we pay for them in exports of agricultural products, manufactured articles, etc. It follows that the commercial policy that admits of the most exports is the most conducive to the prosperity of the country. History shows that our exports are always larger under a low tariff than they are under a high or protective tariff.

Between 1850 and 1860, under low tariff, our agricultural exports increased 25 per cent yearly. Since then, under protective tariff, they have increased only 3 per cent yearly. In the same low-tariff decade manufactured articles increased 171 per cent; and only 20 per cent in the next twenty years under protective tariff.

The exports of the manufacturers have largely increased, while the exports of the farmers have largely decreased.

These "infant industries," receiving from 40 to 250 per cent protection in the home market, are willing to sell abroad without any protection whatever, and at a lower price. They furnish their agricultural machinery and carriages and other articles to Europe and Australia at prices competing with the nations of the world, underselling them at a fair profit, while they charge the American farmer as much more for their goods as they charge the foreigners as the tariff will permit.

England exported to American countries south of us in 1880 $51,285,000, while our exports to the same countries were $3,899,400. Let us reflect what prosperity the reverse of these figures would bring us.

Not only is there a greater demand for our products under a low tariff, but better prices. We have shown that wool was made higher under a low tariff. From 1842–1846, under protection, wheat was 82 and corn 48 cents; 1846–1850, low tariff, wheat $1.10, corn 57 cents. After twenty-five years high protection, in 1887, wheat was 70 and corn 39 cents; the price has become lower and lower every year until the present time, under the McKinley tariff, it has reached the bottom.

But the duty being removed or reduced on manufactured articles the farmer would buy them much cheaper. In the following tables the articles are taken that would be needed by a farmer commencing on a farm with everything to buy. These tables were compiled by Mr. Lieb in 1888 from market reports and merchants' price lists, and particular pains has been taken to avoid exaggeration, the amount of tax being rather under than over estimated.

Table showing prices of commodities with protection, without protection, and manufacturers' tax.

	Prices with protection.	Prices without protection.	Manufacturers' tax.
MATERIALS FOR FARMHOUSE.
Domestic manufactures.
6,000 feet joists and scantling	$78.00	$66.00	$12.00
5,000 feet flooring	80.00	60.00	20.00
1,200 feet common boards	15.60	13.20	2.40
3,500 feet siding	77.00	70.00	7.00
12,000 shingles	30.00	25.80	4.20
25 doors and windows	150.00	130.00	20.00
450 feet base-boards	12.60	11.60	1.00
Front stairs	45.00	35.00	10.00
Plaster, lime, hair, and lath	161.00	131.00	30.00
182 feet cornice	92.00	85.64	6.36
Paint	50.00	30.00	20.00
Glass	25.00	18.00	7.00
Total	816.20	676.24	139.96
MATERIALS FOR BARN.
3,000 feet siding	75.00	69.00	6.00
1,500 feet rafters	22.50	21.00	1.50
300 feet sills	4.00	3.40	.60
300 feet stringers	4.00	3.40	.60
150 plates	2.00	1.70	.30
400 posts	7.00	6.20	.80
2,000 feet sheeting	35.00	31.00	4.00
1,300 feet upper floor	33.00	30.40	2.60
2,500 feet lower floor	25.00	20.00	5.00
1,600 feet lower joists	20.00	16.80	3.20
1,300 feet upper joists	16.00	13.40	2.60
2,000 feet bin lumber	50.00	46.00	4.00
16,000 shingles	48.00	42.00	6.00
200 pounds nails	6.00	3.50	2.50
Hardware	5.00	3.00	2.00
Total	352.50	310.80	41.70
FENCING.
Outside.
22,000 feet fencing lumber	440.00	396.00	44.00
2,000 fence posts	200.00	160.00	40.00
200 pounds fencing nails	6.00	3.50	2.50
2 pairs hinges	2.00	1.00	1.00
Inside.
5,000 feet fencing lumber	100.00	90.00	10.00
1,000 fence posts	100.00	80.00	20.00
100 pounds fencing nails	3.00	1.80	1.20
2 pairs small hinges	1.50	1.00	.50
2,000 pounds barbed wire	12.00	6.00	6.00
500 pickets	5.00	4.00	1.00
300 feet, planed 2 by 4	7.00	5.60	1.40
150 feet, planed, 12-inch lumber	2.50	2.00	.50
20 sawed posts	5.00	3.50	1.50
Total	884.00	754.40	129.60
FARM MACHINERY.
1 wagon	75.00	60.00	15.00
1 reaper	350.00	275.00	75.00
1 mower	150.00	130.00	20.00
3 breaking plows	45.60	35.00	10.00
3 double cultivators	45.00	30.00	15.00
1 harrow	10.00	8.00	2.00
1 hay rake	25.00	20.00	5.00
1 wheat drill	50.00	35.00	15.00
1 corn planter	25.00	20.00	5.00
1 fanning mill	25.00	20.00	5.00
1 feed cutter	15.00	12.00	3.00
1 wheelbarrow	5.00	4.00	1.00
1 grindstone	3.00	2.50	.50
Total	823.00	651.50	171.50
FARM IMPLEMENTS AND SUPPLIES.
3 sets double harness	100.00	75.00	25.00
2 halters	2.00	1.50	.50
3 bridles	3.00	2.25	.75
2 saddles	20.00	14.55	5.45
2 hoes	1.50	1.20	.30
1 spade	1.00	.70	.30
1 garden rake	.50	.30	.20
3 pitchforks	4.60	3.00	1.60
1 scythe	3.00	2.25	.75
1 hatchet	.50	.35	.15
2 saws	2.60	1.25	.75
1 drawingknife	1.00	.65	.35
2 pumps	20.60	16.00	4.00
1 ax	1.00	.75	.25
1 log chain	5.00	3.00	2.00
6 pairs trace chains	6.00	3.00	3.00
3 doubletrees and whiffletrees	2.50	2.00	.50
1 brush	.50	.38	.12
1 curry comb	.20	.15	.05
2 files	.50	.36	.14

Table showing prices of commodities, etc.—Continued.

	Prices with protection.	Prices without protection.	Manufacturers' tax.
FARM IMPLEMENTS AND SUPPLIES—continued.
20 seamless bags	5.00	3.75	$1.25
1 scoop shovel	1.50	1.00	.50
1 basket	1.00	.70	.30
Total	181.70	134.09	47.61
HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE.
1 heating stove	15.00	10.35	4.65
1 zinc	1.00	.60	.40
6 joints pipe	.60	.34	.26
2 glass lamps	1.50	1.03	.47
2 rattan rockers	7.00	5.18	1.82
6 wooden chairs	3.00	2.22	.78
50 yards carpet	40.00	30.00	10.00
10 square yards oilcloth	5.00	3.56	1.44
3 bedroom sets	75.00	55.55	19.45
1 clock	4.00	2.96	1.04
6 window shades	3.00	2.07	.93
12 towels	4.00	2.96	1.04
1 pair scissors	.50	.37	.13
3 spring beds	15.00	10.00	5.00
3 wool mattresses	15.00	9.09	5.91
6 pairs wool blankets	18.00	11.25	6.75
50 yards sheeting	10.00	7.50	2.50
1 dozen comforts	12.00	10.00	2.00
2 looking-glasses	5.00	3.12	1.88
3 coverlets	3.00	2.25	.75
2 comforts	2.00	1.54	.46
Total	239.60	171.94	67.66
KITCHEN FURNITURE.
1 cook stove	30.00	18.00	12.00
1 lot cooking utensils	3.00	2.07	.93
2 iron kettles	2.00	1.30	.70
1 copper kettle	3.00	2.07	.93
6 sheet-iron pans	6.00	3.52	2.48
1 lot iron cooking utensils	2.00	1.30	.70
6 ash buckets	.75	.44	.31
1 joint stovepipe	.60	.35	.25
1 table	5.00	3.70	1.30
6 chairs	3.00	2.22	.78
1 dozen knives and forks	3.00	2.22	.78
2 dozen spoons	2.00	1.48	.52
1 butcher knife	.50	.37	.13
1 coal-oil can	.50	.34	.16
6 flatirons	1.50	1.00	.50
1 wash boiler	1.25	.73	.52
2 tubs	1.50	1.11	.39
2 pails	.60	.44	.16
1 churn	1.00	.74	.26
6 crocks	1.20	.96	.24
2 washboards (zinc)	.70	.42	.28
2 dozen dishes, assorted	10.00	6.45	3.55
2 tablecloths	3.00	2.22	.78
2 lots glassware	3.00	2.07	.93
1 glass lamp	.50	.34	.16
Total	85.60	55.86	29.74
HOUSEHOLDER'S WARDROBE.
1 work suit	7.00	4.73	2.27
1 good suit	20.00	13.52	6.48
1 overcoat	15.00	10.15	4.85
2 flannel shirts	1.80	.86	.64
2 flannel drawers	1.50	.86	.64
1 wool hat	3.00	1.71	1.29
6 wool socks	2.00	1.14	.86
1 wool cap	1.00	.57	.43
1 pair boots	5.00	4.00	1.00
1 pair shoes	3.50	2.80	0.70
1 pair rubber boots	3.00	2.40	.60
1 pair suspenders	.50	.36	.14
1 pair buck gloves	1.00	.63	.37
1 pair wool gloves	.50	.29	.21
1 wool scarf	.50	.29	.21
1 rubber coat	3.50	2.69	.81
1 umbrella	1.00	.66	.34
3 linen handkerchiefs	1.00	.74	.26
1 silk tie	.50	.33	.17
1 razor	1.25	.83	.42
1 pocketknife	1.25	.83	.42
1 shaving brush	.35	.26	.09
1 case shaving soap	.15	.11	.04
1 neck comfort	.50	.29	.21
4 cotton shirts	3.00	2.25	.75
2 pair cotton drawers	1.00	.69	.31
Total	78.70	53.99	24.71
HOUSEWIFE'S WARDROBE.
2 calico dresses	2.25	1.75	.50
3 calico aprons	.50	.40	.10
2 woolen dresses	16.00	9.40	6.60
2 balmoral skirts	3.00	1.90	1.10
2 cotton skirts	1.50	1.25	.25
2 suits flannels	3.00	1.71	1.29
2 suits cotton underwear	2.00	1.42	.58

Table showing prices of commodities, etc.—Continued.

	Prices with protection.	Prices without protection.	Manufacturers' tax.
HOUSEWIFE'S WARDROBE—continued.
3 pairs cotton hose	1.00	.71	$0.29
3 pairs wool hose	1.50	.90	.60
1 woolen cloak	12.00	8.11	3.89
1 woolen shawl	6.00	3.21	2.79
1 woolen hood	1.25	.71	.54
1 straw bonnet	1.00	.77	.23
2 pairs shoes	4.00	3.20	.80
1 pair rubbers	.50	.40	.10
1 parasol	2.00	1.60	.40
1 veil	.70	.46	.24
5 yards ribbons	.50	.33	.17
3 linen collars	.50	.38	.12
3 pairs linen cuffs	.60	.46	.14
3 linen handkerchiefs	.75	.55	.20
1 tuck comb	.25	.18	.07
1 tooth brush	.35	.27	.08
1 pair wool mitts	.50	.29	.21
1 pair gloves	1.25	.78	.47
Total	61.90	40.14	21.76
TWO BOYS' WARDROBES.
2 work suits	10.00	6.76	3.24
2 good suits	30.00	20.70	9.30
2 overcoats	30.00	20.70	9.30
6 flannel shirts	6.00	3.42	2.58
6 white shirts	4.00	3.25	.75
4 pairs wool drawers	4.00	2.28	1.72
6 pairs wool socks	2.00	1.14	.86
2 wool hats	4.00	2.28	1.72
2 wool caps	2.00	1.14	.86
2 pairs boots	8.00	6.40	1.60
2 pairs suspenders	1.00	.72	.28
2 pairs rubber boots	7.00	5.60	1.40
2 pairs rubber shoes	4.00	3.20	.80
2 pairs wool mitts	1.00	0.67	.33
2 pairs buck gloves	2.00	1.25	.75
2 silk neckties	.50	.33	.17
4 linen handkerchiefs	1.00	.74	.26
2 neck comforters	1.00	.67	.33
Total	117.50	81.25	36.25
TWO GIRLS' WARDROBE.
4 calico dresses	3.00	2.50	.50
4 calico aprons	1.00	.85	.15
2 alpaca dresses	18.00	10.60	7.40
2 wool dresses	8.00	5.00	3.00
2 balmoral skirts	3.00	1.90	1.10
4 cotton skirts	3.00	2.00	1.00
4 suits flannels	5.00	2.86	2.14
4 suits cotton underwear	4.00	2.13	1.87
6 pairs cotton hose	2.00	1.42	.58
6 pairs wool hose	3.00	1.80	1.20
2 woolen cloaks	30.00	20.28	9.72
2 woolen shawls	10.00	5.33	4.67
2 woolen hoods	2.00	1.20	.80
2 straw hats	2.00	1.54	.46
4 pairs shoes	8.00	6.40	1.60
2 pairs rubbers	1.00	.80	.20
2 parasols	3.50	2.80	.70
2 veils	1.50	1.00	.50
12 yards ribbon	1.20	.80	.40
6 linen collars	1.00	.77	.23
6 pair linen cuffs	1.20	.92	.28
2 round combs	.30	.22	.08
6 handkerchiefs	2.00	1.48	.52
2 pairs wool mitts	1.00	.57	.43
2 pairs gloves	2.00	1.25	.75
2 toothbrushes	.50	.39	.11
Total	117.20	76.81	40.39
DOMESTIC SUPPLIES.
Sugar	1.00	.62	.32
Tea	.50	.50	----------
Coffee	.50	.50	----------
Molasses	.50	.40	.15
Salt	1.00	.74	.26
Vinegar	.50	.37	.13
Rice	1.00	.43	.57
Soda	.25	.14	.11
Soap—castile	.25	.16	.09
Wire clothesline	2.00	1.00	1.00
Starch	.25	.13	.12
Carpet tacks	.25	.14	.11
Nails	.50	.37	.13
Thread	1.60	.45	.35
Needles	.25	.20	.05
Pens	.10	.07	.03
Ink	.10	.07	.03
Paper	.10	.08	.02
Pins	.10	.08	.02
Hairpins	.10	.07	.03
Glycerine	.50	.30	.20
Total	10.75	7.08	3.67

Table showing prices of commodities, etc.—Continued.

SUMMARY.

	Total amount without manufacturer's tax.	Manufacturer's tax.	Amount paid on account of the tax.
MATERIALS FOR PERMANENT IMPROVEMENTS. a
Materials for house	$676.24	$139.96	$816.20
Materials for barn	310.80	41.70	352.50
Materials for fence	754.40	129.60	884.00
Total	1,741.44	311.26	2,052.70
FARM MACHINERY AND SUPPLIES. b
Farm machinery	651.50	171.50	823.00
Implements and supplies	134.09	47.61	181.70
Total	785.59	219.11	1,004.70
FURNITURE. c
Household furniture	171.94	67.66	239.60
Kitchen furniture	55.86	29.74	85.60
Total	227.80	97.40	325.20
ARTICLES OF DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION. d
Householder's wardrobe	53.99	24.71	78.70
Housewife's wardrobe	40.14	21.76	61.90
Two boys' wardrobe	81.25	36.35	117.50
Two girls' wardrobe	76.81	40.39	117.20
Domestic supplies	7.08	3.67	10.75
Total	259.27	126.78	386.05

a Increased cost on account of manufacturer's tax, 18 per cent.
b Increased cost on account of manufacturer's tax, 28 per cent.
c Increased cost on account of manufacturer's tax, 43 per cent.
d Increased cost on account of manufacturer's tax, 49 per cent.

A careful study of these tables and a comparison of them by the farmer with his own account books will serve to enlighten him why the manufacturer has constantly grown richer, although his works were often idle on account of strikes and lockouts, while he, though toiling early and late and living very frugally, has constantly grown poorer, and was perhaps driven by dire necessity to put a mortgage upon his farm.

THE LATE ELECTIONS.

But it has been said by gentlemen on the other side of this House that at the elections last fall the Democratic party was overwhelmingly defeated, and hence that the people at the polls have repudiated that reform of the tariff which they so earnestly demanded in 1892. That the Democratic party was defeated in 1893, I admit; that the people have abandoned their demands for tariff reform, I deny.

Mr. Chairman, let us as Democrats look the situation squarely in the face and inquire the cause of that defeat.

The first reason was the continuance of Republicans in office who all their lives had worked for the destruction of the Democratic party. All over this land there are townships where the sole boon asked by the sturdy Democrats is that they be permitted to receive their mail from a Democratic postmaster; but this boon is denied and the Republican appointee, who has cursed and attempted to destroy from year to year the party which they loved so well, still holds rule at the post-office where he keeps hanging on the walls pictures of his party leaders. Look around you; a year has nearly past since the present Administration came to power, and a Republican who found especial delight in removing hundreds upon hundreds of the brightest and most active Democrats from office, solely because they were Democrats, is still the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service. When we remember that within 30 days after the inauguration of President Harrison on March 4, 1889, every division superintendent of the Railway Mail Service in the United States was a Republican; that between March 4 and August 30, 1889, more than two thousand Democratic postal clerks were removed for purely partisan reasons, while most of those who remained in service during the Harrison Administration were reduced in grade to make room for Republican clerks of inferior qualifications, can you wonder at the apathy of Democrats?

Another reason for the result of those elections was an ill-advised order of the Commissioner of Pensions whereby pensioners were suspended without notice. This can not occur again owing to legislation of the present Congress, and were it in our power the first cause of trouble which I have stated would be speedily remedied.

Again, a financial crisis had been brought about by evil legislation at the hands of the Republican party, and the dire effects of which had been predicted by Democratic leaders. A hungry man has no heart to reason from cause to effect, and many blamed the Democratic party for the calamity which had been brought upon the country by the Republicans.

No general can win a victory with troops in sympathy with the enemy, and an administration to win complete success should have officers and men desirous of its welfare.

THE CIVIL SERVICE

may be defined to be a piece of legislation which enables Republicans to oust Democrats from office during a Republican Administration, and to retain Republicans in office during a Democratic Administration. Looking to the Pension Office we find 1,300 Republicans to 247 Democrats, and 412 ladies. Four-fifths of the members of the board of review are Republicans, and two-thirds of the board of revision are Republicans. In the medical division we find 85 Republicans to 26 Democrats, and 30 ladies, and as these Republican bodies move along with a snail's pace in the adjustment of claims, while the old veterans who followed their country's flag to the battlefield, ready to die if need be for the Stars and Stripes they love so well, many of them war-scarred, broken in health, diseased, in actual want, watch and wait in great anxiety for the pensions due them.

Mr. Chairman, the Democratic majority in this House was sent here upon the issue of tariff reform, and every Democrat who deserts his party now relinquishes the chief principle of Democracy. The Democratic party must not fail the people. Four years of the prior administration of our party placed in the Treasury an available surplus of over $60,000,000. The annual revenues were nearly $100,000,000 in excess of the Government's needs. We had accumulated $98,000,000 of gold above the reserve of $100,000,000. Business flourished and labor was well employed. The Republican party came to power. It passed the bullion-purchasing act of 1890, which in one year sent $68,000,000 of our gold to Europe, decreased the free gold in our Treasury at the end of Mr. Harrison's term to $970,000, and the evil effects of which have almost bankrupted the country.

These are fearful, turbulent, angry streams into which the Republican party has carried our National Government, but if we act as faithful pilots and steer the Ship of State free from the dangers that surround her, the threatening rocks and shoals will be passed in triumph, and we shall glide with renewed vigor upon the ocean of happiness and prosperity. Then may we sing the song of an American poet:

Sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee—are all with thee.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DINGLEY Mr. Chairman, the title of the pending tariff bill is a misnomer. It purports to be a bill to provide revenue. It is in fact, however, a bill to abolish revenue. It proposes to surrender seventy-six millions, more than one-third of the revenue derived from customs.

The party which is responsible for it has, in season and out of season, denounced the Republican tariff policy which has been in force for thirty-two years, as one which sacrifices revenue in order to maintain protection of home industries. The Democratic party, now in possession of full power for the first time since 1860, proposes as a substitute a so-called revenue tariff which sacrifices revenue in order to overthrow protection.

Moreover, this surrender of seventy-six millions of revenue from customs is proposed at a time when the Secretary of the Treasury, representing the party in power, officially informs Congress that for the next fiscal year nearly every dollar of revenue that might be expected from customs duties, without change of existing laws, will be required to meet the ordinary expenditures of the National Government,—the internal-revenue tax on tobacco, cigars, and whisky being substantially sufficient to pay pension obligations,—and when any reduction of revenue from customs will assuredly leave a deficit. Instead of a tariff for revenue only, what is proposed is in fact a tariff for a deficiency only.

Such a wholesale reduction of revenue from customs duties is proposed, indeed, in the face of the official report of the Secretary of the Treasury that in the first six months of the present fiscal year there has been an actual deficit of more than thirty-seven millions, to be increased to more than sixty millions in the balance of the year, brought about, in my judgment, by the industrial and business depression caused mainly by the distrust and disturbance induced by the anticipation of just such revolutionary tariff legislation as this bill seeks to enact into law.

Six years ago a distinguished Democratic leader, then and now occupying the exalted position of the Presidency of the United States, justified far less sweeping and revolutionary tariff legislation than this (which was most emphatically condemned in the national elections of 1888) on the ground that "a condition," to wit, the necessity of reducing the revenue, "and not a theory, confronts us." It might have been supposed that the reduction of the revenue sixty millions in 1890 by removing the duty on sugar so that revenue and expenditure became substantially equal—every dollar of the surplus created before the reduction of the revenue having been devoted to the payment of the interest-bearing debt—would have satisfied such a yearning for tariff revision. But it is evident from the recent message of the same distinguished Democratic leader indorsing the pending bill, as well as from the defense which its advocates make on this floor and in the majority report, that the argument which did duty so vociferously in 1888 is reversed for the present exigency. It is no longer the actual "condition," but only the "theory" often formulated in Democratic platforms that is allowed to confront the Democratic vision.

If the actual "condition" of the national finances and not a blind pursuit of a partisan "theory" controlled the course of the Democratic majority, they would hesitate long before disturbing the admirable balance between national outgo and income which existed in 1892 and 1893, under existing laws, which would have existed the present fiscal year if industries and business had not been paralyzed by the distrust caused by the anticipation of revolutionary tariff changes, and which, according to the Secretary of the Treasury, would exist in the next fiscal year and the years subsequent, in case there should be no change in our existing revenue system.

WHERE REVENUE IS SURRENDERED.

Mr. Chairman, the friends of the proposed tariff revision defend it on the ground that it reduces the taxation of the masses of the people.

This claim invites an inquiry into the character of the imported articles said to be used by the masses, on which it is proposed to reduce duties and surrender revenue. I read from the comparative tables presented by the Democratic majority of the committee, which show how much revenue has been remitted on each imported article, on the basis of the importations of last year:

On Havana and other foreign cigars and leaf tobacco	$3,303,207
On liquors	1,276,990
On laces and embroideries	3,075,779
On silks and silk plushes	3,196,631
On kid gloves and jewelry	1,2[illegible]8,797
On ostrich feathers, downs, artificial flowers, etc.	2[illegible]0,165
On opium for smoking	400,073
On plate glass and chinaware	890,240
On paintings and statuary	339,265
On perfumery, cosmetics, and fancy articles for smokers	101,250

On the assumption of the majority of the committee that all of the duty is added to make the price here, the toiling masses must be greatly relieved by the surrender of $14,112,397 of duties on these articles! [Laughter.]

But these are by no means the only imported luxuries or articles of voluntary use (on which all statesmen have heretofore thought it wise to impose the heaviest duties), where reductions have been made by this bill.

It will be observed that more than half of the woolen goods imported last year were goods of fine quality used by the well-to-do, indeed generally demanded by a class of our people of liberal means who are not content with equally good American goods at a lower price, but will have foreign goods—they are English, you know—and who are entirely willing to pay the highest duties to obtain them. Of the $21,723,788 of revenue surrendered by the reduction of duties on manufactures of wool, not less than $11,000,000 is on fine woolens of this character, which, under the circumstances of their importation and use, are practically articles of luxury or of voluntary use, and are therefore articles on which the highest duties should be retained.

A very large proportion of the imports of manufactures of cotton, on which the bill proposes to remit $3,448,020 of revenue by a reduction of duties, is fine and fancy cottons in the nature of articles of voluntary use; and the same may be said of many imported articles in other schedules on which duties are reduced by this bill.

Not far from $70,000,000 of the $76,000,000 of revenue surrendered by this bill comes from articles of luxury or voluntary use.

This bill also proposes to surrender $6,284,259 of the revenue received last year from the duty on imported tin plates, nearly all of which is practically now paid by the foreign manufacturer and exporter, notwithstanding the ridicule which the free-trade theorist heaps on the contention of the friends of protection that where the foreigner finds that he is in danger of losing a foreign market in consequence of the encouragement given home industries by protection, he invariably reduces his prices and thereby practically pays in part or in whole the protective duty, in order to hold his position in such foreign market.

From 1883 to 1891, during which time there was a revenue-only duty of 1 cent per pound on imported tin plate, under which no tin plates could be made in this country, the average price, including the duty of $1.08 per box, was $4.86 per box. July 1, 1891, the duty was increased 1.2 cents per pound, or $1.35 per box. Yet it is stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], who has investigated the subject, that the average price of tin plate to the consumer in this country has not been raised by the increase of duty. No one claims that the increase has been over 25 cents per box. The Welsh manufacturers, finding that under the new protective duty tin plate was being successfully made in the United States, lowered their price, which had been previously fixed as they pleased, in order to meet the new competition in this country and hold their American markets, thus practically paying into the Treasury of the United States about $6,000,000. In their zeal to overthrow the protection which has already established between forty and fifty tin plate manufactories in this country, producing tin plate at the rate of many million pounds per annum, and which within five years would have furnished all the tin plate we require at reduced prices, the framers of this so called revenue tariff propose not only to cripple our own tin-plate industry, but also to surrender six and a quarter millions of revenue to the Welsh tin-plate manufacturers.

While it is more difficult to show so definitely in other schedules in which the duties have been reduced, as the circumstances enable us to do in the case of the reduction of the duty on tin plate, that there is a large class of imported articles similar to those that we are enabled to make here on account of protective duties, on which the foreign manufacturer pays a part of the duty in order to meet the new competition here and hold our markets as far as possible, yet there can be no doubt of the fact. The increase of from 10 to 15 per cent made by the tariff act of 1890 in the duty on certain kinds of fine cottons and woolens did not increase their price to consumers here. The foreign manufacturers simply reduced their prices to the extent of the increase of duty, and thus practically themselves paid all the increase of duty. No wonder they are rejoiced at the proposal of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee to remit so much of their contribution toward our revenue, not only in the woolen, but also in the cotton, metal, agricultural, and lumber schedules, and give them a better opportunity to send their goods to our markets to take the place of domestic goods.

There is remitted to Canada $1,445,983 in abolished or reduced duties on lumber and over $2,000,000 in reduced duties on Canadian animals and farm products competing with our farm products, not to mention over $8,000,000 of revenue remitted on imported wool—over $11,000,000 remissions of revenue now paid into our Treasury by foreign farmers and wool-growers seeking our markets.

Indeed, so far as I have observed, the only rejoicing over the prospect of the substitution of the pending tariff bill for the protective tariffs of the past thirty years, has been in Canada and Europe. In this country up to date the public expressions have been mainly those of condemnation.

INCREASED IMPORTATIONS EXPECTED.

Mr. Chairman, the President in his recent message and the report of the majority remark that notwithstanding the pending tariff bill would result in a loss of revenue to the extent of $76,000,000 and a deficiency even larger, on the basis of the imports of last year, yet that this would only be temporary, as the reduction of duties would, in their judgment, increase the importations, and the lower duties on increased importations would soon offset in part, and ultimately all, the apparent loss of revenue.

It is well for Congress and the people to face the results which the Democratic majority who have framed this bill avow they are laboring to bring about. They defend their policy on the ground that it is intended to so increase importations of foreign products to take the place of domestic products—for it must be remembered that duties are reduced mainly only on articles that can be produced or made here—as to make the reduced duties yield as much revenue as the higher duties which they supplant.

Have gentlemen considered fully what this means? The value of the dutiable merchandise imported last year was about $400,000,000, which paid a duty of only a million and a half less than $200,000,000, the remaining importations ($444,000,000) having been free of duty. (Parenthetically, I may remark that the fact we now import nearly $400,000,000 of dutiable goods, three-fourths of which we can and ought to make for ourselves, does not seem to sustain the free-trade assumption that we are now manufacturing far more than our people can consume.)

The same dutiable merchandise imported under the pending bill would yield $76,000,000 less revenue. Now, in order to offset this loss, there would have to be an increase in the importations of about $250,000,000, foreign valuation, as the average duty of the pending bill on dutiable merchandise is about 30 per cent. This would be a sudden increase of 60 per cent in the importations of foreign goods which we can make here, and would necessarily suddenly diminish the demand for domestic goods and for labor to produce or make them to this extent. Do our friends on the other side—I mean the other side of this House, not on the other side of the Atlantic; they understand it and are chuckling over it—do our Democratic friends appreciate fully what disasters to all our American industries would follow such a wholesale loss of American markets?

For example, the imports of woolen goods last year were about $37,000,000, on which it is proposed to surrender a revenue of nearly $22,000,000 by a reduction of duties. Now, in order to offset that loss there must be an increase of importations of woolens to the extent of about $60,000,000, foreign valuation, which would suddenly raise the importations of woolen goods to nearly $100,000,000 instead of $36,000,000. Imagine what a wreck of American woolen mills there would be with such a loss of their home markets.

"But what of that?" exclaims the free-trade disciple. "Do you object to having $250,000,000 more wealth come into this country?" I reply, if it is wealth that we can not produce at all, or only with an expenditure of a larger amount of labor than elsewhere, and we want such products for consumption, we do not object, but on the contrary desire it. But if it is products which we must pay for and which we can and ought to produce for ourselves, and whose coming here will deprive our own industries and labor of the opportunity to produce or make here, then we do not want them to come into our market because their coming diminishes to that extent the productive opportunities of our own people.

I am aware that the free-trade school of economists affirm that it is better for us to import $250,000,000 in goods which we can make here in exchange for our exports, than it is to import a similar amount of gold or money. It is sufficient to say in reply that when gold is imported it does not take the place of goods which we ought to make here and thus injure our own industries and productive capacity, as is the result when we import such goods; but on the contrary, not only permits our industries to go on without disturbance, but also increases the capital on which production depends and adds to the basis on which our currency rests.

"But these $250,000,000 additional of imported goods will not come here unless we have an equal amount of products to exchange for them," says the free-trader, "and this implies that the labor formerly employed in manufacturing industries have gone to producing something else that they can produce to better advantage." I reply, that for a time, or until our consumptive capacity was impaired, the goods would come in excess of exports, as they did for thirteen or fifteen years before the war, in return for our gold or for our evidences of indebtedness, which would in the end lead to a collapse as it did in 1857–'58 and '59. It would be impossible also for us to all go to the farm or into the crude industries, as the free-trade programme contemplates without lowering the prices of products of these industries, diminishing the value of our production and consequently our earning and consumptive capacity. In other words, the free-trade policy would lead to disaster.

THE "MARKETS OF THE WORLD."

But ah! listen to the siren song of the President's message and the majority report! They comfort our industries with the promise, as did one of old, not perhaps of possession of the kingdoms of the world, but of the capture of the markets of the world, as compensation for the loss of so much of the markets at home.

Markets for manufactured goods? Where? How? The whole world outside of the United States imports only ninety millions of woolens, which, even if we could capture every dollar of these imports, would not compensate for the woolens that would have to be imported to supplant our own goods in our own markets in order to prevent a loss of revenue by the reductions of duty proposed by this bill. What chance do we stand to capture these markets more rapidly than we have already been doing, in the face of the fierce competition of Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Austria, Switzerland, and other machine-using nations with cheaper labor? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Why surrender our own markets in order to capture other markets? How could this help us in competing for the markets of the world? It must be remembered that the chief reliance of every nation is its own home market. Even the United Kingdom, which on account of its contracted insular position is compelled even to wage war to capture foreign markets, sells $136 of its production of $172 per inhabitant in its home market, and only $36 in the markets of the world. And the United States, which produces $200 per inhabitant, sells $183 of this immense production, more than Great Britain exports and consumes at home, in our home markets, the best in the world.

Experience shows that under protection, which maintains our home market for our own industries, and thus increases the prosperity and consuming power of the masses, we are able to buy and import more of articles which we do not produce than we otherwise could, as well as produce more; so that the net result is a larger foreign trade and larger exports, brought about by the increase of consumption and importation of free goods which we do not produce, and the increased production caused by the encouragement of home industries. Our foreign trade has been 50 per cent more per inhabitant in the last fifteen years than in the fifteen years of revenue only tariff from 1846 to 1860. On the other hand, the increased importation of articles which we can and ought to produce for ourselves, as proposed by the pending bill, even if far less than contemplated, would result in depleting us of our gold and piling up a mountain of debt.

Undoubtedly the increase of importations, although large enough to cripple our industries and business, would not be large enough to offset the revenue lost by reduction of duties, for the reason that existing industries would struggle to meet the new foreign competition and retain the home market by a reduction of wages, and would to a certain extent succeed, thus leaving a permanent loss of revenue from customs; and, worse still, permanently diminishing the ability of our people to consume products, and permanently impairing the value of our home market, as well as the prosperity of the people.

TAXATION OF DOMESTIC INTERESTS PROPOSED.

I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that it is proposed to add to this bill to abolish revenue from customs another measure which, it is estimated, will raise by an income tax thirty millions, and by an increase of excise and internal taxes fifteen millions, yet all together less than two-thirds as much revenue as is surrendered by the reduction or abolition of the duties on foreign imports.

This of itself would be a complete revolution in the revenue system which has prevailed in time of peace since the foundation of the Government. The duplex nature of our Government—federal machinery for national affairs and State machinery for local affairs—unlike the British system under which Parliament legislates and authorizes taxation for local as well as national ends, which the framers of this bill are feebly imitating, demands that there should be a sharp and well-defined line of demarcation between objects of Federal and of State taxation, especially in time of peace.

The Constitution of the United States reserves exclusively to the Federal Government the right to raise revenue by the imposition of duties on imports; and up to the present hour, except in time of war or to meet expenditures like pensions made necessary by war, when excise and other internal taxes have been added, all the expenditures of the National Government have been met by duties on imports and miscellaneous receipts. So strenuous on this point was Jefferson, whom our Democratic friends claim as their political father, that when he came into power in 1801 he insisted on the repeal of the excise tax on liquors, which had been imposed by the Adams Administration to pay the expenses of the anticipated war with France, and maintained the doctrine that in time of peace Federal expenses should be met by duties on imports, and other objects of taxation left to the States. However, our modern Democrats follow Jefferson by indulging in eulogiums of him on the stump and in party organs, and ignoring his teachings everywhere else.

Thus far there has been a large number of voters of protection instincts retained in the Democratic ranks because they believed it impracticable to raise from duties on imports two hundred or more millions of revenue required annually for current expenditures of Government outside of pensions without incidentally protecting home industries, as if it made any difference whether protection was called incidental, intentional or accidental, provided protection was there. The framers of this bill propose to cut the ground from under any such lodgment for protection by deliberately changing the policy of the Government. They propose to raise only one hundred and twenty-one millions from duties on imports, and transfer seventy-six millions from external to internal taxation. The incidental protection Democrats have had their guns spiked by this bill.

Our brief experience with the income tax as a war measure showed conclusively that it is not suited to our situation, because of its inquisitorial character, the expense and difficulty of administration, and its practical tendency to encourage perjury. If resorted to at all, it should be used by the States for State purposes, so limited as not to result in double taxation, and not for Federal purposes for peace expenditures.

The difficulties which the Democratic majority have had in devising sources of taxation of our own people to take the place of the legitimate revenue from duties on imports which they have surrendered in their warfare on protection of home industries, have been such that, so far as known, they are still thirty millions short on their own uncertain estimates, and undoubtedly much more in fact.

It is proposed to increase the internal tax on whisky from 90 cents to $1 per gallon, which it is estimated will yield $10,000,000 for the next fiscal year; but, as the syndicate that own the whisky in bond will undoubtedly withdraw substantially the entire amount that will enter into consumption in that period before the increased tax goes into effect, the practical effect of it will be to put $10,000,000 into the pockets of the syndicate instead of into the Treasury.

And as the increased tax is coupled with a most extraordinary privilege, extending the bonded period from three years to eight, its practical effect will be to grant extension of time to the whisky syndicate to that unprecedented extent for the payment of the tax on whisky—practically a loan for five years without interest,—while the whisky is aging and improving in value. Instead of being a proposition in the interest of the Government, it is in fact one to postpone the payment of the whole tax and in the interest of the whisky syndicate.

REASONS FOR HESITATION.

It would seem, Mr. Chairman, as if in the present condition of the Treasury, with such difficulty of supplying the revenue which it is proposed to surrender by a reduction of duties on imports—a difficulty which can not be overcome except by most doubtful internal taxation,—the Democratic majority, even in pursuit of the "theory" which has for some years haunted them, would hesitate to overthrow an economic policy under which the country has so signally prospered for more than thirty years, especially in view of the fact that an apprehension of such revolutionary tariff changes as are proposed has already paralyzed industries and business to such an extent as to entirely or partially shut down thousands of manufacturing establishments, reduce wages, deprive millions of workingmen of employment, and bring distress and want into every community. When the Democratic national platform of 1892, in the face of the unexampled prosperity then prevailing, for partisan ends falsely declared that protection fosters no business so much as that of the sheriff, it unwittingly forecasted with accuracy what has already proved to be a sad result of the anticipation of the tariff policy which the pending bill proposes.

It might be supposed that the overwhelming Democratic losses and Republican gains in the recent elections, after six months' experience of the results of the efforts of the country to anticipate the practical application of the Democratic tariff theory to our industries—a change so extraordinary that if those elections had been for Representatives to this Chamber and had extended to all the States with corresponding results, a Democratic majority of over 90 in this House would have been converted into a Republican majority of over 50,—would raise more than a suspicion even in the minds of our friends on the other side, that the verdict of the people in 1892 was not intended to be a condemnation of the protective policy, as they have supposed, or at least was given under a grave misapprehension, of which the people have already repented.

THE DEMOCRATIC "THEORY."

Mr. Chairman, the tariff "theory" which the Democratic majority of the Ways and Means Committee, under instructions of the Democratic national convention, have undertaken to embody in the pending bill is that a protective duty on an imported article—i. e., a duty which covers the difference of money cost of production and distribution here and abroad of an article which can be produced or made here substantially to the extent of our wants without natural disadvantage—is "unconstitutional" and "robbery."

This theory rests on the assumption, which runs through the report of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee and every speech which has been made in defense of this bill, that such a duty is a tax which increases the cost of every article to which protection is applied, whether made at home or abroad, to the extent of the duty without compensating benefit to any one but the producer or manufacturer of such article.

Now if I believed this theory to be sound—which I do not—no consideration on earth would induce me to support any protective duty. If I believed that protection was "robbery," as the Democratic majority who have framed the pending bill say they do, the only tariff measure which I could support would be one which imposed duties mainly on articles which we can not produce, like tea, coffee, etc., and which therefore must be entirely imported without possibility of any home production; and which so far as it imposed duties on articles that can be produced or made here, would place these duties so low as to give the foreigner the advantage over our home producers, and thus insure the importation mainly of such articles from abroad rather than their production or manufacture here; because the theory maintains that whenever the duty is large enough to restrict the importation of such articles and thus encourage their production here, the Government loses the revenue and the private producer practically pockets it, and much more.

And yet professing to sincerely believe that protection is "unconstitutional" and "robbery," the Democratic majority who have framed this bill, in their report, say:

> The bill on which the committee has expended much patient and anxious labor is not offered as a complete response to the mandate of the American people. It no more professes to be purged of all protection than to be free of all error in its complex and manifold details. * * * We are forced to consider that great interests do exist whose existence and prosperity it is no part of our reform either to imperil or to curtail.

Does this great tariff reform bill, then, propose to spare "great interests," gigantic "monopolies," as we have been told, "robber barons," as I have so many times heard manufacturers styled by the other side of the House, that are engaged in the "unconstitutional" employment of "robbing" the people? Are we to understand that the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, who have been for years singly and in pairs here and elsewhere denouncing protection as "unconstitutional" and "robbery," now that they are in full power take the ground that "it is no part of our [the Democratic] reform either to imperil or curtail" "robbery" of the people by some "great interests?" [Laughter.]

This astonishing suggestion can not fail to raise more than a suspicion that the gentlemen who have been denouncing protection as "robbery" can not really believe what they have been saying, for if they do they would not make themselves accessories in so grave a crime as "robbery." They have been making these reckless charges for partisan ends—in a Pickwickian sense that they did not suppose anyone, except the poorly informed, whose votes they sought, would believe.

The majority of the committee evidently appreciate the contradictory position in which they are placed, for they add:

> In dealing with the tariff, as with every other long-standing abuse that has interwoven itself with our social or industrial system, the legislator must always remember that in the beginning temperate reform is safest, having in itself the principle of growth.

The idea which runs through this defense is that the framers of this bill have begun their work of extirpating protection or "robbery," as they style it, by somewhat reducing the amount of the "swag," and that other limitations on this policy of "robbery" will come hereafter. For example, they say to the cotton-manufacturers of the United States: "You have heretofore been permitted to 'rob' the people to the enormous extent of 55 per cent of the entire consumption of domestic cottons in this country, according to our theory of the effect of a protective duty. Hereafter you must be content to 'rob' them only to the extent of 38½ per cent." And this is what is styled by the Democratic majority of the committee as "temperate reform, having in itself the principle of growth." [Laughter.]

What astonishes me is that gentlemen claiming to sincerely believe that a protective duty on an imported article similar to that produced or made here without natural disadvantage, is a tax on like domestic articles to the extent of the duty, should stultify themselves by paltering with any such measure or any such defense.

UNJUST DISCRIMINATIONS.

Mr. Chairman, an examination of the schedules of the bill shows that the objections to it go much farther than this. If it had uniformly reduced protection, or as the majority style it "robbery," all along the line, while it would have been open to serious criticism from the standpoint of the revenue-only theory, that it had only reduced what ought to have been abolished, yet it would have had the merit of treating all alike. But the bill in fact makes discriminations which are not explicable on any economic or other just basis. It preserves certain industries by abundant protection; it cuts up by the roots certain other industries from which all protection has been withdrawn. Such unequal and unfair discrimination is unjust and reprehensible, whether a tariff measure is framed on the protective or the revenue-only basis, and all the more reprehensible when it is evident that partisan, local, or personal reasons must have dictated such favors.

The marble quarries of Tennessee are by this bill protected by a certain specific duty equivalent to 24 per cent ad valorem on imported marble in rough blocks, and 41 per cent on marble paving blocks and marble sawed or dressed; while the granite quarries of New England and the freestone, sandstone, and limestone quarries of the Middle States and the West are deprived of all protection against similar products of the cheaper labor of Canada and Scotland by having imported granite and other kinds of stone in blocks placed on the free list, and an uncertain ad valorem revenue-only duty of but 20 per cent placed on dressed or polished granite or other stone, and even finished monumental work.

Cleaned rice is protected by a certain specific duty equivalent to 83 per cent, notwithstanding it is an important article of food, while the farm products of the States adjacent to Canada are left to compete with similar products of Canadian farms cultivated by cheaper labor, with uncertain revenue-only ad valorem duties varying from 15 per cent on imported vegetables to 25 per cent on beans and peas and 23 per cent on hay, while all kinds of imported Canadian dressed meats, bacon, hams, pork, lard, tallow, eggs, and apples are placed on the free list.

Hoop iron made into cotton ties for the cotton-planter are placed on the free list, but on hoop-iron wire made into ties for Northern hay a duty of 30 per cent is imposed.

The manufacturer of so crude an article as common building brick is protected by a duty of 20 per cent on competing imported brick, and the manufacturer of hydraulic cement by a certain specific protective duty equivalent to 24 per cent, while the manufacturer of lime, who with the present duty of 20 per cent—13½ cents per barrel, which is only the difference of money cost of production—is subjected to severe Canadian competition, is practically denied all protection by having the duty on imported lime reduced to 10 per cent ad valorem, which is not over 4 cents per barrel. And the only suggestion for this reduction and consequent destruction of the lime manufacturing industry in this country which appears in the published hearings of the Ways and Means Committee is contained in a memorial of Hon. Frank Jones, the Democratic member of the national Democratic committee of New Hampshire, who informed the committee that he and his associates had invested capital in Canadian lime quarries instead of in the numerous unworked quarries of this country—presumably because the wages of labor are lower in Canada than here ($1 to $1.25 in Canada and $2 to $2.25 here)—and desired freer access to our markets.

The following paragraphs from the memorial of Mr. Jones and his associates read as though the petitioners thought they were addressing the Canadian Parliament instead of the Congress of the United States:

> The above petitioners represent that, with possibly one or two exceptions, they are all citizens and most of them residents of the United States; that they have a large amount of American capital invested in lime properties across the line at Dudswell, near Sherbrook, Province of Quebec, and at St. John, New Brunswick, consisting of lime quarries, lime kilns for the manufacture of lime, and vessels for its transportation. * * *
>
> They would call attention to the fact that after the erection of the kilns most of the expense of the production of a barrel of lime is the cost of the labor and the cordwood consumed in the burning of the lime rock. * * *
>
> Your petitioners therefore respectfully pray your honorable committee to recommend the complete remission of this duty, so that they may light up their (Canada) kilns and set to work the capital now locked up since the enactment of the McKinley law. * * *
>
> As a matter of fact, lime on the market went lower after the passage of the McKinley bill than it was before. Your petitioners will not deny the truth of this statement, but it is easily explained. * * Your petitioners aver that they themselves have still been manufacturing some lime in a small way, running some four to six kilns out of thirty, and putting said lime on to the market at a loss, for the purpose of making a price.

It seems strange to see an American citizen asking the Congress of the United States to legislate so as to encourage industries in Canada and discourage them in the United States; but this is just what this bill does, not only in this respect, but in its treatment of the lumber manufacturing industry, farm products, coal, the fisheries, etc. Indeed, what this bill grants Canada without asking any return could have been made the basis of a reciprocal agreement that would have secured the admission of many manufactured articles into Canada either free of duty or at favored rates.

THE RAW MATERIAL THEORY.

Mr. Chairman, great stress is laid in the majority report on the fact that this bill places on the free list imported articles like coal, iron ore, wool, flax, sawed lumber, granite and other stones in blocks, which are designated raw materials. This policy is defended on two grounds—first, that it will enable our advanced industries which use these articles as their materials to successfully compete with foreign producers of manufactured articles in foreign markets; and, secondly, that it will cheapen such articles to our own consumers.

By the use of the term "raw materials" it is sought to convey the impression that the articles thus designated are material objects which have sprung into existence like Jonah's gourd or been stored away by nature in the recesses of the mountains, without the use of human labor, instead of being the completed manufacture of one industry ready for a new transformation by a more advanced industry. Timber in the forest, and coal, iron ore, and stone in the hills, the actual "raw materials," are as cheap and abundant here as anywhere in the world, and the only reason they cost more here in money, not as estimated in labor, after the hand of man has transformed them into lumber, coal, iron ore, granite or sandstone blocks, is not because it requires more labor here than elsewhere to so transform them, but because that labor here receives higher wages for doing this work. This is indeed the chief reason why anything costs more in money here than abroad.

Now, what the so-called raw-material theory embodied in this bill does is to apply one principle, that of free trade, to the laborers who produce the articles thus designated, and another principle to the laborers who take the completed product of the so-called "raw materials" industry, and further advance it. This is a discrimination utterly indefensible, provided it costs more in money to produce the so-called raw materials here than abroad, on account of our higher wages for labor, as the authors of this bill assume that it does when they declare that by importing iron ore, coal, sawed lumber, wool, granite blocks, etc., free of duty, it will cheapen the articles made from them or by their use. But if this argument is sound for one class of products then it is sound for all others.

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON], in his opening speech in this discussion, undertook the dangerous feat of making an argument for the latitude of the Virginias and Maryland, that placing these so-called raw materials on the free list would not be a discrimination against these industries, because these articles are produced and sold in this country as low as in any other competing country. He evidently overlooked the fact that in his majority report, as well as in another part of his speech, he had contended that all these raw materials would be made cheaper to our advanced industries if they could be imported free of duty from Canada and other countries where labor is paid less wages. One or the other of his arguments needs revision.

The effort of the majority report to create the impression that free raw materials will enable our industries to secure foreign markets and thus give a larger employment to labor here, ignores the fact that their policy proposes to surrender to foreigners a large part of our own market—the best in the world—in order to engage in the chase after foreign markets already gorged; ignores the further fact that under the existing tariff any manufacturer may import, almost free of duty, materials however advanced for making articles for export; and also ignores the additional fact that even where we have the materials, as for example cotton, as cheap and even cheaper than our foreign competitors, we are able to export but comparatively few goods, in competition with foreigners—only twenty-four millions, against an export of four hundred and twenty-five millions by England—for the reason that our labor employed in making the advanced manufactures receives from 50 to 100 per cent more pay for a given amount of human effort than the foreign competitor pays.

PROGRESSIVE WAR ON PROTECTION.

Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding some industries have been wholly or partly protected by this bill, as well as some sent at once to the wall, yet the rule has been to so far reduce duties as to increase foreign competition and importations, leaving the domestic industries affected an opportunity to make the reduced duties protective by lowering wages, until another reduction of duties foreshadowed shall follow.

There runs through the report of the majority, and through the indorsements of it by the tariff reform or free trade clubs, the idea that this bill is only one step in the process of reduction, although made with unfair discrimination, to be followed by other steps, until all the duties shall be absolutely for revenue only, and every chance of possible protection removed. The gentleman from West Virginia was frank enough to tell us in his opening speech that, while he had treated many industries tenderly in this bill, he believed that the time would soon come when any remains of protection would be uprooted.

Indeed, the woolens schedule puts these steps into law by providing that there shall be an annual 1 per cent ad valorem reduction of the low duties provided by the bill for five years, thus at the end of that period bringing down the duties on woolen goods—the most difficult of all the textiles to manufacture—to rates varying on the face from 20 to 25 per cent for flannels and blankets and to 35 per cent for cloths and dress goods. Although no other schedule has this downward sliding scale, and woolens are therefore specially discriminated against, yet it is not to be supposed that it would have been applied in this case, where the highest duties are needed, if the purpose had not been in the early future to apply it all along the line. In this light it is amusing, if it were not so serious, to have some of the advocates of this bill arguing that it has the merit of offering stability to our industries, especially when it is remembered that for thirty-two years there has been one continuous, stable tariff policy, that of protection.

AD VALOREM DUTIES.

But, Mr. Chairman, the reduction of duties which appears on the face of this bill has been in fact largely increased by the general adoption, except in some conspicuous instances where favors have been extended to particular industries, of ad valorem duties in lieu of the specific or mixed duties of the present tariff. An ad valorem duty, as the name indicates, is levied on the foreign price of an imported article, and as that price is in most cases practically determined by the foreign manufacturer in his invoice, as a rule such article is undervalued, and the duty thus reduced below what was intended by the law. A specific duty, on the other hand, is a fixed charge levied on each pound, yard, or other unit, and can not be avoided.

The art of undervaluation so as to reduce ad valorem duties has been carried to such an extent that honest importers have been largely driven out of the business, and imported goods are largely sold duty paid by the agent of the manufacturer in this country.

When I was in Europe last summer, an English manufacturer, who exports largely to this country, said to me that he did not care what our duties might be made if we would only make them ad valorem.

It is the judgment of well-informed manufacturers that the actual duties which will be realized by the Government in case the pending bill should become a law, so far as woolen goods, fancy cottons, and many other goods of a varied character which are made especially for our markets, would be at least 10 per cent if not 15 per cent ad valorem less than would be realized with equivalent specific duties, because of undervaluations. In other words, ad valorem duties of 40 per cent or 35 per cent, will be found no more valuable for protection or revenue than specific duties equivalent to 30 per cent or 25 per cent, respectively.

The only argument presented by the majority for the substitution of ad valorem for specific or mixed duties is that specific duties impose relatively higher duties on cheap grades of an article than on more valuable grades. There is little real force in this argument, certainly none comparable with the objections, because there is no difficulty in adjusting a specific rate to each grade which will largely overcome even the apparent discrimination when expressed in percentages. Moreover, this apparent discrimination is only seeming, not real. Percentages afford no just basis of comparison when the bases are widely different. For example, 1 is 50 per cent of 2, and only 10 per cent of 10, but notwithstanding it appears ten times as large in the latter case as in the former when expressed in percentages, yet it is exactly the same 1 in both cases.

Take the illustration given in the majority report of the duty on so-called woolen cloth invoiced at 27 cents per pound and cloth invoiced at 97 cents. The majority report states that the tariff of 1890 imposes 162 per cent duty on the cheap cloth "for poor people" and only 93 per cent on the fine cloth for the well to do, etc. Yet as a matter of fact the duty on the so-called "cheap woolen cloth" is 44 cents per pound and on the fine cloth 93 cents—less than half as much on the cheap as on the fine, instead of nearly twice as much.

But inasmuch as the majority report has made use of one exceptional import of what the majority call "cheap woolen cloth for poor people," valued at 27 cents per pound, to prop up the vicious change to ad valorem duties, it may be well to examine it more fully.

It is evident on the face that there was something peculiar about this small import of woolen cloths under 30 cents per pound, valued at only $9,000 in 1892, and only $13,000 in 1893. For if there are any wool cloths suitable for even "poor people" to wear that can be bought abroad at 27 cents per pound, it is certain that even with 44 cents per pound duty they would be imported in immense quantities. If the chairman of the committee had inquired he would have ascertained that even in England, with her low wages, a pound of woolen cloth can not be made for less than about 20 cents. That leaves only 7 cents, or not over 12 cents, for the wool; and clothing wool, even of the cheapest variety, sufficient to make a pound of wool cloth, can not be purchased in London for less than 35 cents before it goes to the mill. Certainly a pound of real wool cloth can not be purchased in England for less than 55 cents.

Yet it seems that a small quantity of so-called wool cloth was invoiced at 27 cents per pound. Certainly if this was really wool cloth the undervaluation must have been most remarkable. It does not seem to have succeeded to any extent—only once each year to give the majority of the committee a shining example. It is evident that the specific duty of 33 cents per pound was found in the way of a repetition of the job. If the cloth had been imported under the pending bill the ad valorem duty would have made the duty only 10½ cents, and this cut would have afforded a big premium for the continuation of such undervaluation.

The example cited by the majority is really an argument for instead of against specific duties.

Indeed, every Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, from Gallatin, who served in this capacity under Jefferson, to Secretary Manning (Walker alone excepted), has maintained that specific duties are essential to prevent frauds against the Government and discriminations against honest importers. The fact, however, that an ad valorem duty opens the door for a reduction of duties beyond what the law provides, and diminishes protection as prices go down in unfavorable times when protection is most needed, seems to have commended it to the framers of this bill.

Nothing can be more misleading than percentage duties on invoice value, especially in comparing duties at different periods and under different tariffs. Where the duty is specific, percentages rise with decline in values, although in fact the duties are unchanged. Indeed I notice that the protective specific duty of 1¼ cents per pound on rice, imposed by this bill, gives an equivalent ad valorem of 71 per cent duty on the imports of 1892, and 83 per cent on the imports of 1893; an apparent advance of 12 per cent ad valorem in duty by percentages when there is no change in fact. This shows the misleading character of ad valorems.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] called attention to the duty of 1 cent per pound in the tariff of 1890 on hoop iron, and informed us that hoop iron is selling for 1.2 cents per pound; pretty good evidence that the protective duty is not a tax which increases the price to the extent of the duty. Yet that duty, which appears to be 80 or more per cent in the tariff of 1890, is less than one-third the specific duty on hoop iron imposed by the tariffs of 1828 and 1830, when it was said to be only 40 per cent. I repeat, in order to show the misleading nature of ad valorem figures, that the duty on imported hoop iron under the tariff of 1828 and 1830 was 3¼ cents per pound. The tariff of 1890 reduced it to 1 cent, and yet it is made to appear by ad valorem percentages that a reduction of two-thirds has largely increased the duty. Thus notwithstanding duties expressed in specific terms have been largely reduced in the tariff of 1890 below even the earlier tariffs, yet the reductions are made to appear as increases by the use of per centage ad valorem equivalents.

EFFECT OF A PROTECTIVE DUTY.

Mr. Chairman, the real issue between the advocates of a protective tariff and the advocates of a tariff for revenue only, or British free trade (for both terms mean the same thing in tariff discussion), is as to the effect of a protective duty on the cost to the consumer of a domestic article, i. e., a duty imposed on a like imported foreign article equivalent to the difference of the money cost of production and distribution here and abroad, where such article can be produced or made here substantially to the extent of our wants without natural disadvantage.

The majority report and free-trade advocates generally affirm that such a duty is a tax which increases the cost to the consumer of such domestic article substantially to the extent of the duty. The advocates of protection deny this.

Of course, there is no controversy over the effect of a duty on an imported article not produced or made here, to any considerable extent. In that case there is comparatively little or no domestic production to affect the price; and as the article must all or for the most part be purchased abroad, the cost to the consumer must be the foreign price plus the duty. The issue is entirely as to the effect of a duty on the price or cost of the domestic article which can be produced or made here substantially to the extent of our wants without natural disadvantage.

The usual course of the free trade or anti-protection disputant is to assume that such a duty is a tax on the domestic article, and without meeting the counter facts and arguments adduced by the advocates of protection, to go on from that point as if it were conceded. That has been the course pursued in this discussion by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON]. Sometimes the assumption is fortified by such an argument as this:

"You protectionists say that you want duties on certain imported articles which it is desired to produce or make here, because they cost more to make here on account of our higher wages, and the articles can not be made here and sold in competition with similar foreign articles admitted free of duty. If, then, the duties on foreign articles do not enable the domestic producers or manufacturers to make the prices of the domestic articles substantially that of the foreign articles abroad, plus the duty, then they fail to protect. If they do so raise the price, then they are in effect a tax on the domestic article, which does not go into the Treasury."

The fundamental fallacy of this argument is that it uses the term "cost" in its money and not its economic sense, and thus deals with the problem as if man were only a consumer and not a producer also.

It is evident that when there is no natural disadvantage in producing or making an article here—and protection does not properly apply if there be such—then it requires no more labor to produce or make an article here than abroad; and if so, then measured in labor or service, which is the true economic measure of cost, it costs no more to produce or make any such article here than elsewhere. There can be no economic loss, therefore, in the production of such article or articles here rather than abroad.

When it is said, therefore, that it costs more to produce or make an article here than abroad because of our higher wages, it is only meant that it costs more in money—not more in labor or service, in which nearly all men ultimately pay for everything they buy. Money is only the medium of making the exchange of labor for products.

Thus, the true test of the cost or price of an article in any country is not money cost, but labor cost. When it is said that a workingman in England can buy a coat for $9 in money and that a similar coat costs $10 here, you can not determine which is relatively cheaper to the workingman or other person who ultimately pays in his labor or service, or product of his labor or efforts, until you know how much money either receives for his labor or earns by his service. When you have both sides of the equation, then you can determine which money price is relatively cheaper, and not before. If it turns out that the laborer receives $1 per day wages in England and $2 here, then the cost of the coat to the workingman in England is nine days' work, and to the workingman in the United States five days' work. In spite of the assumption of the doctrinaire who looks only at money price, that the workingman in England can buy his coat a dollar cheaper than the workingman in the United States, the fact is that the cost of the workingman's coat here in the only commodity he has to pay is only five-ninths of the cost to the workingman in England. [Applause on the Republican side].

It may be said that if such a workingman here could buy his coat abroad and import it free of duty, then he would save $1. I reply that while this would be true if only one or a few persons should be granted this privilege for the reason that a few cases like this would not disturb our economic system under which higher wages are paid here than abroad; but if everybody in this country could send the money received for wages or service or their products to England and buy such goods as are cheaper in money there and import them free of duty, instead of having them made here, then, first, American wages would soon fall to the British standard, because of want of diversification of industries and dearth of employment outside of agriculture, which would be glutted; and secondly, with such an increased demand for goods abroad and withdrawal of American competition, prices of goods there would rise. No one can have his cake and eat it at the same time. Whether the economic system of a country is free trade or protection, it must be an entirety.

Measured in labor, there is not a single article made here under protection—no matter whether the duty on a similar imported article is 30 per cent, 50 per cent, or 100 per cent—which is not cheaper here than in any other country in the world. Our free-trade friends have much to say of cheap prices of products measured in money, and never anything of cheap prices measured in labor. Products cheapened by labor-saving devices are a boon. Products cheapened by reducing the compensation of labor and by depriving the laborer of opportunities to work are a curse. [Applause.] We are having now the free-trade paradise of cheapness, and the workingman's gehenna of dearness. Prices measured in money are abnormally cheap; prices measured in labor are exceptionally dear.

These observations have paved the way for a closer examination of the workings of protective duties, which are simply duties on imports equivalent to the difference of money wages of labor production and distribution here and abroad. Such duties simply equalize the basis of competition here and abroad. The money prices of domestic products are determined by the cost of production or manufacture under competition paying American wages, and when they cost more in money than abroad it is simply because labor receives higher wages. Even if the duties are more than such actual difference of cost of production and distribution here and abroad, competition inevitably brings the money prices down to the lowest possible standard. The object of protection is not, as the free-trader insists, to increase prices, but to encourage production here by making it possible for us to compete, and the competition thus induced tends to lower prices everywhere, not by reducing wages, but by stimulating the use of labor-saving devices.

The money prices may be more here than abroad at the same time, but these money prices will be gradually reduced by the competition here, made possible only by protection, below what they were before the industries were established here, and frequently as low as abroad. But the prices estimated in labor or service, as I have already said, will always be lower than anywhere else in the world. Applause.]

Every instance in which we have applied protective duties to secure the manufacture of articles here, which had been previously imported, has thus resulted. In 1883, when we applied a protective duty to wire nails, the price was 8 cents per pound, and nearly all were imported. We were charged with a purpose to tax the people 4 cents per pound for all their wire nails, because the proposed duty was 4 cents. Yet wire nails never advanced; but as soon as we had firmly established the industry they began to decline—our competition affecting the foreign price,—and even before the tariff-reform cyclone struck the country some months ago the price had declined to less than 2 cents. And this is only one out of thousands of similar examples.

This means that our policy of providing by protective duties that competition here shall be on the basis of our higher standard of wages and higher standard of living rather than on the lower European standard, as it would necessarily be under free trade or duties lower than the difference of wages here and abroad, results in higher prosperity of the masses of our people than is found anywhere else in the world.

PROTECTION, NOT PATERNALISM.

Mr. Chairman, this policy is not "paternalism" nor "partnership of the Government in private industries," nor "class legislation," as charged by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON], unless indeed the establishment of colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts by the Government in the several States for the purpose of increasing the industrial efficiency of the rising generation, which the gentleman and his associates advocate, is "paternalism;" or unless the improvement of the rivers of West Virginia and the harbors of the Great Lakes and of the ocean, in order to enable private citizens to navigate their boats and ships with greater efficiency, for which the gentleman and most of the members of his party voted, is "class legislation" and "partnership of the Government in private industries." [Applause on the Republican side.]

The distinction between "paternalism" and protection is as wide as the difference between giving a man an opportunity to work and doing his work for him. Paternalism dwarfs men; protection gives them the best opportunities to develop themselves. The function of good government should never be paternal, but always protective. The "let alone" theory of government, on which free-trade ideas are based, has been abandoned for the most part by practical statesmen everywhere, and there has come to be general acceptance of the view that it is the proper function, aye, the duty of government to so protect and enlarge the opportunities of its individual citizens as to enable them to use their own powers more efficiently, whether by education, restriction of temptations to vice, building highways, improving rivers and harbors, erecting light-houses, or restricting undesirable immigration which would tend to reduce wages and lower the standard of living. [Applause.]

And the protective-tariff policy, which imposes duties equivalent to the difference of wages in production and distribution here and abroad on such imported articles as can be produced or made here without natural disadvantage, in order to maintain competition here on the basis of our high wage and high living standard, and thus secure the highest prosperity of the masses of our people, is exactly in the same line.

Our protective policy simply says to the foreign manufacturer: "Before you can place the products of your cheaper labor in our markets in competition with the products of our higher wage labor you must pay into our Treasury and thus contribute to our revenue substantially the sum which you withhold from your workingmen, but which we pay our workingmen."

It will be remembered that when the tariff act of 1890 increased the average duty on woolens so as to make it more protective on the finer grades, it was assaulted all along the line by the free-trade theorists as an increase of $30 tax on every hundred dollars' worth of the woolens and the clothing of the people. The gentleman from West Virginia has repeated this assertion, entirely in line with the theory on which this bill is framed, as if facts which could have been ascertained by a study of markets rather than maxims, had not already disproved it. And yet the report of the Senate Finance Committee, based on statistics collected by Labor Commissioner Wright, showed that the effect of this increase of duty was not to advance the price of woolens—indeed the price was 5 per cent lower in 1891 than in 1890—but to reduce importations about twenty millions, and thus increase the demand for domestic goods and for labor. And the manufacturers state that, notwithstanding they received 5 per cent less per yard for their goods in 1891 than in 1890, yet they did a more prosperous business, for the reason that it cost them less to make their goods in 1891 than in 1890, because of the larger demand, which enabled them to make more effective use of their machinery.

In other words, the increased duty which restricted foreign imports gave our own manufacturers a larger home market, made it possible for them to make their goods at a lower cost, and competition compelled them to sell them at a lower price. Yet all the gentlemen on the other side who have spoken, in the face of such facts, keep right on asserting that a protective duty is a tax which increases the burdens of the American consumer.

Ex-Senator Eaton, of Connecticut, himself a Democrat, although he would be ruled out of the new Democratic party by the framers of this bill, when a member of the House told an anecdote of a scholastic free trader that illustrates the tendency of men whose whole training has been outside of practical life, to blindly follow theories and shut their eyes to the facts of life all about them.

"A certain professor, a theorist of the first water," said ex-Senator Eaton, "came up into a large manufacturing village in my country to address the people on the tariff question. There was a farmer standing by a post in the lecture room, and the professor thought he might be a good subject to operate upon. So he said to him 'My friend, you are a farmer?' 'Yes.' 'You live here?' 'Yes.' 'Do you know these manufacturers in this village are robbing you?' 'Why, no; I do not know it. How have they robbed me? I came here ten years ago with only $500 and bought a farm for $2,500, and run in debt for the balance. I went to raising truck and selling to the mill hands. I have paid off my debt and now own my farm, free of debt. How have they robbed me?' The professor, not at all taken back, went on. 'Well, I suppose you have been a hard-working man and have lived through it. But you pay 6 cents a yard tax for the very cloth your shirt is made of. "Well," replied the farmer, "you may think so, but you can not prove it unless by Æsop's fables, for 5 cents a yard was all I gave for the cloth."

THE WAGES QUESTION.

Mr. Chairman, there are two answers which the free-trade or revenue-only advocates make to this contention of the friends of protection. First, they affirm that wages are no higher here than in machine-using nations abroad when efficiency is considered. They admit that money wages per day or week are 67 per cent higher on an average here than in England as shown by Labor Commissioner Wright's reports; but they claim that workingmen here do enough more to offset this difference.

It is sufficient to say that there is no evidence of the truth of this assumption. The only evidence ever adduced in this direction was some statistics of the relative labor cost of making low-grade cottons, in which the labor cost is very slight, at a particular time when we had introduced some improvements in machinery not then adopted abroad. In other words, they were statistics of the superior inventive genius of Americans when protection gives us the opportunity to compete on an equal plane, and not evidence of the superior efficiency of our labor. Indeed, in many industries, particularly textiles, our best skilled labor comes from Europe.

The fact that the gates of Castle Garden always swing inward and never outward is an absolute demonstration that a given amount of labor receives not only larger money wages but also larger wages estimated in purchasing power than abroad, even if Labor Commissioner Wright's statistics of piece work had not removed this fact beyond the pale of dispute. Indeed, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BLACK] charges that our protective policy has induced excessive immigration by making our wages and opportunities for poor men so attractive; leaving it to be inferred that he advocates this bill because it will diminish these wages and opportunities.

Even if other evidence were not conclusive, the fact that even with duties of 40 per cent or more on imported manufactured goods, foreign manufacturers find themselves able to pay that duty and still sell three hundred millions of dollars' worth of their products in our markets, and the further fact that our exports of manufactured goods are mainly coarse cottons and specialties, demonstrate beyond doubt that the latter pay much less for a given amount of labor in such industries than we do.

"American workingmen are the smartest in the world, and not afraid to compete with the products of the workingmen of Europe," exclaims the theorist. It is not a question of "smartness," but a question of compensation for "smartness." The American workingman receives 67 per cent more for a given amount of "smartness" than the workingman in Europe receives. What the American objects to is competition with products produced or made abroad by labor that receives 67 per cent less than he does until the beneficiary of that cheaper labor has paid our Government enough duty to even up the basis of competition. When the foreign laborer comes here, provided he comes to be an American and to gradually adopt the American standard of living—and no other immigrant should be permitted to come—he demands and receives American (not foreign) wages; and as he brings as much or more demand for products for the consumption of his family as he adds to the labor supply, his coming does not reduce wages nor injure our own labor.

THE "NATURAL CHANNEL" ARGUMENT.

The second answer of the free-trade theorists is that we should not undertake to carry on industries in which foreign producers or manufacturers have an advantage over us, but should confine ourselves to industries in which we have advantage over other countries. This is the free-trade contention of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] and the contention of the majority report.

Now, if this free-trade contention referred simply to a natural advantage; if the argument of the majority report, insisting that we should not attempt to extend our industries and business to "artificial channels," referred to disadvantages of climate, soil, or other natural conditions, it would be accepted as sound. No protectionist holds that the protective policy should be applied to any industry which must be carried on here under natural disadvantages, that is, where a larger amount of labor is permanently required to make or produce a given article here than is required elsewhere, except as there may be cases where national defense demands it.

What is meant by opponents of protection, however, is not this. It is that we should not carry on any industry here in which our higher wages of labor make the product cost more in money, although no more in labor or service than elsewhere where the laborer receives less pay—this, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] tells us would be an "artificial channel,"—but should confine ourselves to "natural channels," or such crude industries, mainly agriculture, in which we have sufficient natural advantage to offset the difference of wages.

Indeed, the free-trade contention—and it is noticeable that nearly all the speeches for this bill on the other side have adopted free-trade arguments to their logical conclusion, and as such have been most enthusiastically applauded by nearly all our Democratic friends, thus showing that the Democratic party no longer disguises its free-trade policy—the free-trade contention is that where we find industries in which our higher wages of labor makes the product cost more in money (although not more in labor or service) than they cost abroad because we pay higher wages for a certain amount of labor, we should drop such industries, notwithstanding they comprise nearly all our manufacturing industries, and import such goods instead of making them here, and turn the labor which has been employed in such manufacturing industries into agriculture or the production of crude materials in which we have natural advantages. This is the policy which has been again and again enthusiastically applauded on the Democratic side. And it is seriously contended by the free-trade theorist, that this policy—which in fact would be going back where we were a hundred years ago—would give us the largest production of wealth, highest wages, and greatest consuming capacity. Perhaps the gentlemen who advocate this theory will be able to tell us what any of our farm products would be worth with such a multiplication of farmers and such an annihilation of nonagricultural consumers.

This is the free-trade idea, pure and simple; this is the advice which the British Cobdenites give us—to confine ourselves to producing raw materials and let England do our manufacturing.

It is sufficient to say in reply that any economic theory which, put into practice, would prevent a diversification of industries, and especially the establishment of advanced manufactures, is fundamentally wrong. For nothing is clearer in the light of reason or in the teachings of experience, than that people who so far multiply their pursuits as to give an opportunity for every variety of talent, and especially the highest skill, to do most effective work, take the lead in agriculture, manufacturing, and commerce. A nation with advanced industries, placed alongside the farm, produces far more per inhabitant than one which confines its industries to what free traders call "natural channels." [Applause.]

It can not be too often pressed upon the attention of the thoughtful citizen who listens to the free-trade argument that it is a loss of productive power for us to carry on industries in which the cost of production is greater than the cost elsewhere: that no protectionist proposes to do this, if by "cost" is meant cost in labor or service. What the free trader means is that we should not carry on industries here in which, while they require no more labor for production here than is required abroad, we pay higher wages for such labor. The fact that other countries pay lower wages than we do is not a natural advantage on their part; it is an "artificial" advantage, created by crowding labor to the wall, and as a result of a system in which man is left out of consideration; and the only way in which we can prevent competition through the products of such a system coming into our markets and forcing us down to the low-wage and low-living standard of other machine-using nations, is by placing protective duties on their products, so as to place competition here on our high-wage and high-living standard basis.

PROTECTION HISTORICALLY CONSIDERED.

Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of history that the most prominent incentive to the adoption of the Constitution and the establishment of a truly national government in 1789 was the necessity which was felt for such uniform regulations of commerce as would provide revenue, promote trade, and encourage new industries, and thus free us from our industrial and commercial subjection to England, arising mainly from the fact that we raised the raw materials and she developed them into manufactured products.

One of the first acts passed by the first Congress under the Constitution, in response to the popular demand, was a tariff, whose title was an act to raise revenue "and encourage manufactures."

The act received the warm approval of Washington, Madison, and Jefferson. The same Jefferson whom our Democratic friends claim to be politically descended from, was one of the fathers of protection, one of the original advocates of the policy of so adjusting duties as to "encourage manufactures," a policy which the framers of this bill now tell us is "unconstitutional," as well as "robbery."

The idea of the fathers who framed the Constitution, and passed the first protective tariff to encourage manufactures as well as raise revenue, was that the prosperity of the country, of all classes, demanded that we should not confine our labor to what the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] calls "natural channels," the crude industries and agriculture to which the people of a new country first address themselves, but should apply protective duties with a view of diversifying our industries and establishing manufacturing industries—"artificial channels," as the free trader thinks.

To be sure, the average duties on all imports (as there were few free goods then) of the various tariffs enacted up to the close of the first term of Jefferson were only 22½ per cent, but at that time the slow and expensive means of transportation across the Atlantic afforded a large measure of protection in itself, and the industries to be introduced in those early days were only those for the manufacture of the coarser articles adapted to a new country. These duties were subsequently increased as experience showed necessary. In 1821 the average duty was 36 per cent, and in 1830 it was nearly 49 per cent on dutiable goods. The important fact to be considered is that the framers of the Constitution, who may be supposed to have had some knowledge of the scope of that instrument, not only held that protective duties are constitutional, but that they are a wise measure of public policy.

WHAT THE FATHERS THOUGHT.

The fathers did not consider the objection, even then urged, that the adoption of protective duties to secure the establishment and maintenance of manufacturing industries would be "class legislation," or the "partnership of the Government in business," to be anything but chaff, unworthy of a moment's consideration.

They argued that the introduction of manufacturing industries in this country and the diversification of pursuits would be, as it has proved, a benefit to the industries already existing, and especially a benefit to agriculture, and to all our people.

They regarded the whole people as an industrial unit. They held that manufacturing industries would benefit the farmer by preventing so large a concentration of labor in agriculture as would greatly increase the surplus for export, and thus reduce the foreign price, and by giving him a larger home market and better prices; for whatever the farmer sells at home escapes the heavy charges of transportation. They saw by faith what those who will open their eyes can to day see by actual vision, that farming pays much better when manufacturing communities are set down by the side of the farms.

They knew, what some of their descendants are blind to, that the carpenter and mason, as well as some other industries, are protected by natural conditions which forbid the importation of what they work on, but that their wages and their prosperity, as well as that of the farmer, could not rise above the wages and prosperity of the workingmen and consumers in other industries that would be open to competition with the products of the cheaper labor of Europe, without protective duties. Hence they reasoned, and reasoned correctly, that protection concerned all.

PROTECTIVE PERIODS ERAS OF GREATEST PROSPERITY.

And our experiences since have only demonstrated the wisdom of the judgment of the fathers. Our periods of highest prosperity have always been those in which the protective policy has been maintained.

The contention made now and then by opponents of protection, and repeated in the report of the majority, that the revenue-tariff period from 1846 to 1860 witnessed the greatest progress of our manufacturing industries and was the golden era of the nation, has no basis except rhetoric, and even more deceptive percentages, to stand upon.

The simple fact told by the census is that in the decade between 1850 and 1860 the value of our manufactured products increased $765,000,000, or $16 per inhabitant; and in the decade between 1880 and 1890, under protection, $3,146,000,000, or $29 per inhabitant, or nearly twice as fast in the latter as in the former. The value of our manufactured products rose from $1,885,750,000 in 1860 to $8,515,500,000 in 1890. And the growth in volume was much greater than this, because the price of manufactured goods has been reduced 25 per cent since 1860.

The majority report speaks of the revenue tariff period between 1846 and 1860 as one in which our woolen industry signally flourished. The figures of the census, however, show that at the close of this period in 1860 the value of our manufactures of wool was only $68,750,000, or $2.10 per inhabitant, against $344,250,000, or $5.50 per inhabitant, in 1890. In other words, the increase per capita in value of our woolen industry under protection was one and a half times as much as the entire growth from the first settlement of the country.

The value of the wealth accumulated by the people of this country in the thirty years between 1860 and 1890 under protection was nearly four times as much as was that accumulated in the two hundred and forty years from the landing of the Pilgrims to the election of Lincoln. The wealth of this country in 1860 was only $514 per inhabitant; in 1890 it was $1,000 per inhabitant. The contention that the wealth in the possession of the workingmen is no greater than thirty years ago is disproved by the returns of the savings banks, which show a large increase in average deposits, as well as by the increase of 68 per cent in the purchase power of wages.

In the thirty years from 1830 to 1860 there were built in this country only 30,603 miles of railway. In the thirty years from 1860 to 1890 there were built 106,512 miles of railway. In the decade between 1880 and 1890 there was built in the United States nearly four times the mileage of railway that was built in the decade between 1850 and 1860.

A better test still of the wisdom of any economic policy is its effect on the welfare of the masses of the people.

It has been said that the consumption of iron in any country is the infallible test of its material progress. Apply this test to the revenue and protective eras of the United States and to Great Britain. In 1860 the United States consumed only 61¼ pounds of iron per inhabitant, the most of which was imported, while Great Britain consumed 173 pounds per inhabitant.

In 1892 the United States consumed 335 pounds of iron per inhabitant, five times as much as in 1860, nearly all of which was made in this country, while Great Britain consumed only 275 pounds per inhabitant.

Wages increased 60 per cent in money and 68 per cent in purchase power between 1860 and 1890 under our protective policy, and less than one-third as much in Great Britain.

In 1850 one day's work of a weaver in this country would buy 8¼ yards of standard sheeting; in 1860 it would buy 10 yards, and in 1891, 27 yards. But in 1891 one day's work would buy only 20 yards in Great Britain.

In the revenue decade between 1850 and 1860 one day's work of an ironworker would buy 50 pounds of bar iron; in the protective decade between 1880 and 1890 100 pounds, while in the latter decade in Great Britain one day's work would buy only 75 pounds.

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] and others who are now trying to revise history by affirming that the revenue tariff period between 1846 and 1860 was the most prosperous era of the United States, overlook the fact that there are gentlemen living, some of them in this Chamber, whose memory goes back to those days, and who themselves experienced some of the evil results of that tariff policy, which were deferred for a time by the Mexican war, the gold discoveries in California, and the Crimean war, but finally burst with tornado force upon our country in 1857–'58–'59. I suggest to these gentlemen that they take down the musty volumes which contain President Buchanan's messages to Congress in December, 1857 and 1858, and reread his pictures of the sad condition of our industrial and financial interests in those years, which our free-trade friends tell us were the "golden era" of our history. And the tarnished character of this "golden era" will be made strikingly apparent if they will also reread the official reports of the almost ineffectual efforts of the National Government in 1860 to borrow money to meet a deficiency in the Federal Treasury even at 12 per cent interest.

It is sometimes charged that protection is selfish and unchristian and antagonistic to the dictates of a broad philanthropy. If so, then the family relation, ordained by God, in which the head is admonished to care first of all for those placed in his charge, is selfish and unchristian. If so, the nation, also divinely ordained, whose primary duty it is to make the most of its own people, and in that way do the most for mankind, is selfish and unchristian. No family and no nation may do injustice to others. Protection does no injustice to others. It is no injustice to anyone for this nation to say to others, "For the highest well-being of our people we maintain a high wage and a high standard of living, and in order to maintain this competition for our markets must proceed on the basis of our wage and living standard. If you choose to maintain a lower wage and a lower standard of living you can do so for yourselves, but when you seek our markets, we ask that you pay into our Treasury as a duty a sum which shall place your competiton on the basis of our high wage and high standard of living." This is not only just, but eminently Christian and philanthropic. Indeed, we hope that the influence of our example may lead other countries to adopt our high wage and high standard of living, under which the masses of our people have become the most prosperous on the face of the earth.

LABOR COST OF PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION.

Mr. Chairman, there is one defense of the pending bill which I must not pass by. "After all," say its advocates, "there is enough average duty left by this bill—30 per cent—to fully cover the difference of wages of labor here and abroad in production and distribution."

This is an after thought, and entirely inconsistent with every other argument that has been put forth in antagonism to protection. More than this, the fact is not as claimed. If it be true, then this bill is open to the same objections from the other side that are made against our protective tariffs. No; the authors of this bill well know that they have not been as inconsistent as that.

In the first place, of course the claim is not true as to the products of industries which have been placed on the free list. And no one will contend it is true as to the large number of industries whose competing foreign products are to be admitted with a duty of only 10 to 15 per cent.

Even as to those industries whose competing foreign products are to be admitted ultimately at from 25 to 35, and in a few cases 40 per cent ad valorem, which will not exceed a specific duty equivalent to more than 25 to 30 per cent in the case of textiles, the duty will not be equal to the difference of wages in production and distribution here and abroad.

While the labor cost of manufacturing textiles, for example, averages about 25 per cent of the domestic valuation and 33 per cent of the foreign valuation on which duties are imposed, yet this 33 per cent only includes the manufacture after mill and machinery are completed and the supplies and materials furnished. It does not include the labor in building mill, machinery, and harnessing power, nor the labor on materials and supplies, nor the labor in transportation, selling, etc. Ex-Congressman Abram S. Hewitt, a practical manufacturer, stated to the Committee on Ways and Means a few years ago that 90 per cent of the cost of every manufactured article (not simply 25 per cent) is labor; and when this labor receives nearly double here for a given amount of effort than is paid in England, it is absurd to talk about a duty that will practically be only 30 per cent, placing on an even basis an English and an American industry manufacturing an advanced article.

When it is borne in mind that $32,000,000 of fine cotton goods were imported last year in the face of a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem higher than is proposed by this bill; $37,000,000 of woolens in the face of a duty 20 per cent ad valorem higher; not to mention more than $200,000,000 of other manufactured goods in the face of a duty 15 per cent higher, it is clear that even those higher duties could not have been much, if any, in excess of the actual difference of money cost of production and distribution here and abroad.

REDUCED DUTIES MEAN REDUCED WAGES.

As a matter of fact, with the exception of certain instances in which some industries have had special and exceptional favor, the duties fixed by this bill will in practical administration prove not to be protective on the basis of the wages that existed in this country one year ago. They are not intended to be protective. They will necessitate a reduction of wages in order that our industries may compete with foreign industries whose products are to be admitted to our markets at lower rates of duty.

What has already taken place in the reduction of wages throughout this country in consequence of the necessity imposed on industries to anticipate the large reduction of the duties on competing foreign imports, ought to be a complete answer to the contention of the free-trade theorists that protective duties have had nothing to do with increasing wages 60 per cent estimated in money and 68 per cent estimated in purchasing power since 1860, as shown by Labor Commissioner Wright's statistics; or that duties may be reduced below the protective point without lowering wages. An ounce of experience is worth more than a ton of theory. But in this case our sad experience since it became evident that there is to be a revolutionary tariff change, weighs many tons.

"Wages are made by demand and supply and not by protective duties," exclaim the opponents of protection. In one sense wages are made by supply and demand if all the elements affecting supply and demand are taken into consideration; but supply is affected by the standard of living and many other conditions, and demand by the extent of the diversification of industries and the consumptive capacity of the people. Where the industries of a country are confined to agriculture and a few crude industries, as they were everywhere in this country seventy years ago, and as they would be now if we should give up manufacturing industries and import our goods from abroad, the demand for labor is restricted and wages comparatively low. But when under the policy of protection we began to send less and less of our raw materials to Europe to be manufactured for us there, and to establish manufacturing industries here, the demand for labor increased, our productive and consumptive power multiplied, and wages began to increase as estimated in money, and even more as estimated in purchase power. In other words, our protective policy has maintained and increased wages by enlarging the demand for labor and so multiplying pursuits as to give each man the opportunity best adapted to his tastes and capacity, and by increasing the consumptive power of the people.

There ought to be nothing clearer to any thinking man than that when thousands of industries are being carried on here and employing labor which is paid from 50 to 100 per cent more than in England for the same amount of service, and the duties on the competing goods are lowered so as to not fully cover the difference of money cost of production or manufacture and distribution here and abroad, then one of two things must take place here; either such industries must stop here or wages must be reduced to offset the new competition caused by a reduction of duties. As a matter of fact, both of these results are taking place all around us in anticipation of the reduction of duties. Labor organizations are valuable in maintaining uniform wages in the same industries within our own borders; but when competition comes in in the shape of the products of cheaper labor abroad, admitted free of duty or at a lower rate than the difference of wages here and abroad, such organizations are powerless for the reason that they can not control foreign wages.

And it is not simply the laborers and owners of so-called protected industries that are feeling the evil results of this threatened change, but every class of our people. All of our industries are interlinked; and under our economic policy, as it existed for more than thirty years, all were under our protective system—some protected by natural conditions, some by protective duties. And when it became evident that this policy was to be overthrown, and business and industries began to prepare for the revolutionary change, then all classes felt the blow.

Our sad experience the past six months contrasted with our prosperity for thirty years previous demonstrates that the policy of maintaining protective duties is not "robbery," nor a tax which increases the burdens of the people, as the Democratic majority of the committee reporting this bill affirm, but just, wise, statesmanlike, and promotive of the welfare of all our people, in that it tends to diversify our industries, develop our natural resources, gives wider employment suited to the differing aptitudes of our people, develops healthy competition on the basis of our high wages, stimulates our inventive genius, encourages agriculture by opening up large near-by home markets to the products of the farm, increases the production of wealth, and greatly contributes to the prosperity of the nation. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine be allowed a few minutes. I understand that he can conclude in a very few minutes.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Regular order.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think, on reflection, I will stop right here.

[Mr. SPRINGER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I have often thought during the progress of this debate that if we on the Republican side were charged with the responsibility of defending a bill open to as many objections as my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has just pointed out, we would not begin the argument by a reference to the present condition of the country. Everybody knows what the state of our financial and industrial affairs was a year ago. The last report of Dun's Commercial Agency for last year showed the highest level of business activity ever known in the history of our people, an activity in which all occupations of the people shared. Agriculture had its part in that prosperity.

In my own State which I love to think of as the great agricultural area of the earth, the people in every department of business enjoyed a full measure of the general prosperity. In his message of 1892 the chief executive of Iowa, the first Democratic governor in a generation and probably the last we shall ever have, began his address to the Legislature with a general congratulation to our people that never before since the State was organized had everybody enjoyed so universal and widespread prosperity. From the pinnacle of the temple of national fortune the American people deliberately cast themselves down, trusting that Divine Providence would in some peculiar way give His angels charge concerning them to keep them. [Laughter.]

Within one year we find the country in a situation as has baffled the eloquence of my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to describe it. The Democratic party came forward at once with a remedy for the panic which followed the accession of Mr. Cleveland. After having attributed all of our misfortunes for thirty years to the protective tariff, after having gone through the campaign of 1892 without mentioning any other subject, they discovered about the first month of last summer that it was the silver policy of 1890 that had wrecked the industries of the United States; and though pledged to the American people to make a speedy and fatal attack upon the protective tariff, nearly a year elapsed before that subject was mentioned at all.

I have never heard anything more perfectly illustrative of the reluctance of the Democratic party to begin their assault on the tariff than the case of a gentleman who was riding in a sleeping car from Chicago to Rockford. He gave the porter a dollar, charging him under no circumstances to fail to put him off, saying that even if he resisted the porter must at all hazards put him off the car. He woke up at Galena without the assistance of the porter and went into the smoking room where that functionary was asleep. He found the porter's clothes torn, his face scratched, and his entire make-up in a state of dilapidation. "Didn't I pay you a dollar," said the indignant traveler, "to wake me up at Rockford?" "Fo de Lawd, Massa," said the mystified darkey, "who on earth do you suppose that man was I I done put off?" [Laughter.] So now we find the Democratic party here, dilapidated, torn with dissensions, wounded in the house of its friends, having disposed of the comparatively harmless question of silver, now at last reluctantly falling into conversation with the main question that has occupied their attention for so many years.

I like to talk about the tariff as well as anybody, but I confess that I sometimes get confused in the mists and fog banks of theory through which we are called to pass in conducting such a discussion. To my mind the tariff question is a question of fact. So that when we find a man in the clouds, in the upper air of speculation, the first thing I try to do is to bring him down to the earth where people live and labor and do business. That I propose to do to-day with the kind attention of the House. The act of 1892, tried by the evidence accessible to everybody, thoroughly justified itself even in the brief time before it was overturned. It had specific objects; and it is historically certain that even in the brief space of two years before the election of 1892 it accomplished these objects in a measure hardly expected even by its friends.

There is no slavery in the world which deludes a man's judgment and binds his faculties like a long devotion to the theory of free trade. It seems to destroy the most useful faculties men have. Common sense is the most splendid possession of the human mind. It is the only absolutely reliable human faculty. If this world were full of philosophers, of statesmen, of orators, of political economists, it would hardly be possible for a plain man to live in it at all. They would talk him to death; or if he escaped that, they would argue him, after the manner of Edward Atkinson's recent address to the workingmen of Boston, into the belief that by some new principle of cookery the shin bone of a beef can be so prepared as not to be distinguished from a sirloin steak. [Laughter.] Fortunately we have had in the history of the country at least four resplendent types of American common sense—Benjamin Franklin, Andrew Jackson, Horace Greeley, and Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.]

If the young men of the United States can find a doctrine of practical politics upon which that little group of statesmen are agreed, it is a waste of time to hang around the lecture rooms of a free-trade university in the hope of getting a patentable improvement on their wisdom. [Applause.] The doctrine of the protective tariff, vindicated by the united judgment of these men, may be attacked, may even be for a time discredited, but can not be permanently dislodged from the sober judgment of the people. The storm of clamor and hearsay and interest may threaten it, but in the end it will find an anchorage in the public judgment that is sure and steadfast. Can any sane man believe that God gave to our fathers the far-sighted prudence of Benjamin Franklin if he had intended this country to be guided by the advice of John Randolph, who used to say that he would go a mile out of his way to kick a sheep? [Laughter and applause.]

Can it be believed that Andrew Jackson made the 8th day of January notable and famous only to give the Democratic orators of our own times an opportunity to exploit the free-trade notions upon which the ordinance of nullification in South Carolina was predicated in 1832? [Applause.] Is it credible that Horace Greeley, faithful journalist that he was, made a daily record of the free-trade famine, in the midst of which the people celebrated the Christmas of 1854, if the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee is now to persuade us that the starving multitudes of that afflicted winter were really enjoying the blessings of a "symmetrical industrial development"? [Laughter.]

Can any man in his senses suppose that Abraham Lincoln was called to think, to labor, to suffer, and at last to die, that through his martyrdom the struggling millions of the earth might be free, if, after all, his countrymen are to cast away his counsel and reorganize their affairs on the lines laid down in the Confederate constitution? [Loud applause.] So that I for one am not discouraged, even if this Congress should enact the proposed bill into law without substantial modification, because I know that the people of the United States, having learned their lesson in the midst of broken fortunes and impoverished industries, will come back speedily to the historic standards of American common sense. [Applause.]

But I started to say that the web of the free-trade theory once wound about a man's judgment absolutely deludes his faculties and leaves him helpless and worthless in the arena of practical affairs; and I want to comment upon that by a few illustrations. None of us wish to disparage any member of Congress; in fact, we would not dare to do it. Between ourselves it will never do for us to assume that anybody could get into this body without having shown symptoms of being a great man. [Laughter.] So I do not wish to disparage the membership of the House. But in East Liverpool, Ohio, last fall they elected a Democrat to represent their interests in Congress [Mr. IKIRT]. I have not the pleasure of his personal acquaintance, but I am told that he is an excellent man. He ran for Congress on the theory that the protective tariff is a fraud, a violation of law, and ought to be immediately displaced by a tariff for revenue only.

Now, you would suppose that a man like that would have been sitting up in the night after his arrival here trying to kill off the protection idea. Yet early in the contest we find our friend before the Ways and Means Committee pleading like a condemned anarchist for the life of the industries that have been built up on the ruins of the Constitution in the neighborhood where he resides. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I will read from his testimony before the Ways and Means Committee to illustrate what I mean. Let us first read the questions propounded to him by that serene philosopher from Maine [Mr. REED]. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. REED. How much does that duty—

That is, the 68 per cent on the crockery schedule—increase the price to the consumer?

Mr. IKIRT. That is a question I can not answer.

Mr. REED. It does increase the price to the consumer, does it not?

Mr. IKIRT. I can not answer the question.

Mr. REED. You think the tariff is a tax added to the price of the article?

Mr. IKIRT. Yes, sir; undoubtedly it is.

Here we have a man wedded to Democratic phrases in the act of receiving his sight, but unable as yet to see men even as trees walking. And so our friend, enslaved by the language of Democratic politics, was absolutely unable to apply it to the practical phases even of the industry he represented. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Let us take another illustration, selected by chance from some of the proceedings in which my amiable friend from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] participated. Now, our friend is a man solid and fixed in the conviction that the tariff is a tax. He may lose his grip on every other question, but that cherished conviction of his soul can not be shaken. It would appear that such is his fanaticism that if he went into a store and bought an article for less than the tariff amounts to, he would still be able to, by a perfect process of reasoning, to convince himself and possibly to convince the people of his district, that in some mysterious way, visible to the mind's eye, though to flesh and sense unknown, he had been compelled to work one day to pay for the article and another to pay the tariff on it. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The only man that I have ever heard of who was able to make any impression on the mind of my friend was a witness who came here by authority of Queen Victoria to plead the cause of Bermuda potatoes and to bring tears to the eyes of the Ways and Means Committee by reciting the sad experience of Bermuda onnies. [Laughter.] Now, my friend, full of his theory, was amazed at this witness. The man actually said that the tax was very burdensome to Bermuda. He went so far as to observe that the farmers of Bermuda paid that tax. This aroused the interest of the gentleman from Nebraska, and he began to suspect that the witness had come to Washington by way of Columbus, and had stopped off between trains for a little talk with McKinley. [Laughter on the Republican side.] So he roused himself and demanded to know what the price of Bermuda vegetables was prior to the McKinley bill. The witness was unable to say. He then asked what the price of those vegetables was after the McKinley bill. The witness could not tell, since the price varied from time to time. And now comes my friend from Nebraska, armed with his theory, and undertakes to make war against the facts in the case.

Mr. BRYAN. How can you tell without knowing the price before the McKinley bill was enacted whether the consumer pays the tariff?

Mr. MASTERS. Well, I was treasurer of the Farmers' Alliance and I know that during the latter part of the present season the shipment of some 10,000 boxes or cases to New York paid 38 cents a box and the freight was 16 cents. They sold for about 60 cents. There was clearly a loss and they brought us in debt. If we did not pay the duty, who did?

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I have no doubt that my friend from Nebraska is figuring on that yet. He has not so far appeared in this debate, though we trust he may. I have sometimes thought, however, that he would not, for the reason that last summer he found occasion in this House to account for all the calamities that surround us and all the misfortunes we are heir to by charging them to the demonetization of silver; and it is possible that after having put the workingmen of the country and the farmers of the country at the head of the free-coinage parade he might feel a certain hesitation in overworking them by placing them in a prominent position in the free-trade procession. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

But we will not rest on particular instances. We will enlarge the field of observation a little. I was very much interested the other day when my friend from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON], a few years ago president of my old college in West Virginia—I loved him as Tam O'Shanter loved the landlord, like a very brother, though for an entirely different reason [laughter]—opened this debate. I was interested in what he said. I admired his eloquence and wondered how a man could conjure up a scheme of argument like that to contradict the experience of mankind. I was especially interested in his discussion about woolen cloth, how the tariff had been raised to 300 per cent, and how the poor working girl of the United States looked longingly across the sea upon her sister on the other side who was wearing a cloak she could not have without working one day for the garment and four days more to pay the duty on it; and I asked myself whether it would not have been a substantial improvement on the intellectual equipment of my old college president if there had been left in his head room for a few practical ideas. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

My friend talked as if his countrymen were beggars waiting for the cast-off clothing of Europe, and as if the more cow's hair it contained the more ardent ought our expressions of gratitude to be. He dwelt with a solicitude, evidently sincere, upon what happens in the custom-house; but that is not the question. The question is what happens in the homes of the American people. The question is, How are the American people dressed? how have thirty years of protection left the great masses of the people of our country in the matter of clothes? And every man whose mouth is on speaking terms with his mental faculties knows perfectly well that this is the only well-dressed country in the world. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

You may be able to deceive yourselves in this matter, but you can not deceive even a casual traveler from abroad. Here is a little volume just printed by Daniel Owen & Co. (limited), Cardiff, Wales. It contains the letters written from the United States last summer by Lascelles Carr and printed in the Western Mail, the most influential Tory newspaper of Wales, of which he is the editor. The book is entitled "Yankee Land and the Yankees." On page 23 he says:

The more I see of this wonderful country and the further my inquiries reach, the more satisfied I am that it is the paradise of the workingman and especially of the working women. Wages are high and for the workman the cost of living is comparatively low. Except in the matter of house accommodation their circumstances are in every respect better than those of their English brethren. They eat better and more varied food, they dress better, they have at least as good means of education and other sources of intellectual and social recreation. Yesterday evening I stood at a ferry in Jersey City and saw the work girls trooping over in the boat from New York.

The crowd was composed of much the same social elements as those of which the crowd passing over Black Mars bridge consists. But, ah, what a difference in the appearance of these two sets of girls. These New Jersey girls were neatly and appropriately dressed, and not one of them but wore decent, well-fitting, and in some cases, quite elegant boots and shoes. They walked and spoke, and in every way behaved themselves as ladies. Mind you, this is no reflection on our English girls; it is only a reflection on the system under which the working classes are fain to accept such a rate of wages as puts neat clothes and good boots, and the elegance and propriety of behavior which accompany well-paid labor beyond their reach.

The workingwomen of the United States, for whose safety our friend awakened our interest, are not looking in anxious enthusiasm at the cloaks that are on the backs of their sisters in Europe; the workingwomen of America are sending their money to Europe to enable their sisters to get out of the countries where cloaks are so very cheap. [Applause on the Republican side.] Neither are the men, for on page 36 of the same volume Mr. Carr says:

I have several times alluded—once more I change the subject—to the condition of the workingman in this country. The further my inquiries extend the more convinced I become that the real truth of the matter is that in this country a workman earns nearly twice as much as he would in England, and the cost of his living, except in the matter of rent and clothing, is about the same. Even in the matter of clothing the difference is not great, except in so far as it is brought about by the general use of much better clothing by the artisan in this country than in England.

Now, if my friend from West Virginia by some miracle of Divine grace could enlarge his vision to take in that fact, the speech which he delivered here the other day, and which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] was so desirous of seeing in print, would never appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at all. [Laughter.] I wish to say another thing. I have remarked that common sense is the only reliable guide in men's affairs; and the chief guardian and enlightener of common sense is experience. We have had in the United States a good deal of experience with this matter of the tariff; and if I thought you gentlemen would listen to me I would read from the New York Tribune of January 6, 1855, from the pen of grand old Horace Greeley, a few lines which condense the tariff history of the United States into a single paragraph. They are full of truth and wisdom.

A MEMBER. Let us have them:

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will read them:

Protection died in 1818, bequeathing to British free trade a trade that gave us an excess import of specie, a people among whom there existed great prosperity, a large public revenue, and a rapidly diminishing public debt.

British free trade died in 1824, bequeathing to protection a trade that gave an excess export of specie, an impoverished people, a declining public revenue, and a stationary public debt.

Protection died in 1834–'35, bequeathing to British free trade a trade that gave an excess import of specie, a people more prosperous than any that had ever been known, a revenue so that it had been rendered necessary to emancipate from duty tea, coffee, and many other articles which we did not produce, and a treasury free from all charge on account of public debt.

British free trade died in 1842 bequeathing to protection a trade that gave an excess export of specie, a people ruined, and their government in a state of repudiation, a public treasury bankrupt and begging everywhere for loans at the highest rate of interest, a revenue collected and disbursed in irredeemable paper money, and a very large foreign debt.

Protection died in 1847 bequeathing to British free trade a trade that gave an excess import of specie, a highly prosperous people, their government restored to credit, a rapidly growing commerce, a large public revenue, and a declining foreign debt.

British free trade has next to make its will, having nothing to bequeathe but a trade that drains us of our specie, a people rapidly passing toward ruin, a declining commerce, and a foreign debt requiring for the payment of its mere interest at least twenty millions of dollars a year.

Now, my friend the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, both in his speech and in the report which was submitted to this House, tells us that the period of the Walker tariff, 1847 to 1857, was the golden age of our industrial prosperity; and there are in existence some statistics, always open to suspicion, that would lead even a careful student to that opinion. I have made it my business during this debate to go down into the daily record of events preserved in the newspaper files in the Library of Congress in order to find out how the people lived in those days, what they did, and what they thought; and I stand here to say that, notwithstanding the discovery of gold in California, notwithstanding that magnificent stream of wealth poured into the channels of American trade, the Walker tariff, going into effect in 1847, had impoverished and bankrupted this people long before the middle of 1854; and I intend to prove that statement to the satisfaction of every unprejudiced man.

I had occasion in the last Congress in a speech made here to cite the daily record made by the New York Tribune; and somebody who was evidently unable to appreciate a man like Horace Greeley, said that he was a protectionist, and therefore, like the wage-earners in their protests against this bill, entirely unreliable and probably intimidated. [Laughter.] I go now into the columns of the free-trade press, and will read a few lines from the New York Herald editorial of January 1, 1855, a free-trade editor's farewell address to one of those years of "symmetrical" prosperity, about which the gentleman from West Virginia told us:

Seldom indeed within our recollection has there been a year so darkly overshadowed by general calamities, national misfortune and local disasters and suffering as the eventful and gloomy year which has just expired. The great financial and commercial panic of 1837 did not bring to us, with all its train of bankruptcies, explosion, and general ruin, so much of positive suffering to the working classes of our great cities, the combined causes which have brought about the existing lamentable financial and commercial depression.

I present here also the memorial of the unemployed working men of the city of New York to the mayor and common council at that time, a memorial which, taken in connection with the speech of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, is to me very interesting. We had the pleasure yesterday of hearing the eloquent observations made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON], who seemed to think that he had discovered a remedy for the evils of our times, or that if he had not, the apostle whose follower he is had discovered it; but I call his attention to the fact that the humble working people of New York in 1854, in the midst of the poverty which surrounded them in that city, made a logical, square, and persuasive presentation of the theory which proposes to relieve the people of their distress, by putting the burdens of the Government upon the landed property of the country.

I will print a portion of this memorial, which appears in full in the New York Herald of January 4, 1855:

To the mayor and common council of the city of New York:

The memorial of the undersigned respectfully shows that at a meeting of more than 2,000 unemployed laborers and mechanics of the city of New York commenced in the Park on Tuesday afternoon of the 26th day of December and adjourned from there to Hope Chapel, in Broadway, on the evening of Friday, the 29th of December, for the purpose of providing not merely temporary but permanent relief to the unemployed poor of the city who are now, in addition to their inability to obtain work, threatened with famine, your memorialists were appointed a committee in behalf of the meeting to draw up and cause to be presented to you for your immediate action this memorial.

In an editorial in the New York Herald of January 4, 1855, you will find these words:

The past four months have witnessed a series of disasters affecting most gravely corporation and individual credit, and tending to take away from moneyed institutions and merchants the means on which they have traded for the last year or two. Stocks of various kinds have ceased to exist altogether. Railroad shares have fallen to the verge of bankruptcy, and individual paper has ceased to be negotiable.

That seems to be a fac simile of the condition that has prevailed this year. Here is another editorial from the New York Herald of January 6, 1855, showing that the depression to which the newspaper referred was not confined to the city of New York:

Elsewhere will be found some mention of large failures at Boston and New Orleans. The epidemic is traveling over the whole country. No city of any note can expect to escape. All followed the example of New York when flush times began. All must now follow her as closely in adversity.

You will find in the Herald of January 6, 1855, an address of the unemployed workingmen's committee to the mayor of the city of New York. It was read by Mr. West. He said:

We do not come before the committee as beggars, but we ask what we deem right. We ask not alms, but work. We don't want a little soup now and some cast-off clothing to-morrow. But we do want work and the means of making an honest livelihood. The condition of the working classes is most piteous. They want bread. Is there not enough in the city? They want clothes. Is there none made nowadays?

In the same column appears an appeal of the Five Points Mission House for the multitudes, victims of starvation in that portion of the city. It exhibits a picture that even now would touch the heart with pity if it were not in the midst of surroundings substantially the same, and surroundings, in my judgment, depending in main part upon the same causes.

It is well known—

Says the appeal—to those who are acquainted with that locality, that hundreds of families have sold or pawned the last article of furniture or apparel to procure food, and are now left on the bare floor without bedding or fuel, and not knowing where they may get the next mouthful to eat. Persons in these circumstances (many of them sober, industrious people) are thronging the Mission House daily.

Mr. TERRY. What year do those quotations refer to?

Mr. DOLLIVER. The close of 1854 and January, 1855.

Mr. TERRY. How long did that depressed condition continue?

Mr. DOLLIVER. The next thing we hear of it is the message of James Buchanan of December 8, 1857, stating that it had become epidemic, universal, and chronic in the United States.

Mr. TERRY. I will ask the gentleman whether the condition of the country did not improve afterwards——

Mr. DOLLIVER. There is little evidence of it. So far as I can find the condition of the country during that period was such that few of us would have been able to live in it.

Mr. TERRY. In that statement the gentleman differs from a very distinguished member of his party (Mr. Blaine), who shows that after that there was a revival of business.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have gone to the sources of information; I do not care with whom I may differ, even if he be our most distinguished leader.

I will read also an editorial article from Hunt's Merchants' Magazine, a free-trade journal of trade, and the only one that is preserved from that period:

The commercial embarrassments noticed in our last have been continued, and in many sections of the country the pressure has increased, while confidence is shaken everywhere and all classes are made to realize the insecurity of worldly possessions. The causes which led to this have been a long time at work. The prosperity which prevailed almost universally up to the middle of last year had made our business men so confident in their own strength that all classes had expanded their engagements far beyond the protection of their own resources, and were exposed to the storm which began to gather on every side. Goods which had accumulated abroad when the demand had almost ceased were crowded upon our shores at whatever advance could be obtained, thus aggravating the evil.—Hunt's Merchants' Magazine, volume 31, page 716, December, 1854.

This article shows that the depression to which I have been referring visibly began in the middle of the year 1853, a thing which it will be important to students of this situation to bear in mind. It may be worth while, also, to call the attention of the committee to the fact that during all this depression the antics of the Democratic party were very similar to their behavior in the present Congress. I read from a Washington letter to the New York Herald of January 6, 1855. It is a ray of calcium light thrown on the background of the situation:

Next Tuesday is the day fixed upon by the Committee on Ways and Means to call up the bill for the reduction of the tariff.

And here is a letter from Washington to the North American, quoted in the New York Herald of 1855:

The conspiracy of the Democratic members to break down the tariff of 1846, and to deprive the country of the little protection which it affords was considerably advanced last evening by a secret meeting or caucus held at the Capitol sometime between dark and midnight.

It was supposed that the present Congress had furnished us with the first example in our history of a secret caucus without deliberation, publicity, or discussion, agreeing upon an industrial programme for the American people. We are glad to relieve the members of the Ways and Means Committee of to-day by citing the example of their predecessors. Then, as now, the secret Democratic caucus and the public soup house went together.

Our city reporters—

Says the New York Herald editorial of January 14, 1855—

note that Mr. A. T. Stewart supplies from nine to twelve hundred people daily with soup. Mr. Lindenmüller does the same in Chatham street, and charitable committees discharge a like duty in each of the populous wards of the city.

If this had been read without giving the date of the paper everybody would have said that it was from the New York Herald of to-day. Here is a workingman's procession described in the New York Herald of January 11, 1855. To-day is the thirty-ninth anniversary of that great demonstration of unemployed workmen. Its banners will serve to illustrate the situation that now prevails:

We want work and must have it.
Hunger is a sharp thorn.
This is our last resource.
Live and let live.

I call the attention of the Democratic managers to the fact that these starving multitudes were not asking for a reduction of the tariff, they were not even asking for cheap clothes and cheap food. They were asking for the privilege of being employed. The country can gain no advantage through cheap goods that can at all compare in its ministration of good to the community which comes from the universal employment of the people. There is no burden levied at the custom-house, whether it is 100 per cent or 500 per cent, that can compare at all with the incalculable burden of three millions of willing workers without anything for their hands to do. [Applause.]

A MEMBER. Did you say three millions of unemployed persons?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I saw that number stated in a great newspaper. I have no doubt there are more of them. This matter long since ceased to be a mere question of politics with me. The saddest sight I ever witnessed in this Capitol was that delegation from Philadelphia, intelligent, well-dressed, manly young workingmen, standing before the Ways and Means Committee pleading, as they said, not for their employers, but for their employment, for their wives and their children. These men stated that the working people of Philadelphia are without occupation, and in many cases without food. They said that they represented 200,000 people, one-fifth of the population of the greatest industrial city on this continent.

Now it is a libel upon our common manhood and a slander against human nature itself, to say that these men were intimidated except as their actions were influenced by the facts and circumstances that surround them. And so when the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means stood here and undertook to tell us the other day that the hundreds of thousands of workingmen of the United States who have protested by petition and in great public meetings against this bill have done so under duress from their employers and had been bullied and driven here by brutal threats, I could not keep out of my heart a sense of indignation at the disparagement of the workingmen of the United States implied by that reproach against their manhood. [Applause.]

The chairman went further, and in the same breath illustrated the attitude of our greatest and most thoughtful trades unions and the mass of our laboring people in looking with a protest of alarm upon this bill by the bogus petitions of John Quincy Adams's time, in which slaves were brought into this House by petition asking that their slavery might be made perpetual. Horace Greeley once said that the man who pretends to be in favor of high wages and a low tariff is either a knave or a fool.

Has it come to this that the doctrine of free trade, the favorite article in the creed of slavery, can not be resisted by the working people of the United States, enlightened as they are both by experience and by the wisdom of faithful and approved statesmen, without inviting from a leader of the Democratic party an odious and infamous comparison with slaves. [Applause on Republican side.]

A great deal has been said in the course of this tariff controversy from time to time about the working people of the United States and about the farmers. If there is anything that stirs up pathetic sentiment in the heart of the Democratic politician more than the distress of the workingman it is the distress of the farmer. As I said, I live in the greatest agricultural community in the world. It is true, as the gentleman from Illinois observed, that we have some mortgage indebtedness, because wherever you find wealth and prosperity accompanied by a business integrity that never repudiated a debt or dodged the fulfillment of a contract, you will find the credit which lies at the basis of investment and enterprise.

The States that are freest of individual debts in the United States are shown by the census to be the poorest and by the record to be given over to questionable business methods and in many cases to the open repudiation of their obligations. These States are comparatively free from mortgages, not on account of the thrift of their people, but by reason of the well-grounded caution of people who have money to loan. I know something personally of mortgages, having contributed at least one to the census of 1890. It represented the amount I paid for my homestead when I was without a dollar in the world and had to convert credit into a mortgage. I do not believe that it increased my poverty; on the contrary I have always suspected that it increased my wealth. And it does not take a very high order of intelligence to discern that that simple case represents the situation of nine-tenths of those who are in debt in the State of Iowa.

That is not a matter of speculation. It was made a matter of investigation and record in the county of Crawford, in my own Congressional district, where the census showed that 90 per cent of the indebtedness of the people represented the purchase price of land and only an insignificant fraction of the people's debts represented either their misfortune or their poverty. It is true that our people have suffered from time to time through the depression of business and the decline of market values; but we have been bombarded for a generation with humbug arguments for free trade; and the grand Commonwealth stands to-day first in the column of Republican States with the doctrine of protection made secure by the intelligence of the farmers of Iowa. [Applause on the Republican side.]

My friend [Mr. WILSON] in closing his address to the House took occasion to set up the standard of free trade; that is to say, the standard of plantation politics before the war in the United States; and as he called the Democratic party to rally around it in the name of the workingman and of the farmer, I made up my mind at the first opportunity to tell him that the farmers of the State of Iowa want none of the theories any less of the sympathy of the Democratic managers in this House. [Applause on the Republican side.] They talk about their affection for the farmer! Yet even the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] who has just taken his seat has just stated that if wisdom such as his could have left its impress on the proposed legislation he would have framed the bill in respect to the schedule of agricultural products exactly as the McKinley bill was framed.

What have these demonstrative friends of the farmers done? I recall very well the day when somebody introduced me to our friend from Massachusetts [Mr. STEVENS]. I took up the Congressional Directory and found that he was the largest individual woolen mill proprietor in the United States. When I saw him go over to the Democratic side and sit down my heart came into my mouth and I said, "Those fellows will murder that man." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I was young in this business then. I had at that time a tendency to believe everything I heard in speeches, and used to sit here listening as the precious truths fell from the lips of the orators. I heard these woolen manufacturers denounced as thieves, as burglars, as cutthroats, as pirates, and as pickpockets, fastening their smooth fingers upon the pockets of the American farmer, and I said, "If that woolen manufacturer goes over there, BRYAN and SPRINGER or some of those brethren will get around him, draw him into ambush, and murder him in cold blood." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

But the next thing I heard of it was that the Democratic managers had placed him on the Ways and Means Committee of the House to help lift the burdens from American agriculture; and how did they lift them? Exactly as this House is about to do. They take the seventh agricultural industry of the American people, wool-growing, and put it into helpless and hopeless competition with those latitudes of the world where the business can be conducted almost without cost, all in order that the "thieves and burglars" of New England may have cheaper material out of which to manufacture cloth. Now, we do not take the view that the managers of industrial enterprise in New England or elsewhere are thieves and burglars. We have sense enough to know that these great centers of production are managed by men of affairs with economy and integrity, and if the people of New England prosper the people of our country have never had any quarrel with them on that account, because we have things to sell and we wish our customers to have money with which to buy them.

So the Republican party has never encouraged a quarrel with New England on that account; but when I find this masquerade of reform sacrificing the seventh agricultural industry of the country in order to increase the advantages of the woolen manufacturers of New England, I say to myself that nothing can compare to the thrift of New England, except the stupidity and the hypocrisy of the Democratic party. [Applause on the Republican side.] What else have they done? They have taken every article that the farmers of the United States produce and either put it on the free list or so greatly reduced the duty as to invite an immediate increase of importation; and in order that I may not be suspected of partisan bias in that judgment, I want to read what the greatest Democratic newspaper in the United States has to say this morning of their treatment of the American farmer. I quote from the New York Sun of to-day:

Prof. WILSON'S service to the great silent masses, the farmers, is the putting of a lot of agricultural products on the free list for the benefit of their Canadian competitors, and the increasing of the farmers' taxes for the benefit of manufacturers. The great silent masses must bear additional burdens in order that the manufacturers, protected and favored by the remission of duties on raw materials and by the continuation of protective duties on the manufactured products, may wax fat while the silent masses are plodding their way with WILSON taxation weighing them down.

I wish also to say a word about the wages of the working people of the United States. This country will find out within the next five years that Mr. Blaine was right in stating that the tariff question is essentially a question of wages. The lesson will come through experience; and for one I am not sorry for it, because the Ruler of the Universe has only one way in which to teach men and nations, and that is to send them along the pathway of experience.

The trouble with this country to-day is that a whole generation has grown up in the United States since we have had any practical experience on the other side of the tariff question; and so dreams and visions and mysteries and speculations, drawn mostly from the text-books of foreign political economists, have taken the place of the knowledge which would have saved the American people from the folly of 1892. And even now we are regaled in this debate with long extracts from Adam Smith, brought into this House as novelties, as if the American people had never heard of Mr. Smith. Adam Smith printed his book the same year that our fathers declared their independence; and if the people of the United States had desired to govern themselves by the wisdom of the father of English political economy they have had more than a century to read his book and apply his philosophy to their affairs.

It is an interesting fact that while our Ways and Means Committee is enlightening this debate by bringing into it the precepts of English political economists, old and new, great English statesmen like Lord Salisbury, speaking to the English silk-weavers and observing the almost total destruction of that great English industry, looked upon the maxims of his own school and mournfully declared that their application might be sound philosophy, but it was poor business. Nor is it remarkable that the editor of the Cardiff Mail, recently returned from an extended tour with a party of friends through the United States, takes the trouble to print the little book, of which I have already quoted freely, in which the sturdy Welsh good sense candidly admits that the situation and experience of the United States have contradicted the economical speculations in which his judgment had always yielded a ready acquiescence. He says:

I am, as you know, a convinced free trader. Protection is to mean economical heresy, the fraud and folly of which are capable of mathematical demonstration—demonstration as absolutely convincing as that by which the solution of a problem in Euclid is arrived at. And yet throughout the length and breadth of this vast continent one is almost daily brought face to face with solid, indisputable facts that seem to give the lie to the soundest and most universally accepted axioms of political economy. Let me give you just one example: Under the shadow of a stringent protective tariff the manufacture of paper was commenced in the United States. Paper is still subject to a heavy import duty. According to our theories that ought to enhance its price to the consumer in this country.

As a matter of fact, the New York newspaper proprietors buy their "news" at a less price than that at which it could be supplied to them in London, and some of the paper mills in New Jersey are actually exporting paper to the old country. Unless it can be shown that this paper industry would have grown up without the aid of a protective tariff, it is futile—nay, it is an impertinence—for an outsider to say that the Americans have acted unwisely in taxing themselves for a few years in order to establish in their midst a great industry, giving occupation to a great quantity of highly paid labor. And it seems to me that this set of facts and the arguments based on it apply to many other industries which are assuming such colossal proportions throughout the length and breadth of the land.—Yanks Land and the Yankees, page 53.

Now, I like the English. They have never in any emergency failed to take care of themselves. I hope we have not lost our inheritance in that serviceable turn of mind. I can easily see how the problem of cheap production has driven English statesmanship to ignore every other element that enters into the life of man, resisting even that reduction in the hours of labor which is the hope of the working people of the world. So that I never tried to convince an Englishman that his countrymen have not had sagacity enough to look after their own interests. All I object to is that the leaders of English opinion should feel called upon, having taken care of their own people, to propose a plan for taking care of us.

I have an old friend at home, a farmer, who comes in occasionally to see me, a great talker, especially on the tariff. He likes to argue with the Democrats. Every time they make an argument in favor of the free-trade theory the old man always begins his reply with these words, "I recollect." If the Republican party in 1892 had had to do with men and women able to recollect what had happened in the experience of the United States we would have avoided the folly of that election.

Now, what of the labor condition in the United States? I believe that if our civilization is ever destroyed it will be by the degradation of American wages. This Government has no facility, for any length of time, to take care of universal popular discontent. In other countries it may be done with armies. In this country it may be done for months with soup-houses and with the bread of charity; but in the long run the idleness will destroy the fabric of our institutions and produce the irresponsible and uncontrollable forces that may shake the structure of modern society to its foundation.

I heard my friend from Illinois [Gen. BLACK] the other day, and who of us could express the amazement with which we heard him, deliberately advising the degradation of American labor in order to discourage immigration? Why, gentlemen, it is a great thing for a nation to be able to take care of itself. It is more than any nation in Europe has been able to do; but the glory of the Republican party is that for thirty years we have not only taken care of our own, but we have opened the doors of hospitality to the struggling people of the world, and they have come, ten millions of them, and instead of bearing down the level of our civilization they have helped us to lift it up, until to-day the American workingman has within his reach a larger share of the comforts of life than could have been secured by a day's work in any nation of the world or in any age in the history of the human race. [Applause.] That statement does not depend upon my testimony alone, for we recall that in the midst of the eloquent remarks of my friend from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], last summer in the silver debate, he made that notable admission in the cause of truth and political integrity, that a day's work in the United States goes further to provide a family with the necessaries of life than ever before since society was organized. [Applause.]

Where did the idea come from that the American workingman ought to take his place on the level of the civilization of the Old World? My countrymen, it came from the plantations of the slave power, where labor received no wages, and where the leaders of politics openly maintained that proposition in express words. Gen. McDuffie, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in 1832, without quibble or equivocation, admitted on this floor that the wages of American labor under free trade would fall to the level of the wages paid in other countries, and boldly declared that it ought to be so. That idea lies historically at the bottom of the free-trade agitation in the United States, and I denounce it here in the name of every American family that buys the comforts of life with the wages of daily labor. [Applause].

The Republican party, whatever may be the discipline of its defeat, will never consent to take away from the firesides of American labor the shield of American law. My friend from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] speaks of the lordly and almost kingly tone in which the employers of labor describe the unfortunate strikes which prevailed in some of the departments of industry in 1892. He emphasizes what the organ of the iron and steel industry describes as "the rebellion of labor." I do not undertake to apologize for the phrase; but I stand here to say that if there was a rebellion of labor it was a rebellion against organized capital and not an active hostility against the protective tariff, and if any proof was necessary I need only call the attention of this House to the fact that the "rebellious" Association of Iron and Steel Workers came before the Ways and Means Committee at this session pleading for the maintenance of the tariff of 1890 while Andrew Carnegie, departing for the Valley of the Nile for a winter's vacation, made a farewell address to his fellow-citizens by advising them to support the Wilson tariff bill.

There is one case in which the protests of labor were not the result of intimidation for it would almost seem that the arguments which have brought American labor to this Capitol with its protests have secured for the Wilson bill from the most repulsive syndicate of capital the benediction of approval. I am content if the indorsement of Andrew Carnegie costs the Democratic party as many votes in times to come as it has caused us in times past. We gladly exchange the support of the syndicate of iron and steel employers for the good will of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers.

A great many people talk as if in the general decline of values the American farmer had been left behind. I intend to put into the body of my remarks a few observations made by my friend, once a member of this House, Senator MILLS, of Texas, a man whose tariff bill in the light of the present seems like the work of a statesman. [Laughter on the Republican side.] It is a profound study of the relation of American agriculture to the decline of values in recent times, a study which enabled the Senator to prove upon the floor of the Senate that while the products of the American farmer have declined in value in thirty years their fall has come far short in the fall of the value of every article that is essential to the comfort of farm life of the United States.

Prices of certain products from 1873 to 1891.

Years.	Silver, per fine ounce.	Gold value of silver dollar.	Articles that farmers sell.
			Cotton, per pound.	Corn, per bushel.	Wheat, per bushel.	Bacon and hams, per pound.	Lard, per pound.	Pork, per pound.	Beef, per pound.	Butter, per pound.	Cheese, per pound.	Tobacco, per pound.
			Cents.	Cents.		Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
1873	$1.32	$1.004	18.8	61	$1.31	8.8	9.2	7.8	7.7	21.1	13.1	10.7
1874	1.30	.988	15.4	71	1.43	9.6	9.4	8.2	8.2	25.0	13.1	9.6
1875	1.23	.964	15.0	54	1.12	11.4	13.8	10.1	8.7	23.7	13.5	11.3
1876	1.17	.894	12.9	67	1.24	12.1	13.3	10.6	8.7	23.9	12.6	10.4
1877	1.18	.929	11.8	58	1.17	10.8	10.9	9.0	7.5	20.6	11.8	10.2
1878	1.16	.891	11.1	56	1.34	8.7	8.8	6.8	7.7	18.0	11.4	8.7
1879	1.12	.868	9.9	47	1.07	6.9	7.0	5.7	6.3	14.2	8.4	7.8
1880	1.13	.886	11.5	54	1.25	6.7	7.4	6.1	6.4	17.1	9.5	7.7
1881	1.12	.881	11.4	55	1.11	8.2	9.3	7.7	6.5	19.8	11.1	8.3
1882	1.13	.878	11.4	66	1.19	9.9	11.6	9.0	8.5	19.3	11.0	8.5
1883	1.10	.858	10.8	68	1.13	11.2	11.9	9.9	8.9	18.6	11.2	8.3
1884	1.10	.861	10.5	61	1.07	10.2	9.5	7.9	7.6	18.2	10.3	9.1
1885	1.06	.823	10.6	54	.86	9.3	7.9	7.2	7.5	16.8	9.3	9.9
1886	.99	.769	9.9	49	.87	7.5	6.9	5.9	6.0	15.6	8.3	9.6
1887	.97	.758	9.5	47	.89	7.9	7.1	6.6	5.4	15.8	9.3	8.7
1888	.97	.727	9.8	55	.85	8.6	7.7	7.4	5.3	18.3	9.9	8.3
1889	.98	.724	9.9	47	.80	8.6	8.6	7.4	5.5	16.5	9.3	8.6
1890	1.06	.809	10.1	41	.82	7.7	7.1	6.0	5.4	14.4	9.0	8.7
1891	.98	.764	10.0	57	.93	7.6	6.9	5.9	5.6	14.5	9.0
Average decrease	20	20	53	0	30	14	25	34	27	22	31	19

Prices of certain products from 1873 to 1891—Continued.

Years.	Articles that farmers buy.																			Freight rate, per ton per mile.
	Refined sugar, per pound.	Cut nails, per pound.	Bar iron, per ton.	Steel rails, per ton.	Rio coffee, per pound.	Tea, per pound.	Sheeting, per yard.	Drilling, per yard.	Shirting, per yard.	Standard prints, per yard.	Print cloth, per yard.	Quinine, per ounce.	Goblets, per dozen.	10 by 14 window glass.	Undershirts.	Ginghams, per yard.	Carpets, 3-ply ingrain, per yard.	Black pepper, per pound.	Molasses, per gallon.
	Cts.	Cts.			Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.		Cts.			Cts.		Cts.	Cts.	Cts.
1873	11.6	4.90	$86.00	$120.50	18	95	13.31	14.13	19.41	11.37	6.69	$2.65	85	$3.40	$1.41	13	$1.14	19	39	2.00
1874	10.5	3.99	67.00	94.25	20	100	11.42	11.75	18.04	9.75	5.57	2.50	80	2.97	1.25	11	1.02	20	71	.....
1875	10.8	3.42	60.00	68.75	18	60	10.41	11.12	15.12	8.71	5.33	2.25	70	3.18	1.12	10	.92	17	70	.....
1876	10.7	2.98	52.00	59.25	17	55	8.85	8.71	13.58	7.06	4.10	2.00	65	3.08	1.00	10	.82	14	55	.....
1877	11.6	2.57	45.00	45.50	20	55	8.46	8.46	12.46	6.77	4.38	3.00	50	2.97	.91	8	.81	14	54	.....
1878	10.2	2.31	44.00	42.25	17	45	7.80	7.65	11.00	6.09	3.44	3.50	45	2.42	.87	8	.75	12	40	.....
1879	8.5	2.69	51.00	48.25	14	40	7.97	7.57	11.62	6.25	3.93	3.60	40	2.42	.83	8	.67	12	36	.....
1880	9.0	3.68	60.00	67.50	15	40	8.51	8.51	12.74	7.41	4.51	3.00	40	2.42	.83	9	.85	14	53	1.36
1881	9.2	3.09	58.00	61.13	13	35	8.51	8.06	12.74	7.00	3.75	2.60	35	2.12	.83	8	.75	14	43	1.25
1882	9.7	3.47	61.00	48.50	10	35	8.45	8.25	12.95	6.50	3.76	2.45	35	2.12	.79	9	.78	17	50	1.28
1883	9.2	3.06	50.00	37.75	8	33	8.32	7.11	12.93	6.00	3.60	1.80	35	2.22	.79	8	.74	16	52	1.23
1884	7.1	2.39	44.00	30.75	11	33	7.28	6.86	10.40	6.00	3.36	1.43	33	2.16	.75	7	.66	15	50	1.13
1885	6.4	2.33	40.00	28.50	9	33	6.75	6.36	10.37	6.00	3.12	.83	30	1.91	.70	6	.58	14	45	1.04
1886	6.7	2.27	43.00	34.50	9	33	6.78	6.25	10.66	6.00	3.31	.70	28	2.04	.70	6	.58	14	44	1.04
1887	6.0	2.30	49.00	37.08	15	28	7.15	6.58	10.58	6.00	3.33	.53	28	1.70	.66	7	.60	15	40	1.03
1888	6.3	2.03	44.00	29.83	15	23	7.25	6.75	10.94	6.50	3.81	.49	27	1.75	.66	6	.53	15	38	0.97
1889	7.6	2.00	43.00	29.25	16	23	7.00	6.75	10.50	6.50	3.81	.38	26	1.70	.66	6	.52	13	39	0.97
1890	7.0	2.00	45.00	31.75	19	25	7.00	6.75	10.20	6.00	3.34	.35	26	1.70	.64	6	.48	10	40	0.93
1891	5.7	1.86	42.00	29.92	18	25	6.83	6.41	10.64	6.00	2.95	.30	25	1.70	.62	6	.50	9	32	0.92
Average decrease	50	62	51	75	11	73	48	55	45	47	56	89	70	50	56	54	56	52	53	54

Average reduction in ten farm products, 26.1.

Average reduction in nineteen other products, 55.4.

This table shows that from 1873 to 1891 silver fell 26 per cent, cotton 53, corn 6, wheat 30, bacon and hams 14, lard 25, pork 24, beef 27, butter 32, cheese 31, and tobacco 19. These are the articles which farmers sell. The average decline of the ten articles is 26.1 per cent between 1873 and 1891. During the same time refined sugar declined 50 per cent, nails 62, bar iron 51, steel rails 75, Rio coffee 11, tea 73, sheeting 48, drilling 55, shirting 45, standard prints 47, print cloth 56, quinine 89, glass goblets 70, 10 by 14 window glass 50, undershirts 56, ginghams 54, carpets 56, pepper 52, molasses 53.

These are the articles the farmer buys. Now, if what he buys declines at an equal ratio with what he sells he is just as well off at one time as another. But if what he buys falls more in price than what he sells he is benefited. When we average the articles he buys we find that the decline is 55.4 per cent.

What is our situation to-day? I do not intend to say even a word about the industrial depression that surrounds us. God knows that it is bad enough, and God knows that it is plain enough, without the necessity of a description and without the need of an argument. Mr. Blaine very truly says, in his discussion of the tariff in Twenty Years in Congress, that in all the industrial depressions of the past the American people have never failed to turn from low duties to the standard of protection. He says that never once was a financial or industrial panic in the United States relieved by turning from protection toward free trade. In the disturbance of 1857, while possibly the panic was mixed with financial complications, the remedy proposed by the Democratic President was an adjustment of our affairs along the lines of a protective tariff.

I used to think that Mr. Buchanan was a weak and practically useless public man, and that he failed in yielding to the events which surrounded him at the outbreak of the rebellion. I have lived long enough to revise that impression. He was a man of culture, of large faculties, and of approved statesmanship, and if he fell short in the crisis of the civil war it was because he was dealing with a situation in which the Supreme Governor of the Universe had put his hand upon American society to revolutionize and reform it; and I believe the human race never produced a man strong enough to stand erect in that storm and come between Providence and the Divine purpose to create a nation strong enough to resist disintegration, and grand enough to cast off the barbarism of slavery. [Applause.]

And so I have quite revised my idea of James Buchanan. The remedy which he proposed was not a new one. It had already been suggested in his annual message of January 2, 1855, by Myron H. Clarke, governor of the State of New York, before the Republican party was born, in these words:

> Many branches of domestic industry are languishing for lack of that protection which proper tariff regulations would have afforded, which, had they been seasonably adopted, would have averted much of the distress consequent upon the paralysis of business which now pervades the country.

The remedy was to return to the protective tariff, and when my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, described the tariff then enacted as a war tariff, I answer him that it was a tariff enacted for economical and commercial purposes before the war began and signed by the last Democratic President save one.

Mr. Chairman, what is the remedy for the evils that now surround us? Our people are without work. Is it possible that the human mind is capable of the folly of seeking to correct that situation by sending the people's work to be done in other countries? The remedy for the evils that surround us is the employment of our people. That makes for the general prosperity. In the year that followed the enactment of the tariff law of 1890, no willing hand from one end of the country to the other was without occupation.

Every woolen mill and factory was in motion. More than a hundred new industries had been established and the American people, as President Harrison showed in his last message, had touched the highest level of prosperity. That seems now as if it were a generation away. Yet it was a condition to which we may go back if we do not blindly despise the wisdom of our fathers. The opportunity to work measures the ability to buy. The ability to buy creates the American market place. Destroy that or discourage it and the American farm goes back to the open prairie from which it came. Out West we long ago went through the experience of having nobody in the United States to buy what we had to sell.

In 1892 we thought we were beyond that experience. We had found the bread-producing power of the world at last overtaken by the bread-consuming power of the world and we believed that the permanent prosperity of American agriculture had at last come. To-day we are confronted with the spectacle of two or three millions of our customers deprived of their ability to buy, whereby the American market place is degraded and the welfare of the American farm threatened. I beg of you, gentlemen, by the counsel of every great statesman this country has produced, from Washington to Lincoln, to save the American people from re-enacting the folly which has already four times in our history destroyed our industrial and commercial prosperity. [Prolonged applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that possibly the discussion of the theory upon which this whole question rests may be supposed to have been exhausted, and yet perhaps a small portion of my time applied to that branch of the subject may not be wholly wasted.

In the first place the justice of a system which professedly, as protection does, aims to benefit one class of the community at the expense of another is certainly open to question on its very face. For instance, it would be manifestly unjust if this Congress were to pass laws reducing the selling value of manufactured articles in order that the consumer might be benefited.

I say it would be unjust to me as a manufacturer if this Congress by legislation should arbitrarily put down the price of the goods that I put upon the market; yet that would be a proposition (comparatively) easy to defend. Why? Because I am but a single individual and have hundreds, or possibly thousands, of customers, and it might be contended with some plausibility that the good done to the greater number was a justification for the injury done to me. I am sure, however, that as an ethical proposition, it would be difficult to maintain.

But when you turn to the opposite side of this proposition and contend that it is the duty of this body to make laws to put up the price of my goods, then the wrong is manifest to all creation, because then the injury which in the other case fell upon one in order that good might come to many, now falls upon many in order that good may come to one. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Then examine briefly the economic principle which is involved, i. e., the idea that protective tariffs increase national wealth. Let us, if you please, go the whole length with gentlemen on the other side, and admit, as was contended by my eloquent and learned friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] yesterday, that it is within the constitutional power of Congress to impose taxes upon one class of the people in order that the proceeds of such taxes may be poured into the pockets of another class; let us, I say, admit for an instant that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is right, and that the principle he endeavored to establish is correct. I do not admit it in fact, but for the purpose of this argument I do admit for the moment what most men here believe to be untrue, that Congress has a constitutional right to put burdens upon a portion of the people in order to enrich another; and then, I ask, can you justify the act?

Let us see whether your plan would produce a large increase of national wealth, whether it would increase the fund out of which wages are paid; and if it would not, then it would be unwise, even if you had the Constitution upon your side, as you have not. On what grounds can a man appear before an intelligent committee of this body and ask protection on his line of manufacture? What are his claims for protection? His first claim is that he can not pay as large wages as his neighbor; his next plea must be that capital is too high in this country for him to employ it in his line of industry. These two claims are the sole grounds upon which he can ask for protection.

Now, what does it mean? We are a practical kind of people, and we ought to be able to get to the bottom of a question no more intricate than this. What does this mean, I say? It simply means that capital and labor employed in the ordinary industries of the United States are more profitably employed than they would be in the industry in which he proposes to use them. Now follow me if you please. When does a man grow rich fastest? When he employs all his capital and talents in the form of business or the calling which is profitable. All will admit this. It is not when he employs a portion of his time and a part of his capital in a profitable industry, and the balance in a business which loses him money every day. No sensible man continues long to carry on business in that way. Sooner or later he discovers that he can make no money in the unprofitable enterprise. What does he do? He takes the capital and labor which he employed in the unprofitable line of business and carries them over into the one that is profitable.

This ought to be the policy of a great country, for what is a nation but an aggregation of individuals? But, on the contrary, what do we find? We find gentlemen claiming that it is unprofitable to put capital into certain manufactures. They come before the Ways and Means Committee (and I have wondered why that committee did not always put these men who appear before them under oath. The habit of allowing Tom, Dick, and Harry to come before a great committee and tell that committee any fairy tale they choose should be terminated)——

Mr. REED. I think that has been reduced to a minimum before the present committee.

Mr. HARTER. The House is always glad to hear from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]; and I confess I am never sorry.

Mr. REED. Thank you.

Mr. HARTER. If the gentleman desires to ask me a question——

Mr. REED. I merely remarked that the thing you are complaining of—the committee listening to Thomas, Richard, and Henry—has been reduced to a minimum by the present Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HARTER. I give the committee credit for the possession of good sense; but if I were chairman of that committee, or had any influence in the committee, any manufacturer, or anybody else coming before it and proposing to give testimony upon which he hoped to obtain legislation in this House, taking away from the earnings of his fellow-citizens for his private gain, if he refused to give his testimony under oath so that he might be indictable for perjury if he lied, I would ask the doorkeeper of the committee, if I were not able to do it myself, to kick him away from the door of the committee room. The failure to require such statements to be made under oath in all cases is, in my view, one of the prime causes of the mistakes which have been made in our tariff system from 1792 down to the present hour.

But allow me to follow up the argument I was making. A man comes saying, "Because the employment of capital in my business is unprofitable, because I can not afford to pay for labor what my neighbors can, therefore the balance of the country should be taxed in order that I may withdraw labor and capital from where they are properly and profitably employed and put them into a sink-hole which you are to fill up afterward with taxes wrung from the people." Why, gentlemen, any man who would pursue such a system as that in his private business would become a bankrupt. The mystery to me is that the able, intelligent, accomplished, oratorical men upon my right, when they discover a great industry built up in this way by taxing profitable enterprise, say that all the people of the country ought to fall down and worship this ruinous policy, bless the industry itself, and thank God that they have had a body of legislators so wise as to build it up.

Any man looking at this matter as he looks at the things of everyday life, as the merchant and the manufacturer regard their business affairs, as our wives in the kitchen or in the parlor look at questions of domestic ecomomy, must say at once that this is the worst kind of economic waste; for so long as it is conceded that protection is necessary for any industry, just so long it is admitted that that industry is unprofitable; and the higher you build it, the more men you employ in carrying it on, the more injury it is to the country.

You can not create capital; you can not manufacture labor by act of Congress. Hence the capital and the labor which go into these protected, unprofitable industries must come from where? From the profitable industries of the country which require no protection. Is it not easy, then, to see that by such a policy not only do you not help the industries of the country, not only do you not build up the wealth of the country, but you injure the nation in two ways; you strike it two blows. By your laws you build up unprofitable enterprises, and at the same time in doing so you tear down the profitable industries of the country by compelling the withdrawal of a portion of the labor and capital employed in them. Therefore, I say, from any point of view it is a mistake, an economic blunder.

But the next proposition, Mr. Chairman, ordinarily brought in by these gentlemen is that labor has been benefited by this system. The positive, natural, logical answer to this, an answer so plain that in my judgment a blind man could read it, is that after you have adopted a system and carried it on thus constantly, which retards the growth and increase of the capital of the country, you simply reduce the fund out of which the wages of labor are paid, and as a consequence wages are reduced.

It is not necessary, Mr. Chairman, to go further than this plain and indeed self-evident proposition to answer the unfounded claim that high taxes make high wages. You injure the workman in two different ways, however. Under your plan, which increases the cost of the goods, or rather the selling value of the goods made by the protected manufacturer, you diminish the purchasing power of the wages of the laborer, while by reducing the fund out of which the wages of the laborer are to be paid you have already reduced the compensation he receives for his labor. A protective tariff is simply a plan for taking money out of the workingman's pocket; and to suggest that it would have the effect of enriching him is about as sensible as to propose to make him a millionaire by taking gold out of his pockets and filling them up again with lead, ashes, gravel, or sand. [Laughter.]

But speaking of the labor proposition. There are many things about it which are worthy of consideration. Before we had tariff taxes at all in this country, the difference in wages between the United States and Europe was much greater than it is now. It seems to me that there has been too much silence even on our side on this branch of the subject, and it is a suggestive omission, it strikes me, in the speech of my good friend from Iowa who has just taken his seat, that he did not mention the fact that under our low tariffs wages were higher as compared with the wages of European mechanics and laborers than they are now or ever have been under high-tariff taxation when gold is used to measure them. It is the fact, and you need not go any further than the argument I have made to show the cause of it. How could in any way a protective tariff benefit the workingman? Is there any method by which you can pour prosperity into his pocket, except by freeing him from the clutches of the high-tariff taxers? When you increase the cost of the clothing of himself and his family and of those things that he consumes you must necessarily injure him.

Now, these gentlemen who argue on the high-tax side of this question ought to be able to give us an object lesson on this point. They ought to show us, as water runs over a mill wheel, how protection runs into the home and blesses the habitation of the workman. But they can not, unfortunately for these eloquent people. The less "protection" he has the higher are his wages. This is not only true of the United States, but it is equally so of every other country in the world.

Why, Mr. Chairman, when long before the time of the Revolution our manufactures were being established, not only under freedom of trade, but under restrictive legislation by Great Britain directed against our prosperity, what were the wages of the working people as compared to the present time? Again, early in this century Mr. William Cobbett, who spent a very large part of his time in this country in Philadelphia, and who then returned to Great Britain and afterwards to Parliament, speaking of wages in the United States, as compared with those of the English market, particularly of wages in Pennsylvania, as compared with the English wages, said that they were three times as great, and that was, as you all know, when you had a low tariff.

Mr. BOWERS of California. What time was that?

Mr. HARTER. Early in the century. You will, however, find the exact date in any life of Mr. Cobbett.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Can the gentleman give us a statement as to its condition in 1879 and 1880, and back of that?

Mr. HARTER. I should be infinitely pleased to go into the discussion of that question with my friend from California or anybody else if I had the time. If the opportunity occurs before I conclude my remarks I shall be very glad to do so. I only speak of one thing, and that is the hallucination which has led our high-taxing Republican friends on this floor to imagine that wages depend on the amount of the tariff, that is, that the higher the tariff is the higher are the wages.

If it was not for a want of respect to the Chair, I would turn my back and ask him to select any country in Europe, and I would tell him, without knowing the name of the country, whether the wages are high there or not. I am not a mind reader, either; but the Chairman of this body can take any country in Europe, keeping it in his mind, and if he will ask me whether the wages in that country are high or not (or he may take half a dozen countries and do the same thing), I will simply ask one question, "Is the tariff high in that country?" If he answer that the tariff is high, I will reply, "Mr. Chairman, the wages are low," and without any exception you will find I am right.

If a nation has a high tariff, even if it produces two or possibly three crops to the acre annually, as do some portions of Italy, even then, with a high tariff, all the advantages of God and nature will fritter away under high taxes, the steady belief in which makes the American Republic, economically speaking, the laughingstock of every intelligent country in the world. I repeat so-called protection wastes the advantages of any nation.

Let me illustrate. These gentlemen here have been talking about high tariffs and low tariffs, and the blessings of high taxation for the workingman. Let us take two conspicuous examples. Our good friends, the amiable and able gentlemen on the other side of the House, are talking to us about England and America; and they say, "Why, gentlemen, the wages in England are much lower than they are in America." After awhile, if I have the time, I will show you the fact as discovered by the Harrison Administration, that labor cost (not wages) is lower in the United States than in England. But they say that the wages are much higher in this country than they are in Great Britain. Well, to start with, we have about twenty times as much land and about a hundred times as many advantages for each inhabitant, as they have over there. Now, it is pleading the baby act for the American people in a manner that the Democratic party never will have occasion to do, when you say that the nominal rate of wages is higher in this country than it is in Great Britain. It ought to be.

Why, bless your soul, if I lived upon a farm of 200 acres of fertile land, which would produce more to the acre than my neighbor's land, with mines under it, when my neighbor had not any mines under his land; if under my 200 acres I had a gold mine in one corner, a silver mine in another, iron ore in another corner, and coal in another, with stone in the center, and timber all around, if the land was so fertile that when I tickled it with a hoe it would laugh with a harvest, and if my poor neighbor instead of having 200 acres of land had but 20 acres of land, if I could not prosper under such circumstances in a greater degree than he whom Providence had placed so unfortunately, indeed, gentlemen, I would ask to have the probate judge appoint a receiver for my estate and a guardian for my person. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOWERS of California. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. HARTER. I am one of the most obliging men in the world, but let me say that I am unexpectedly on my feet, and with no set speech prepared, and my remarks of necessity must be rather disconnected and if you put questions to me they will be still more so. At the close of what I have to say I will be glad to try to answer any question that any gentleman desires to ask me.

Mr. BOWERS of California. It would not have taken you half so long to have answered my question.

Mr. HARTER. So far so good. With what nation should we compare Great Britain. You are intelligent men, and some might call you ingenious in your arguments, but I prefer to say that you are ingenuous. You are simple minded on this question. You do not conceal your views at all. You want to be as open as the day, do you not? Therefore, I suggest, gentlemen, that you need not travel 3,000 miles across the Atlantic for an illustration and a comparison between low-tax countries and high-tariff countries. You need not launch your frail bark on the Atlantic and travel over the stormy and tempest-tossed ocean for 3,000 miles for an unfair comparison, because you can have a fair one within 25 miles.

Come with me and you shall have a free pass and, if you are seasick, a physician. We will go across from England to France, about 22 miles. Here you may find in all its beauty a comparison that is fair and just. You have two countries within twenty-odd miles of each other. Both of them are old civilizations, not new ones. In both countries you have to a great extent a homogeneous population, instead of the magnificent and varied population we have in this country, made up of the best, not the worst, as many men would say, of the whole earth. There you have homogeneous populations. Both England and France are densely populous They both have large standing armies, both have large expenses, and, ordinarily speaking, the rates of wages should be the same in these two countries. Here, then, you may find a perfectly fair comparison to start with.

Now, bring the tariff question in. What effect does the tariff have? England has what we call freedom of trade, and France has the blessing of a high protective tariff. Now, gentlemen, if there is any virtue in your medicine; if there is any truth in your argument, starting out with an equality, with a parity of population and advantages, if there is anything in your argument France should pay the highest wages. Should it not? If there is any flaw in my proposition I will yield to any man in the House to state where the flaw exists.

Mr. BLAIR. I will make the suggestion to the gentleman, then.

Mr. HARTER. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BLAIR. If it would interrupt the gentleman I will take occasion at a subsequent period to offer my criticism.

Mr. HARTER. I yield now.

Mr. BLAIR. I would say this to the gentleman, that I do not understand it to be the contention of the Republican theory or the Republican party that necessarily the highest wages in all cases must give the greatest return to the individual. That depends upon the civilization or the grade of civilization of which he happens to be part. But this is the point, that when you allow the producer of France and the producer of Great Britain, or the producer of any country where the cost of the article is much less than the same article in the United States and give freedom of access to our markets, then, of course, you deprive us of our work, and the more dangerously so just in proportion to the lesser cost of the article produced.

Mr. HARTER. I will answer the gentleman. Our object in demanding lower taxes is not to deprive a workman of labor, but to reduce his occasion for it. I would be very glad indeed if the gentleman could arrange to keep my income in 1894 up by giving me only one-half the labor to do. It may be easily done, but not by doubling the cost of what I consume, by cutting off my salary and telling me I am "protected."

The facts are that the difference between English wages and the wages of France is greater than the difference between the wages of America and the wages of Great Britain; and yet Great Britain, within about 22 miles of her high taxed (protected?) competitor and paying very much higher wages, does not ask for a protective tariff. Yet, gentlemen speaking for American manhood, ask for protection from competition 3,000 miles distant, begging for a dishonest system which taxes all their neighbors for the benefit of industries which ought to grow as the acorns grow into oak trees, out in the open, and not because they are kept in hothouses or coddled like orchids, but because the winds of heaven, the blasts of winter, and the storms of the summer sweep through them and strengthen them.

Mr. BLAIR. But is not English agriculture dying, and do not the agriculturists of England cry for protection against the competition of American agricultural products?

Mr. HARTER. I would be very glad to yield to questions, but I have not the time. A fair question and an honest answer often throw a flood of light upon a subject.

Mr. BLAIR. The gentleman seems to be asking questions, and yet declining to have them answered.

Mr. HARTER. I said before that I would be glad to answer all questions at the conclusion of my remarks. The gentleman from New Hampshire suggests the idea that there is another condition. Here it is. When the free-trade mechanic in Great Britain, after earning higher wages than his French neighbor, goes to the market and the storehouse he finds he can supply his wants and needs better and cheaper than in any nation in the world. How is it with the protected and therefore underpaid mechanic in France? When he goes to spend his wages he finds he must pay far more for what he buys than his untaxed English cousin. You see so far as the workingman is concerned, the application of the principle of so-called protection simply cuts down his wages and increases his living expenses at the same time.

You may as well say you help a man support his family by first cutting off his right arm, then give him another boost toward fortune by cutting off his left arm, leaving him armless, but protected. [Laughter.] Where men disagree it is well to arbitrate. I am one of those people who like arbitration in all its forms. While sometimes compelled to go to the lawyer, still I prefer the arbitrator. There is one infallible arbitrator for all questions like this, and one that can always be appealed to, and that arbitrator is history.

My eloquent and intellectual friend from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] said that he was fond of facts. I think he intimated that a quart of facts were better than a bushel of theory. Now, I am going to pour in the quart of facts and wash away, drown out, and smother a bushel of my friend's theory, for perhaps gentlemen will have noticed that on this subject I am a practical sort of a fellow and not much of a theorizer. [Laughter.] Let us have a little history. Would you like to go back as far as the experience of the children of Israel? [Laughter.] If the House will give me time enough it will be easy to take them almost back to Adam.

Mr. LOUD. You might get lost on the way. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTER. Well, the men who support this bill, and by its early passage hasten the time when the working people of this country can get employment, even if they do lose their way on earth, will never miss the path to Heaven [laughter]; for it has been most truly said: "Inasmuch as ye do it to the least of these little ones, ye do it unto me." But, Mr. Chairman, as my time is so limited, and as many of the gentlemen on the Republican side are unfamiliar with sacred history, it will be better to confine myself to history which they know something about. Take Great Britain. Great Britain which is held up to gentlemen on the other side like a jumping jack, and painted in every color that the average Republican statesman or orator fancies. They tell us that formerly Great Britain had protection.

Yes, Great Britain had protection down to about 1842, but what was the condition of England's trade under it? How did her commerce flourish? Did her manufactures prosper? What were the wages in Great Britain under protection? These, and questions like these, will throw much needed light upon this subject, which so utterly befogs the average Republican intellect. I beg, therefore, to say to the House that at the time tariff-reform measures were first introduced in Great Britain the chronic condition of her working people was one of hunger. One of hunger, I repeat. Her manufactures were languishing. At the end of a period of many hundreds of years of protection her trade was dormant, her shipping was small in extent, wages on land and sea were low, and occupation was about as uncertain as it has been in the United States of America, especially in Pennsylvania, during the past few years, a period in which we have suffered most from a so-called protective tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It was proposed to throw down the barriers, and even such a man as Mr. Gladstone, who was then a member of the Government, opposed the proposition. Some of the ablest, most conservative, and most conscientious men in Great Britain—men who, I am proud to say have their equals on the Republican side of this House, for no man is more willing than I am to accord intelligence, to account fairness, to acknowledge honesty of purpose to most of those who are opposed to us on this question—some of the ablest, and most conservative and most conscientious men in Great Britain, I say, opposed it, among them Mr. Gladstone. They said: "As surely as you reduce the tariff, so surely will ruinous competition come upon us from France and from Germany."

But what was the result? All the dismal predictions that were made, predictions like those which have been made here so eloquently by my able friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], made still more dexterously by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], made more specifically in the speech of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], and finally reëchoed and added to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], came to naught. You say that if we reduce the taxes of this country we will thereby bring paralysis upon our manufactures, destroy our commerce, reduce the wages of our working people, and supply no compensating advantage for this great blight which the Democratic party would put upon the country. Gentlemen, there is nothing new in this world, as you have probably discovered; and if you will go back to the records of Parliament from 1838 to 1842 I will show you that the speech which the senior Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee will make to-morrow or the day after on the floor of this House was made there long ago.

Mr. REED. Do not be too prophetic. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTER. Well, I venture to make the prediction with absolute certainty that it will be fulfilled. [Laughter.] I have read the speech. [Laughter.] It will be the same speech, only that the gentleman from Maine will make it better. He will add to and improve it, but that is all. All your speeches have been made in England. You are only thrashing over old straw. You are making the predictions here that were made just as earnestly, just as honestly, in 1838 and in 1842 in Great Britain, and facts in the United States as in Great Britain will prove you wholly and fortunately wrong in them all.

Mr. BOUTELLE rose.

Mr. HARTER. My friend can ask me a question at the close of my remarks and I shall be very glad to answer it. Not being a Rollin, a Gibbon, or even an Heroditus, I fear I may not get through with this bit of history within my time——

Mr. BOUTELLE. I was not going to ask the gentleman a question. I was merely going to suggest——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, as the House has so frequently refused to yield to the gentleman from Maine in the Hawaiian matter, I will show him the courtesy, on behalf of the House generally, of yielding to him on this occasion. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I was simply going to suggest that the gentleman seemed to be making a confession that he was himself engaged in thrashing over Mr. Frank Hurd's old straw.

Mr. HARTER. Well, if Mr. Hurd ever used these arguments the better for Mr. Hurd. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. But you never "hurd" of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTER. Wit will never die out in this House as long as the gentleman from Illinois remains in it.

The people of England did not listen to the croakers. The calamity howlers were disregarded and she passed the reform measure. What happened? I think even my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], who is always so particular about authorities, will admit that Mr. Robert Giffen, president of the British Statistical Society, is probably the best authority on this subject in the known world, and if he had made any misstatements about it they would certainly have been called in question before this.

I am about to show to you the wretched, the miserable, the heartrending results of tariff reform in Great Britain, so that you may be prepared for the calamity which is to come upon the United States after the Wilson bill becomes a law. [Laughter.]

Forty years after the reform came, nearly a half century after they had deprived themselves of the blessings of protection, leaving nothing that could interfere with the horrible havoc of free trade in that little insular kingdom which was to drive the inhabitants into the sea and consign their industries to Hades, what do we find happened to them? Of course mourning and lamentation must have been heard in the land.

The heavens must have been draped in crape, in order to fulfill the predictions of the protectionists of that day, as will be necessary here in order to carry out the programme which gentlemen have presented so eloquently and picturesquely from time to time. I am sorry to shatter this dream of gentlemen on the other side; but here is the exhibit. Here is a statement of the wages of carpenters, bricklayers, masons, miners, cotton and woolen workers. We would have supposed that they would not get any wages after that bill had passed; that every industry of Great Britain would have been stricken to the ground. But, on the contrary, wages increased 73 per cent.

Mr. SPRINGER. Good.

Mr. HARTER. The gentleman may well say "good;" but it is not equal to what we can do with our unrivaled advantages in the United States under low-tariff taxes.

English seamen's wages in competition with all parts of the earth increased from 25 to 70 per cent. But here is another object lesson: The net earnings of the people also increased—how much? Eighty-six dollars and fifty cents a year. Why, sir, many a poor fellow in my Congressional district does not make under this protective tariff $135 a year, with all the advantages of a free government and the great opportunities of American life and citizenship. Yet the average increase of wages among the workingmen of Great Britain, over and above what they got under a high tariff, was $86.50 a year.

Pauperism: This is another index, and I think a fair one, of the condition of a country. Did pauperism increase? Why, if you had heard Mr. Gladstone and his coadjutors in that Parliament you would have supposed that it would become necessary to build almshouses to take the place of all the factories and public buildings of the country. But what was the fact? Although the population increased enormously in Great Britain, yet after forty-odd years of "free trade" there were but two paupers where, under a protective tariff and with a very much smaller population, there had been three.

Savings deposits: The number of depositors increased ten times over, and the sum of the savings deposits increased fivefold.

Another thing. Under a protective tariff in our country, unless a workingman is tolerably fortunate, he never leaves any estate whatever behind him. In Pennsylvania, in the ore mines (a protected industry), and at some of her "protected" coal mines, when a protected Pennsylvanian is carried to his burial place he is taken to the potter's field at the expense of the public. But what was the effect in England upon estates—the final test of prosperity in any man's life? Did estates in Great Britain go down to zero under free trade? On the contrary, they rose on an average $1,700. Why, gentlemen, it will take seventeen hundred years of protective tariff taxation in this great country of ours before the average workingman will have even a $1,700 estate to leave behind him.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the showing as to the cost of living?

Mr. HARTER. Oh, necessarily, the showing is in the same line. That accounts for the increase in the net profits. Not only did wages go up, but living expenses went down.

Mr. SIMPSON. It practically doubled the pay of the workingman.

Mr. HARTER. Exactly, but here is another exhibit. There were 106,000 taxable incomes in Great Britain at the end of fourteen hundred years of a protective tariff. After forty years of free trade the number of taxable incomes had increased to 320,000. This tells a significant story.

I look forward to seeing in the future my friend from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] and these other eloquent gentlemen who have spoken for high taxes as being better for the people than low taxes—I expect to see them flocking to our side of the House in a few years—why? Because I find that the statesmen of Great Britain, men who were your peers, but not your superiors—the men who had opposed this measure were within two years after the statute reducing taxes had passed Parliament the advocates of still larger reductions. Mr. Gladstone, from having been an opponent of free trade and low taxes, grew up to the point where he was the champion who a few years ago unhorsed and threw into the dust the premier of your last Republican Administration on this question.

One thing further. The manufacturers of England were opposed to this measure; many of them said "under free trade we can not compete with the manufacturers of other countries;" but the very men who made that opposition and who sent to Parliament petition after petition, even larger, broader, thicker, heavier, and more numerously signed perhaps than the one that came in here from the overprotected manufacturers of Troy—even that class of people within two years confessed their mistake in the most practical manner by asking that the taxes which they had objected to having lowered should be taken off altogether.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Our manufacturers do not ask any such thing.

Mr. HARTER. They will within two years after the Wilson bill becomes law.

Having referred to the experience of England, let me follow history back to our own shores. And here I hope to show, especially from the experience of the State of Pennsylvania, one of the most impressive object-lessons that has ever been exhibited in this House.

Mr. PAYNE. Will you not please tell us——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. HARTER. I can not yield. I have only about ten minutes of my time remaining, and I am under the impression that I might ask in vain for an extension of it.

Mr. PAYNE. I wanted you to tell us why these working people from England came over here?

Mr. HARTER. Let me say to you, gentlemen, that in 1846 we proposed to revise the tariff by a reduction, and the same hue and cry which you make now was made then. What was the result? I said I would use Pennsylvania as an object-lesson in this connection. Listen, you sons of the great Keystone State. In 1846 you only had two Representatives at Washington who were intelligent enough to vote for a reduction of tariff taxation. One was David Wilmot, who then sat in this very Chamber, and the other was the Pennsylvanian who was Vice-President of the United States at that time, George M. Dallas.

Mr. Dallas gave the casting vote for the reduction of the tariff in the Senate. What happened? The skies of Pennsylvania were lurid with the fires with which you burned Mr. Wilmot and the Vice-President of the United States in effigy because they voted, forsooth, to reduce the tariff and thus lightened the burdens of the poor. But mark the result.

Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. HARTER. I can not yield the few moments I have. My obliging friend from New Hampshire intimates that I can not have an extension of time.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. Chairman, I will not be put in that attitude——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. HARTER. I can not yield for any more interruptions.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I give notice to the gentleman now that I will object to an extension.

Mr. HARTER. Two years after that reduction of the tariff what occurred? The results were so magnificently beneficial to the Keystone State that the low-tax people of Pennsylvania nominated Mr. Shunk for governor and actually carried Pennsylvania for the Democratic party and what is here called "free trade" by a majority of 15,000.

I am sorry the time is so short, for I would like to go a little further into similar historical facts.

Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will now allow me a moment.

Mr. HARTER. Very well.

Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania. You spoke of the prosperity of the country under the tariff of 1846.

Mr. HARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania. I want to say right here that right in my district, including that of my colleague, Mr. KRIBBS, from Western Pennsylvania, thirty-three furnaces were closed in two years, and every one of them went into bankruptcy, with one or two exceptions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARTER. Yes; and each of those little two-penny, seven-by-nine protection furnaces were replaced by the magnificent Democratic furnaces erected under the low-tariff period between 1846 and 1860.

Mr. KRIBBS. Will my colleague allow me to ask him one question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KRIBBS. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HARTER. Oh, yes; I will yield to all the Pennsylvanians.

Mr. KRIBBS. I wish to ask my colleague how many of these furnaces started up again under the high protective tariff?

Mr. HARTER. The final effect of this was that after the lapse of a few years the manufacturers of the United States came here to Washington and made a tariff for themselves; and I may say in reference to the "manufacturers' tariff" of 1857, that it was a great reduction even on the so-called "free-trade" tariff act of 1846. Pennsylvania and Massachusetts voted for that reduction.

I wish I had time to take you through the "manufacturers' tariff" bill of 1857, schedule after schedule, and compare it with this Wilson bill that you object to, and show you that the bill which we are offering to the House and to the country is to-day putting a higher tariff tax on the great mass of these schedules than did even the manufacturers of the country who sat on the floor of this House and voted for the tariff act of 1857. And since that time we have had a constantly mounting stream of protection and spoliation, tax after tax. When, therefore, you say that the tariff tax, which is higher yet, even under this bill, than it was in 1857, must be made higher after thirty years of tariff protection, it is a confession on your part that the result of protection has been damaging to the interests of the manufacturers, and that after all of these years they are less able to compete with foreign manufacturers than they were in 1857.

I had a number of these schedules that I had intended to have the Clerk read for the benefit of the House, but will, because of lack of time, have to confine myself to a very few.

Will the Clerk be kind enough to read from the bill the tax on chemicals—the average tax upon chemicals, paints, and oils?

The Clerk read as follows:

Average tax, 20 to 30 per cent.

Mr. HARTER. It will be found to be about 30 per cent. In 1846 this tax was 20 per cent, and the tax on these articles was still further reduced by the manufacturers themselves in 1857.

I ask the Clerk to read from the bill the tax on varnishes—the average tax under the Wilson bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Average rate, 25 per cent.

Mr. HARTER. Varnishes were free under the tariff act of 1846. I will not ask about earthenware and china, for my time is too short to treat the subject properly; however, let it now suffice to say that we made earthenware and china under a lower tax in those days than the Ways and Means Committee bill proposes now, after we have burdened the people for thirty years to build up that industry. What is the tax upon cutlery?

The Clerk read as follows:

Cutlery, 35 to 45 per cent.

Mr. HARTER. In 1846, as I recollect the figures, the tariff was about 30 per cent, and it was still further reduced by the manufacturers themselves in 1847. Now I will ask the Clerk to give the tariff on cotton manufactures.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cotton manufactures, 40 per cent.

Mr. HARTER. Listen! The cry has gone over the country that 40 per cent is not enough. Let me go back to the childhood of your cotton manufactures. Samuel Slater established cotton-manufacturing in Rhode Island in 1790, under a tariff tax of about 5 per cent, and he imported most of his cotton, paying, I think, 3 cents a pound tariff tax on his raw material, and then he competed successfully with Great Britain, and you, sons of New England, you degenerate descendants of Samuel Slater, a century later come before this House and say you have fallen so contemptibly low that you can not protect yourselves with practically eight times the protection your great grandfathers had in 1790.

I have in my possession a letter I received to-day from one of the great cotton-manufacturers of New England, in which he condemns our bill because, as he knows from long experience, the tariff on cotton goods is made too high, not too low; and thus practical manufacturers put to shame their hobbyhorse representatives on the floor of this House, members who prate about manufacturing as if they knew all about it and who nevertheless, in the simplicity of their souls, think the mule they use in factories walks on two legs, is kept in a barn, and has ears as long as their own.

Why, my good friends here from Maine, I would like to know when your cotton industries were established? Of course the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] is excusably ignorant, because he comes from the boundless and trackless prairie where they do not know anything about cotton mills or cotton-mill machinery [laughter]; but you gentlemen from Maine are not excusable on that ground. When did you establish your cotton industries? When were those magnificent industries, the pride of New England and the glory of the United States, established? They were established under what was called the free-trade tariff of 1846. If you look over the census reports you will find that nearly every blessing that has fallen upon this country came down upon it in richest profusion immediately after the introduction in 1846 by the Democratic party of this miserable, horrible, damnable system of free trade that we want again to fasten upon the country.

By the way, I will say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] that cotton manufacturing was established on the American continent before Columbus discovered it. I do not think they had a high-taxing protective tariff at that time, because the leaf of history from which I quote does not refer to any such blessing.

Mr. REED. If America was not discovered, it was very well protected from Europe up to that time. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The industries did not flourish very much under that protection, though.

Mr. HARTER. My good friend [Mr. SPRINGER] reminds me that the industries did not flourish much up to that time; and I would like to remark that this industry did not fairly begin to flourish until Samuel Slater, in spite of the laws passed by England at that time against the exportation of skilled labor in cotton manufacturing, came across here and established cotton mills in Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER] is satisfied with offering a second-hand answer from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], I am satisfied.

Mr. HARTER. I have known the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] for a long time, and I have rarely heard him make an answer that was not well worth attention, and also of quotation, either in this House or elsewhere.

Now as to the woolen manufacture, gentlemen, perhaps you think that must have been established under the McKinley bill. On the contrary the woolen-manufacturing industry of the United States was established in 1643 or thereabouts. Let me see, when did the Mayflower land?

Several MEMBERS. In 1620.

Mr. HARTER. Well, we were not on the Mayflower, and I am excusable for not remembering the exact date. My ancestors were able to remain in Europe a little longer than yours were. [Laughter.] But I want to speak a little while about the iron trade, for it is at the bottom of all our industries, at the very foundation, indeed, of our civilization. We give iron, I think, 22½ per cent under the Wilson bill, and steel 25 per cent.

I took pains last week, when over in Philadelphia, to get a copy of the London Iron and Steel Traders' Journal, and also a copy of the (American) Iron Age. I took the English paper of December 16 and the American paper of December 14. In looking over the English paper I found that in Staffordshire, England, certain grades of bar iron were selling for $37.56 a ton; and I found I could buy the same grade of bar iron in the United States of America for $26 a ton, leaving the difference between the English price and the American price $11.56 a ton, the price in England being that much higher than it is in the United States. The average freights are $1.25 to $2 a ton for crossing the ocean.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Are you complaining of that?

Mr. HARTER. I say that there is no need of 22½ per cent or any tariff tax whatever to "protect" iron manufacturers, yet with the 22½ per cent given them by the Wilson bill you are still a "calamity howler," and if you had 2,200 per cent I think your cry would be the same.

Steel billets are the foundation of the whole steel trade of the United States. I discover that steel billets were worth, on the 16th of December, in Great Britain, $23.42, while I could buy them at Pittsburg for $16.75.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then, where is the tax?

Mr. HARTER. There is no need of any tax, and yet you shriek and cry as if you were crippled for life while our bill feeds you with 22½ to 25 per cent of tax. I am just showing you that we are able to compete not only under the Wilson bill, but that with absolute free trade we could have all Europe within five years kneeling at our feet and the world buying and consuming American goods, made by untaxed Americans.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is the tariff on steel billets?

Mr. HARTER. I regret that the expiration of my time prevents me giving to the gentleman the attention he would otherwise have at my hands.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I am very sensible indeed that this is not the hour for a serious discussion of this measure, and remembering the generous indulgence of the House to me on other and indeed on every occasion heretofore, I am reluctant to detain you to a later hour for the purpose of hearing anything I may say.

If the reapers in the field of Boaz had been as diligent and thorough in their work as have been the gentlemen who have preceded me in this discussion, it is not possible that the fair Maobitess gleaner could have gathered enough grain to reward her labor. In this debate, at this time, the gleaner is absolutely without hope. Still I must ask the indulgence of the House while I go over portions of the field of discussion, if only to emphasize some arguments already many times made.

I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER], and I hope he has tarried, that there is a great diversion of opinion among us upon the tariff question, a great confusion of tongues. I do not see him in his seat.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. He has just gone out.

Mr. BROSIUS. Well, he is not here. Those who are here can tell him what I say about Pennsylvania and the tariff.

As a prologue to what I shall say I desire to submit a sentiment from a departed statesman, whose memory the people of Pennsylvania will not willingly let die:

Every highly cultivated nation has made the protection of domestic industry the special care of government. It has been found by the experience of more than twenty centuries that the protection of domestic manufactures by prohibitions, discriminating duties, and commercial regulations has been and is the true, natural, and wise policy of nations, or all history lies.

These are the words of the "Old Commoner" of Pennsylvania, who a generation ago sat in this Chamber, and with his imperial intellect and superb statesmanship guided the deliberations and determinations of this body in the stormiest seasons of its history. I can not withhold the homage due to greatness by omitting to say that I reproduce the words of Mr. Stevens to-day with undisguised satisfaction. They accentuate the statement made by my distinguished colleague [Mr. DALZELL] in his exhaustive argument yesterday, that Pennsylvania has never wavered in her loyalty to protection.

Horace White, in the preface to his translation of Frederick

Bastiat's Sophisms of Protection, says that the national Republican convention of 1860 offered a bribe to the State of Pennsylvania for its vote in the Presidential election, which bribe was set forth in the following resolution of the platform adopted by that memorable convention:

Resolved, That while providing revenue for the support of the General Government by duties upon imports, sound policy requires such an adjustment of these imposts as to encourage the development of the industrial interests of the whole country; and we commend that policy of national exchanges which secures to the workingman liberal wages, to agriculture remunerative prices, to mechanics and manufactories an adequate reward for their skill, labor, and enterprise, and to the nation commercial prosperity and independence.

I do not bring this antique and somewhat unique observation of Horace White into public notice for the purpose of resenting the apparent insult to Pennsylvania, for he distinctly disclaimed any intention to charge unworthy motives for the political action of that State in giving her support to the nominee of the Republican party. I use the incident as a pleader would use the name of John Doe or Richard Roe, to bring the cause into court; the cause of The People vs. the Wilson Tariff Bill on an indictment for assault with intent to kill the industries of the United States [laughter and applause], the intent, as in similar cases in our criminal jurisprudence, being presumed from the nature of the weapons used. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I have never known the distinct ends had in view by those who have cherished the protective system in vogue in the United States in almost unbroken continuity for a hundred years to be more clearly and strongly stated than in the resolution to which Pennsylvania gave the honor of her support a third of a century ago. Nor were these sentiments the exclusive possession of the Republicans of Pennsylvania—they were shared by the Democrats as well.

In the very year that the representatives of the Republican party in the Republican national convention at Chicago were giving their adhesion to the principles of the resolution I have just read, a Pennsylvania Democrat, the late lamented Hon. John Cessna, a delegate to the Democratic national convention at Charleston, introduced on the floor of that convention the following resolution:

Resolved, That the convictions of the Democratic party of the country remain unshaken in the wisdom and justice of the adequate protection of iron, coal, wool, and the other great staples of our country, based upon the necessities of a reasonable revenue system of the General Government; and approving the views of President Buchanan upon the subject of specific duties, we earnestly desire our representatives in Congress to produce such modifications of existing laws as the unwise legislation of the Republican party in 1857 renders absolutely necessary to the prosperity of the great interests of the country.

When the principles of these two declarations of Pennsylvania sentiment on the tariff question were embodied in the tariff act of 1861 and passed by both Houses of Congress, it was promptly approved by another great Pennsylvania Democrat, President Buchanan.

To-day that great State waits in the attitude of expectancy to see her Democratic representatives in this Congress align themselves on these long-established Pennsylvania principles and take the touch of elbow with their distinguished predecessors, who in earlier days shed luster upon the Keystone Democracy. [Applause.]

These events, however, marked no departure, denoted no epoch in Pennsylvania sentiment on the tariff question. They were in consonance with the views held by the people and the statesmen of that State of both parties for more than a century. In her infancy she lisped the same accents; in her vigorous youth she shouted the same notes, in her mature manhood she utters the same glorious voice in favor of such defensive duties as will promote the remuneration and elevation of labor, adequate rewards for enterprise and capital, and the prosperity and happiness of all our people. [Applause on the Republican side.] In 1860 her convictions were uttered in the perfectly articulate and distinctly audible tone of 60,000 majority. In 1893, after an experience of a third of a century, she reaffirmed them in the detonating and reverberant thunder of 135,000 majority. [Applause on the Republican side.] My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is right. She has never wavered in her loyalty to protection.

I hazard nothing in saying that the best developed and most scientific conception of defensive duties existing when the foundations of our Government were laid was a Pennsylvania notion. One hundred and eight years ago on the 20th of last September the Assembly of that State passed a tariff act, the preamble of which stated the grounds upon which it proceeded. It declared that—

Whereas divers useful and beneficial arts and manufactures have been gradually introduced into Pennsylvania, and the same have at length risen to a very considerable extent and perfection, insomuch that during the late war between the United States and Great Britain, when the importation of European goods was much interrupted, and often very difficult and uncertain, the artisans and mechanics of this State were able to supply in the hours of need not only large quantities of weapons and other implements, but also ammunition and clothing, without which the war would not have been carried on, whereby their oppressed country was greatly assisted and relieved; and

Whereas, although the fabrics and manufactures of Europe and other foreign parts imported into this country in times of peace may be afforded at cheaper rates than they can be made here, yet good policy and a regard to the well-being of divers useful and industrious citizens who are employed in the making of like goods in this State demand of us that moderate duties be laid on certain fabrics and manufactures imported which do most interfere with, and which, if no relief be given, will undermine and destroy, the useful manufactures of the like kind in this country.

That was the germ of our protective system. It contained the power and potency of all that has been evolved out of it, or developed from it. It was the infant, grown now to a giant, which like a faithful sentinel stands guard over factory, forge, field, and every fold of American labor and industry.

Hamilton, with his prescient intellect and mighty reach of statesmanship, scarcely saw beyond the lines marked out by the Pennsylvania Assembly. Clay elaborated the scheme, broadened the field of vision, and furnished some arguments in support of the system. He gave its data classification, polished it and labeled it for popular study, and did more perhaps than any other American statesman to relieve the subject of its abstruseness and bring it within easy range of popular comprehension. In later years the contributions of economists and statesmen, the lessons of experience, and the more scientific study of its principles have demonstrated more clearly its superior utility and deepened the American conviction of its necessity to the welfare and prosperity of our industries, and established its title to the veneration and affection of every patriotic American citizen, until the feeling widely prevalent among all ranks of our people may be tersely and truthfully expressed in the words of Grattan, speaking of the Irish Parliament: "It is our very existence; nay, more, it is our life to come."

It has been through the century a leading agency in nourishing infant industries and in maintaining mature ones, in diversifying employments, and promoting the conditions of mutually advantageous intercourse between them; in utilizing all our powers and capabilities by employing them upon the totality of our native resources, giving employment to our labor and applying our own capital to our own industrial pursuits, thus meeting our own wants with our own supplies, our satisfactions with our sacrifices, and mutually serving each other to the greatest extent compatible with the conditions under which we are working out the problem of our industrial development, and in opening the way to results of such unrivaled splendor in the production and acquisition of wealth and the growth of trade and commerce as to extort from the greatest living Englishman the handsome tribute—and now where is the gentleman from Ohio [laughter]—that splendid tribute, "That so rapid has been our growth, and so swiftly are we forging ahead that our commercial supremacy is only a question of time." [Applause on the Republican side.]

So much for our past. What is our present situation in the shadow of an impending peril? It beggars description. In our factories you can hear a pin drop. In our forges a whisper reverberates. In our furnaces a friction match illumines the darkness, and in many American homes a piece of corn bread would be a feast. A few rough-hewn lines of some doggerel rhymes feebly portray the clouds and darkness round about us:

From forges where no fires burn,
From mills where wheels no longer turn,
From looms o'er which no shuttles leap,
From merchants' shops—which sheriffs keep,
From banks gone up, from stocks gone down,
From God-made country, man-made town,
From Wall street men, from sons of toil,
From the bronzed tillers of the soil,
From North, from South, from East, from West,
Business is crying with a zest—
"Don't monkey with the tariff."

[Laughter.]

THE WILSON BILL.

And yet we have before us a bill which proposes, in relation to a number of our leading and most necessary industries, to strike down those defensive duties in some instances and reduce them in others, and thereby diminish that protection under which they have prospered in the past, and without which they will not only be unable to prosper in the future, but must languish, and if not succored at an early day by wiser legislation, must perish by starvation or strangulation, unless they continue a precarious existence by reducing the wages of American labor to the foreign level. It is the fourth bill that has been written over the name of a Democratic statesman in thirty years. We have seen a Wood bill, a Morrison bill, a Mills bill, and now we have a Wilson bill. Which is the worst bill I am not able to say. When all are so bad it would be invidious to discriminate.

It is not a free-trade bill, for it admits protection to a limited extent. It is not a protective bill, for it contains too little protection to be of any use. It is like a dike too low to keep the water out. It is not a revenue bill, for it fails to produce revenue. It embodies all the vices and none of the virtues of commercial restriction. It entails all the cost and vexation of maintaining custom-houses, while it brings none of the benefits the system was designed to secure.

THE BASIS OF SOUND LEGISLATION.

All sound and beneficial legislation on lines of commercial regulation must proceed upon these fundamental postulates:

First. Our own laboring people must be employed at remunerative wages.

Second. We have no advantageous industries which can employ all our labor in the production of commodities whose excess over and above our own consumption can find a market elsewhere at prices commensurate with such a ratio of result to exertion or of satisfaction to sacrifice as would justify the cumulation of our labor in them.

Third. That under these conditions the best results are attainable by the employment of our labor and all our productive forces on our own raw materials to meet our own consumption as far as is compatible with the nature and extent of our resources. In other words, under existing conditions of production, distribution, and consumption the world over, the American market is the best one, not only for the products of American soil, but as well those of American mines, factories, forges, furnaces, and the whole round of American production.

These propositions derive support not only from the deductions of reason applied to the facts of our situation, but from the lessons of our actual experience as well. If a shoemaker has a market for all the shoes he can make at a price which pays him more for a day's work than he can make at any other employment, he puts in all his time at making shoes; but if his market fails him, if he can not sell all his shoes at a price that constitutes that his advantageous industry he must either be idle a portion of his time or accumulate a surplus of shoes without exchangeable value. He is driven, therefore, to give a portion of his time to some other employment to eke out a living. Or, if he finds a market for all his shoes, but can not find a supply of some necessary article of consumption, say stockings, at such price as would pay him better to buy than to make, then he must employ a part of his time in making his own stockings. This would be an economic necessity.

Similarly, the people of the United States, having no single industry or limited number of industries in which their labor and exertion would be more efficient than in others, because there is no market to take all they could produce in them at a price that would give their labor superior efficiency, must do other things to make a living. And moreover, if they had a superiority in one or more industries they could not find an adequate supply of their remaining wants at a price which would pay them better to buy than to make. So that the economic limitations of the situation in which we find ourselves, and from which we have no means of escape, compel us to the course we have chosen to pursue, that of producing to a large extent our own consumption.

But if the necessities of our situation compel us, as the solicitation of our manifest interest moves us, to employ ourselves in the miscellaneous and manifold industries, with the resources and aptitudes for which our country and our people have been so richly endowed, and we are already established in these industries with fabulous amounts of capital invested in numerous plants equipped for business, under a scale of defensive duties, which secures to us so generous a share of our own markets as to give employment to our own labor in production at remunerative wages commensurate with the high general level of character and intelligence which distinguishes American labor, should we by withdrawing that protection, by the reduction or total removal of those duties, relinquish a portion of our own markets to foreign producers, displace our own labor for foreign, impair our own fixed capital, and voluntarily abdicate our sovereignty over our industrial realm.

The answer of the advocates of this measure doubtless is that the bill has no tendency to the production of the results named, but on the contrary it will tend to lighten the burdens of taxation, promote the activity of our industries, better the conditions of labor, and secure a progressively increasing efficiency in all our productive agencies.

But for the indisputable presumption of your sincerity in this contention I would say it is in vain you protest that you are practical economists working out the problem of your country's interests, while the agencies you propose are calculated to paralyze the industries they are meant to help, unless indeed it be economists of the class of whom Napoleon said: "If the empire were made of adamant they would grind it to powder;" in vain that you declare your solicitude for workingmen while you are legislating bread out of their mouths; in vain that you insist that their condition will be bettered while you are closing the mills in which they earned the highest wages ever paid to labor; in vain that you pretend to be seeking access to the markets of the world for American manufactures when England's factories are crowded with an accumulation of products for which the double advantage of free raw material and low wages does not enable her to find a market, but subjects her to the mortification of witnessing her foreign commerce in a progressive decline; in vain that you insist that you are cheapening commodities for the people's consumption while you are curtailing their means of buying the satisfactions of life at any price. But for the constraint I am under to believe you serious, the irony of your declarations and protestations is so apparent that I would be reminded of the hypocrite who protested his love for his Savior, his veneration for his Bible, and his devotion to his religion, while he daily broke every commandment in the decalogue.

THE REPUBLICAN DOCTRINE OF PROTECTION.

Conformably to the principles I have indicated, the Republican doctrine of protection is that imposts are to be levied for two purposes, both distinctly declared by the founders of the Republic, and to secure which was one of the chief reasons for the adoption of the Constitution of 1787, namely, to raise revenue for the support of the Government and to encourage our domestic industries; and a constitutional duty is one that has for its object this twofold purpose: A duty which yields sufficient revenue and at the same time guarantees our own producers the first chance in our own markets is a protective and constitutional duty; while a duty which aims to raise revenue while it injures home enterprise and discourages domestic industries by inviting importations is a destructive duty, and, if not an unconstitutional one, is maintained by an abuse of constitutional power.

Duties in the two instances are imposed on totally different principles. A duty regulated by the revenue principle alone proceeds upon the assumption that the point on the scale of rates at which a duty should be fixed is the lowest figure that will yield the requisite amount of revenue without regard to protection, on the theory that the less the duties the lighter the burdens. It is easily seen that this results in largely increasing importations, for as the duty falls the imports swell—to the injury of our home producers.

The principle of the maximum revenue from the maximum importations is the one stab the industries of this country can not survive, for it means the minimum of home productions. It substitutes foreign for home products and foreign for home industries, and is to that extent unpatriotic and un-American, if not treason to the welfare of the country.

On the contrary, a duty regulated upon the twofold principle of revenue and protection proceeds upon the assumption that the true point on the scale of rates at which a duty should be fixed is the highest figure consistent with sufficient revenue and adequate protection.

By the Democratic method the revenue is to be collected with as much incidental injury to the people as possible. By the Republican method the revenue is collected with as much incidental benefit to the people as possible.

We believe that if the collector of customs can dispense benefits while he is gathering revenue it is a relief and not a distress to the people. A revenue that carries a double blessing upon its wings is none the worse on that account.

Daniel Webster, the great expounder of the Constitution, said on this very point:

> Can it be that we have only a revenue power in this matter? That is, we have the clear and undoubted power to take so much money out of your pockets and apply it to our public purposes; but God forbid that in doing so we should do you any good at the same time.

Now, let us give some attention to the contentions in support of the bill. The proponents of the measure rely upon a course of deductive reasoning totally invalid when tested by the economic facts of our history. The only verification by actual experience which they have ever thought worth while to attempt is found in the period between 1846 and 1860. As the devout Mussulmen in prayer turn their faces toward the Caaba as their point of adoration, so do our devout tariff reformers when they bend their exertions to the rescue of their country from the robber barons of protection turn their faces to the Mecca of 1846 to 1860 as their point of adoration.

FREE-TRADE PERIOD.

A characteristic mode of depicting the unspeakable charms of that idyllic season after the winter of their discontent had been made glad summer by the glorious sun of free trade in the tariff of 1846 may be found in an address of the present Vice-President at Bloomington, Ill., just before his election. These are his words:

> The decade and a half extending from the passage of the low-tariff law of 1846 to the beginning of our civil war has been truly called the golden period of our history. The cost of the necessaries of life had reached the minimum, and at no time in our history was it easier for the wage-earner to support his family. The farmer, the mechanic, the day laborer alike realized the benefit of low taxation. A benefit, why? Simply for the reason that it lessened the cost of food, of clothing, of every article that conduced to his comfort. Our manufactories did not languish. The fires did not go out in our furnaces. The wheels and spindles were not idle in our great hives of industry. The demand for labor was not lessened, nor was its value depreciated.

Mr. Chairman, an effective answer to the Vice-President, as well as to the fairy tales given us yesterday by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER] concerning this long-to-be-remembered period when the industries of Pennsylvania languished, and languishing, died by the scores, with none to succor, may be found in the work of Robert Ellis Thompson on Social Science and National Economy. Mr. Thompson says:

Thus during the years 1846-'49 English iron was cheap, selling in New York at $40 a ton, and largely driving the home producer out of the market. One-third of the furnaces and iron mills ceased operations soon after the tariff was enacted, many being sold out by the sheriff, the rest were sorely crippled, and the amount of their production greatly diminished. In 1851-'51, when home competition was virtually out of the way, iron sold for $80 a ton, whereas native iron had been sold for $60.

A CONTRAST AND CONTRADICTION.

But further, Mr. Chairman, for the sake of the contrast, and in the interest of truth, I submit without note or comment the dispassionate statement of President Fillmore in his annual message to Congress in December, 1851. This is what he said:

The value of our exports of breadstuffs and provisions, which it was supposed the incentive of a low tariff and large importations from abroad would have greatly augmented, has fallen from $68,701,621 in 1847, to $26,051,373 in 1850, and to $21,848,653 in 1851, with a strong probability, amounting almost to a certainty, of a still further reduction in the current year.

The aggregate value of rice exported during the last fiscal year as compared with the previous year also exhibits a decrease amounting to $460,917, which with a decline in the value of the exports of tobacco for the same period make an aggregate decrease in these two articles of $1,156,751.

The policy which dictated a low rate of duties on foreign merchandise it was thought by those who promoted and established it would tend to benefit the farming population of the country by increasing the demand and raising the price of agricultural products in foreign markets. The foregoing facts, however, seem to show incontestibly that no such result has followed the adoption of this policy.

BUCHANAN'S TESTIMONY.

To make confirmation strong as proof of Holy Writ I will place on the record of this discussion the statement of President Buchanan at a later period, when the evils of a revenue tariff had culminated in the overthrow of our industries and the impoverishment of our people. President Buchanan, in his annual message to Congress December 8, 1857, said:

We have possessed all of the elements of national wealth in rich abundance, and yet, notwithstanding all these advantages, our country in its monetary interests is at the present moment in a deplorable condition. In the midst of unsurpassed plenty in all the productions of agriculture and in all the elements of national wealth, we find our manufactures suspended, our public works retarded, our private enterprises of different kinds abandoned, and thousands of useful laborers thrown out of employment and reduced to want.

In the same message, after describing the distress and want to which the people had been reduced, President Buchanan enlarged upon the inability of the people to purchase manufactured articles for lack of means, and that goods therefore ceased to be produced. The decay of our own industries so lessened the people's means of purchasing imported goods that imports fell off to such an extent that the revenue declined so that it was inadequate to meet the necessary expenses of the Government. To supply this deficiency Congress, by act of December 23, 1857, authorized the issue of $20,000,000 of Treasury notes. This proving inadequate, in June, 1858, a loan of $20,000,000 was authorized to meet the expenditures of the Government.

The conditions progressed from bad to worse until March 3, 1859, when the situation was so appalling that the President issued a special message to Congress, appealing in tones of touching pathos to preserve the credit of the country.

The Treasury was bankrupt, the credit of the nation was reduced to its lowest terms, and no provision was made for the necessary expenses of the Government.

Thus—

Says the message—

the country, which is full of resources, will be dishonored before the world, and the American people, who are a debt-paying people, will be disgraced by the omission on our part to do our duty.

And these calamitous results ensued, it must not be forgotten, coincidently with an unparalleled succession of fortuitous circumstances, calculated in the highest degree to countervail the depressing influences exerted by the mistaken tariff policy of that unhappy period. These circumstances, as all will remember, were a succession of famines in Ireland, a crop shortage in Germany and other European countries, European wars, and the discovery of gold in California. But all these aids to prosperity could not overcome the noxious effects of the Walker tariff, and the country sank deeper and deeper in the slough of despond until the Morrill tariff brought succor to a demoralized and distressed country.

TARIFF FOR REVENUE.

One of the numerous contentions upon which the advocates of a tariff for revenue rely is the assumption that free raw material cheapens production, enlarges consumption, multiplies markets, promotes manufactures, and secures remunerative employment to labor. Precisely what mode of imposing duties is required by a tariff for revenue only may be a question not free from difficulty.

There is credible Democratic authority for holding that such a tariff excludes entirely the idea of free imports of any kind, that the Democratic doctrine of the unconstitutionality of a protective duty carries the necessary implication that revenue being the supreme and only purpose of the impost, it must be exacted from the whole field of importations without omission and without favor. In every quarter in which this view meets with acceptance, free raw materials must be condemned as repugnant to the principle of a revenue tariff and in derogation of the latest distinct tenet of the Democratic party. For a fuller exposition of this incongruity in the bill I refer to the following observations from the New York Sun:

FREE RAW MATERIAL.

We have had the honor to receive from the attorney-general of Mississippi, the Hon. Frank Johnston, a communication containing the following request:

"I have written to ask the Sun to give its readers elaborately its views on the subject of free raw material, with a protective duty on the manufactured product."

As any and all discussion upon this subject can be theoretical and academic only, and of no possible application to the practical transactions of the Democratic Congress, we must respectfully call Mr. Johnston's attention to the fact. Debate on free raw material is closed. Such a feature of the tariff was presented for approval to the last great court of the Democratic party, the National Democratic Convention of 1892, and it was repudiated, not merely by the negative of deliberate and categorical rejection, but by the added declaration of a principle that made the notion of free raw materials a constitutional impossibility.

The Chicago convention, which put forward Mr. Cleveland for the Presidency, decided that there should be a "tariff for revenue only," and in so saying it double locked the door on further argument as to the expediency of other policies, or as to national prosperity by other methods, or the inevitable changes in manufacture and commerce, or sectional advantages, or individual interests, or personal opinions, or discrimination of any sort or shade in customs duties. Each became thereafter an absolutely forbidden factor in the tariff, as prescribed by the Constitution. Each and all must be eliminated from the Federal system and barred out.

Free raw material, or free anything, is out of the question in a constitutional revenue tariff. A free list is as impossible under the Democratic platform as a prohibitory tax. Revenue is the supreme principle, and revenue only, to be exacted from the whole field of importation, without omission and without favor. The reformers have been proclaiming earnestly for years past that any other than a revenue tariff robs some one, and now the Democratic platform says the same thing. What any Democratic journal or Democratic statesman, therefore, thinks individually of the free-raw-material principle can have no more standing before a Democratic Congress or a Democratic Administration than advocacy of highway robbery, direct and simple. The Sun would have to attach as much importance to elaborating an essay on the multiplication table as to a renewed discussion on the merits of a free list.

In assuring Mr. Johnston of our most distinguished consideration, we must justify this somewhat blunt response to his courteous note by the fact that the Democratic pledge, solemnly offered and publicly accepted, tolerates no other. The tariff must be for revenue only, without humbug, backsliding, or delusion. Otherwise people will say the Democracy is a fraud.

Mr. Chairman, I indulge the hope that the humbug, backsliding, and delusion of "free raw material," so pungently referred to by Mr. Dana, may be eliminated from the bill before it reaches its passage.

HENRY WATTERSON.

Another father in Israel of the Democratic faith, from the opposite section of our country, Henry Watterson, says this bill is an attempt to steer between wind and water, to serve two masters. A tariff for revenue and a tariff for protection are the opposites of each other, and the conflict between them is irrepressible. If the party did not mean this in 1876, then the platform lied. If Mr. Cleveland did not mean it by his message of 1887, then he misled the people and is at this moment the custodian of stolen goods. At least the convention of 1892 meant it, because the issue was therein made so decisive and incisive that nobody could mistake it. The people voted distinctly to displace the protective system with a revenue system.

The safe course to pursue was to make a tariff for revenue only in consonance with the pledges of the party. The imperfection of the bill is its complications. It admits the smug face of protection in some parts and half its body in other parts. So says Henry Watterson in the Louisville Courier-Journal.

So firm is Mr. Watterson's conviction that the Democratic party has been guilty of a base betrayal of the people's trust in undertaking to foist upon the country the Wilson bill for a tariff-for-revenue measure that he has deliberately declared that "his party is marching through a slaughterhouse to an open grave." I do not quarrel with him on that point, but am happy to be in unity with him. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Andrew Jackson Steinman, as broad-gauged, clear-headed, and conservative a Democratic journalist as can be found in Eastern Pennsylvania, in the Lancaster Intelligencer says:

Mr. OATES furthermore believes that the free list in the Wilson bill is too large in view of the need of revenue. We are entirely in sympathy with this opinion. We are unable to understand how a Democratic committee, instructed by a Democratic convention in favor of a tariff for revenue, has been able to formulate a tariff bill which is not expected to raise anything like the revenue needed by the Treasury; which makes a large free list that yields no revenue at all, and continues a Republican bounty on sugar which not only fails to produce, but actually dissipates revenue.

It seems to us to be really silly to establish a free list, when we need the revenue it can be readily made to yield without complaint and without particular burden upon anyone. A tariff for revenue really prohibits a free list; though it would be a good policy, as to articles of prime necessity, provided the revenue was superabundant. It is a good way to release revenue, to establish a free list; but when we do not want to release revenue, it is a foolish establishment.

There should be a light duty levied upon all articles on the free list in the Democratic bill; a duty so light as not to hinder their importation, but enough to raise the revenue they can be made to yield without checking their importation. And certainly there should be no bounty on sugar. That is a question too clear for long discussion. No such proposition could have appeared in a Democratic tariff bill, if a proper hand had been kept upon the Democratic pulse of the country, which thoroughly and undoubtedly repudiates the idea of a bounty; and especially when the revenues are short, will it forbid the passage of such a measure.

The honest truth is that the Wilson tariff bill needs to be promptly recommitted to the committee with instruction to cause it to provide sufficient revenue; and the sooner this is understood and done, the better it will be for the party and the country.

FREE RAW MATERIAL.

I beg now to observe that if the theory of Mr. Dana and Mr. Watterson is not sound, and protective duties are after all compatible with the principle of a tariff for revenue only, then the "free raw material" clauses of the bill come under equal condemnation on another ground. If protection is admitted into the bill to any extent, however limited, as a direct object, it is a distinct concession to the principle of protection, and we may well insist that its application shall not be arbitrary but conformable to the reason of the case and the requirements of our industrial situation.

We do not want a tariff bill like that of 1846, which a distinguished economic writer characterized as "neither fish, flesh, fowl, nor good salt herring." We ought to have a bill consistent with itself—without repugnancy—that stands by the logic of its principle and does not quail before its sequences.

The President says in his recent annual message that restrictions must be removed from the importation of the raw materials of our manufactures to enable the latter to compete on equal terms for the markets.

Of course a full and complete answer to that contention is that under existing law there is practically no duty on raw material manufactured for export. Ninety per cent of the duty is refunded. But supposing it was not. What is the philosophy of this proposition? It must be clear that if our manufacturers are barred from the world's markets it is because of some obstacles that are not in the way of other competing nations. In an economic sense what are the obstacles to free commerce on equal terms? Anything which prevents equality of facilities is an obstacle. Higher wages is an obstacle. Greater cost of material is an obstacle. There may be others, but these are all that concern us in this discussion. An equalization of facilities can be secured by the removal of one or both of these obstacles.

I do not believe the people of the United States can afford to secure a foreign market at the cost of foregoing any part of our wages or of any part of our protection to raw material. The President, however, thinks we can, and advises us to forego the defensive duty on raw material. On what principle is this selection made? In either case an injury is done to labor. Those employed in the collection and preparation and transportation of raw material can no more compete with the cheap labor abroad employed in similar work than can American manufacturers, and the result must be a cut in wages or a cessation of business.

The protective principle being admitted, then every industry in which American labor comes in competition with cheaper foreign labor ought to have its share of protection if it needs it. The production of raw material is as much an industry as its elaboration into manufactured articles. Those employed in it are as much workmen as any other laborers. They have the same wants, the same aspirations, the same need for protection against the corresponding labor abroad at lower wages. It is labor that is the object of protection, and any commodity representing labor is within the principle. If there is a raw material that is untouched by labor let that go on the free list.

Even Bastiat, who was a free trader par excellence, made that concession to the protective theory. He held that if protection is admissible at all, all labor should be protected: "No labor, no protection."

If it is the wish of the House, Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain it further this evening if I can have about twenty minutes in the morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied forty minutes of his time. He will be entitled to twenty minutes again when this matter is resumed.

Mr. BROSIUS. Then I will yield the floor, Mr. Chairman, at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the tariff bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

PRINTING COAST AND GEODETIC REPORT.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this morning the House agreed to a Senate resolution to print the annual report of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for 1892. There was an error in the resolution. It should have been 1893. I move to reconsider, or ask unanimous consent to reconsider, the action of the House in order to ask its return from the Senate and correction. I submit a resolution, on which I ask immediate action.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House the Senate concurrent resolution to print the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year 1892.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. DALZELL. What is the suggestion? Should it be 1893?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is the correction which should be made in the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

The SPEAKER. As it wants now only three minutes of the time for taking the recess, if there be no objection the Chair will declare the House in recess until 8 o'clock. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] will preside and perform the duties of the Chair at the evening session, which will be devoted to debate only upon the pending bill.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., was called to order by Mr. BROOKSHIRE as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is now in session for debate only on the tariff bill, and will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole under the special order.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

[Mr. MAGUIRE withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

[Mr. COCKRELL addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SIMPSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BROOKSHIRE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. KILGORE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. KILGORE (at 9 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 12, 1894, at 11 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 6 of Rule XIII, Mr. TAWNEY, from the Committee on Pensions, reported the bill (H. R. 3195) granting a pension to Lovica Hall, a widow of a soldier of the war of 1812; which, with the accompanying report (No. 257), was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5142) to increase the pension of H. S. Mayhill, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and a resolution of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS of New York: A bill (H. R. 5166) to regulate enlistments in the Army of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HUDSON: A bill (H. R. 5167) to grant the right of way to the Indian Pacific Coal and Railway Company through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. OUTHWAITE: A joint resolution (H. Res. 108) authorizing Maj. Gen. Oliver Otis Howard, United States Army, to accept from the President of the French Republic a diploma conferring the decoration of Commander of the National Order of the Legion of Honor—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. BOATNER: A bill (H. R. 5168) for the relief of the estate of Alfred W. Green, late of Carroll Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5169) for the relief of Washington West, Madison Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BANKHEAD: A bill (H. R. 5170) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BUNDY: A bill (H. R. 5171) for the relief of John McNaughton, second lieutenant Company G, First Regiment West Virginia Cavalry Volunteers—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5172) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the heirs of Dudley D. Smith—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CRISP: A bill (H. R. 5173) granting a pension to Sarah L. Maxwell—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DAVEY: A bill (H. R. 5174) for the relief of the heirs of John Innerarity—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 5175) for the relief of Mrs. Ann M. Brown, Claiborne County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HULL: A bill (H. R. 5176) granting an increase of pension to Milton Iseman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5177) granting a pension to Arra Van der Sinden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOUK of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 5178) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5179) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act, and for other purposes—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 5180) to remove the charge of desertion against the record of William J. McFalls—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MARTIN of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 5181) to correct the military record of John Smith—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OATES: A bill (H. R. 5182) for the relief of the heirs of S. H. Hill, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. POST: A bill (H. R. 5183) for the relief of Joseph W. Parish—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FIELDER: A bill (H. R. 5184) for the relief of Maria T. Kargo—to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDRICH: Petition of George E. Andronette & Co. and 6 other firms of glass-manufacturers of Chicago, protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Henry W. King & Co. and 41 other manufacturers of clothing of the city of Chicago, protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of E. Johansen and 14 other cigar-manufacturers of Chicago, for a uniform duty on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the Chicago Board of Trade, favoring the adoption of House bill 4182, providing for an international maritime conference for the better protection and care of animals in transit—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire: Memorial of the Board of Trade of the city of Nashua, N. H., in favor of the early completion of the Sandy Bay breakwater and harbor of refuge—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, memorial of the farmers engaged in the tobacco culture and cigar manufacturers of Hinsdale, N. H., protesting against the tobacco schedules of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BANKHEAD: Petition of 280 miners of Brookside, Ala., protesting against placing coal and iron on the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRANCH: Petition of citizens of Carteret County, N. C., to open Darien Inlet between Portsmouth and Cape Lookout—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of W. F. Willis, of Plymouth, N. C., for relief for property destroyed by United States Government in the town of Plymouth, N. C., during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Greenville Tobacco Board of Trade, protesting against the increased duty on cigarettes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BROSIUS: Resolutions of Cigar-makers' Union, No. 126, Ephratah, Pa., against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CRISP (by request): Memorial from the Legislature of Idaho, praying that certain waters in that State be drained—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. DALZELL: Resolutions of the Board of Trade of McKeesport, Pa., against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DE FOREST: Petition of sundry citizens of Danbury, Conn., against proposed change of duty on manufactured hats—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, remonstrance of sundry citizens of Connecticut, against reduction of duty on imported leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DINSMORE: Petition of James Fanning for his relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of George Glenn, of Madison County, Ark., for his relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELLIS of Oregon: Petition of 31 citizens of Hardman, Oregon, protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts: Protests of 240 citizens of Hadley; 153 of Amherst; 123 of Agawam; 97 of Northfield, and 63 more of Westfield, all in the State of Massachusetts, interested in the cultivation of tobacco, against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of 777 employés of the Otis Mills, Ware, Mass., irrespective of party affiliations, against the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of 83 citizens of Winchendon, Mass., against the Wilson bill, especially as it affects manufacturing of toys—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of 44 employés of the Swift River Company, Enfield, Mass., irrespective of party affiliations, against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of 21 employés of the Excelsior Woolen Company, Wales, Mass., irrespective of party affiliations, against the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GROUT: Protest of the lithographers of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City, against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of the All Tobacco Cigarettes Manufacturers' Association of the United States, against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, remonstrance of H. C. Battey, Proctorsville, Vt., and 194 other farmers, laborers, and employés of the Taft, Burbank & Murdock Woolen Mills, against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HAINES: Petition of James A. Hover and other citizens of Columbiaville, N. Y., against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of Doty & Scrimgeour, of New York (manufacturers of surface-coated paper), against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, remonstrance against the passage of the Wilson bill from employés of the Valatie (N. Y.) Cotton Mills—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of A. B. Knowlson and other citizens of Sand Lake, N. Y., against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of the employés of the Valatie Cotton Mills, the Wild Manufacturing Company, and the Valatie Paper Mill Company, against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of Gilbert Sherwood and other persons of Valatie, N. Y., against the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HAUGEN: Resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of West Superior, Wis., against placing iron ore on the free list as proposed in the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois: Petition of Mrs. Mathilda S. Lawler, widow of Nicholas Lawler, late a soldier in the Fourth United States Artillery, praying for a pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa: Petition of J. E. B. Hudson and 402 other citizens and old soldiers of Iowa, praying for legislation to prevent suspension of pensions until after due notice of proof of fraud, and for restoration of suspended pensions until such proofs are secured—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOOKER of New York: Petition of 35 farmers of Cattaraugus County, N. Y., against the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KEM: Petition of citizens of O'Neill, Nebr., asking for a uniform rate of duty of 35 cents on all unstemmed leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: Petition and resolutions passed and signed by the Philadelphia Board of Trade, against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition signed by W. A. Williams and 135 others, citizens of Clayton, N. J., against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition signed by Abram Simmerman and 20 others, against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition signed by John Campbell and 179 others of Glassboro, N. J., against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MALLORY: Petition of levee men to dredge Charlotte Harbor, Fla., asking an appropriation of $150,000—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also (by request), petition of citizens of Crystal River, Fla., praying retention of existing tariff on lead pencils—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MARVIN of New York: Remonstrance of Howard Greenleaf and 37 other citizens of Hampton, Orange County, N. Y., against reduction of tariff rates on tissue papers of all kinds—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MARTIN of Indiana: Petition of sundry citizens of Peru, Ind., for the defeat of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Local Union, No. 73, American Flint Glass Workers' Union, of Marion, Ind., against the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Maj. H. B. Sayler and 64 other ex-Union soldiers, for the passage of the bill (H. R. 1109) to correct the military record of Charles A. Larkin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McDEARMON: Petition of Mrs. Melissa Gill, for passage of a bill to authorize the Secretary of War to place the name of George W. Gill on the rolls and records of Company I, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry, to accompany House bill 5149—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MEIKELJOHN: Protest of miners of lead ores in Missouri and other Western States, against the provisions in the tariff bill which prescribes 15 per cent ad valorem on lead ores and admits duty free all ores in which the value in silver is greater than that of lead—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. O'NEIL: Petition of Boston Fruit and Produce Exchange for completion of Harbor of Refuge at Cape Ann, Mass.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania: Petition of the employés of Irvington Woolen Mills, Delaware County, Pa., protesting against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the employés of Wolfender, Shaw & Co., Limited, of Cardington, Delaware County, Pa., protesting against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the cigarette manufacturers, protesting against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, two petitions of the manufacturers and employés in the manufacture of gold, silver, aluminum, and metal leaf, protesting against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the employers of labor, workingmen, citizens, and others of Parkersburg, Chester County, Pa., protesting against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of thread workers and spinners of fine cotton of New Jersey, protesting against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of lead miners of Southwest Missouri and Southeast Kansas, protesting against the passage of the Wilson bill as now framed—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, protesting against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the employés of I. & I. Eastwood, Lyndell, Pa., protesting against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut: Protest of farmers of Westchester, town of Colchester, Conn., against the tobacco schedule of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SPERRY: Petition of farmers, growers of cigar leaf tobacco, and their employés, protesting against the proposed reduction of duty on foreign wrappers—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEPHENSON: Memorial of workingmen, employers of labor, and others, citizens of Gogebic County, Mich., protesting against the proposed free admission of iron ore and declaring that such action by Congress would bring suffering and distress to all those engaged in the iron industry—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STRONG: Petition of Martin Hazzard and 37 other members of Lodge No. 41 of Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, of Findlay, Ohio, against the passage of the so-called Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York: Protest by 531 employés of the Bausch & Dombe Optical Company, against the passage of the Wilson bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama: Papers in the claim of John D. Tanner, of Madison County, Ala.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WOOMER: Petition of Martin Good and 20 employés engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods, of Highspire, Pa., against the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania: Petition of Adam Smith and other farmers of Bradford County, Pa., against the reduction of duty on leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 12, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CHIPMAN.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on next Friday at 3 o'clock I shall call up the resolutions of the House of Representatives in reference to the death of Hon. John Logan Chipman, a member of that body from the State of Michigan.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House providing for the appointment of a special joint committee of the House and Senate to investigate and consider the rank, pay, and other matters relating to the personnel of the Navy.

The message also communicated a request to return to the House the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year 1892.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented the memorial of John S. Krier and other citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Daniel Scotten & Co., of Detroit, Mich., praying for an amendment of the present tariff law so as to permit the sale of leaf tobacco in its natural state free of tax; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR. I present a petition of the Central Labor Union of Worcester, Mass., indorsing the Wilson bill in its own behalf and that of twenty-four labor organizations which it represents. I suppose these gentlemen are very much interested in the reduction of the hours of labor, as the passage of the Wilson bill, in accordance with the view of the petitioners, carried to an extreme, would prevent there being any hours of labor at all to a very large number of workingmen. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the Rubber Garment Workers' Local Union, No. 51, of Boston, Mass., praying for the governmental control of the telegraph service; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of Local Assembly, No. 7954, Knights of Labor, of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the passage of the Wilson tariff bill and for the imposition of an income tax; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of Hayes Young and 24 other citizens of Champaign County, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of manufacturers of woolen and worsted goods of Cincinnati and Hamilton, Ohio, praying that the duty on wool and woolen goods be left undisturbed by Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HILL presented a petition of members of the Medical Society of Oneida County, N. Y., praying for the establishment of a bureau of public health within the Treasury Department; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

He also presented a memorial of growers of tobacco in New York County, N. Y., remonstrating against the proposed reduction of duty on foreign wrappers to $1 per pound for unstemmed and $1.25 for stemmed; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the employés of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, of Rochester, N. Y., remonstrating against any change in the present duty on optical goods; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of cabinet-makers, wood-carvers, carpenters, upholsterers, trimmers, and others, manufacturers of New York City, remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAWLEY. I present the memorial of K. H. Leavin and 81 others, operatives in the Kirk Mills, of Central Village, Conn., which are practically idle now, remonstrating against the common enemy—the Wilson tariff bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAWLEY. I also present the memorial of Edward Conant and 49 other citizens of Bozrahville, Conn., workers in the mills there, which is significant because of the following introduction:

We, the undersigned, overseers and operatives in the Bozrahville mills, irrespective of political party, men and women, acting as free agents and independent of the suggestions or the request of our employers, etc.

The memorialists then proceed to protest against the proposed Wilson tariff bill. I see in the public press utterances in various places which I can not properly mention implying that the people who sign these memorials by myriads are ordered to do so. Any man familiar with New England society at least (the rest of the country can speak for itself) knows that no greater insult could be given to the operatives in any mill than to have anything in the nature of an order, or a request which could be distorted into practically an order, to them. It would create an instant rebellion, even if it were one in which they themselves would starve.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN presented the petition of W. P. Cotton and other cigar manufacturers of Macon and Clinton, Mich., and a petition of Brown Brothers and 21 other cigar manufacturers of Detroit, Mich., praying for the imposition of a duty of 35 per cent on unstemmed leaf tobacco; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of J. H. Krier and 107 other citizens of Michigamme, Mich., and the memorial of H. E. Hosking and 80 other business men, workingmen, and employers of labor, of Forsyth, Mich., remonstrating against any change in the duty on iron ore; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PASCO presented a memorial of C. E. Herrick and 79 other citizens of Crystal River, Fla., remonstrating against the reduction of duty on lead pencils, as proposed in the Wilson tariff bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the City Council of Palatka, Fla., praying that a liberal appropriation be made for the improvement of the St. Johns River at Orange Mills Flats by deepening the channel at that point; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of R. McConathy and 45 other business men of Florida, praying that a term of the United States circuit and district court be held at Ocala, Marion County, Fla.; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of J. B. Wall and 22 other members of the bar at Tampa, Fla., praying for the holding of a regular term of the United States courts at Ocala, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, covering the operations of the Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, be printed; and that there be printed 8,000 extra copies, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries; the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR OF BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 8,000 copies of the thirteenth annual report of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, with accompanying papers and illustrations, and uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for distribution by the Bureau of Ethnology; the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 1425) for the relief of Mrs. Maria McMurdie; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives requesting the Senate to return to that body the Senate concurrent resolution to print the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the request of the House of Representatives to return the concurrent resolution be complied with.

The motion was agreed to.

AMOUNT OF GOLD COIN.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to call up the resolution heretofore submitted by me in reference to the amount of gold coin in the country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate from what source or sources the gold coin in this country outside of the Treasury of the United States was increased to the amount of $83,839,482 during the fiscal year 1893, as expressed in his recent report for that year, and if derived from different sources, give the sources respectively from which derived and the amount thereof.

Mr. ALLEN. My object in introducing this resolution, and asking its adoption is to correct what appears to be an evident mistake in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1893. On page 10 of his report the Secretary of the Treasury gives as the total gold coinage for the fiscal year 1893, $30,038,140. On page 11 of the same report he says:

The movement of gold for the fiscal year shows an excess of exports over imports of $86,897,275.

On page 13 of his report the Secretary of the Treasury informs us that the increase of gold in this country outside of the banks for the same year was $86,869,482. The difference between the sum which the Secretary of the Treasury says was against us in the balance of trade for the fiscal year 1893 and the amount of our coinage was $56,859,135.

We can only obtain gold coin from two sources, the mines and by importation. It is quite apparent to me that this is a mistake which in its very nature is calculated to mislead the people of the country and deceive them with reference to the increase of the gold coin in this country for the year 1893.

I believe it to be due to the Secretary of the Treasury and to Congress and to the country at large that if this is a mistake it shall be promptly corrected, or if it is not a mistake that we shall have the data upon which the Secretary of the Treasury bases his conclusion. For that purpose, and not for the purpose of burdening the Secretary of the Treasury at all, I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator from Nebraska would amend the resolution by saying "increased to the amount stated in his report," without stating the sum, because the resolution in its present form commits the Senate to an interpretation of the report.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I for one have not had an opportunity to investigate the matter. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's desire for the information, but on the other hand, I do not think the Senate should affirm a fact unless it has been inquired into to see that there is no mistake about it.

Mr. ALLEN. I am perfectly willing to have the resolution amended in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will adopt the phrase "increased to the amount stated in the Secretary's report," without putting in any particular sum, I shall then make no objection to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts move the amendment?

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out of the resolution all after the word "amount" down to the words "in his," and insert "stated," and to strike out "that year" and insert "the year 1893."

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have the resolution read as modified.

Mr. HOAR. I will read it myself, if the Senator please.

Mr. ALLISON. That is better.

Mr. HOAR. It will then read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate from what source or sources the gold coin in this country outside of the Treasury of the United States was increased to the amount stated in his recent report for the year 1893, etc.

I move that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad if the Senator from Nebraska would have read that portion of the Secretary's report on which he bases the resolution. He may have read it in the beginning of his observations, but I was unable to hear what he said.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be made first.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly; I have no objection to the amendment

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be considered as agreed to. It is agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. For the information of the Senator from Iowa I will read a portion of the report. On page 10 of the report the following language is used:

The coinage during the year consisted of 97,280,875 pieces, valued as follows:

Gold	$30,038,140.00
Silver dollars	5,343,715.00
Subsidiary silver	7,217,220.90
Minor coins	1,085,102.90
Total	43,085,178.80

On page 11 of the report, under the title of imports and exports, the Secretary says:

The movement of gold for the fiscal year shows an excess of exports over imports of $86,897,275, while the excess for the fiscal year 1892 was only $142,654.

The exports of silver exceeded the imports by $7,653,813, being an increase over the fiscal year 1892 in the net exports of $2,617,985.

Passing over page 13 of the report, the Secretary of the Treasury gives a table of money outside of the Treasury, the first item of which is as follows:

Gold coin, November 1, 1892, $411,252,197; November 1, 1893, $498,121,679; increase, $86,869,482.

There is evidently a mistake in the report in this respect. The Secretary of the Treasury gives us to distinctly understand that the balance of gold coin against us for the year 1893 was $86,897,275, while almost in the same breath we are told that there was an increase of more than that amount outside of the Treasury Department. This increase could only come from two sources, from our mines and mintage or from importations. We are distinctly told that it did not come by importation, because the balance of trade was against us.

Mr. STEWART. How much was the increase by coinage?

Mr. ALLEN. The increase by coinage was $30,038,140.

Mr. STEWART. Then there would be an increase by the amount paid out of the Treasury during that period, which, if I recollect aright, was a little over $20,000,000. That would leave in round numbers about $50,000,000, when subtracted from the $86,000,000.

Mr. ALLEN. Subtracting that, it leaves $56,000,000.

Mr. STEWART. About $56,000,000. I was unable to account for that sum. I have not the figures before me, but I found over $50,000,000 that I myself was unable to account for in the report. I looked at that point carefully.

Mr. ALLEN. The sole purpose I have in introducing the resolution is to correct what appears to me to be a mistake in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. I think it is due to the Secretary, it is certainly due to Congress and the country, if this was a mistake, that we shall be officially informed of that fact, and that it may be placed upon record concurrently with the report. If it be correct, then I think the Congress and the country are entitled to the data in the possession of the Secretary of the Treasury from which he reaches this conclusion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. GORMAN, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GRAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and twenty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 15, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 12, 1894.

MINISTER RESIDENT AND CONSUL-GENERAL.

John M. B. Sill, of Michigan, to be minister resident and consul-general of the United States to Korea.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

To be post chaplain.

The Rev. James Wilson Hillman, of New York.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Artillery arm.

First Lieut. Henry J. Reilly, Fifth Artillery, to be captain.

Second Lieut. Oscar I. Straub, First Artillery, to be first lieutenant.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

John B. Malony, of Michigan, to be collector of customs for the district of Detroit, in the State of Michigan.

DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

Robert E. Preston, of the District of Columbia, to be Director of the Mint.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Shaw F. Neely, of Kansas, to be marshal of the United States for the district of Kansas.

APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

Simon C. Karrer, of Michigan, to be appraiser of merchandise in the district of Detroit, in the State of Michigan.

REGISTERS OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Sylvester Hull, of Redding, Cal., to be register of the land office at Redding, Cal.

John I. Lee, of Ashland, Kans., to be register of the land office at Dodge City, Kans.

James N. Fike, of Colby, Kans., to be register of the land office at Colby, Kans.

SURVEYORS OF CUSTOMS.

W. B. Humphrey, of Iowa, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Sioux City, in the State of Iowa.

James R. Johnston, of Illinois, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Rock Island, in the State of Illinois.

COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Grant Herring, of Pennsylvania, to be collector of internal revenue for the twelfth district of Pennsylvania.

Raymond E. Shearer, of Pennsylvania, to be collector of internal revenue for the ninth district of Pennsylvania.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Marvin E. Mathews, of Marshall, Minn., to be receiver of public moneys at Marshall, Minn.

Colin F. Macdonald, of St. Cloud, Minn., to be receiver of public moneys at St. Cloud, Minn.

James F. Thompson, of Eureka, Cal., to be receiver of public moneys at Humboldt, Cal.

Lafayette S. Barnes, of Redding, Cal., to be receiver of public moneys at Redding, Cal.

Thomas J. McCue, of Norton, Kans., to be receiver of public moneys at Colby, Kans.

George T. Crist, of Santa Fe, Kans., to be receiver of public moneys at Dodge City, Kans.

INDIAN AGENTS.

Charles E. Davis, of Mount Auburn, Ill., to be agent for the Indians of the Colorado River Agency in Arizona.

George W. Harper, of Carrollton, Ga., to be agent for the Indians of the Umatilla Agency in Oregon.

Isaac J. Wootten, of Laurel, Del., to be agent for the Indians of the Nevada Agency in Nevada.

POSTMASTERS.

James A. McDonald, to be postmaster at Mamaroneck, in the county of Westchester and State of New York.

John J. Kane, to be postmaster at Sing Sing, in the county of Westchester and State of New York.

John C. Edwards, to be postmaster at Yazoo City, in the county of Yazoo and State of Mississippi.

Thomas R. Wilcockson, to be postmaster at Paragould, in the county of Greene and State of Arkansas.
Samuel B. Holmes, to be postmaster at Frankfort, in the county of Franklin and State of Kentucky.
Charles P. Weaver, to be postmaster at Louisville, in the county of Jefferson and State of Kentucky.
Jonas Rosenthal, to be postmaster at Alexandria, in the county of Rapides and State of Louisiana.
Yoel G. Rust, to be postmaster at Albany, in the county of Dougherty and State of Georgia.
Hettie J. Foose, to be postmaster at Kosciusko, in the county of Attala and State of Mississippi.
Abner K. Northrop, to be postmaster at Pass Christian, in the county of Harrison and State of Mississippi.
Ella Harris, to be postmaster at Hazlehurst, in the county of Copiah and State of Mississippi.
Charles F. Rankin, to be postmaster at Brewton, in the county of Escambia and State of Alabama.
W. I. Branagan, to be postmaster at Emmettsburg, in the county of Palo Alto and State of Iowa.
John S. Sidey, to be postmaster at Greenfield, in the county of Adair and State of Iowa.
Abram J. Howe, to be postmaster at Glenwood, in the county of Mills and State of Iowa.
W. C. Scrimgeour, to be postmaster at Belle Plaine, in the county of Benton and State of Iowa.
John F. Kent, to be postmaster at Dows, in the county of Wright and State of Iowa.
Joseph M. Bishop, to be postmaster at State Center, in the county of Marshall and State of Iowa.
Jonas F. Moyer, to be postmaster at Catasauqua, in the county of Lehigh and State of Pennsylvania.
Arnold Smouse, to be postmaster at Mount Vernon, in the county of Linn and State of Iowa.
Martin G. Stiger, to be postmaster at Toledo, in the county of Tama and State of Iowa.
John A. Flannery, to be postmaster at Laurel, in the county of Prince George's and State of Maryland.
John Wolf, to be postmaster at Bangor, in the county of Northampton and State of Pennsylvania.
Frank P. Sharkey, to be postmaster at Mauch Chunk, in the county of Carbon and State of Pennsylvania.
W. P. Walsh, to be postmaster at Smethport, in the county of McKean and State of Pennsylvania.
George B. Nye, to be postmaster at Ellwood City, in the county of Lawrence and State of Pennsylvania.
John E. Malone, to be postmaster at Lancaster, in the county of Lancaster and State of Pennsylvania.
Charles N. Berner, to be postmaster at Clifton, in the county of Washington and State of Kansas.
John G. White, to be postmaster at Abingdon, in the county of Washington and State of Virginia.
Emmett M. Morrison, to be postmaster at Smithfield, in the county of Isle of Wight and State of Virginia.
William Lee, to be postmaster at Casey, in the county of Clark and State of Illinois.
William H. Harry, to be postmaster at Watseka, in the county of Iroquois and State of Illinois.
Abbie E. Libby, to be postmaster at Marysville, in the county of Marshall and State of Kansas.
Allen G. Clampitt, to be postmaster at Highwood, in the county of Lake and State of Illinois.
Leonard W. Chambers, to be postmaster at Jacksonville, in the county of Morgan and State of Illinois.
John W. Rout, to be postmaster at Stanford, in the county of Lincoln and State of Kentucky.
Samuel W. Taliaferro, to be postmaster at Roseville, in the county of Warren and State of Illinois.
James F. Robertson, to be postmaster at Camp Point, in the county of Adams and State of Illinois.
Ephriam A. Ray, to be postmaster at Oregon, in the county of Ogle and State of Illinois.
Emanuel B. Thumma, to be postmaster at Garrett, in the county of Dekalb and State of Indiana.
Oliver P. Basford, to be postmaster at Flatonia, in the county of Fayette and State of Texas.
Carroll M. Lovell, to be postmaster at Dickson, in the county of Dickson and State of Tennessee.
James C. Brophy, to be postmaster at Shortsville, in the county of Ontario and State of New York.
Frederick L. Churchill, to be postmaster at Plymouth, in the county of Plymouth and State of Massachusetts.
Thomas K. Fleming, to be postmaster at Petersburg, in county of Pike and State of Indiana.
John Julian, to be postmaster at El Paso, in the county of El Paso and State of Texas.
David H. Mock, to be postmaster at Webb City, in the county of Jasper and State of Missouri.
John W. Mason, to be postmaster at Mexico, in the county of Audrain and State of Missouri.
Thomas B. Gillouly, to be postmaster at Ridgway, in the county of Elk and State of Pennsylvania.
Thomas A. Butkiewicz, to be postmaster at Nanticoke, in the county of Luzerne and State of Pennsylvania.
Ed. E. King, to be postmaster at Brownwood, in the county of Brown and State of Texas.
Frank Bucholtz, to be postmaster at Fort Bragg, in the county of Mendocino and State of California.
Leslie M. Dennis, to be postmaster at Redding, in the county of Shasta and State of California.
Elijah W. Rawls, to be postmaster at Tarboro, in the county of Edgecombe and State of North Carolina.
George E. Sawyers, to be postmaster at Santa Barbara, in the county of Santa Barbara and State of California.
S. J. Mayock, to be postmaster at Gilroy, in the county of Santa Clara and State of California.
Fannie Ingram, to be postmaster at Monterey, in the county of Monterey and State of California.
John A. Monaghan, to be postmaster at Nokomis, in the county of Montgomery and State of Illinois.
Albert F. Nash, to be postmaster at Sioux City, in the county of Woodbury and State of Iowa.
Alfred E. Haven, to be postmaster at Faribault, in the county of Rice and State of Minnesota.
Jacob Marx, to be postmaster at Aurora in the county of Kane and State of Illinois.
Samuel W. Chapman, to be postmaster at Elgin, in the county of Kane and State of Illinois.
John C. McGrath, to be postmaster at Jerseyville, in the county of Jersey and State of Illinois.
John Topp, to be postmaster at Columbus, in the county of Columbia and State of Wisconsin.
Fred A. Lischer, to be postmaster at Davenport, in the county of Scott and State of Iowa.
George E. Young, to be postmaster at Amboy, in the county of Lee and State of Illinois.
Fergus F. Green, to be postmaster at Shawano, in the county of Shawano and State of Wisconsin.
Robert M. Crawford, to be postmaster at Mineral Point, in the county of Iowa and State of Wisconsin.
Samuel M. Sinead, to be postmaster at Fond du Lac, in the county of Fond du Lac and State of Wisconsin.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 12, 1894.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. HAGBY.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to lay before the House executive communications.

LAWS OF OKLAHOMA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting two copies of the Laws of Oklahoma for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. These copies of the laws furnished the House the Chair has directed to be placed in the House library. The communication will lie on the table.

INSPECTION OF IRON AND STEEL BOILER-PLATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1920) to amend section 4430, Title LII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, with a Senate amendment.

Mr. DALZELL. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

Amend the title by adding: "relative to inspection of iron or steel boiler-plates."

The amendment was agreed to.

WILLIAM E. WOODBRIDGE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 418) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of William E. Woodbridge for compensation for the use by the United States of his invention relating to projectiles, for which letters patent were ordered to issue to him March 25, 1852.

Mr. KRIBBS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] is absent, and I ask that the bill be laid on the table temporarily.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

EL CALLAO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 432) to provide an American register for the steamer El Callao; which was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

PERSONNEL OF THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a concurrent resolution relative to appointment of committees of the House and Senate to consider the personnel of the Navy, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

On page 1, line 2, strike out all after "concurred" down to and including "Senate," in line 8, and insert: "that subcommittees of the Committees on Naval Affairs of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, to be selected by each of said committees, are hereby directed to act jointly.

Page 2, line 6, after "convenient," insert: "to said committees." On page 2, line 8, strike out all after "premises" down to and including "possible," in line 12.

Strike out the preamble.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments to the House resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand the regular order.

HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], requesting the President to send to the House of Representatives further information on Hawaiian affairs, and I ask immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent. The gentleman has the right to present the report and have it printed; and it will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the proposition?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the House of Representatives, if not inconsistent with the public interests, all information received since his message of December 18, 1893, or not transmitted therewith and now in his possession, touching recent reported events in the Hawaiian Islands, any attempt to overturn the republican government thereof and erect a monarchy in its stead, and especially whether any representative, officer, vessel, or armed forces of the United States took part in such recent attempts to subvert a friendly government; and if so, by whose orders they acted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky reports this resolution back within the week, the Chair understands, and asks unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, does not the right to report, and has it not often been decided by the Chair that the right to report a privileged resolution carries with it the right of consideration?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. HITT. Has not that often been held by the Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Often. But this order under which we are acting especially dictates what we shall consider, and that the Chair shall not entertain any intervening motion, and the Chair held the other day, on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], that it might be reported and printed, and would not lose any of its privileged character, and that it could be called up as soon as the order under which we are acting is disposed of.

Mr. HITT. Then consideration could be reached now by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It could be reached by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent, as the Chair understands.

Mr. McCREARY. I had asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. HITT. I hope that will be granted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I was simply going to say that if unanimous consent is given for the consideration of this resolution I must insist that it include the resolution reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, which has hitherto been denied consideration. It seems that the House is now ruled by three members, and I do not think we should reduce the number to one.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. As the gentleman from Tennessee objects, I ask that the resolution lie upon the table for the present without losing its privilege.

The SPEAKER. It will not lose its privilege. It will be printed and will retain its place, subject to be called up after the special order has been exhausted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the Senate concurrent resolution to print the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year 1892.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. MARSHALL, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 1266) to extend and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Kansas and Arkansas Valley Railway to construct and operate additional lines of railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved February 24, A. D. 1891: in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolutions:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 8,000 copies of the thirteenth annual report of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, with accompanying papers and illustrations, and uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for distribution by the Bureau of Ethnology; the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Also:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, covering the operations of the Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, be printed, and that there be printed 8,000 extra copies, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries; the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 4114) to amend an act approved September 4, 1890, authorizing the New Orleans, Natchez and Fort Scott Railroad Company to construct two bridges across Bœuf River, in Louisiana; when the Speaker signed the same.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

The committees were called; when the following report was presented:

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5077) to amend an act of Congress approved May 12, 1890, granting to the Aransas Pass Harbor Company the right to improve Aransas Pass, reported in favor of its passage; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

The House then, pursuant to the special order, resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

THE TARIFF.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. EVERETT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] has still twenty minutes of his time remaining, which he desires to occupy.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, at the adjournment of the House yesterday afternoon, I was reviewing some of the contentions by which the measure before the House is sought to be supported by its advocates, and I had come, in the progress of my observations, to wool.

WOOL.

Now you put wool on the free list, because you put it in the category of raw material. Why call wool raw material? The farmer bestows upon it his labor, his skill, his intelligence, and his watchful care. It is touched by labor before it has value. Cloth you designate as a manufactured article and put it on the dutiable list.

But what do the economists say about that? The coat you wear has a history. Before the intervention of human labor the raw materials of that coat are air, water, heat, gas, light, and the various salts which enter into its composition. These are untouched by labor, have no value, and do not need protection. Now comes labor and converts these elements into sustenance for sheep; more labor and wool is produced, still more labor and yarn is the result, and still another acquisition of labor and cloth is produced, and yet another addition of labor and a coat rewards that accumulation of labor.

Now, I insist that upon any consistent, logical, and defensible theory of protection every one of these consecutive contributions of labor from the first furrow of the plough to the last stitch of the needle is entitled to protection if the corresponding foreign labor commands a lower scale of wages. Iron and coal and lumber are amenable to the same reasoning. Where was the value of the ore and the coal for the millions of years it lay buried in the earth? Labor touched it and it had value. Labor dug it out of the mine, reduced it to convenient forms for use, transported it and made it available as the raw material for higher forms of elaboration. It is the finished product of the laborers employed in its preparation for higher uses in as true a sense as wool and wheat are the finished product of the farmer who produces them or the web of cloth of the man who weaves it, and has equal claim to protection to the extent of the labor it represents.

DUTIES AND COST OF CONSUMPTION.

Another contention, which reminds one of the observation of one of our humorists, that it is better not to know so much than to know so many things that ain't so, is that the present high tariff adds largely to the cost of articles necessary to the comfort of the wage-earner. Such a claim must be due either to insincerity or to mental limitations.

It is known to everybody that the Finance Committee of the Senate of the United States recently concluded the most searching investigation ever made into the effect of the present tariff upon cost of living and wages, and the conclusions, acquiesced in by the entire committee, Republicans and Democrats alike, show that under our present tariff law the prices of commodities consumed by the masses of our people have steadily fallen, that the cost of living has steadily diminished, and the wages of labor as certainly increased.

This information is as accessible to Democrats as Republicans, and if they do not find it it is because they will not look for it. You know it takes a mind of some elevation to admit to its consideration facts which show it to have been in error, and our Democratic friends are much like the persecutors of Galileo, who refused to look through the telescope at the stars which they alleged did not exist.

WHO PAYS THE DUTY.

It is contended that the higher the duties the greater the burdens upon the people. It is amazing how much loose thinking and reckless talking there are on the vexed question of the incidence of defensive duties.

I am aware of no rule by which we can determine what proportion of the duty is paid respectively by the importer and the consumer. To say that the consumer pays the duty is as false as a general proposition as to say the producer pays it. In most cases neither one pays it all, but it is apportioned between them by a sliding scale governed by circumstances. When we produce an excess over consumption and there is a residue for export, the home price is fixed by the price of the exported portion, and any duty imposed upon that commodity is paid entirely by the foreign producer, as in the case of wheat from Canada.

In cases where foreign producers have the control of our markets and charge their own prices, we in most cases have much more to pay than we would if the industry was established here, and when we impose a duty to enable us to produce the commodity here that duty is paid by the foreign producers just to the extent that they are willing to lower their former price in order to hold our markets. If they have made great gains by their sales here before the duty was imposed they will be quite willing to lower their profits to continue their sales. They will fix their price at a point which will produce the largest aggregate profit. That this is so as a general rule is shown by the uniform lowering of prices of foreign goods when a duty is imposed on the imported commodity.

The extent to which they sometimes go to hold their grip on foreign markets, by the destruction of competition, is shown by the immense losses they are willing to undergo temporarily to accomplish their purpose. The report of the royal commissioner of England in 1854 contained this statement:

I believe that the laboring classes generally, in the manufacturing districts of this country, and especially in the iron and coal districts, are very little aware of the extent to which they are often indebted for being employed at all to the immense losses which their employers voluntarily incur in bad times in order to destroy foreign competition and to gain and keep possession of foreign markets. Authentic instances are well known of employers having at such times carried on their works at a loss amounting in the aggregate to three or four hundred thousand pounds in the course of as many years.

The amount of money foreigners have made by extortionate prices when they controlled our markets is beyond the power of calculation, and we have lost fabulous sums by allowing foreign producers to monopolize our markets when we could by imposing a duty manufacture for ourselves at greatly reduced prices.

The instance cited by Edward Everett is but one of many which illustrate how we have been robbed by failing to protect ourselves by import duties. Everett said, in 1831—that the extra amount paid for woolen blankets and clothing for the soldiers in the war of 1812 largely exceeded the amount of revenue derived from all tariffs from the foundation of the Government to that time, and that it would have been a saving to the Government if Congress had expended many millions in building up our manufactures.

The frequency with which foreign manufacturing establishments are removed to this country to escape the burdens of our defensive duties can have no rational explanation but that they believe the foreign producers pay the duties.

The English view of this subject finds a graphic illustration in the observations of an English free-trade paper. The London Fair Trade says:

If we are to retain our hold on foreign markets, wages must be kept down that the foreign tariffs may be overcome. When a foreign nation increases the tariff on a British product the cost of the establishment as well as the wages on this side the water are lowered to meet the change. Our manufacturers and working people make sacrifices to meet the extra duty, and we accordingly hear grumbling from both.

An American economic writer quotes from a British trade circular this statement of a Sheffield steel firm:

We have a very large steel trade in America amounting to a large proportion of our whole business, and in that market there is from various causes much competition; and these two causes, large trade and competition combined, have induced us to be satisfied with a smaller average of profit there than we have realized on the average in our other markets.

The same writer quotes these words from the statement of a London firm to its customers:

The very threat of an American protective duty has often had the effect to lower the price of the foreign article.

A further illustration is found in the fact that the English press is swift to unite with American free traders in condemning protective duties.

The Manchester (Eng.) Courier of November 28 says:

As they now stand, the proposals of the bill almost seem too good to be true. There will be rejoicing in more English towns than Bradford and Sheffield over this news.

The London Times, the great watchdog of English interests, is baying a deep-mouthed welcome to the Wilson bill. Tray, Blanche, and Sweetheart, little dogs and all, are yelping a chorus of glee, while in every industrial center of England rejoicing jubilees are shouting pæans of praise and making the welkin ring with an enthusiastic acclaim of welcome to the New American tariff reform bill.

MONOPOLIES AND TRUSTS.

Another contention is that under the present law the duties imposed exclude foreign goods from our markets, and thus by cutting off competition enable the home producers to fix the price of their wares, putting a tax upon consumers to the extent of the duty and breeding monopolies and trusts.

Well, are trusts the peculiar and characteristic sins of protective countries? Those who have given any attention to the subject are aware that England is the home of the trust. That commercial device is indigenous to free-trade countries. It has been for many years a part of the economic development of Great Britain. English commercial history teems with instances.

There are freight trusts, shipping trusts, steel-rail trusts, galvanized-iron trusts, wagon-axle trusts, cattle-shipping trusts, salt trusts, plate-glass trusts, and trusts in nearly all the trades in England. They sit at the commercial avenues of their export and lay their extortions upon the people of all nations. Here under our protective system, the conditions under which production is carried on for the most part are antagonistic to the creation of trusts, and they can only exist to a very limited extent, and can be made amenable to law and so restrained as to be comparatively harmless.

When gentlemen use the existence of an occasional "trust" in this country as an argument against protection, they certainly do not realize what concessions they make.

It means, Mr. Chairman, if it means anything, that we should surrender a portion of our markets to foreign producers in order to prevent one portion of our people from cheating the remainder; or, stating it another way, 65,000,000 of as highly civilized, moral, and upright people as live on the earth, with 3,000,000 square miles of the most bountifully endowed territory on the globe at their disposal; the biggest, healthiest, richest, and happiest country on earth; a country that grows one-sixth of the world's wheat, two-thirds of its corn, three-fourths of its cotton, a sixth of its wool, mines a third of its iron, a half of its copper, a third of its silver, a third of its gold, one-third of its coal, owns half the world's railroads, telegraphs, and telephones—in short a country that possesses half the world's instruments of civilization and produces from a third to half its crops and mineral products, and according to Mulhall, the greatest statistician in the world, adds two and a half millions of dollars to its accumulated wealth every time the earth turns upon its axis, that such a country and such a people actually require the intervention of a little island containing one-fortieth of the population and one four-hundredth of the territory of the globe to keep them from robbing each other; or to state it still differently, the industrial honor, commercial integrity, and the effective operation of the law of competition in trade among 65,000,000 of the noblest people upon whom the sun shines can only be maintained by the supervising control of foreign producers—such a proposition it seems to me discredits the human mind.

The American who proclaims such a sentiment must be either densely ignorant or insensible to shame; and the American who believes it must carry in his breast the corpse of his respect for his country. As well say that the people of this planet should have commercial intercourse with Venus or Mars to keep the former from robbing the other. The United States, with almost every climate, with all soils, and with boundless resources of materials for all the uses of civilization, would live, prosper, and grow richer and better in unceasing progress if every foot of earth beside was at the bottom of the sea.

REDUCTION OF WAGES.

The President in his recent message to Congress intimated that even if wages were reduced by the operation of this bill labor would have steady employment by reason of free raw material. I know the labor of the United States will reject with the scorn it deserves the compromising and degrading alternative of low wages or diminished employment. What they want and have a right to have under a sound American industrial régime is both constant employment and remunerative wages. Every man who reflects must know that a cut in wages means diminished consumption, and that means curtailed production and consequent material and social deterioration.

The efficiency of an industrial policy is in proportion to its capacity to employ our people at high wages and cheapen wealth. Civilization means a progressively increasing amount of wealth obtainable for a day's labor. Human welfare is realized in consumption; that depends on the means of buying, and that in its turn on wages. This is the chain of beneficence which connects human development and social progress with human exertion and sacrifice, and—

> Like nature's chain it matters not what link you strike,
> Tenth or ten thousandth breaks the chain alike.

THE CURSE OF LOW WAGES.

With all the wealth of blessings we have enjoyed in this favored country we are not so happy as to be without instances of the demoralizing and degrading influence of low wages. Man's inhumanity to man scarcely finds a more graphic illustration than in the sweating system in vogue in portions of our country, in which the profits of middlemen are sweated out of the poor who toil under them. It is a deep reproach to a Christian nation and can not be set too often before the American people in the scarlet livery of its real turpitude.

No man can explore the slums of our great cities, the tenement houses where this iniquity is fostered; where widows and orphans ply the needle for life; where mothers have nothing but a sewing machine between them and starvation; where daughters dangle over the vortex of moral death by the thread of a needle red with the ruddy drops of their crushed lives; where amid squalor, noxious odors, and deadly filth, despair, and degradation, twin children of human greed and neglect hold high carnival in abodes where humanity can not live, but only foster and gender disease and death to body and soul, without feeling profoundly sensible of the unspeakable curse of low wages.

Mr. Chairman, we can not afford to cheapen commodities at the cost of the workingman's wages. Franklin said, "A cup of tea, the cost of which helped to pay the salaries of tyrants, would choke any decent American." Similarly I would say that the cheapness of goods which is secured by cutting down American wages would be spurned by any honorable American.

FARM PRODUCTS.

The next vice of the bill which I desire to notice is placing the products of the farm on the free list or at a reduced rate. This, it seems to me, is the culminating grotesqueness of the bill. A recent writer in a magazine for November remarked that had the McKinley bill been constructed for the purpose of striking the greatest number of the largest class of industrial interests in Canada it could not have been more skillfully framed. It seems like a hard thing to say, yet I hazard nothing in the statement, that had the Wilson bill been constructed for the purpose of striking the greatest number of the largest class of industrial interests in the United States it could not have been more skillfully framed.

It was not the least of the excellencies of the McKinley bill that it called to mind the forgotten farmer. In enacting the existing law we had in view the interest of the farmers of the United States and not of Canada. Are we now to do penance for that act of patriotism by employing ourselves in legislation for the protection of Canadian farmers against the injustice of the United States in invading and occupying her own markets?

I have a statement compiled by a friend of Canada to show how the agricultural schedule of the present law affects the vital interests of Canada, and it is well for those who propose to legislate in the interest of Canadian farmers to understand it. I will incorporate the statement in my remarks at this point.

CANADA AND OUR NEW TARIFF.

[Erastus Wiman, in the Engineering Magazine for November.]

Now that it is contemplated by the recent mandate of the American people to revise the mode and extent of taxation, and obliterate the exaction of unnecessary burdens, especially upon the poorer classes, the question of the relation of the tariff to Canada forms a far more vital part of the programme than is generally supposed. If the expressed wish for change in the policy of the American people means anything, it means that there shall be no tax upon raw material, and that burdens on food supplies shall be obliterated. This affects a vast class of the people, and to a degree that nothing else affects them.

Inasmuch as Canada can supply the two elements of raw material and food products to an extent greater than any other country, the consideration of the Canada question in regard to the tariff is of prime importance. Had the McKinley bill been constructed for the purpose of striking the greatest number of the largest class of industrial interests in Canada, it could not have been more skillfully framed. The classes and interests most adversely affected are widespread, and are resident in all regions, not only comprising the majority of the populace, but affecting practically the financial stability and the debt-paying power of the entire community. To illustrate just how far the agricultural schedule of the McKinley tariff has affected the most vital interests, the following table shows the agricultural exports to the United States from Canada in the two years 1890 and 1892:

Articles.	1890.	1892.	Decrease.
Horses	$1,887,895	$1,094,461	$793,434
Horned cattle	104,623	21,327	83,296
Poultry	105,612	44,537	61,075
Eggs	1,793,104	494,409	1,298,695
Wool	235,436	200,125	35,311
Flax	175,563	112,360	63,203
Apples	149,479	27,661	121,818
Barley	4,582,561	1,354,485	3,228,076
Split pease	74,215	20,460	53,755
Hay	922,797	598,567	324,230
Malt	149,310	20	149,290
Potatoes	308,915	41,886	267,029
Vegetables	80,976	68,948	12,028
Totals	10,570,486	4,079,246	6,491,240

It shows that of certain products of the farm named, the exports to the United States from Canada in the year 1890 amounted to $10,500,000, in round numbers, while in 1892, under the present law, the exports were only $4,000,000, a decrease of $6,500,000, or about 75 per cent, in two years. Now, it is quite true that a market for $6,500,000 worth of farm products a year to the farmers on our northern border is but a bagatelle, and will neither make nor break them, yet in the apportionment of the rewards of industry between our own and a foreign country we may as well possess and enjoy our own.

THE TOBACCO SCHEDULE.

When you reach the tobacco schedule in this bill——

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BROSIUS. I can not yield, Mr. Chairman. My friend from Missouri will understand that a limited schedule will not admit of local accommodation. [Laughter.] I mean no discourtesy at all.

The tobacco schedule of this bill affords further illustration of the ineradicable disposition of Democrats to legislate for foreigners instead of Americans.

The antagonism of importers of the Asiatic weed and of some manufacturers of cigars to the present duty is based upon a number of somewhat inharmonious allegations:

First. That cigars can not be manufactured successfully for American consumption without using the Sumatra wrapper.

Second. That they have been compelled to discontinue the use of Sumatra wrappers on low-grade goods—that is, the 5-cent cigar, which supplies the larger part of American consumption.

Third. They are compelled to use inferior filler or reduce the wages of labor to meet the additional cost of the Sumatra wrappers.

Fourth. If the duty was reduced there would be more of the foreign wrapper used, and more American goods would be consumed as fillers and binders.

Fifth. The consumers will not stand the advance of Sumatra-covered cigars and cigarettes, and pipes would largely take the place of cigars. These objections to the present duty on Sumatra leaf, as stated by different witnesses before the Committee on Ways and Means, can not be easily reconciled, yet a fair understanding of the real situation can be extracted from them.

The fifth objection is not creditable to the human intellect, and I dismiss it with the observation that smokers who can not afford a high-priced cigar will smoke one they can afford. The truth is that with the present duty Sumatra wrappers have given way to domestic wrappers on a portion of American consumption. The reduction of the duty means the relegation of the American wrapper to use as fillers and binders only—that is the milk in the cocoanut.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Pennsylvania has devoted to the production of leaf tobacco for the last fifteen years on an average about 28,000 acres of the best land in the State.

The product has averaged in those years at least 30,000,000 pounds a year.

In Lancaster County alone we have produced in thirty-two years about 400,000,000 pounds. We now produce about 15,000,000 pounds a year. According to the census of 1890 this is the greatest leaf tobacco producing county in the United States.

For many years the price all round averaged in the neighborhood of 14 cents per pound; but with the increase of Sumatran importations the price declined until, in 1890, just before the passage of the present tariff act, it reached the lowest figure known in the history of tobacco culture in Pennsylvania, as low as 5½ and 6 cents per pound. After the passage of the present act, and indeed before its final passage, in anticipation of its passage, the price began to rise, and the first crop sold after the present duty was imposed realized from 25 to 40 per cent more per pound than was obtained the previous year.

It has been estimated that the increased duty netted the tobacco farmers of Lancaster County alone in the neighborhood of a half million dollars the first year. But this was not the only benefit. In the ninth internal revenue district, consisting of several counties, in Pennsylvania, there are 2,453 cigar factories, whose output is about 627,321,550 cigars a year.

In Lancaster County alone there are from 750 to 800 cigar manufactories, large and small, in full operation. They furnish employment to about 8,000 persons.

Prior to the passage of the present law as many as 25 per cent of these factories used Sumatran wrappers. They were put on cigars sold at wholesale as low as $15 and $16 per thousand. The increased duty of $1.25 enhanced the price of the Sumatran goods so much that they could not be profitably used on cigars that sold for less than $28 or $30. Now, of the 627,321,550 cigars manufactured in the ninth internal revenue district three-fourths are the cheaper grades, and not more than 8 per cent of the factories use imported wrappers. So that the domestic wrappers has displaced the imported article on many millions of cigars, and to that extent increased the demand for home product.

In still another way domestic growers have been benefited by the increased duty. The high price of the Sumatran leaf has led manufacturers to economize in the manufacture of high-grade cigars by the use of a combination filler of domestic and Havana goods, thus increasing the demand for the inferior grades of our domestic product.

It costs to produce a pound of seedleaf tobacco about 8 or 9 cents, Havana about 10 cents per pound. In bad seasons not more than 25 per cent is fit for wrappers. If the product is of superior quality it may yield 60 or 70 per cent of wrappers. Good wrappers will at this time bring from 25 to 35 cents, and fillers from 1 to 5 cents a pound. In Lancaster County we are now producing seedleaf and Havana in the ratio of about 1 to 2.

The following tabulated statement further emphasizes the points made in the foregoing statement:

Imports of leaf tobacco for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1890, 1891, 1892, and 1893.

	Pounds.	Value.
1890.
Netherlands	9,734,999	$9,037,388
Cuba	16,916,605	7,106,233
All other countries	2,068,930	1,461,571
Total	28,720,674	17,605,192
1891.
Netherlands	4,908,545	4,682,493
Cuba	16,092,108	7,141,465
All other countries	2,060,355	1,460,204
Total	23,061,008	13,284,162
1892.
Netherlands	2,661,932	1,899,721
Cuba	18,432,323	7,997,015
All other countries	894,280	435,687
Total	21,988,535	10,332,423
1893.
Netherlands	5,374,765	5,078,315
Cuba	21,694,891	8,940,058
All other countries	1,040,914	684,756
Total	28,110,570	14,703,129

Estimated duty paid on Sumatra tobacco in the years named:

1890	$4,062,199.48
1891	9,817,050.00
1892	5,323,864.00
1893	10,749,530.00

These figures show that the present duty on Sumatran leaf tobacco yields abundant revenue to the Government as well as protection to home producers, thus carrying on its wings a double blessing.

The cigar manufacturers, too, have enjoyed their full quota of benefits from the existing duty Their protection even exceeds that of the leaf producers. When we look at the real protective feature of the duty, the farmer has decidedly the small end of it. In a paper submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means it is put in this way: The average value, the leaf imported at 35 cents duty, is 55 cents per pound. This duty is equivalent to 69 per cent ad valorem. Under the $2 rate, if the invoice value is $1 per pound the duty is equivalent to 200 per cent ad valorem. But one pound of Sumatra leaf will cover as many cigars as four pounds of fine domestic wrappers. Hence, so far as the American grower's crop is concerned, his protection is an ad valorem duty of 50 per cent.

Now, contrast this with the protection of the manufacturers, who have practically a monopoly of the domestic market. For distinctness of view let us put it in this way. If 1,000 Havana cigars weigh 14 pounds and cost $50, the present duty will be as follows:

Specific duty of $4.50 on 14 pounds	$63.00
25 per cent ad valorem	12.50
Total duty on 1,000 cigars	$75.50

It is thus seen that the manufacturers have the lion's share of the protection. They have been guarded with a solicitude that ought to convince anyone that faith with the cigar-maker has not been broken in the effort to save the producer.

The following statement shows the advantageous results to the manufacturers:

Statement showing the total importation of cigars into the United States for the years named.

	Pounds.	Value.
1890	1,250,217	$4,026,828
1891	885,139	3,386,899
1892	658,469	2,832,047
1893	654,095	2,831,171

This shows that importations of cigars have diminished since 1890 almost 50 per cent. When it is considered that Pennsylvania makes about one-fourth of all the cigars manufactured in the United States, it will easily be seen how a Pennsylvania industry has been benefited by the present duty on cigars.

The number of cigars taxed in the United States were:

Year ending June 30, 1890	4,087,889,983
Year ending June 30, 1891	4,474,832,767
Year ending June 30, 1892	4,548,799,417
Year ending June 30, 1893	4,814,302,117

This statement represents also approximately the number of cigars manufactured in the United States.

The following table shows the number of cigars manufactured in Pennsylvania in the years named:

1890	1,007,819,252
1891	1,169,699,963
1892	1,232,890,889

The following table shows the number of pounds of leaf tobacco manufactured into cigars in Pennsylvania in the years named:

1890	19,422,303
1891	22,056,396
1892	22,306,001

These figures show a progressively increasing business in Pennsylvania in the manufacture of cigars since the present tariff act went into operation, and verify the statement of Mr. Van Duzer, of New York, before the Committee on Ways and Means, that under the beneficent provisions of the present law the American wrapper had been restored and an industry re-established.

But it is said that the Sumatra leaf is demanded, and will come whatever the duty may be. If so, then let us derive revenue from it. It may be well to look into this and see what is the secret of this demand for the Asiatic weed. Whether a cigar is a luxury or a necessity, a comfort or a solace to the smoker, I will not decide. I know that everybody got along without it up to the time of Raleigh. The Romans conquered the world without it.

Neither Homer, nor Dante, nor Shakespeare ever enjoyed the solace of a fragrant Havana. Cæsar, Alexander, Demosthenes, and Cicero achieved their world-wide fame in total ignorance of the ravishing beauty of the Sumatra leaf; still, for the purpose of the argument, I will concede it to be necessary to human happiness, if not to human greatness.

The Sumatra leaf is not a superior smoking tobacco, but of most inferior quality. I have heard habitual smokers say they would not smoke a cigar made entirely of Sumatra leaf. It possesses no constituent of value to the smoker affecting either the palate or the nerves. It has been said that the street gamin who gets his smoking from the gutter would turn away with loathing from a cigar made solely of Sumatra. Mr. Morse, of New York, said before the committee in 1890 that the refuse or cuttings are so bitter that they can only be utilized by putting them in as fillers in such infinitesimal portions as to elude detection; and mostly it is put in the tip that is cut off before smoking. You must have the superior aroma of American or Cuban leaf or your cigar is worthless.

The fact is that the only characteristic of this singular leaf that creates a demand for it is its color. It appeals to the eye, and to that alone. It gratifies a mere fancy of the eye, as sublimated a taste as could enter into the æsthetic constitution of a human creature. To a blind smoker a Sumatra-covered cigar is not distinguishable from a fine American product. Mr. Morse, before the committee, aptly characterized it as a "dude" cigar, with nothing to commend it but its appearance; as unsafe to judge from its covering what is within as to guess the character of a man from the clothes that cover him, which every gentleman knows is very often suggestive of a fifty-dollar saddle on a twenty-dollar horse.

But the taste and the demand exist, and the inquiry I now put is, ought they to be gratified at the cost of this American industry? But for the fact, not creditable to us, that in the gratification of our appetites the sentiment of patriotism seems to have little part, a patriotic American smoker would spurn the "delight of the eye" that he can only enjoy upon the condition of supplanting the labor of Americans by that of half-civilized Asiatics. I am not, however, arguing for its entire exclusion. I am willing that those who have a fad or a fancy that they are willing to pay to have gratified should have an opportunity.

I only desire to curtail the importation so that the domestic market will not be relinquished entirely to the foreign product. I want the American industry to live and prosper, and to that end I would discourage the color fancy of fastidious Americans by making it costly to gratify. Cigar manufacturers say it took years to destroy the prejudice, nurtured by long habit, in favor of the imported Havana cigar. I do not want the prejudice in favor of a Sumatra wrapper to become inveterate. I want to nip it in the bud, so that we will not have to spend years hereafter in destroying it.

EFFECT OF THE DUTY.

What harm can come to any class from the proposed duty? It is a total misconception that supposes the manufacturing industry will be impaired. People will not stop smoking because Sumatra covered cigars are less abundant and cost more. The habit of smoking is not one that yields readily to difficulties. It has more courage and perseverance than many better habits. And it is growing more tenacious and aggressive every day.

At the World's Fair, in a great dining hall where ladies and gentlemen dined in company, I observed a poster on the wall containing this printed "solace to gentlemen" and insult to ladies: "Smoking permitted at these tables." In the United States House of Representatives, the greatest deliberative assembly, the most elevated theater of statesmanship on earth, a member can smoke with impunity. It is the only national legislative assembly in the world in which it is permitted. We have a rule against it, but it is not more observed than the unlucky law of Governor Kieft against smoking in New Amsterdam.

We seem to have imbibed the hazy notion of the renowned Wouter Van Twiller, that smoking induces thought, thought philosophy, and philosophy statesmanship. I may perhaps be excused for entertaining an old-fashioned notion that blowing clouds of tobacco smoke into the air of a legislative chamber like this, where statesmen are compelled to breathe and speak, will never make a nation great, if indeed it escapes consequences as lamentable as those which overtook our Dutch ancestors, as described with so much felicity by Irving, "transforming them from a goodly, burly race of folk to a lantern-jawed, smoke-dried, leathern-hide race of men."

At all events, it may convince us that the habit has become so inveterate that there is no danger of its being broken up by the duty on cigars, and that the consumption will continue whatever the imposts may be, and the only difference between a low and a high duty will be that in the latter case multitudes who now conceal the weeds they smoke under a foreign wrapper will turn to honest American cigars and consume the products of our own toil and our own labor and feel the better for it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, seeing, as every member of the House must see, that the result of the reduction of the duty as provided in the bill and the very result desired by the merchants of Amsterdam and the importers of this product of a Dutch monopoly will be, not at once but gradually, the displacement of American wrappers to whatever extent they are now used by the foreign product, will we not pause before declaring to American farmers that they must employ their soil in growing fillers and binders at from 1 to 5 cents per pound or quit the business?

Mr. Chairman, one hundred thousand men in the sixty-four counties of Pennsylvania and from the numerous counties in the tobacco-growing States are pleading with us to-day to save their industry from the ravages of this Asiatic invasion of our domestic markets. They are holding up to us the picture of a balance swinging between the nations, in one scale a Chinese cooly living on 10 cents a day, in the other an American farmer, and they wait with awed and wondering look to see in which scale the Congress of the United States will place the weight of its legislation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is a cosmopolitan benevolence with which these views do not harmonize, I have little sympathy with it. I differ from the honorable member from Illinois, Gen. BLACK, who said the other day that he wanted to be "a citizen of the world." I can wait for that day until the time by poets foretold—

> When the war drums beat no longer, and the battle flags are furled
> In the parliament of man, the federation of the world.

But for the present I am content to be a citizen of the United States. [Applause.] I am an American. I honor the sentiment of patriotism, and it seems to me that a man who loves another's country as well as his own is as unnatural, if not as immoral, as the man who loves his neighbor's wife equally with his own. [Laughter and applause.]

Our attachments are wisely circumscribed, that they may be intense. I would bestow the benefits of protection with equal prodigality upon all industries in all sections of the Union where needed.

I would send out copious streams from this reservoir of beneficence to fertilize the exertions of labor everywhere. I should have them flow like the four rivers from Eden's garden. Pison should flow west to the land of gold as well as grain. Gihon should flow south to enrich the whole land of Ethiopia. Hiddekel should go toward the east to nourish the mighty industries that grow there, while the Euphrates should carry gladness to the toilers and fatness to the land toward the north.

I would especially stimulate with its invigorating touch the mighty resources of the South which have yet to be awakened from the sleep of ages. I would make that fair land, described by one of her own sons as the fairest and richest domain of earth, where is centered all that can please and prosper human kind, where a perfect climate above a perfect soil yields to the husbandman every product of the temperate zone, where by night the cotton whitens beneath the stars and by day the wheat locks the sunshine in its bearded sheaf, where in the same field the clover steals the fragrance of the wind and the tobacco catches the quick aroma of the rains, where are mountains stored with exhaustless treasures, forests vast and primeval, and rivers that run wanton to the sea—I would make that great country grow and bloom and fruit for mankind under the magic touch of a wise protection. I would not suffer to be longer possible in any State in the Union the incident Henry W. Grady once told of happening in the State of Georgia. He may tell it in his own words. It illustrates what the condition of the entire country would now be if we had had a free-trade régime for a hundred years. Gentlemen of the South, I commend the wholesome chalice to your reluctant lips:

> I attended a funeral in Pickens County, Ga., of a poor man. They buried him in the midst of a marble quarry; they cut through solid marble to make his grave, and yet the little tombstone they put above him was from Vermont. They buried him in the heart of a pine forest, and yet the pine coffin was imported from Cincinnati. They buried him within touch of an iron mine, and yet the nails in his coffin, and the iron in the shovel that dug his grave were imported from Pittsburg. They buried him by the side of the best sheep-grazing country on the earth, and yet the wool in the coffin bands and the coffin bands themselves were brought from the North. The South did not furnish a thing on earth for that funeral but the corpse and the hole in the ground.
>
> [Great laughter.]
>
> There they put him away and the clods rattled down on his coffin; and they buried him in a New York coat and a Boston pair of shoes, and a pair of breeches from Chicago, and a shirt from Cincinnati, leaving him nothing to carry into the next world with him to remind him of the country in which he lived and for which he fought for four years but the chill of blood in his veins and the marrow in his bones.
>
> [Applause.]

Having thus depicted the situation of the South, he was candid enough to say that he believed the protective tariff had helped to remedy the difficulty.

But Mr. Grady was a capable man. The amplitude of his understanding enabled him to recognize a good thing when he saw it. Now, gentlemen, let me say good naturedly, why can not we have a few such Democrats in this House? Henry Watterson says, "This is a day of small men." The hour calls for great men, wise enough to perceive and virtuous enough to pursue their country's weal. Napoleon said he had 200,000,000 in his coffers and he would give them all for a Ney. We could afford to give all the contents of the Treasury of the United States at this hour, doubled and trebled, for one Democratic statesman who could lead his party out of the morass of imbecility and indecision in which it is sinking deeper and deeper every moment. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The opportunity is around them for greatness, for the fame and favor they are ambitious to achieve, and which only waits on some act of broad-gauged, capable, and patriotic statesmanship commensurate with the exigency that is upon us. But the opportunity seems to elude them. They can not embrace it. The water is at their lips but they can not drink. They stand in the midst of it like Tantalus in the flood, as expressed in lines which are an academic recollection:

> Who from circling floods in vain refreshment craves,
> And pines with thirst amid a sea of waves,
> When to his lip the water he applies,
> Back from his lip the treacherous water flies.

THE MISSION OF THE UNITED STATES.

If we are to be unmindful of our own, and to cherish the interests of other countries, there are manifold ways in which it can be done.

It may be that we might help the nations of Europe if we would receive and make our country an asylum for their defective population, their paupers and criminals and debased classes; but we could not do so without great injury to our own country, and no one would advocate such an immigration policy. Similarly we might confer a benefit on foreign countries by surrendering our markets to their goods produced by underpaid labor, but to do so would inflict immeasurable injury upon our own people.

This Republic has a part to play in the world's history, an exalted mission to fill. We are to be a nation of men-builders. The political economy we must practice is that which promotes the care, comfort, and culture of men. We are to be a conspicuous agency in the development of civilization and the enlargement of human liberty.

To make our work beneficent and fruitful in the highest degree, we must protect our people and secure the conditions most conducive to the kind of development we are seeking. We must allow our institutions to grow naturally from within, without impeding competition from alien influences. As far as our protective system is effective in guarding us against the incursion of influences that retard our progress on lines leading to the highest growth, whether it prevents the deterioration of our population by the admission of inferior peoples from abroad, or saves our industrial system and our high-grade remuneration for labor from the interference of inferior systems of industry and lower-grade wages, it must be admitted by everyone to be a good and wholesome system.

It has had a conspicuous agency in making this Republic what she is to-day, and a wise administration of the same system in the future will enable her to maintain her supremacy, and our children's children, lifting their vision above the shadow of a passing cloud, will see her as we now see her, in the vanguard of the world, at the head of the procession of the nations. They will see a land without a slave and a church without a scourge, the home of freedom, where intelligence is without price and conscience without a master; where every poor man's child sits down with the rich man's at the royal feast of knowledge and every man is a brother; where government is the image of the people's will, in whose expression the lowliest is the peer of the proudest and every man is a king; where the rich regard the poor and the poor respect the rich; where toil is honorable and labor fairly rewarded; where poverty is the exception and plenty the rule; where the exactions of government are least and justice lightens every burden; where labor is protected in honest thrift at home against the competition of pauper wages abroad, and every home is a temple where honor reigns, comfort smiles, and hope and love cheer; where the laws, customs, and principles of the people find a common object in the care, comfort, and culture of the human family, all tending to make the Republic what she is destined to be, the home of the noblest race, the largest liberty, the highest civilization, and the purest Christianity attainable by man. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

APPENDIX.

Imports of leaf tobacco from the Netherlands into the United States during each fiscal year from 1881 to 1893.

Years ending June 30.	Pounds.	Values.	Average rate of duty per pound.		Estimated duty.	Ad valorem per cent.
			A	B
1881	200,602	$140,665	$0.35	.35	$70,210.70	49.9
1882	782,763	487,127	.35	.35	273,967.05	56.2
1883	3,818,931	2,942,148	.40	.52	1,985,844.12	67.5
1884	603,536	480,702	.45	.52	313,838.72	65.2
1885	2,217,919	1,881,494	.50	.52	1,153,317.88	61.3
1886	4,000,519	3,394,156	.55	.52	2,080,269.88	61.2
1887	4,213,336	3,651,349	.55	.52	2,190,934.72	60
1888	5,801,472	5,634,765	.55	.52	3,047,965.44	54
1889	5,024,455	4,333,463	.55	.52	2,612,716.60	60.2
1890	9,734,999	9,037,388	.55	.52	4,062,199.48	44.9
1891	4,908,545	4,682,493	2.00	2.00	9,817,090.00	209.6
1892	2,661,932	1,809,721	2.00	2.00	5,323,864.00	280.2
1893	5,374,765	5,078,315	2.00	2.00	10,749,530.00	211.6

NOTE.—The two columns of average rate of duty are taken from the books of two of the large importing firms of Netherlands tobacco in New York. They are, therefore, based upon actual transactions; and I think it will be safe to assume that they are representative figures. I have taken the figures in the second column for multiplication, but the averages in the first column from 1883 to 1890 will be a fraction less than 52 cents a pound. The column headed "Duty" is based upon the supposition that all the tobacco represented in the first column went into consumption in the year of importation. This supposition is, of course, not scientifically true, as tobacco imported in one year may remain for a long time in warehouse before passing into consumption.

Statement showing by countries the quantities and values of cigars imported into the United States each year, ending June 30, from 1890 to 1893.

Countries.	1890.		1891.
	Pounds.	Value.	Pounds.	Value.
Austria	43	$130	81	$220
France	87	307	1,328	1,169
Germany	4,979	6,849	6,042	8,266
United Kingdom	6,173	20,621	8,432	24,887
Dominion of Canada	475	765	28	92
Mexico	7,184	12,981	7,961	12,639
Spain	500	303
British West Indies	827	1,451	735	1,610
Cuba	1,216,722	3,907,955	850,658	3,323,978
Netherlands (Sumata)	283	333	455	719
Turkey in Europe	11	28	55	69
Turkey in Africa	1,192	3,469	2,167	5,939
Phillippine Islands	7,034	8,218	4,813	4,569
Hongkong
China	1,220	1,382	1,612	1,814
All other countries	1,488	1,976	772	1,071
Total	1,250,217	4,020,828	885,139	3,396,804

Countries.	1892.		1893.
	Pounds.	Value.	Pounds.	Value.
Austria	56	$147
France	726	2,864
Germany	4,005	4,672
United Kingdom	6,593	25,881
Dominion of Canada	231	215
Mexico	10,187	13,314
Spain	15	16
British West Indies	495	1,231
Cuba	632,504	2,775,849	616,080	$2,706,502
Netherlands (Sumatra)	200	276
Turkey in Europe	40	53
Turkey in Africa
Phillippine Islands	292	407
Hongkong	7	52
China	110	131
All other countries	2,858	6,877	38,015	64,669
Total	658,169	2,832,047	654,095	2,831,171

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Chairman, it is my present intention to support this bill. I believe that it would be improved by some amendments. There are some amendments which I hope to have the privilege of bringing forward and supporting myself. I will say at the same time that if this bill should receive certain supplements which have been proposed, it might be my duty to withhold my support from it; for I should consider it as weighed down and vitiated by means of raising revenue which I should regard as unjust and unkind. And having said, sir, that I mean to support the bill, perhaps the best thing for me now to do would be to take my seat, for all of the arguments for and against this measure have been already presented, I believe, on the floor of the House and in accredited treatises on the subject with an energy of diction and a wealth of learning to which I can lay no possible claim. And moreover, Mr. Chairman, I believe there is a call from the whole country at this time for prompt action and not for talk.

But, sir, if I rise to add a few words to all the energetic and learned statements that have already been made upon the subject, it is because I do not wish to have it supposed that a member from the State of Massachusetts, brought up as I was in the old theories of protection, still clings to them and is prepared to acquiesce in the traditional views which so many of my colleagues now entertain. It is not, sir, because I sit on this side of the House and because I am ranked in the Democratic column that I am going to vote for this measure as a mere party measure. It is exactly the reverse. It is because I have believed for years that some such measure as this is demanded by broad patriotism and generous humanity that I am glad to be ranked with the Democratic party column and to be counted on their side. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If I had any wish, sir, to retain such connections as I once possessed with the Republican party, I should now wish them severed, because I believe the Republican party has been deaf to the call made on it by men all over the country who care very little for party and a great deal for what concerns the interest of every citizen.

In the tariff discussions of six or eight years ago the Republican leaders frankly acknowledged that a revision of the tariff was advisable, but said that such revision ought to be in the hands of its friends, and not of its enemies. In the confident expectation and belief that the friends of the tariff would revise it, many who had left the Republican ranks in 1884 and voted for Mr. Cleveland returned to the Republican party in 1888 and voted for Gen. Harrison.

I did not share in that expectation. I did not believe that those whose private and whose political interests had been so long connected with a system of protection, rising higher and yet higher, could be persuaded to make the needed reductions and to return to that low scale of duties which is favored by the great leaders who are confidently quoted by them, men like Hamilton and Clay. Well, sir, my apprehensions were justified. The Republican party came into power in 1888, and they did revise the tariff, and revised it with a vengeance, in 1890. And then, before the ink with which that bill was signed was fairly dry, the popular vote in 1890 declared against it. It was in operation for two years, and we received all those blessings which we have been informed on the other side of the House flowed so abundantly from the McKinley act. In 1892 the people who had been experiencing those blessings for two years called with a yet louder shout for the revision of the tariff, not by its friends, but by the Democratic party.

Now, our friends on the other side congratulate themselves on the vote of last autumn, which they think was a reversal of the popular decision. Let me say in reply to that, Mr. Chairman, that it is my conviction that the loss to the Democratic party in those States where it might have looked for a gain, is largely owing to the fact that when this Congress met in August, 1893, it did not avail itself of the opportunity put into its hands to revise the tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If, immediately after passing the repeal of the silver bill, we had addressed ourselves to the formation of a tariff bill, and as soon as another body condescended to confirm our action, they had had in their hands a revision of the tariff to act upon as soon as they saw fit, I believe that the popular voice as to the Democratic party would have been different.

Now, sir, as I look to the Democratic party for the only hope to change the protective system, I am glad to vote with its leaders, even if I dissent with them on some important doctrines. I know very well that my support of this bill is going to forfeit me votes, if I seek them, that I might have kept by conciliating the protective sentiment, and that will make no difference in the speech or the vote that I shall give. [Applause.] I agree with my animated and eloquent friend from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON], who spoke the other day, that this bill does not go far enough. [Applause.]

I wish that it contained many more reductions of the tariff. I wish that its free list was larger than it is, but I accept it as the best I can get now. If I thought this bill was offered as a finality; if, as some people say, our action now was to settle the tariff for ten or twenty years, I could hardly support it, but it is in the confident expectation that the reductions we make now are only the forerunners of greater reduction, and greater simplification in the future, that I am glad to take such measure of justice as we may receive now.

And, Mr. Chairman, I am not afraid of the charge of tariff tinkering and the suggestion that we must not alter the tariff as we need to from year to year. It seems to me the objection of tariff tinkering comes with poor grace from those who have altered the tariff some eight or ten times since they passed the Morrill tariff bill in the Congress of 1860-'61. No, sir; I quite grant that a system which has grown up like the protective system, by successive steps to its present height, can not be immediately destroyed by a single stroke, but I hail any attempt to reverse the process, and I make no doubt that the benefits resulting from even this imperfect measure will so commend it to the people of the United States that it will encourage them to ask still greater reductions, until we set the United States in the line of those countries which reduce their system of customs duties to the greatest simplicity and freedom consistent with the revenue needs of an economically administered government.

And I rejoice, sir, that the bill has been brought forward at this identical time. I know it is said this is a time of distress. I know it is said that in a time of business prostration we ought not to make great changes. It seems to me that a cry like that is always raised in the way of every reform, by those who believe in keeping things as they are. If a reform is proposed in a time of prosperity and content, it is said, "Oh, people are prosperous and contented and do not want any change." If a reform is proposed in a time of distress and discontent the cry always is, "Oh, surely this is no time to make organic changes when people are discontented and wretched."

The time to do a right thing, Mr. Chairman, is whenever those who believe it is right have the power to carry out what they think is right. [Applause.] The whole business and mercantile community have expected the Democratic party to make changes in the tariff since 1892, aye, since 1890. They expected us to do that if we did nothing else; and if we should turn aside now from their expectations and in answer to sudden protests stop in the work that we were sent here to effect, we should prove ourselves the knaves and fools that our enemies would like to have us prove ourselves.

The fundamental defense of protection in this country, ever since Mr. Clay took hold of it in the early twenties, is that it is the American system. That is the name that Clay gave to his protectionist ideas, and that has been repeated again and again in this House, that it is the American system.

Now, in my way of thinking, Mr. Chairman, there can be nothing more un-American, there can be nothing more utterly belonging to the Old World, more borrowed from the Old World, than the system of protection and restriction.

It is the old traditional policy of Europe, of Asia, and of Africa. At the time our Constitution was framed, practically every nation had a protective system; and it was supposed, of course, that each nation would try to encourage its own manufactures and to keep foreign manufactures out. If that idea is disputed, I would appeal to the authority of the great author of protective duties in this country. I would appeal to that celebrated report of Hamilton from which so many protectionists have drawn their armor and used the weapons for very different ends from what the great Secretary of the Treasury supposed. I will take his argument for extending the home market. He says:

> The embarrassments which have obscured our external trade have led to serious reflections on the necessity of enlarging the sphere of our domestic commerce. The restrictive regulations which in foreign markets have abridged the vent of the increasing surplus of our agricultural produce served to beget an earnest desire that a more extensive demand for that surplus may be created at home.—Hamilton's Works, III, 193.

Again, after stating very fairly the theory on which the Democratic party has always insisted, of the inexpediency of forcing manufactures into unnatural channels, he says:

> This mode of reasoning is founded upon facts and principles which have certainly respectable pretensions. If it had governed the conduct of nations more generally than it has done there is room to suppose that it might have carried them faster to prosperity and greatness than they have attained by the pursuit of maxims widely opposite.—Ibid., III, 194, 195.

Again:

> The manufacturing nations abridge the natural advantages of their situation through an unwillingness to permit the agricultural countries to enjoy the benefits of theirs, and sacrifice the interests of a mutually beneficial intercourse to the vain project of buying everything and selling nothing.—Ibid., III, 211.

[Applause.]

That was Alexander Hamilton

No, sir; it was because the old nations were still struggling in the bonds of the protective system that we were forced to adopt a policy which our great financier saw was inimical to the true laws of trade when flowing in its natural channels. It is strange to me to think the United States should imitate the old restrictive, paternal, timid policy of the feudal and arbitrary monarchies. I am amazed to see America say to her laborers, enjoying the advantages of our bounteous soil, her free institutions, her public education, her untrammelled thought, her peaceful life, that they must cower and crouch and bend and pray a paternal Government to protect them against what they call the pauper labor of Europe, underfed, underclothed, overworked, overtaxed to support standing armies and state churches under the fostering wings of the Black Eagles of Central Europe. [Applause.]

Is it for this, Mr. Chairman, that we have invited Italians and Germans to come to this country, that they might find here a paternal protection which they ran away from at home in the search of American liberty? [Applause.]

There rises instinctively to my lips, Mr. Chairman, when I hear these doctrines, the words which Edmund Burke spoke on the eve of the battle of Lexington, on the 26th of March, 1775, to the House of Commons, begging them in the name of ancestral freedom to abandon their absurd policy of restriction to America. I can make it applicable to you here, changing a very few words and not changing the sense at all, after this interval of one hundred and nineteen years.

As long as you have the wisdom to keep the sovereign authority of this country as the sanctuary of liberty, the sacred temple consecrated to our common faith, wherever the chosen race and sons of America worship freedom they will turn their faces towards you. The more they multiply the more friends you will have; the more ardently they love liberty the more perfect will be their obedience. Restriction they can have anywhere; it is a weed that grows in every soil; they may have it from Spain; they may have it from Prussia; but until you become lost to all feeling of your true interest and your natural dignity, freedom they can have from none but you. This is the commodity of price, of which you have the monopoly. Deny them this participation of freedom and you break that sole bond which originally made, and must still preserve, the unity of the Empire.

Yes, sir; everything that looks to freedom, to greater freedom, to perfect freedom, is American. It is indigenous. It belongs to our race. It is the growth of our soil. Whatever is restrictive, paternal, protective, is European, is Asiatic, is African, is borrowed. We have no art or part in it at all. [Applause.] Ah! sir, think of those words of Burke, "They may have it from Spain, they may have it from Prussia." What are the most highly-protected countries in the world? Italy, Spain, Russia. Yes, Russia; that truly protective government where the Czar is habitually known as the Little Father of his people. Do you want your agricultural laborers, whose product competes with the wheat of Russia, to be brought to the level of the peasant of the Ukraine by a system of protection such as is adopted in that country? Nay, that is not the perfection of it.

We can take a finer instance yet. Let us take the example of China. China has always protected her manufactures and her people more than any other country. China has always refused to sell her precious tea and silks, her ivory carvings, her lacquer boxes to the "foreign devils," except for good hard silver dollars, and she would not voluntarily take a pound of their manufactures. It was only at the mouth of the cannon that the European nations forced their way into the heart of China.

Now, look at her laborers, look at their morals, look at their food, look at their manners, look at their character; and then, when you have contemplated the very perfection of a protected race, build up higher and higher your wall of restrictive duties and shut out all the products of "foreign devils" until you have got your population after the regular pattern of American Celestials, fit to be photographed in order to tell them apart. [Great laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, the idea which underlies that Chinese expression, "foreign devils," is the proper explanation of the whole theory of protection. [Laughter.] It proceeds on the notion that every foreigner is a kind of fiend, that good moral folks stay at home, work at home, buy at home, sell at home, and that, somehow, it is a crime and an offense to bring foreign goods into this country. It proceeds upon the idea that whatever is one nation's gain is another nation's loss, instead of on the truth that what benefits one nation in trade benefits all, and that the constant increase in the wealth of mankind which strong arms and strong brains all over the world bring out of the elements may be divided among all the nations so that all shall profit and none shall lose. And, if this theory is disputed by my protectionist friends again, let me read once more from Hamilton's report:

If one nation were in a condition to supply manufactured articles on better terms than another, that other might find an abundant indemnification in a superior capacity to furnish the produce of the soil, and a free exchange, mutually beneficial, of the commodities which each was able to supply on the best terms, might be carried on between them, supporting in full vigor the industry of each. (Volume 3, 214.)

No, the idea of protection that one nation's gain is another nation's loss is not American. It is not even Christian; it is heathen. [Laughter.] The ancient writers are full of it. Virgil looks forward to the golden age when every land shall bear everything; when navigation shall stop, and when the sheep shall run about the fields with their wool ready died red and yellow. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, that would be hard on the chemical schedule. [Renewed laughter.]

Horace tells us that it is all in vain that the providence of God has parted the land by the severing ocean if after all impious ships rush across the seas that never ought to have been touched. [Laughter.] There lingers in all the protective policy this idea, that it is something wicked to bring foreign goods into our country, and that that man ought to be cursed as wanting in patriotism who first freighted and launched his fatal and perfidious bark. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] This theory of protection, sir, excluding foreign products, has been carried to its highest perfection, perhaps, in the communities in the center of Darkest Africa. If you will read the tale of those matchless explorers that have laid bare the dark continent—American, English, German, Portuguese: Stanley, Livingstone, Cameron, Grant, Speke, Schweinfurth, Serpa—you will find in all the same story.

Those negro monarchies are in a high state, one might say, of culture. Their agricultures, their manufactures, their armies, their diplomacy, their court arrangements, are all conducted on an artful and artistic system which make the fictions of Rider Haggard seem tame and weak. They do not want any foreign products brought into their country. The only article they sell to the foreigner is their own captives in war, whom they readily dispose of to the Arab slave-dealers. [Laughter.] And if any traveler comes to them he not only has to buy his way heavily at every step of his journey, but when he is hours from the frontier he has to pay a fine for the privilege of entering into the country. Yet there are commodities that they like; there are things that they can not do without, and for the sake of which they are willing to admit the "foreign devils."

In 1859 two adventurous Englishmen determined to make their way to the sources of the Nile through all the obstacles put against them. What was the commodity with which they bought their way? What was the one thing which could carry them in? They were Englishmen; but they have to record with considerable pique that the one thing that the Africans would take when they took nothing else was what they called Merikani—American cotton cloth—particularly valuing the corner piece with the blue stamp of the Pacific Mills upon it. [Laughter and applause.] It was with the help of American cotton cloth that those Englishmen entered the southern tropics, that they made their way to the source of the Nile, that they emerged at Alexandria, and solved the problem of ages.

Now, sir, in what year did this happen? At what time did the produce of American mills force its way into the secret crevices of the most protected nation? It was 1859. It was when the country was under the influence of the Walker tariff. It was when a Republican Congress had just consented to the further reductions of 1857. That was the time when the manufacturers of America—aye, of Massachusetts—in those days of low tariffs and little protection—penetrated where no other commodities would go, even in the hands of unfriendly Englishmen. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, it has always been maintained that Massachusetts derived special advantages from high tariff; and on this floor we have heard Representatives from other districts condemn us for our exclusively protective policy. I desire to remind them that the protective tariff was no invention of Massachusetts; that her manufactures were flourishing away back to the earliest colonial times. I would remind them that on more than one occasion she protested against the tariffs which her sister States wished to force upon her. But her enterprise, her energy, her invention have enabled her to bring good out of any and all tariffs.

The invention of Francis C. Lowell, who reinvented the power loom, having never seen one in operation; the invention of Paul Moody, who could look at a machine and see before he left the room where it could be improved; the invention of Erastus B. Bigelow, who, in the low-tariff times, invented and perfected the carpet loom—those are the things that made Massachusetts what she is.

We know that our soil is stony and our climate is severe. We know that you have natural advantages we can not boast of. We know that the coal and the iron, the wheat, and the cotton of Pennsylvania and Alabama, of Nebraska and Texas, are not for us. We freely grant that God has been good to you. We are glad of it. We rejoice in the blessings of our sister States.

But do not take from us our birthright, which is the sea. God has put the sea all along our coasts; and our seamen have tamed the ocean to their will, till it knows them as the horse knows his rider. We could get from other nations the natural products which we have not on our own soil; but your restrictive laws, your navigation laws, your bill forbidding the purchase of ships, your duties on iron and coal, prevent our bringing to our shores by the enterprise and skill of our mariners the things that we need, that we could use, and redeem our soil from the blight of barrenness.

In those days of the Walker tariff, when timid protectionists thought that the prosperity of Massachusetts was gone, the clink of the shipman's hammer sounded all along our coast. That most beautiful spectacle of human art, the launching of the ship—made doubly beautiful by our own poet—was a daily exhibition all along New England. Those were the days of our clippers and liners—the Great Republic, and the Defender, and the Sovereign of the Seas. And we brought to our shores the wealth of every land; we made poor old rocky, sandy, cold Massachusetts like Tyre and Venice and Holland for creating wealth where no wealth was.

Then in 1855 steam navigation began to come up in foreign lands. For the moment we could not compete in building steamships with England and Scotland. Our commerce began to decline. And then you would not let us buy what we could not make; you shut us out from the industry which God and nature had designed for us. And when we learned enough to perfect the steam marine, when we might have again commanded the sea, you put your protective duties on in the time of the war and the time following. You put out our forges, and you prevented us from buying the materials which should have built them up again. Give us back our birthright; restore to us the dominion of the seas; give us free ships; give us free coal; give us free iron; and we will not grudge you all the natural advantages which your States have. [Applause.]

But do not taunt us with the blessings of a tariff which we did not seek at the outset, which we have forced by our own native powers to turn its curses into a blessing, and which has gone on piling up its oppressive favors upon us till all but a few petted industries are crying out for release, and industries like leather which rejoice in free raw material, and those that have yet escaped are dreading that you shall lay upon them its terrible beneficence—free raw material. That I know is a favorite jest of protectionists who affect to say there is no such thing; the gentleman from Pennsylvania has called it a myth.

Will they again listen to Hamilton:

All the duties imposed on imported articles, though with an exclusive view to revenue, have the effect in contemplation and, except when they fall as raw materials, wear a beneficent aspect toward the manufacturers of the country. (Hamilton's Works, volume 3, 245.)

And again:

The policy of the exemption of the materials of the manufacturers from duty as a general rule, particularly in reference to new establishments, is obvious. It can hardly ever be advisable to add the obstruction of fiscal burdens to the difficulties which naturally embarrass a new manufacture, and where it is matured, and in condition to become an object of revenue, better that the fabric rather than the material should be the object of taxation. (Volume 3, 251.)

I have said that I strongly favor the many additions to the free list that are made in this bill. My friend, the member from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], who opened the debate on the other side, deplored that the free list was so large. I wish it were a great deal larger. I wish to comment on one item particularly which I am delighted to see have the shackles taken off it. I refer to the clause which makes works of art free; I refer to the clause which declares that whatever contributes to popular education should not be the subject of taxation.

It is an entire mistake, Mr. Chairman, to suppose that works of art are luxuries peculiar to the rich, and therefore proper objects of taxation. If that theory was ever accepted as true, the exhibition at the great White City has disproved it forever. The exhibition at Chicago showed that everything of beauty, everything which delights the eye and the heart, is enjoyed far more by the poor, by the masses, by the millions, than by the rich, the classes, the "four hundred." Give us free art. Let the principle of artistic design come into our industries.

Let our potters, our carpenters, our ironworkers, our stoneworkers learn from every land on earth, and then you will find every building in the country, every public hall, every home that shelters the sanctity of domestic life will not only be adorned, but will be elevated by works of beauty, which have no country and which rise everywhere where God puts genius in the eye, in the hand, and in the soul of man. [Applause.] And this addition of works of art to the free list is worthy of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, who proves in his own person that the culture of the scholar is not inconsistent with the practical knowledge of the statesman.

I wish the committee had gone a step farther. I wish that they had put books on the free list also. A book is not a manufacture. A book derives its force and meaning from the thought, the genius and invention, the poetry, the enthusiasm, the study that goes into it and that converts the black marks into a living soul. Books are the seed grain of learning, of manhood, of art, of religion. Whatever real value they have comes from the brains and not the hands which have labored to produce them. Homer was the same Homer before he was printed, aye, before he was written.

Shakespeare is the same Shakespeare in the costly but faulty edition of 1623, in the edition de luxe of the most enterprising publisher, as well as in the most wretched text of the smallest type and cheapest paper which is published. It is the soul, the genius, the inspiration, the study, the facts of the author that give life and reality to the page. And you have no right to shut out a single reader from the facts of a single book, under the idea that you advance the interests of the mechanical laborer who puts those thoughts and emotions into shape.

But, Mr. Chairman, I understand that the idea of putting books on the free list is opposed by the printers throughout the country. In their own interests they are mistaken. It will not diminish their work. There is not a more honorable, more glorious occupation than that of the printer. Our printers are worthy successors of Franklin. But the books I want to see free are not those that the international copyright will touch, but the publications that do not come within its provisions, the books that are needed in small quantities by the scholar, the teacher, the physician, the student, the inventor, a silent class who are living a laborious life, many on very slender means, and to whom books are the indispensable tools of trade, and who need them in the cheapest possible form, not for the purpose of superseding any American publication, or depriving a single printer or binder of his legitimate employment.

Take off the shackles that bind them; let the poor, hard-working, underpaid man and woman have their tools of trade, and they will write and offer for printing and publication tenfold the literature you would have in this country if this system of taxation is still preserved. Reading makes reading, books make books, writing makes writing, literature makes literature, and I honestly believe, Mr. Chairman, in the interests of the printers themselves, that their labor will be doubled and wages increased if our action is governed in this matter by what I believe to be that principle which will most conduce to their welfare. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Bayard attempted to make books free in 1883. Can Democrats have a better example?

There is another item on the reduced list which I wish was on the free list. I believe that the committee have done a great work in reducing the duty on earthenware many per cent. I wish, in the interests of the great masses of the people, they would make sanitary earthenware and sanitary plumbing free. Every one who is a householder knows what an enormous expense attends sanitary improvements in the household. Sanitary ware comes through the hands of a combination. It can not be bought except on restrictive terms. I would enable every owner of a tenement house to employ laborers to put in sanitary provisions as required by the laws of health at the lowest cost.

Supposing sometime you have an epidemic of typhoid fever. Suppose the landlords of the tenement houses come under the ban of your boards of health. What excuse will it be, when your laborers are dying by thousands with some pestilential disease, because you have put this tax on decency, that you strengthen the profits of the pottery manufacturers of the United States?

Mr. Chairman, I wish not only for a greater reduction of duty, but I wish for greater simplicity in the tariff. I believe the more complicated the tariff is, the greater number of articles that are put on the schedule, the worse for the country. It is hampering and annoying to the manufacturer. It is hampering and annoying to the importers and it is corrupting to the country to have a complicated tariff that increases the staffs of our custom-houses and makes a greater number of offices to enter into spoils and corrupt party politics. The simpler the tariff is, the fewer articles there are on the list, the easier they are to appraise, the simpler the revenue is to collect, the greater relief it will be, not only to consumer and purchaser, but to the citizen, who knows the baleful effect of the custom-house in all political transactions.

How much more time have I, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Chairman, in the year 1842 Sir Robert Peel entered on his great work of tariff reform. He was bound by the shackles of party. He knew that free trade would prevail ultimately, but he did not dare yet to introduce it into England for fear of losing control of his party. At that time the conditions were the opposite of what they are here. The manufacturers were seeking for relief and the agriculturists were the monopolists; but it was the same thing. The monopolists, whether agriculturists or manufacturers, were eager to keep in subjection the masses, whether engaged in manufactures or in agriculture. It was known that Sir Robert Peel meant to introduce great changes, and the debate was one of consummate interest. It called to their feet many men who did not ordinarily address the House. It called to his feet one member of great personal dignity, of great influence in the House, and yet a man who rarely spoke with any eloquence or force. Rising to the occasion, he addressed this appeal to Sir Robert Peel; and I would address it not to any individual, not to any man in the room or out of the room, but I would address it now to everyone who having power here, who having influence and being able to control men, thinks more of party advantages than of doing a great work to his country and to mankind.

Mr. Raikes Currie addressed these words to Sir Robert Peel:

You have the power to do justice to all classes. What a fearful responsibility that fact announces! Will you not, by timely concessions to the claims of justice and humanity, avert that fearful union of the starving workmen and their ruined masters, when they shall merge their mutual animosities in one fell cry for vengeance, and bury you and your monopolies under the ruins of the constitution? * * *

Elevate your vision! Look forth beyond a few feverish evanescent years, beyond the tiny segment of time with which we are personally conversant, when all the familiar faces which haunt these precincts have departed, when every pulse which beats within these walls shall have ceased forever, when my name and the names of nine-tenths of those who hear me shall be utterly forgotten, or remembered only as household words, cherished by children and descendants, you will then be spoken of.

For you there is no oblivion. You belong to history. You will be spoken of as an astute and able minister, as a statesman fertile in expedients, as a debater perhaps unrivaled, as one who achieved preëminence in a field of the intensest competition. All this your enemies and detractors must admit. Will you not claim a higher and more enduring eulogy? Will you not enter among a far scantier and more glorious band; among those master spirits who have achieved supreme power and used it like gods to do justice to mankind; who have stamped their impress on the age in which they lived, and given an impulse, large, continuous, and abiding to human happiness and human virtue?

[Applause.]

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, like other gentlemen who have addressed the committee upon the pending measure, I am constrained to say that there are some provisions in the bill as proposed that do not meet my approbation. As the best that is offered, I shall vote for it, but under protest as to some of its provisions. If it were in my power I would wipe out that provision of the bill which perpetuates a bounty on sugar.

I have misconceived one of the great doctrines of the Democratic party, and I have all my life been taught in a wrong school, if there is any correct principle that will justify us in retaining for a day, for an hour, for a moment, a law that takes money directly out of the public Treasury and puts it into the pockets of private individuals. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I would repeal the bounty on sugar at once and to the last cent. To that, for any period and to any extent, I am unalterably and uncompromisingly opposed, now and forever, world without end. If it were in my power and practicable I would go further than that. I would strike out every vestige of protection, and I would make the commerce of the world free as the winds of heaven and the waves of the sea that bear it from shore to shore.

I desire, Mr. Chairman, before I address myself briefly to the measure that is now submitted, to speak somewhat of a measure that is not formally before us, but which we are advised officially will be submitted, either as an amendment to the pending bill or as a supplemental bill.

I refer to the proposition to supply the deficit which we all admit will be made by the enactment of the law as it is now submitted by a tax on incomes.

I am aware that in certain quarters this is a subject hardly less sacred than the subject of pensions, which becomes, in the eyes of many, more sacred the larger it grows, and before which we are all expected to bow down and worship. Rather would I lay a firm and vigorous hand upon both and reduce the pension list and set up an income tax. Such a tax is certainly sustained by some of the highest authorities that treat on these subjects. It is undeniable that it has been tried in other countries, and successfully tried.

There is no doubt that it will raise a revenue. There is no doubt that we will need the revenue. I shall address myself briefly to some of the objections that are urged against this tax. I do not find it argued, seriously argued, that it is unjust. Nobody disputes the fact that the public Treasury will need the money. Nobody disputes the fact that the revenue may be supplied by this law. But there are objections, common to all those who oppose this measure; and I beg the indulgence of the committee while I briefly address myself to those objections.

I find them stated in a resolution adopted by the New York Chamber of Commerce, as reported in the Washington Post of this morning. They are: that it is inquisitorial; that it is odious; that it was only tolerated as a war measure, and was abrogated by universal consent as soon as the condition of the country permitted it. I think these gentlemen so highly respectable, and intelligent, perhaps, on most subjects, have detracted from the strength of their protest by the statement that this tax was abolished by almost unanimous consent, in the face of the truth of the record that it was abolished by only one majority in the Senate and one in the House.

They say it is "odious." It is odious! Well, it is odious to the fellow who has to pay it, and nobody else. What tax is not odious? I think I have heard, if I did not misunderstand the suggestion, from some gentlemen on the other side, rather complainingly, that we on this side thought that taxation was an evil.

Well, I never looked upon taxes as a blessing. I never welcomed the taxgatherer as a friend who was coming with benediction in his hands to leave around me and my family. Odious! Yes, it is odious; as every tax is odious. But I submit this is not a sufficient objection to a system that is practically confessed to be just in principle, that can be enforced by practice; that has been tried, successfully tried, in other countries, and will supply relief which the empty Treasury needs to-day. The other source suggested from which to supply this deficit is a tax on sugar.

I will have to relearn my lessons of Democracy before I would raise my voice or cast my vote in favor of putting a tax upon the sugar that enters into the consumption, the daily necessary consumption, of every man, woman, and child, white and black, all over the country and by preference leave the unburdened capital of the country to go untaxed. [Applause.] Between a tax on sugar and income I would tax income.

We are told that it is "inquisitorial." I am not familiar with the laws of other States than my own; but I have made some inquiries from Representatives since I have been here, and I take it that in all other States the tax collector, or the tax assessor, or the proper officer goes to every citizen and inquires how much property he has. Of course, where it is open and visible the necessity for this is relieved, if not altogether taken away; but we, everywhere, as I understand, levy a tax upon property that is not visible.

We go to a man and inquire how much household furniture he has, how much jewelry he or his family have, how much money he has on deposit in bank, how much of everything he has, until we come to this question of income, and then we are told that the officer of the law must stop, because when he goes beyond that line it is "inquisitorial," and the taxgatherer who goes around with the insignia of his office and the authority of law, as soon as he begins to inquire of a man what is the amount of his income, is converted into a modern Torquemada, and at the suggestion of this tax, gentlemen are seized with all the horrors of the Spanish inquisition.

Now, it is an admitted fact, and if I thought it worth while to stop, I would read from the report of the present Secretary of the Treasury, who treats it as an admitted fact that there are large sums of capital in this country which do not bear their just share of the public burdens. Sir, I have not a word here or elsewhere against capital. I despise with my very soul, as I abhor any other iniquity, the demagogism that would set up one class against another in this country.

I would no more inflict injustice upon a rich man than I would upon a poor man. But I would follow capital into its secret hiding places by every just and proper process of law; and, if I found it necessary, I would take it by the throat and drag it forth, not to do it an injustice, but in order to compel it to do justice to the masses of the people who are bearing the burdens of taxation in this country. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

I would treat it like I would treat any other fugitive from justice. But we are told that this law would promote perjury. I am not the champion of those who oppose this measure, but I respectfully submit they have great reason to devoutly and fervently pray to be delivered from their friends. Gentlemen upon the floor of this House, and gentlemen who control a portion of the press of the country do, I insist, cast an unjust imputation upon a large majority of the people upon whom this tax would fall.

I do not question that some frauds would be perpetrated under this law, as are perpetrated under every other law, but I say it is an unjust imputation to put upon the people who have the ability to pay this tax to say that we ought not to enact the law because if we do they will swear to lies.

Sir, the suggestion is unworthy of those who make it, and it is insulting to this body.

What would you think of a judge who, in a case where it became necessary in the ordinary course of justice to put an unwilling witness on the stand for purposes of discovery—and we oftentimes have to resort to that where there are no other means of ascertaining the truth; it is a common practice in our equity system all over the country to put the defendant on the stand and make him swear, to purge his conscience, to put him on his oath—what would you think, I ask, of a judge who, in such a case, would excuse an unwilling litigant from testifying and discovering the truth because he was notified beforehand that if the man was put upon the stand and made to swear, he would swear to a lie?

I say it is an insult to the American Congress to suggest such a reason why we ought not to pass a law, provided that law is just and proper and wise, and if we were deterred from the discharge of a duty by such a suggestion, we would put ourselves in the unworthy, if not the shameful and disgraceful attitude of, through fear of inviting or promoting perjury, giving a reward to perjury. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

They say it is a war tax. There is a sense in which the war is over, and every patriot rejoices in the fact. Now and then there is some big-mouthed, little-brained fellow who would revive its issues, but he attracts no attention from any except those who are as little as himself, and these do not really respect him. There is another sense, however, a very important one, in which the war is not over. Some days ago in the discussion of the pension question, it was said on this floor, referring to the administration of the present Secretary of the Interior, "In 1863 the boys were marching through Georgia; in 1893 Georgia is marching through the boys."

Mr. Chairman, it might be said in 1863 the boys were marching through Georgia, in 1893 the boys are marching through the United States Treasury. Yes, they are marching nine hundred thousand strong. There was an end to the invasion of Georgia. There is no end to this invasion of the public Treasury. It is annual. They march and countermarch. The rear of the column has scarcely passed through before its head enters again, and every sweep of this great army achieves new conquests and marks its track with wider destruction. It appears from an official statement I hold in my hand that in 1863 the people paid for pensions $1,078,991.59; in the year 1873, $29,359,426.86; in the year 1883, $66,012,573.64; in the year 1893, $159,357,557.87.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, without detaining the House by any elaboration of what I have but briefly and imperfectly suggested, I say I would make up this deficit by putting a tax upon the wealth of the country; not by way of punishment, not by way of rebuke, not as an expression of hostility or unfriendliness, but because the wealth of the country is most able to bear it, and because the great trend of our legislation for years past has been against the masses and in favor of the few. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, sir, I beg the indulgence of the committee while I speak briefly upon the pending measure. I shall not weary you gentlemen or myself with any figures from the census. I have never heard any side of any question discussed in this House or before the people that could not be sustained by a resort to the census [laughter], and the devil himself could justify his reign on the earth by the census of the world, because it would show that the march of humanity has been to higher and better things. [Laughter.]

I recall the historic fact that when our Revolutionary forefathers were struggling to throw off British domination they were pointed to the growth of the colonies. I recall the further historic fact, with patriotic pride, that their reply was, "The colonies have grown, not because of but in spite of British rule." [Applause.] That is my answer in brief to any suggestion of gentlemen on the other side who point us to the census of 1860 and the census of 1890, and ask us whether the country has not prospered in the interval. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I think, Mr. Chairman, it may be well for us to recall some primal truths, and among these I would reannounce, not of course because it is new, for I believe that after all the oldest truths are the best and truth should never lose its force or vigor because it is old—I would recall the primal truth that no taxation in any form or to any extent can find any justification or excuse except in the needs of the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am not a student of economics. I profess no technical knowledge on that subject. I do not like figures; largely perhaps because, for the most part, I do not understand them. [Laughter.]

But I want no political economy to teach me, I want no statistics to sustain the idea that government which derives its power from the consent of the governed has no right to come and lay its hand upon my earnings, or upon the earnings of any other citizen, and extract more than is required by its own necessities. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This, as I understand it, is the gospel of our political salvation, and the further we depart from it the further we shall go on the road to ruin.

We have heard a great deal here about the American laborer. Some of the gentlemen on the other side, whose pious souls have been so disturbed and whose serene spirits have been so moved by sympathy for the laborer, tell us that the adoption of our policy would degrade American labor. They claim that the perpetuation of their policy would increase the wages of American labor. That claim I do not believe is sustained by facts. But if it were sustained they might well afford to pay the laborer a higher price under a system that compels the laborer to buy from them at a higher price. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They are as audacious as they are greedy. They claim credit for what they do not, and that which would be no credit to them if they did. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

I say, sir, that every American laborer has the right not only to earn all he may by honest labor, but the right to control the product of that labor as he chooses. If you strike down this right, which lies at the very basis of this controversy, if you strike down this right of the American laborer, you strike down every right that secures to him the free and uninterrupted enjoyment of his own labor. In the name of the American laborer I protest against this doctrine. I protest against it in the name of every American freeman who is entitled to enjoy his honest acquisitions, however he may acquire them. I oppose this system of protection because it promotes monopoly and paternalism.

I will not stop and undertake to restate the argument. I believe that to-day one of the greatest perils that threatens this country is the disposition among our people to welcome that which in other days they would have spurned—the disposition to call upon the Government to do for them what they ought to do for themselves. [Applause on the Democratic side.] For myself and my children after me I ask no protection except the protection of life, liberty, property, and reputation, and, with these secured, the man who can not conquer his own destiny and build his own fortunes without governmental aid is an unworthy American citizen. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Undoubtedly the Government owes the citizen protection, but protection against what? Not protection against competition in trade or business. We have heard in this discussion about surrendering seventy or seventy-five millions of dollars. If we surrender it, to whom do we surrender it but to the people to whom it belongs. The idea seems to be by not exacting this sum it is surrendered. The Government did not make the people; exactly the reverse is true; the people made the Government. The Government does not own the people; exactly the reverse is true; the people own the Government. Why should the Government complain that what does not belong to it is withheld? As well might the highwayman, whose robbery is stayed by an officer of the law, complain that he can not enjoy that which is saved from his despoiling hand.

The spirit of this system is bold and aggressive and rapacious. The more it gets the more it wants. Its appetite is whetted by that on which it feeds, and like death and the grave, its insatiable greed never cries "it is enough." This fact is shown by the legislation enacted here for its benefit and dictated by its cupidity, it appearing that sometimes, at least, it names the very terms of the law.

It is shown by the history of such legislation in England, especially that relating to the woolen industry, about which so much has been said here. The export of sheep was prohibited that wool might be plentiful in England. More protection was demanded, and an act was passed requiring that every dead body should be buried in a woolen shroud, and this not being enough, as a writer on the subject has suggested, because the people would not die fast enough, it was enacted that a fine of £5 should be imposed for wearing and £25 for selling calico.

We had a most touching picture drawn for us yesterday by the master hand of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], who brought to our notice the men or the women who crowded here from Philadelphia to the room of the Ways and Means Committee, begging that we do not reduce the tariff. But the gentleman had nothing to say about those other men who from Congress to Congress fill the corridors of this Capitol and throng the room of the committee, asking for Government aid, having plodded their weary way by Pullman cars, taken their breakfast at 10 in the morning at the Arlington or the Shoreham or Chamberlin's, where they would dine at 6 in the afternoon, and in the meantime refreshed themselves with oysters on the half-shell and champagne in the restaurant of the House. [Laughter and applause.]

We have heard in this discussion allusions to the "soup houses" opened all over the country by private charity to feed the poor. If I may be pardoned for the assumption, I would modestly suggest that the best way to destroy these "soup houses" is to upturn this national pot of soup that has been erected here at public expense to feed those who have already been fattened by partial legislation and turn its contents back into the homes of the people where they belong. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I find that I have only a few minutes left. Permit me to add a few words more. Before I came here, when I contemplated my duty and responsibility as a Representative of the American people, I was overwhelmed with the reflection that to my hands were committed, even in some small degree and to some small extent, the vast interests of this great and growing country and these 70,000,000 of people. The sense of that responsibility has been deepened ever since I have been here.

But it has found this relief—that whether my political career here be long or short (a matter of no anxious concern to me and no importance to the country) I shall feel that the burdens and annoyances and disappointments it has brought have been lessened by the reflection that I believe I am to-day a better citizen, a better American, a better patriot than when I crossed the threshold of this House. When I walk over the splendid avenues of this city; as I stand in the halls and corridors of this Capitol, and see how the figures of the men who have illustrated our civic and military history have been gathered here in busts and statues until we have a Congress of the dead to instruct and guide and inspire the Congress of the living, I feel devoutly thankful to the Providence which overrules our lives that my lot has been cast under the shadow of our free American institutions.

As I look upon the flag that waves over this Capitol, I feel like saying in my heart, if not with my lips, Flag of the Union, wave on, wave ever! Wave over the great and growing North, wave over the thrifty and historic East, wave over the young and expanding West, wave over our own Southland, until the hearts of this people shall be bound together in the indissoluble bonds of a broad and lasting American patriotism. [Applause.] Flag of the Union, wave on, wave ever! Wave on until the nations shall catch the spirit of freedom, until the fetters are stricken from every limb, until every conscience is free, until the light of knowledge illumines every mind, until the fires of liberty are kindled in every breast, until every angel in Heaven and every son of earth rejoices in the universal emancipation of the race. [Applause.] This I believe can be soonest accomplished by just and impartial laws in our own Government, and free commerce with the world.

May God speed the day that shall bring us to the full fruition of this inspiring hope and the high attainment of this glorious destiny, and to this end consecrate the heart and the brain of American statesmanship. [Long-continued applause.]

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman from West Virginia begins his remarks, the Chair desires to say that he would have recognized at this time a gentleman in opposition to the bill, but for an arrangement made by gentlemen who are to speak on that side, to whom it is more convenient that the Chair should now recognize a gentleman in favor of the measure. Hence the Chair has recognized the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia rose.

Mr. LOUD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to recognize somebody in favor of this bill. I have not heard anybody yet who is in favor of it?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

[Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I will extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask that the time of my colleague on the committee be extended so that he may have an hour and a half.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended so as to cover an hour and a half. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. I am much obliged for the courtesy of the committee at this late hour of the debate.

The gentleman from West Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, in opening the debate upon this bill, said that he had brought it in here in response to a popular demand. We have had five days of debate. Gentlemen have spoken who say they will vote for the bill, and gentlemen have spoken who say that they will vote for it with some amendments applying to their several localities, but not a single man has spoken for it who indorses the bill. [Laughter.]

I trust that if there is a member on the Democratic side who fully indorses this bill, he will be heard before the debate shall conclude. The "popular demand" to which the chairman referred was doubtless the election of 1892, when a minority of the people declared in favor of the Chicago platform, which was a direct declaration in favor of a tariff for revenue only, a plank inserted in that platform by a bare majority of the Democratic convention. At first blush this would seem to be an indorsement of "tariff reform," if not of this bill, but in my own State national leaders of the Democratic party explained the Democratic platform of 1892, and satisfied the Democratic workingmen by telling them that we needed $175,000,000 of revenue to be raised by tariff duties; that no such amount of revenue could be raised unless by a tariff with incidental protection; that the Democratic party would take care of the wage-earners of the country, and that no tariff bill should pass which did not incidentally protect them in their wages.

This bill does not seem to have any petitioners crowding their prayers into the petition box for its passage. We have seen remonstrance after remonstrance brought in here, some even brought in on stretchers [laughter] in opposition to the Wilson bill. We have seen the corridors leading to the room of the Committee on Ways and Means blocked by crowds of people, manufacturers, laborers, producers, consumers, opposed to the Wilson bill; but we have not seen many people coming here who are in favor of the Wilson bill. I should think that, even in the secret recesses of the crypt of the Capitol [laughter], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means might have heard from the elections of last November in which the people said that they wanted no revenue tariff for them. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I should think that he might have heard the voice of the American workingmen saying that they did not want anything that would jeopardize their interests; that they did not want anything that would still keep their dinner pails empty, even though they might get a cheaper pail. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I have studied this bill to see if I could find any theory upon which it was constructed. It is not a protective bill, although the committee have left some protective features in it. They have even seen fit to adopt a number of the rates contained in the McKinley bill. The title of the bill says that it is "to raise revenue," yet it proves to be a bill to reduce revenue by $76,000,000 a year.

As I have gone through its provisions, and examined its paragraphs, and studied its relations to the different industries of the country, I have come to the conclusion that the committee have gone back to the year 1880, and with their candidate for the Presidency in that year, have agreed that "the tariff is a local issue." [Laughter.] And, as I have heard the debate progress and have seen my colleague from the Troy district [Mr. HAINES] with his big petition asking for more protection on collars and cuffs, and have heard him say if the bill were amended to suit him in respect to collars and cuffs he would support it, I have concluded that the members of the House propose to make the tariff question in this bill a local issue, and had said to each other: "If we can fix it up to suit matters 'in our town' it will be all right and we will vote for it." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the bill itself is curious from another standpoint. The committee have put a duty on rice of 1¼ cents per pound—equivalent to an ad valorem of 83.39 per cent. There are few articles in the bill that carry a larger ad valorem duty than rice. Plate glass, 24 to 60 inches wide or above, has a little higher duty than rice. Chemicals, and beverages of which alcohol is a large component, have a somewhat higher duty than rice. Tobacco has a somewhat higher duty. On alcohol and tobacco there is a very heavy internal-revenue tax, and of course there must be compensation for this tax, and this internal-revenue tax upon spirits is away up above the ad valorem duty that the committee put upon rice.

Playing cards have a little higher percentage of duty than rice. I suppose we shall know when we get the next message from the Executive Mansion giving us another chapter in the infamy at Hawaii, what the conclusions of the committee are on the subject of playing cards—whether they will put an internal-revenue tax of 2 cents a pack on those. And after that has been sanctioned or originated at the White House, perhaps some day the majority will invite the minority of the committee to come in and graciously inform us whether this is true or not.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not want to answer a great many questions; my time is limited.

Mr. BRYAN. Was the gentleman on the Ways and Means Committeee when the McKinley bill was reported?

Mr. PAYNE. I was.

Mr. BRYAN. Was that bill reported to the full committee before it had been completed by the Republican members?

Mr. PAYNE. No; it was not. And it did not come to the Democratic members through any message of President Harrison either. [Applause on the Republican side.] And it did not come to the Democratic members at first sight through the daily newspapers.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman allow me to state that the daily newspapers did not give out the tariff schedules of the Wilson bill until they had been presented to the Republican members.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I want to say to the gentleman that I came here to Washington at the request of the chairman of the committee; and on my way down here, I read the New York papers and the Washington papers, and I saw that their prognostications as to the provisions of the bill corresponded very accurately with the bill itself when it was presented to the committee. Of course it was not given out; it leaked out.

Aside from that, no information came to the minority members of this committee on these internal-revenue questions until it came through the President's message and through the newspapers; and no communication has yet been made to them of the committee. I suppose we may take it for granted that they are going to put a tax of 2 cents on playing cards, and therefore they have raised the ad valorem a little above that of rice.

The only other item that has a higher ad valorem than rice is firecrackers. They do not want the boys to celebrate the Fourth of July, I suppose; so they put a higher duty on firecrackers than they do on rice. Why this great duty on rice—a duty of 83.39 per cent—when they reduce the ad valorem upon Northern products to less than 20 per cent? Can anybody guess? The first draft of the bill presented to the minority of the committee put all lumber on the free list. According to the newspapers, there was a universal protest against this from the Southern States, because they said they were developing a great industry in Georgia pine.

The protest was loud for a week, and then we had another meeting of the committee; another bill was presented, and lo and behold, lumber dressed on one side was dutiable at 50 cents a thousand; dressed on both sides, at $1 a thousand; dressed on both sides and tongued and grooved, at $1.50. And I have not heard a single protest from the South about Georgia pine from the time that was reported until now.

Now, I understand that Georgia pine always come to the market dressed on both sides, and generally tongued and grooved; it is used for ceiling and inside work. It will not do for siding, as the pitch will fry out with the sun and discolor the paint. For fear that there should be any mistake about the discrimination the committee took the Northern pine in the shape of clapboards, and put clapboards, dressed and planed on four sides, upon the free list. [Laughter.]

An ad valorem duty was put upon lead for paints in the first draft of the bill, a large reduction; and we waited a week for the outcome. The papers said—I do not know how true it was—that the president of the lead trust was in Washington for a week, and the president of the lead trust, formerly from the State of West Virginia, now of the city of New York, is a man supposed to be prominent in the Democratic councils. Of course he was not here to see the members of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. WALKER. God forbid. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. No; he was simply here for pleasure for a week, and to see the city. Somehow or other, though, when the week ended and an amended bill was reported, it contained a change in the lead schedule for paints, and they put on a specific duty, largely increasing the ad valorem, and we have not heard a word about the lead trust being dissatisfied with that bill yet.

The miners out West wanted some protection on silver-bearing lead ores; not only the mine owners, but the miners themselves. Why, a distinguished Democrat came here from the West advocating a duty on silver-bearing lead ores, but he was supposed to be a little unsound on the tariff question, and the committee do not seem to have heeded his suggestion. Others were interested in the smelting business up in Kansas City, Mo., and to-day silver-bearing lead ores are by this bill to be placed upon the free list.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. PAYNE. I shall have to decline to be interrupted, as I will not be able to conclude my remarks.

Mr. MORGAN. I only wanted to correct the gentleman. The establishment he refers to is not in Missouri, but in Kansas. The gentleman is right except as to the location of the establishment.

Mr. PAYNE. I thought the gentleman would correct his correction. There is nothing like a study of this question for members of the Democratic party.

In 1846 Mr. Walker put a tariff of 10 per cent ad valorem on lime, and that continued to be the rate of duty until 1890. The manufacture of lime proved to be a prosperous and growing business in the State of Maine and of New York. In 1884 or 1885 a prominent gentleman in Portsmouth, N. H., Hon. Frank Jones, late a prominent and very liberal member of the National Democratic committee, with a few patriotic American citizens, went over the line and founded the town of St. John, in New Brunswick, and opened up some lime kilns and began the manufacture of lime.

It was found that because of the cheaper wages in Canada he was able to manufacture lime and bring it into the States of Maine and New York, driving out the people who had formerly supplied that market, because they could not compete with the cheaper labor; and in 1890 some of the gentlemen who were interested in this industry—some of the "robber barons," I suppose—who owned lime kilns and were manufacturers, came before the Ways and Means Committee and demonstrated the fact that it cost 23 cents a barrel more because of increased wages in the town of Rockland, Me., to manufacture lime, than it did in the town of St. John, New Brunswick.

They frankly conceded to the committee that there was a difference of 8 cents a barrel in freight in favor of the Rockland district, making a difference of 15 cents a barrel more to manufacture in Rockland than it did in St John; and the committee in 1890 put a duty of 6 cents per hundred pounds on lime, making 13 cents a barrel. They put a duty of 8 cents per hundred on cement; and the lime industry and the cement industry have flourished since 1890. And when I say any industries have flourished since 1890, I mean from the passage of the McKinley bill down to the time it was known that the Democracy had charge not only of the executive branch of the Government and the House of Representatives, but down to the time that it was known they had a majority in the United States Senate—and I want to make this explanation at the outset. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Jones said that this duty on lime was ruining his town of St. John, New Brunswick; that they could not get into the American market and compete very well with the Rockland people. He freely acknowledged that the price of lime had gone down since 1890, and was selling much cheaper now than before the McKinley bill was passed. But he wanted to build up his town of St. John, in New Brunswick, at the expense of the towns in Maine and New York, and he seems to have struck a responsive chord in the bosoms of a majority of the Ways and Means Committee, for they have taken off the duty on lime, at 6 cents a hundred pounds, and put an ad valorem duty of 10 per cent upon it; and for some reason or other, I would not dare to say why—I would not insinuate that it was because they had not discovered that any prominent Democrat had started to manufacture cement in New Brunswick or in Nova Scotia—they did not touch the cement schedule at all, but left the duty of 8 cents a hundred on cement although it was in the same paragraph. [Laughter.]

Oh, we are getting at the principles on which this bill was formulated in the committee! After putting a duty of 10 per cent on lime, they put a duty of 20 per cent on limestone. [Laughter.] Oh, this is a good bill!

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Did Mr. Jones say to the Committee on Ways and Means that he wanted to build up the industries of New Brunswick?

Mr. PAYNE. The funny thing about it is, that although we had hearings for two weeks, no one of the minority knew that Mr. Jones came near the committee; but when we got the published report of the hearings, at page 146 we find a statement of Mr. Jones, in which he sets forth the facts which I have stated. He did not appear for cross-examination by the minority of the committee, but this paper found its way into the hearings in some way, and I think it was by mistake and not by design. That is the only way we knew how Mr. Jones had anything to do with this. I quote from Mr. Jones, at bottom of page 147:

> Your petitioners, therefore, respectfully pray your honorable committee to recommend the complete remission of this duty, so that they may light up their kilns, and set to work their capital now locked up, etc.

Mr. DALZELL. That is not the only case, though, of evidence published in that book that was not presented to the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course not; but I do not think they put that letter in knowingly. I think it was put in by mistake.

The hay crop of the country amounted in 1890 to $400,000,000. The cotton crop amounted to $305,000,000. The hay business seems to have been the biggest industry, according to the returns. Hay is baled, but no one ever heard of any Democratic committee or any Democrat advocating the making free of duty the ties with which the farmer bales his hay; yet cotton ties are on the free list.

A finished product! Does that throw any light upon this bill? They use bagging for cotton, and they make a provision in this bill different from any other provision ever put in a tariff bill. They say that the finished article of a cotton bag used in baling cotton, when it is exported, shall receive a rebate of 99 per cent of the duty paid. When materials are brought in here and manufactured into a finished product, we gave them a rebate of 99 per cent; but here they take the finished product, cotton bagging, and put a special clause in the bill giving them a rebate of 99 per cent on those cotton bags.

Mr. WALKER. Wherever manufactured?

Mr. PAYNE. When they are imported and pay the duty, of course, wherever manufactured. But the chairman of the committee [Mr. WILSON of West Virginia] says that the great features of the bill are free wool, free coal, free iron ore, and free lumber; and the chairman claims that wool can be produced cheaper in Texas than it can be produced in New Zealand. He said that some gentleman from Texas on the Democratic side rented agricultural lands in Texas at 3 cents an acre, and pastured his flocks upon them; and then he compared the wages of the Texas agriculturist with the wages of some New Zealander a number of years ago, and arrived at the conclusion from those two isolated facts that wool could be produced cheaper in this country than it could in New Zealand.

I do not propose to go into an argument with him on that question. There is not a farmer who ever saw a sheep—why, there is hardly a sheep in the country—that does not know that wool can be produced cheaper in Australia and New Zealand and South Africa than it can in the United States. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Why, I find a statement here in regard to wool dropped from a New Zealand wool-grower, and that is the country my friend from West Virginia referred to in his argument. Mr. D. E. Meikle, of Chatham Islands, New Zealand, said "that he had resided there thirty years as a sheep-grower; that ocean freights are three-eighths of a cent per pound to London; that it costs him 4 cents a head to shear his sheep, and 7 cents a pound to produce the wool and sell it in the London market." And here is one from an Idaho wool-grower:

Frank J. Hegart, of the firm of J. D. Wood & Co., Challis, Idaho, is ready to make affidavit "that Mr. Wood has resided in Idaho twenty-seven years; that he is a sheep-grower and ranged about thirty thousand sheep in Idaho last year; that railroad freights are 2½ cents per pound to Philadelphia; that it costs him 10 cents per head to shear sheep; that it costs him over 20 cents per pound to produce his wool and sell it on the Philadelphia market."

Now, I put in these two fair statements of farmers right on this very subject against the consular reports of years ago, referred to by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the statement of the member from Texas in regard to his 3-cents-an-acre land.

But suppose we admit his conclusion that wool can be produced cheaper in this country than it can across the water. He says iron ore is shoveled up out of the mines and can be produced cheaper here than anywhere else in the world, and that coal can be mined cheaper than anywhere else in the world, and that lumber can be produced cheaper than anywhere else in the world; and then he says, when we have got these four materials cheaper than anywhere else in the world, he is going to take the tax off them and give the mechanics untaxed raw materials, and by some process, which he does not explain, he is going to expand their wages by reason of that. Why, if they are getting these things cheaper now than anywhere else, how is it going to benefit them to have untaxed raw materials—wool and coal and iron?

Then he says that with these things upon the free list, with wool on the free list, it is going to advance the price of wool in this country; and after it has advanced in price and the woolen manufacturer gets the benefit of dearer raw material to him, then he says the wool industry and the woolen industry and the manufacturing industry are going to thrive in this country and the wages of employés are going to be on a higher plane. That is the logic on which this bill is presented to this House, and you are asked to vote for it!

In the agricultural schedule the committee have reduced the ad valorem duty from about 33 to 22 per cent. In my own State agriculture is a great interest. In the early days we raised breadstuffs for the market, and our farmers had some degree of prosperity even when subduing the wilderness. At an early period the Erie Canal was built; built with the consent of the farmers of the State of New York. With wise foresight and statesmanship they laid the foundation broad and deep for the future. They provided a water way that carried your product from the Northwest to our principal market and laid it down there at almost as cheap freight rates as we could get from the center of our own State. That produced a new condition of things.

Our farmers could no longer compete in cereals with your deep rich soil of the West, but they were looking for something else. They saw in the future, cities and towns springing up. They saw and heard in the future the busy hum of industry. They saw prosperous mechanics. They pictured a home market, and they changed the conditions of their agriculture. They dropped largely the growing of breadstuffs and prepared themselves for the market at their doors. Vegetables, butter, cheese, eggs, poultry, meat, tobacco, hops, barley, small fruits, became their staples, and these again brought prosperity to the farmers of the Empire State.

We have eighteen cities of over 20,000 population each, with an aggregate population of 3,240,000 busy, prosperous people receiving good wages, getting a large share of the daily distribution of the wealth, and they furnish a market to our farmers. Now, the committee propose to open the door to the agricultural products of Canada, placing many of them on the free list. The cities of New York and Philadelphia are 300 miles from the district I have the honor to represent. From this district two milk trains start every evening, delivering milk in the cities the next day.

The valleys through which these trains run are lined with farms, in the best of condition, good fences, well-painted houses and barns, and an air of prosperity greater even than that of the surrounding farms. From other parts of this district the railroads are blocked with train loads of grapes during the season. These farmers know that high wages give the mechanics of our cities the ability to purchase these commodities at fair prices; the district, especially among the farmers, is intensely for protection and the Republican party.

Out of fifty millions that the committee transferred to the free list they took thirty-five millions from agricultural products. And then they have reduced the schedule by imposing an ad valorem duty. They have not only cut down the duty, but they put it in the power of the importer to cut it down still further; and we have now the prospect that our markets in the State of New York, embracing three million and a quarter of consumers, are to be turned over to the Canadians across the border.

With their farms worth 36 per cent less than ours, with their wages an average of 32 per cent lower than ours, and with a difference in insurance and interest of 12 per cent more, they can produce 44 per cent cheaper than we can. Yet this committee think that 20 per cent is a fair rate of duty to be placed upon the articles that they have raised upon the dutiable list.

Our State (New York) produces a great deal of hay. Out of the $400,000,000 produced in 1890, we raised $65,000,000. We are the first State in the Union on our hay crop. The Canadian farmer right over the border has equal facilities and lower wages and cheaper farms. The McKinley bill put $4 a ton on hay.

The man who went from Canada to sell his 100 tons of hay in Buffalo would get his $1,200 and deposit $400 of it in the custom-house, and take $800 home with him, while the American farmer who sold his 100 tons would take the whole $1,200. The $400 was what the Canadian paid for the privilege of our market, and that went right in our Treasury, and helped to pay our expenses of government. They cut this in two and make a duty of $2 a a ton on hay, which is something less than 20 per cent, and puts us at a disadvantage with Canada.

The McKinley bill put a duty of 30 cents a bushel on barley, which I always thought was too high. I thought 20 cents a bushel was enough, but I wanted it to be specific. Why, we can raise all the barley that all the beer manufacturers in the country can use. My own State can raise it. They use about 44,000,000 bushels a year, and with a duty of 10 cents a bushel on barley they imported 12,000,000 bushels from Canada prior to 1890 in a single year, and our people had the other 32,000,000 bushels of the barley market to themselves. Even at 15 cents a bushel, prior to 1883, the Canadians sold over 10,000,000 bushels per annum. They raised a good deal more that they did not sell for malt. They fed it to hogs.

It was not good feed, and it was a losing business. Last year only 2,000,000 bushels of Canadian barley came into this country and the other 10,000,000 bushels was supplied from our farms. Our farmers liked it, too. It was better to sell it for that purpose than to feed it to hogs; but this committee not only reduced the duty but put an ad valorem duty of 20 per cent upon it, averaging about 9 cents a bushel for the benefit of those importing barley. We will have 15,000,000 bushels coming in next year, and the other 30,000,000 our people will struggle to supply a market for. Oh, you might go all through the bill.

"Hops." They reduced the duty on hops from 15 to 8 cents. Who wanted it? The brewers. Why? Because if they paid the whole duty it would cost them from 2 to 3 cents a barrel of beer to provide foreign hops. The committee thought the brewers ought to be relieved, and so they reduced this duty on hops. We had before the committee Mr. Fox, a hop importer, and he told very glibly how the price of hops had gone down since they had to pay a duty of 30 cents; and I asked him and compelled him to testify before the committee that the price averaged 6½ cents more a pound after the McKinley bill passed than it did before it passed.

Mr. BRYAN. Do you mean to say that the tariff on hops raised the price?

Mr. PAYNE. You will have your chance, you will have your time to develop your peculiar theories here.

Now, the farmers like that. In my State we raise a great many hops. Now we shall be compelled to enter into competition with Canada, Germany, and England, and with any other country that raises hops; and why? To save 2 cents a barrel, they say, to the brewers of the country. It is time that the farmers of this country had a little consideration from the Democratic party as well as the brewers of the United States. [Applause.] They are all citizens of this great Republic.

Our farmers raise tobacco, and in 1883 we came in competition with Sumatra leaf, raised by the cheapest labor in the world, with their wages from 10 to 15 cents per day. The Sumatra made rapid strides and destroyed their market up to 1890. The present tariff, while affording a large revenue to the Government, has at the same time made this business profitable to our farmer, increasing his acreage and increasing his profits. This committee not only cuts the duty in half, but they destroy even the effect of that by introducing the old fraud which was originally in the law of 1882, describing tobacco leaf "such as is commercially known as wrappers, etc." The universal testimony of producer and importer was that these words furnished a wide loophole for fraud up to 1890, and yet this committee seems to have adopted them.

The committee have put binding-twine and some agricultural machinery on the free list, as a "sop" to the farmer. I shall not add anything to what I have said on other occasions on the subject of binding-twine.

Under protection agricultural machinery has been reduced in price to a point never before dreamed of. Binders that formerly sold for $300 have been sold for $125, and other machinery in the same proportion. It may be useful to try and build up this business in Canada, but it will never aid the American farmer. Why, Mr. Chairman, the more we examine this bill the more we are convinced of the astuteness of that Canadian member of Parliament who stated that Canada got more out of the Wilson bill, without giving anything up in return, than she could have hoped to obtain by the most favorable reciprocity treaty.

The bill should read, for the encouragement of the Canadian farmer and the Canadian mechanic, the Algerian grape-grower, the Bermuda onion-grower, and the foreign mechanics the world over. That would be its most appropriate title.

I might speak of flax and hemp. I might speak of the peculiar consideration and the love that this committee have for the rags that fall from the paupers of foreign countries, that they should put rags and shoddy, unmanufactured, on the free list in this bill. We put a duty on them that kept their dirty rags out of the country. But they seem to want them. It is in keeping with the stuff that the chairman of the committee brought in here and wanted to put on our servant girls, made of cotton and shoddy, rags worked up with cow hair! We do not propose to clothe our people with any such stuff as that. We propose to give them wool; and then we propose to give them wages to enable them to buy their wool. [Applause on the Republican side.]

My colleague from Troy [Mr. HAINES] did not entirely exhaust the collar and cuff industry in Troy. It is a big industry, employing between 15,000 and 16,000 people. It pays a wage of $4,240,000 a year; not that these people are employed all the time, for they take the work to their homes and do it at odd times. Women chink it in with their housekeeping, and it brings in money and helps to clothe and feed them. Last year there was a falling off in this industry at Troy; the payment of wages was less by $2,000,000. In Troy they pay the girls $8 a week for making collars and cuffs, against $2.40 paid in Berlin. There was a duty of 40 per cent on collars and cuffs under "articles not otherwise provided for" up to 1890. In 1886 they had strikes in Troy which stopped the business.

There was a fight between the employers and the employés, and the employers went over to Germany and got Germans to make collars and cuffs, and the Germans learned the business. Then when the strikes were over and these Troy people had returned to work they found that the Germans wanted a share in our trade; and an American manufacturer went over there to start the business, and the Troy people were being driven out by cheaper labor that was being employed. In 1890 they came before our committee and presented their facts, and we put a duty of 30 cents a dozen on collars and 40 per cent ad valorem.

In the hearings before the present committee a Mr. Rosenfeld, from New York, appeared and stated that he was an importer of collars and cuffs. He said that since the McKinley act had gone into effect, instead of costing him $1.95 a dozen, his imported collars and cuffs cost him $2, just 5 cents more. The other 5 cents came out of whom? Why, of course, out of the foreign manufacturer. Mr. Rosenfeld wanted the duty reduced, and he told the committee how it ought to be arranged. Said he, "Put a duty of 25 to 35 per cent upon linen and about 35 per cent on collars and cuffs;" and the committee did put 30 per cent on linen and 35 per cent on collars and cuffs, to suit Mr. Rosenfeld. Then, in order that the committee might understand the question we asked him some questions about it, and he said that with a duty of 35 per cent on collars and cuffs he could make 37½ per cent profit on all his importations. A modest fellow, was he not? [Laughter.]

Then he told the committee some astounding stories about the immense profits that the manufacturers of Troy were making; somewhere about 75 per cent. We asked him to tell us what he knew about it, and it turned out that he did not know anything. Then the Troy manufacturers came down here with affidavits and showed the committee that the story told by this man Rosenfeld was absolutely false from beginning to end; that they were hardly making a living under the rate of duty contained in the McKinley bill, and that they were paying $8 a week wages, as against $2.40 paid in Germany. Then came the question "But is there not greater efficiency in the American labor?" The answer was, no; that the German girls were as skillful at the sewing machine as any girls in the world, and could produce as many collars and cuffs in the same time.

Now, collars and cuffs are coming in from Japan made at an expense of 15 cents a day for labor, and, in order to encourage Japanese industries and get that "great" market of Japan for some of our goods, the committee have put the duty down to 35 per cent ad valorem on collars and cuffs. My friend from the Troy district [Mr. HAINES] comes in here with a petition signed by 69,000 people, the majority of them Democrats, including the mayor of the city, the common council, the supervisors of the county, and all the prominent men of Troy and all the laboring men without distinction of political party, and he is told by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that those people in Troy are so slavish that they would not dare to refuse to sign a petition at the bidding of their masters.

Well, the gentleman from Troy knows better than that. He knows better than that; but still he says that if they will only fix up this little feature of the bill for him he will vote to rob every other constituency in the United States by the passage of this Wilson bill; that he will vote for the bill. The committee are very tender of the importer. Do they know that in New York and Brooklyn manufacturers pay annually in wages $290,512,997? That in the same cities importers pay annually only $2,700,000 in wages?

The committee put salt on the free list. Why? I have lived to see salt go down from $4 a barrel to 40 cents a barrel at the factory. We paid $4 a barrel when we did not make enough salt to meet the demand in this country; but now it has gone down under a high rate of duty to 40 cents a barrel at the factory.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The people are heavily taxed by that.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, very heavily taxed! [Laughter.] Only think of 40 cents a barrel. I do not know how long into eternity a barrel of salt would serve an ordinary family. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That includes the barrel, does it not?

Mr. PAYNE. That includes the barrel, which is worth 28 cents. If a man buys the salt loose, without the barrel, he gets it at about 22 cents, while the duty is 32 cents per barrel.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not care to yield for questions just now.

Mr. SIMPSON. It will be a very short one. I will just touch the button and you can do the rest. I was going to ask you, if salt has gone down from $4 a barrel to 40 cents a barrel, where are the manufacturers of salt going to get the money to pay the high wages which they promise?

Mr. PAYNE. I will say to the gentleman that by improvements in processes of manufacture they do get the money to pay high wages, and they do pay them to the laborers every day at this time.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. They have control of the entire market. That explains it.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, the freight on salt from Liverpool to New York varies from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 4*s.* a long ton of 2,240 pounds. The frieght from Warsaw in my State to the city of New York, three or four hundred miles, is $2.24 a long ton, or more than double the highest rate from Liverpool to New York. Now, the production of salt is a question of labor, for the expense of making salt is merely the expense of the labor employed.

These facts being so, how can we compete with such freight rates in favor of the foreign salt. Some foreign salt comes in even at the present rate of duty. How? I have in my desk a printed circular from the agents of the Liverpool salt merchants offering to sell for shipment to New York for two shillings a ton less than they sell for shipment to Australia, a difference of 20 per cent in favor of New York as against Australia, the object being to get into our market.

Every pound of salt shipped from Liverpool to the United States and to Canada pays a profit to a single agent at New York City to-day. Give them free salt—what then? Why, they would cut down just enough below our prices to get into New England, to get into New York, to get along the canal and up the lakes, to get in from Canada; the wholesale price would be no lower than would be necessary to accomplish this. But what gentleman is so credulous as to believe that a single individual consumer of the United States would get his salt a hundredth part of a cent lower than he gets it to-day. Then when they have got into our trade, when they have closed our factories (and when a salt factory is closed it deteriorates very fast and soon loses its usefulness) we shall have to pay tribute to this English subject in the city of New York for every pound of salt that comes into the United States from across the water. Oh, it is a fine thing to put salt on the free list.

I have in my district a factory that makes wire cloth, a new business—not a great many years old. This industry was brought out to meet a necessity and a want. It has become an immense business, so that to-day hundreds of thousands of dollars—yes, millions of dollars—are invested in this business, the principal works being located in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Michigan, and Illinois.

Four-fifths of the cost of the wire from which this cloth is made is labor. Four-fifths of the cost of the wire cloth is labor. But it is skilled labor. It is labor that brings four and five dollars a day in the village of Cortland, in my district. And, by the way, some gentleman gets up here and makes known his discovery that in the same town a boot and shoe maker gets bigger wages than a worker in a cotton mill or a woolen mill. Gentlemen on the other side do not seem to have the capacity to understand that it requires a skilled workman to make boots and shoes, and does not require the same degree of skill to run a machine in a woolen mill or a cotton factory. Hence higher skill gets higher wages.

Why, sir, I know laboring men in my town who work for $1.50 a day; I know those that get $2 a day for every day in the year; and I know one who gets $2.50—why? Because he has brains, a skillful hand and vigorous health, and is worth more money than other men. But take the general average of wages for a particular class of work, and you will find that the average as between this country and Great Britain holds good all along the line; that wages are twice as high here as they are there. This fact was abundantly attested by the hearings, while the old fake about the large difference in efficiency was thoroughly exploded.

The committee has put the same ad valorem on wire rods, wire, and wire cloth. If the manufacturers continue to make wire cloth in this country under this bill they must cut wages right in two in the middle. You may say these men are Republicans. Yes, they are; but not all the intelligence is in the Republican party. Once in a while there is a Democrat engaged in the manufacturing business and carrying it on successfully. I received in my mail this morning a statement from the Martin Kalbfleisch's Sons Company in reference to sulphuric acid and alum. They state that every member of the concern is a Democrat.

They comment on the fact that the committee has put sulphuric acid on the free list. They say they believe they can stand sulphuric acid on the free list if they can get a sufficient market for an increased output without reduction of wages, if the committee will discriminate against Canada, which has a tariff of half a cent a pound on sulphuric acid. But they say that if we are going to allow Canada to exact that duty they can not get the market which they should have under this free-list provision without a reduction of wages.

They say further that the committee have reduced the duty on alum two-thirds; that they might stand a reduction of one-third. They are very particular to say that they supported Mr. Cleveland for the Presidency; that they are in sympathy with this enigma of tariff reform, and all that sort of business; but they say that if the duty on alum be reduced more than one-third they must reduce the wages of their workmen, and that if the duty be left as it is in the Wilson bill they must cut the wages of their men right in two in the middle. They send me their answers to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, wherein they say:

> There would be no possibility of reducing cost except by reducing wages. Our raw material now comes in substantially free, and we should gain nothing in the way of raw material by the proposed Wilson bill.
>
> If insufficient protection were accorded us the effect on raw material would be to shut up the bauxite mines in the South, from which at present we buy most of our bauxite for alum-making in preference to the foreign article.
>
> Q. If your raw materials be free, would there be any necessity for a customs duty on the manufactured product?
>
> A. Our raw materials are now substantially free, and we can gain no benefit from a new tariff bill in that regard, beyond a possible few hundred dollars a year to be saved on salt and coal.

I have brought in only half a dozen samples of the hundreds of letters I am getting every day on this Wilson bill. It would vary the monotony if I could only find somebody somewhere who is in favor of the thing. Why, sir, I longed for the day to come when we should have this debate, for I thought that someone would be able to get up here and say that this was a good bill and that he was going to support it because it was a good bill. Alas, alas! Five days have passed and there does not seem to be a man, woman, or child in the whole United States who believes in the Wilson bill, although many are going to support it because they think it is a party measure.

I will refer to surface-coated papers. The duty on some of the raw material entering into this manufacture is in the Wilson bill at 75 per cent ad valorem, while the duty on the paper is 25 per cent ad valorem. This is a fine thing in the way of free raw material, is it not? Raw material "free" at 75 per cent ad valorem and the finished product at 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. In the interest of labor.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, in the interest of labor. There are some things about this bill that I can not understand at all, unless the rates were put into one basket and the subjects into another, and one man drew out the rates and another the subjects, and the clerk wrote them down as they thus came out. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOKER of New York. You did not have any in hand in the drawing?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, nobody ever suspected me of having any hand in the drawing.

There is a two-ply carpet manufactory in my town. The president of the corporation is a Democrat. He is a very good fellow, an intelligent man. He told me in 1892 he was in favor of free wool. Said I, "What do you want with free wool? Are you going to extend your carpet market?" "Yes, if we had free wool we could sell carpets all over the world." I replied, "Why do you not sell your carpets all over the world now? On every yard of carpet you export you can get back a rebate of 99 per cent of the duty paid on the wool." [Laughter.]

But he said he did not know that. Said I, that is not the trouble with you, my friend. You know very well that you can not compete in the markets of the world unless you cut down your wages. That is the reason you don't export. He says the committee made a mistake about his business. He said if they had put the two-ply into the three-ply paragraph and given him the higher rate of duty he could live with free wool. If he could get 30 instead of 20 per cent on the product, with free wool he thinks he could compete in the markets of America. [Laughter.]

And this is the same man who was ready two years ago to compete against the world if only he had free wool under our laws! So you see when you bring a man face to face with a practical fact, and he has to meet the particular case that is presented, without theory or humbug, he yields to the inevitable facts of the situation. At the same time he says the manufacturers of the finer grades can not continue business, if the duty that these gentlemen have put upon the finer grades is to be maintained.

No wonder, gentlemen, no wonder that at the last election in the State of New York, in a town where there is a large carpet factory which has continued to pile up carpets until every nook and every corner of their factory is filled with finished goods and no sale for them, and during the last six months have shut down their wheels and stopped business, and are helping to take care of some of the unfortunate men who, when wages were high, did not look ahead and lay up something for the future—no wonder, I say, that on the last election day hundreds of these men formed themselves in a line and marched through the streets to the polls, for the first time in their lives voting the full Republican ticket. [Applause on the Republican side.] Ah, they were "bulldozed," some Democrat says. But the man who says that does not know the laboring man of this country.

But, Mr. Chairman, they had a struggle on the sugar question it seems. I think they announced that in their report; but if they did not, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means did in his interview. They "labored" with the sugar question. Why? Why, because sugar was on the free list. In accordance with their platform they should have put a duty on it, for this is a tariff bill for revenue only; but they did not have the courage to do it. Three years ago we struggled with the sugar question. We found that there was a duty of 2 cents a pound on it; and because we did not produce 10 per cent in this country that we needed for consumption, that 2 cents came out of the pockets of the people and they did not like it. It produced sixty millions of dollars of revenue a year, or an average of a dollar a head all over the United States. We thought it proper to take that duty off.

Experiments had been made in beet-sugar raising in the West. The commencement of it was discouraging, as it was in France and Germany; but the French and German Governments encouraged it by a bounty until now they supply their own people and help to supply the markets of the world. We thought it worthy of experiment, and we did take the $60,000,000 of tax off the people while at the same time we encouraged this industry.

We gave them a bounty of 2 cents a pound on the sugars they produced, and the testimony before the Committee on Ways and Means and the views of intelligent, candid men show that they are now succeeding in the beet-sugar industry, and with proper encouragement would soon supply all the wants of our own people, at the same time adding a new industry to our farmers that the Democrats love so well. Well, they have had three years of untaxed sugar, and the consumption has increased from 52 pounds per capita to 66 pounds per capita of our population.

The laboring people can afford to buy all they want, and it is a good article of food.

This committee were confronted with that condition and they had a theory in their mind. They were down on bounties. Bounties were "bad." They were so "very bad that they were unconstitutional" in the Democratic mind. What did they do? Why, Louisiana wanted protection on sugar. They were willing to sacrifice all the industries of the country if they could only have protection on sugar. They were like my collar-and-cuff colleague from the city of Troy. [Laughter.] Well, the committee finally resolved that they would reduce this sugar bounty an eighth of a cent a year until it was wiped out. Well, that process would cost the Treasury anywhere from $35,000,000 to $40,000,000.

For what purpose? We put a bounty on sugar to build up the industry. They put a bounty on sugar as a gratuity to their friends in Florida, Louisiana, and Texas. There is no other reason under heaven. You can not explain it on any other ground. They know it will not build up the industry. The industry will starve and die with a bounty running through a series of years, with an eighth of a cent reduction each year. It is simply a bold, bald taking of the people's money out of the people's pocket, and putting it into the pocket of the individual, without a cent of compensating equivalent to the people of the United Sates.

Why, that is what our Democratic friends call highway robbery, and worse than highway robbery, as I have heard hundreds of them say. Still, I suppose you will vote for it because it is in the bill. This is a Democratic bill, and though you are opposed to it, every man of you is expected to walk right up and vote for it.

I was going to say something about ad valorems, but that subject is pretty well exhausted. I have not received a communication from anybody who had an ad valorem duty on his product who was not opposed to it, be he Democrat or Republican.

Every honest importer is opposed to it. Every honest importer has been opposed to it from the beginning down to now. Every official who ever wrote on the subject, save Robert J. Walker, has been opposed to it. The people are opposed to it. I have not heard of a man that was in favor of it, except the members of this Committee on Ways and Means, with the indorsement they receive in the President's message in its favor.

A MEMBER. Why are importers opposed to it?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, it drives the honest man out of business. That is the universal testimony. The merchants and importers of the best character in this country uniformly oppose it. They say that they are compelled to go into the streets and buy of the brokers of foreign manufacturers, because they can buy of them a good deal cheaper than they can go and buy the same articles abroad and pay the honest duty on them, and hence they are opposed to an ad valorem system. Why, an ad valorem duty always lowers the amount of the duty received, in the long run.

The lowering of the duty is only measured by the conscience of the man who swears to the value of the goods. The value of goods is a matter of opinion about which honest men may differ. Oh, what a chance this gives for the rogue and the rascal.

And then the committee, as if to encourage dishonesty and fraud, have made another change. In the administrative customs bill of 1890 we provided that where there was an undervaluation of goods, and the appraiser valued them 10 per cent higher, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties imposed by law on such merchandise, a further sum equal to 2 per cent of the total appraised value for each 1 per cent that such appraised value exceeds the declared value in the entry; and if the undervaluation exceeded 40 per cent in difference, there should be a confiscation of the goods.

But this committee simply provides that where there is an undervaluation equal to 10 per cent there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties imposed by law on such merchandise at its appraised value, an additional duty equal to the amount of the lawful rate of duty upon the sum which the appraising officer, in order to make market value, adds to the value declared in the entry; that is to say, the lawful rate of duty upon the merchandise in question shall be doubled upon the amount added by the appraising officer to make market value, and if the undervalution exceeds 40 per cent they retain our old measure of confiscation of the goods. This will be equivalent to a reduction of almost 40 per cent of duties all along the line.

But the bill is going to be fixed all right according to the rumors we hear in the streets. We are going to supply this deficiency of $75,000,000 in some way. Why, I understand the Democratic members are struggling with the question yet, although it was announced in the daily papers that they had voted upon it days ago.

They are going to have an income tax, on incomes of over $4,000, and then they are going to have an income tax on the surplus earnings of corporations; and this last feature is surely going into the bill, because the President says he approves of it and he wants it there. Well, they thought when they put a tax upon the people to meet this $75,000,000, they would put it upon them in such a way that they should not know that they were being taxed. They thought they would put it on the surplus earnings of corporations.

They consulted the Comptroller of the Currency, and he told them that there were over three hundred thousand stockholders owning stock in national banks, and they found they were going to affect three hundred thousand people owning those stocks. They inquired further, and they found that there were a million of people owning stocks in national banks and in various corporations of this country, and that a great deal of this stock was owned by individuals having small holdings, and they saw that it was going to affect a great many people, and that when they got their reduction of dividends they would remember the Democratic party. So they thought they would not put 5 per cent on the incomes of corporations, but 2 per cent, and also put 2 per cent on the surplus incomes of individuals over $4,000. I do not wonder that they hesitated about that.

Now, it is said the committee hesitate to offer the internal-revenue feature as an amendment to this bill, for fear it will not pass this House with such a load. They will offer it as a separate measure. They put a high estimate upon you Democrats who are opposed to an income tax, and your intelligence. They propose to get you to pass a tariff bill creating a deficiency of $75,000,000, and when that is done to call upon you to sustain a bankrupt Treasury with an odious tax. How long, oh, how long, will you let yourselves be deceived?

Are you not going somewhere for your revenue? Must you not put it on sugar or on beer?

Mr. WALKER. On whisky.

Mr. PAYNE. No, they can not get it on whisky soon enough to help them out.

A MEMBER. Issue bonds.

Mr. PAYNE. Issue bonds in time of peace! A great economic party issuing bonds in time of peace!

They say we have used up the surplus. So we have. We used $259,000,000 in paying the debts of the United States. They say we reduced the revenues; so we did. But we reduced it to a point where during every year of our administration we had more than enough to pay the expenses of the Government; and it is only when you come in that the revenue falls off.

Well, but they say that this is a temporary tax. How are you going to get the revenue? "Oh, we are going to have an increase of imported goods." An increase of imported goods to make up the deficiency! It would take $250,000,000 annually to make up the deficiency in revenue. Do you expect to have that? If so, where are your high wages coming from? Where is the work for the laboring man coming from if there is to be an increase of $250,000,000 worth of imported goods, paying out this money to the producers of Europe?

Why, our Democratic friends are becoming educated to our theory. Mr. A. C. Raymond, of Detroit, a prominent Democratic tariff reformer, whom we have seen about the Capitol for the last five years, appeared before the committee and said that he was converted on pearl buttons. How were his eyes opened? He had studied the question. He had found that the wages paid here were three times more than the average wages paid in England and Bohemia; and he said that he wanted that protection in order to keep this business going on, because the cost of the labor was 61 per cent in making pearl buttons; and because under the duty given under the McKinley bill the whole pearl-button business had been transferred to this country, giving employment to more than 5,000 people. The prices had slightly advanced; advanced why? Because of the greed of the retail dealers. He had even been to the store of a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and there they charged him a profit of 152 per cent on pearl buttons.

Mr. Raymond wanted the duty left at 1½ cents a line, instead of 2½ cents, and the same ad valorem rate, but the committee cut him down from that to 1 cent per line and 15 per cent ad valorem; and Mr. Raymond has been at work ever since trying to get it back where he knows it ought to be, for he is an intelligent man, and has studied the subject. I do not care how much a man may be steeped in the follies of Democratic theories, if he is sufficiently intelligent, and will study up the question and get at the foundation facts, he will come out for protection on that subject every time. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Well, we had the gentleman who sits in the seat once filled by the present governor of Ohio [Mr. IKIRT]. He appeared on the consideration of the crockery schedule. He had made a study of the subject, and he talked for an hour and a half. He had convinced himself, but I am sorry he did not convince the intelligent gentlemen of the majority of the committee, that they should continue the same protective duty on crockery as was put in the McKinley bill. He had studied the subject, and he was converted on that.

And then we had Governor McCorkle, of West Virginia, and Senator Davis, and they told us about free coal. The chairman says that the duty on coal is simply a gratuity to a railroad trust. Why, how does the railroad combination pay their employés except by carrying freight? Does not the gentleman know that if you reduce that freight and cut off that revenue they can not pay the laboring man?

So, in the last analysis it comes to the laboring man. And when you come to divide up this duty you will find that it will come to the poor miner in the mines and the poor employé who transports the coal on the railroad. And whom do you benefit save the Whitney syndicate, who now control the coal mines of Nova Scotia?

Then the editor of the Cleveland Plaindealer appeared before us in favor of free silver-bearing ores; and he became a convert to the doctrine of protection on that, because he knew about it. Then the Democratic wage-earners that came before the committee by the hundred—it is not theory with these men. They are brought face to face with the facts every day. They know what high wages are; they know what they get in the old country; they know what the conditions are there and what they are here.

I was amused the other day at my friend from Ohio, Mr. HARTER, trying to prove that workmen in England left estates, on an average of $1,700 to each man, and then depicting the prosperity and happy condition of the laboring man there. There was one fact which the gentleman left out of his calculation, a fact which knocks his statistics higher than Beecher's famous work ever soared [laughter], and that was the fact that these same laboring men, whenever they can get enough money from this side, come over here to better their condition and were never known to go back until the Democratic panic of 1892 struck this country.

The tide of immigration has been this way until last August, but now the Democratic Commissioner of Immigration, in an interview in the public press, tells us that more people are going back to the old countries than are coming here from the old countries. Mr. Chairman, that shows the change in conditions which has come about because of your threat to ruin the industries of this country.

Last of all, my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is partially converted. The last time before yesterday that I heard him make a tariff speech he strenuously insisted that the "tariff is a tax" and the amount of the duty was added to the price of goods every time. Now, he tells us that the Canadian farmer has to pay the whole duty on his products and that on a great many articles the foreigner has to pay the duty. Oh, that light should come into the mind of so eminent a tariff reformer as the last chairman of the Democratic Ways and Means Committee! Why, it is almost a miracle to behold! The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] says that not more than 5 per cent of our industries are protected.

I am amazed when I hear a man make that statement. Are the carpenter and the mason protected? Yes, by the laws of nature; because people can not build houses on the other side of the ocean and transport them to this country. The work has got to be done here. Every branch of our industries is protected; not all the farming industry, yet that is the largest beneficiary of protection. Our farmers could not live against the competition of the lands beyond the sea but for the magnificent home market that is created for them by our industrial growth and progress.

The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means wants to go out after the markets of the twelve hundred millions of people who buy only 10 per cent of the consumption of the world. Better keep the market of those who, though they be but seventy millions of people, buy more than 30 per cent of the consumption of the world. [Applause on the Republican side.] Buy it how? Buy it because they earn more than 30 per cent of the wage of the world, while the other twelve hundred millions earn but 10 per cent.

With what would the South Sea Islander, what would the native of Africa, whose sole possession is the necklace around his neck, what would such a savage pay for the railroad iron which the chairman is going to send to that market? [Laughter.] Oh, this ignis fatuus of a foreign market! Let us keep our own market, pay our own wages, keep our own consumers what they are, the best consumers in the world. Do not cut off the very life-blood of the prosperity of this great nation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, speaking of the industries of England, I have a statement here which I will print as an appendix, showing the condition of the cotton industry in Great Britain, losing money year after year and making up the loss out of capital. And yet, sir, they have all the markets of the world except ours. [Applause on the Republican side.] The London gold-beaters have reduced their production under free trade from 4,000,000,000 to less than 80,000,000 leaves a year, and their laborers from 2,000 men to 400 men, with wages going down, down every year, till they can hardly continue in the industry.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON] says he is the part owner of a steel-rail mill. I was amused to see him standing behind his intrenchment of 202 patents, which by the use of machinery have reduced the cost of his labor to the cheap labor of Europe, boldly proclaiming that he was ready for free trade. Free trade that would close the other mills of the country would only give him the monopoly by means of his patents. They constitute a very Chinese wall of protection, higher than any tariff, and it is no wonder that he is defiant.

Only a year ago and our people were in the enjoyment of a prosperity never before equaled. Now men are looking for a job; then the work was looking for workmen. Almost in a night the change came over the condition of things. Factories began to close; hours of labor were cut down, wages were reduced, and men began to cast about for the cause. Some believed it was because of the provision in the silver law by which silver was purchased month after month, and they clamored for the repeal of the Sherman act.

The President waited for an object lesson until the coming of the calamity which threatened, and then he called Congress together and recommended the repeal of the purchasing clause as the panacea for the trouble. Wise men saw that it might help the banks, but it would not help business. They said it might relieve the minds of those who had a panicky feeling that this was the real cause, but would have no other effect. Because they did not believe in the policy of the purchase they voted for the repeal. More than two months ago this clause was repealed; it relieved the banks; hundreds of millions of dollars of currency that was in hiding came to the surface ready to be used in business enterprises.

Still the factories were shut down; still the distress increased; manufacturers said they could not get orders and therefore they did not dare manufacture goods, because of this threatened tariff reduction. Merchants would not order goods because they expected more goods and less prices with the influx of foreign goods already piled up for the market. The money stringency has passed, and yet business grows worse. More than one million, perhaps two millions of men who were employed at good wages a little more than a year ago, to-day are tramping up and down our streets. Go where you will in any manufacturing city of our great land, distress, hunger, cold, and want are seen on every side.

Only a few days ago a respectable-looking workman walked into a market and stealthily wrapped up a piece of steak in a paper and carried it away. The proprietor called a policeman, who followed him to his home; upon rapping at the door the workman appeared and the policeman told him he "wanted him." The man said "Well, I suppose it is all right, I will go; but first I want you to step in here." The officer walked in and saw the man's four half-starved children around the table eagerly devouring like wild beasts the raw meat. The officer said, "I can't arrest you," and reported the matter to the marketman, and he, having a heart, sent up clothing and coal and provisions, and the man became an object of charity. Yet a little over a year ago the man was earning good wages, his children were attending school, and his home was a happy one.

That man, the gentleman from Illinois would say, has been improvident. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois never tried to rear four children on the wages of a workingman. Our workmen as a class are not improvident. If they were their savings would not be called from the banks, as they are, to keep them from starvation. With over 2,000,000 of idle men the charity of the people would be taxed beyond endurance to support hungry men in our Northern cities clamoring for work but for their savings. It is a great thing that with so many of these men idle there are so few demanding charity.

Why, it is estimated that in 1893 the wages paid in Troy were reduced from $4,240,000 to $2,240,000 in a single industry, and this is but a sample the country over. Think of the want, the suffering, the cold and hunger this winter has brought upon these poor people, reduced for the first time in their lives to eat the bread of charity; how it has sapped the manhood of the American workmen. Does any one doubt that if this House should by a decisive vote strike out the enacting clause of this bill, these men would all be at work within the next sixty days? [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, this question is something higher than merely the question of high wages, and yet the chairman says that if that was the question, and he were convinced that protection would bring higher wages, he would be a protectionist. He tells us of the immense consumption of coal, iron, and wool, and he might have said of every product there was in this country, and he wants to give up this great market—consuming one-third nearly of the world's supply of each commodity—and let in the competition of the cheapest labor on God's green earth in order to get the markets of the twelve hundred millions, whom, he says, do not consume 10 per cent of the commodities of the world. Why? Because they earn only 10 per cent of the wage.

What use has railroad iron to the naked savage of South Africa? With what shall the native of South America, whose only clothing and possession is a string of beads—with what shall he pay for the manufactured products of the United States? We have one-third of the markets of the world, and if we would only take care of them right here among ourselves it would relieve all our wants. The chairman spoke deprecatingly of the fact that the laborers of the world were coming to America to compete with our labor, and he spoke of them as "foreign labor." Well, he may rest content. The threat of free trade has turned the tide of emigration, and for months more people are leaving our shores than the number of those coming.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I am willing to hold out the hand of welcome to every self-respecting, honest workman, from whatever quarter of the world he may come. Some of us may trace our ancestry back a few generations and we will find that our ancestors were immigrants, and yet to-day we sit in this House side by side with those born in foreign countries, and with whom we know no difference, for this is their country as well as ours. If we can give them the benefits of our wages as well as our own people, so much the better. It is not the nation that has the greatest amount of acquired wealth, but it is the nation that has the best daily distribution of that wealth gained each day, that is best and strongest.

Shrewd men will accumulate a fortune if conditions favor it, either under tariff or free trade; but this country is the only land where the workman—the average workman—can acquire a home. A home and good wages means what? It means education for his children; it means the refinements of life; it means a carpet on the floor; and, as my friend from Missouri would say, "a napkin on the table." It means intelligence, good citizenship. Intelligence, good citizenship, in a land like ours, means strength and stability, and these latter elements are more than the wealth of the aristocracy of the Old World can buy.

Mr. Chairman, does it occur to you that when a laborer loses a day it is lost forever? He can not store it up like capital; he must use it day by day. Who shall repay the laborers of this country for the days and weeks and months of their idle hours that have passed away, forever lost, and for which they can never get compensation? Pass this bill—I do not say the industries of this country will stop; immense sums are invested in immense plants with which something must be done—but you introduce an element of competition which is based upon the cheapest labor in the world. The factories may run when the strikes are over and the workman is starved out; when his manhood is crushed out of him, instead of the old wages he has accepted three-fourths or one-half, he must come down to wages that barely give him bread and butter for his existence. He must come to this from the high standard of wages which has made him the greatest consumer in the world, and which has helped to make America the greatest market in the world.

There are many gentlemen who sit on the other side who represent constituencies that believe in protection. You know that the remonstrances sent in by Democratic workmen the country over were not inspired through slavish fear of masters. These men never knew a master. They are intelligent—educated in the hard school of experience. They study this bill from a knowledge of facts of daily experience, not from mere theories. You may in mock heroism brave their anger and vote for this bill, bidding adieu to public life. But you can not in after years escape the contemplation of your work. The matter of a seat here is of little consequence compared with daily life among those who have honored and trusted you, the knowledge of their pinched wages, improvident homes, desolate hearthstones, uneducated children, and above all a loss of that independence and manhood which characterizes and ennobles your constituents and mine to-day.

I want you gentlemen to amend this bill only as suits your own sweet wills. Put all the direct and war taxes upon it you choose; fix it even to suit the Ohio free trader, who was so vociferously applauded by you, then when you have perfected it I shall stand ready to vote to strike out its enacting clause that it may remain as a monument to your folly.

I shall do this to save the present law, which gave us the three most prosperous years of our national life. I shall do this because this bill will encourage fraud and perjury; will drive the honest importer from the business; will put a direct, offensive, and inquisitorial tax upon our people; will give a gratuity to the sugar-producer, without a farthing of benefit to the country; will foster the interests of sections at the expense of others; will impoverish our farmer, destroy his wool industry, leave him defenseless against the tobacco of Sumatra, give his market for barley to Canada, for hops to Germany; cripple by a reduction of their purchasing power the consumer of his vegetables, his poultry, his dairy products, his small fruits, ruin his home market, and because it will tend to reduce labor to the level of its foreign impoverished rival; will stop many a wheel, put out many a forge, bring poverty and want to American homes, sap the manhood of American citizens, and continue the blight of poverty and want, and hunger and cold, which has so recently overtaken the people of a country one year ago the busiest, the most prosperous, the most progressive, the happiest, and the most independent the world ever saw. [Loud and long-continued applause on the Republican side.]

APPENDIX.

66 STATE STREET, Boston, January 6, 1894.

CONDITION OF THE COTTON-SPINNING INDUSTRY IN ENGLAND.

The balance sheets of 93 corporations in Oldham, England, for the year 1893 show that 31 companies made profits aggregating £31,870 16*s.* 5½*d.*, and 62 corporations showed losses of £104,644 12*s.*

So that the final results show a net loss for the year of the 93 companies amounting to £72,767 15*s.* 6½*d.*

The paid-up share capital of these companies is £3,751,030 11*s.* 10½*d.*, upon which there was a net loss as above, equal to £1 18*s.* 9*d.* per cent.

Besides the above paid-up share capital, these corporations have a loan capital of £3,293,639, 0*s.* 8*d.*, so that after making allowance for interest on this borrowed money they would show a net profit, were they free from debt, of about £1 1*s.* 5*d.* per cent. Or, in other words, if a spinner employed only his own capital in manufacturing, the business would have given him a return of a little over 1 per cent on his investment.

In the year 1892 the returns of 90 companies show as follows:

56 lost	£160,666	16*s.*	6*d.*
34 made	59,233	6	8
Net loss of 90 companies	101,434	8	10½

This is equal to only about three-fourth of 1 per cent on the total investment of paid-up share capital and loan capital.

The bad condition in which the business has been getting may be judged from an examination of the balance sheets for the past four years.

At the end of 1890 only eight of the companies had adverse balances amounting to £8,412.

At the end of 1891 forty-nine companies showed adverse balances of £142,767 4*s.* 5*d.*

The adverse balances of fifty-seven corporations at the end of 1892 amounted to £269,252 12*s.* 4*d.*

At the end of 1893 the adverse balances of sixty-three companies were £366,800 14*s.* 6½*d.*

FRANCIS E. BACON & CO.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, the members of this House are perhaps fortunate to-day that I am compelled to condense into an hour a three hours' speech.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me a moment to make a request of the House?

Mr. SIMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I would ask in behalf of the gentleman from Kansas, in view of the position he occupies upon this question, that an arrangement be made, if possible, by which he shall have an extension of his time indefinitely or for another hour at least.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from West Virginia that this would disarrange the order of debate, and deprive some other gentleman of the time. The Chair, however, will submit the request. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is to speak to-day, I think, and in his absence I must object to the extension.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say that while I am compelled to condense a three hours' speech into one hour's time, this will probably prove to be a fortunate circumstance for the members of the House who may have to listen to me.

I wish to address myself to this question to-day as the representative in part of the People's party, to set forth the position of that party that I have the honor in part to represent upon this question of the tariff bill.

I am gratified, Mr. Chairman, that throughout all this discussion there have been but two sides to this question, that of the Democratic side, who have argued the question from the standpoint of free traders, and the Republican side, who argue it from the standpoint of protectionists. There has been nothing said about a tariff for revenue, and therefore I am gratified to know that we have made that much progress toward the liberation of trade which must result from the fact that there are but two sides to the question, and that is that either protection is right or free trade is right, and there is no middle ground between them for any honest man to stand upon. [Applause.]

I am a free trader in all that the word implies. I believe the right to trade is one of those inalienable rights that Thomas Jefferson spoke of; one of the rights that is born with a man, goes with him throughout his life, and is only laid down at last with him in the grave. The right to trade the products of my labor with the man that will give me the greatest return from the products of his labor is one of the rights of the human family, and any law that restricts or abridges that right is an interference with the liberty of the human race.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this question is a broad one, one that I believe in which is bound up the prosperity of the American people, and sooner or later we must settle it definitely. Either we must become a wholly protective tariff country, building up and shielding ourselves behind a Chinese wall of exclusion, or we must tear down all the barriers and challenge the world for the trade of the world.

I believe that in the discussion of this question one very important factor has been excluded. I believe, inasmuch as this is an agricultural country, and that with more than one-half of, or nearly one-half at least of, the population depending on agriculture for a livelihood, that any law or system of laws that results in injury to agriculture must finally endanger every other branch of business, for all depend upon it.

I have not heard an argument from the Republican side on this question that has to me given proof that agricultural interests are benefited one particle by this system of protection.

The history of the last twenty years proves that the interest of agriculture has been constantly declining, until to-day the farmers of this country are producing nearly everything that the soil yields, that they cultivate, at a very low profit, and a great many at an actual loss. This can be demonstrated by the facts, figures, and statistics gathered from the Eleventh Census; and for Republican protection-tariff advocates to stand here and say this difficulty, this disaster to the laboring classes that now confronts us, and to the business interests of the country generally, has come upon us suddenly within the year, is to ignore all the facts of the case.

For more than fifteen years, Mr. Chairman, the interests of agriculture have been declining. Twenty years ago the income which each cultivated acre of land in this country yielded to the farmer was $14.75. To-day the same quantity of land yields him an income of $8.15. The decline has been steadily downward for twenty years. Eight dollars and fifteen cents for a cultivated acre means the very lowest wages possible. It means but a bare subsistence with the barest necessaries of life for the agriculturist. It leaves him without any surplus whatever to buy the products of other labor; and that is the reason to-day of the lack of labor for the employés of the various factories; that is the reason that the factories are shutting down to-day, because this large class of our people is unable to purchase the products of the factories.

I have here some figures clipped from an able article taken from the New York Sun of September 10:

For more than fifteen years—from 1878 to 1893—all the great primary agricultural staples have been declining in price, although there have been periods when the price of some one was high for a limited time. This is more notably true as regards secondary products, especially meats and lard, but the trend of the whole scale has been constantly downward, and the general price level at the close of each year was lower than at its beginning.

In the meantime there has been no material reduction in the cost of production, for nearly all if not quite all of the improved machines for increasing the force or increasing the product of the farmer were invented prior to this date, and it would be safe to say that the power for increasing products on the farm by improved machinery since 1878 has not been more than 5 per cent, while the decline in the value of farm products has gained in fifteen years more than 50 per cent. The average value of the crops per acre for 1893 only amounts to $8.15 per acre, which brings it down, if not below, at least to the very verge of the cost of production, which only leaves to the farmer very low wages at least for his toil and leaves him without any surplus whatever to purchase anything beyond the bare necessaries of life, and often he must content himself with a half supply of those.

As 203,000,000 acres are now employed in the growing staple crops, it follows that the power of the farmer to purchase is this year one billionfive hundred and sixty-three million less than it would be if he was receiving the prices of 1866 or 1870 for his staples. If the price now realized is in the foreign markets equal to those received from 1871 to 1875, the farmer would be able to spend one billion four hundred and fifty millions more for manufactures and other commodities than he will be able to spend with prices at their present level. Were the prices now equal to the average of those obtained from 1876 to 1880, the purchasing power of the farmers would this year be augmented by seven hundred and sixty-eight millions. Should the crops of 1893 give average yields and the price equal those current from 1881 to 1885, the farmer's spending power would be six hundred and forty-five millions greater than with present prices—even with prices as low as those prevailing from 1886 to 1890.

The farmers of the United States would have three hundred and fifty-eight millions added to their debt-paying and purchasing power in 1893, and like advances on the other products of the farm would create an ample fund for building and general improvement, thus employing more labor. The least of these sums, added to the sums yearly distributed among the producers of metals and textiles, would afford employment for greater numbers, keep the mills in motion, and make money abundant and bring good times.

Much stress is laid upon the necessity of cheap food for the wage-worker, but what possible benefit can be derived from a cheapness that deprives the thirty millions who produce food and fiber of the ability to keep the wage-worker employed by buying the product of artisan and operative? Doubling the present price of wheat would probably add the price of six days' labor to the cost of the year's supply of bread for the average family; but with wheat at an average of $1 a bushel at the farm markets, and other farm products at proportionate price, there would be no idle mills, and the earner of wages would have that easily procured and constant work which would insure him the continuous ability to buy bread. Would not that be far better than existing conditions and bread unattainable so low in price?

We recently published a statement to the effect that the 1,600 young women employed in Warner's corset factory in Bridgeport, Conn., had been reduced to one-half time, and that 600 of them were unable to buy food, and were fed by charity of their employers. Such conditions exist because the women on the farms are unable to renew their corsets with wheat selling west of the Mississippi at from 30 to 40 cents a bushel. The relations between the price of wheat and the lack of power to buy corsets and the idleness and inability of the women of Bridgeport to buy bread is as obvious as that between the earth's movement and the day and night.

However people may have disagreed about the late Zach. Chandler's statesmanship, no one questions his success as a merchant and this was due as much to his power of discerning economic conditions affecting his customers as to the honorary judgment with which he provided salable goods. Soon after the close of the civil war, being asked if he could find sale in the farming districts for a lot of rich dress goods which he was shipping to small inland towns, his reply was characteristic: "Sell them, sell them; why the women on the farms of Michigan have discarded homespun and calico for silk and merino, and no farmer's son now thinks of going out to plow unless dressed in doeskin trousers and calfskin boots. Don't you know that wheat is selling for $2 per bushel?"

Such was the late Zach. Chandler's way of stating the operation of that economic law which enables people to buy liberally of the products of others. Mills and furnaces are idle and operatives unable to buy bread because a large part of that thirty million inhabiting the farms have lost their purchasing power. The purchasing power has been lost because the products of the soil have, over wide areas, sold at or below the cost of production. Farm products bring inadequate prices because primarily of the existence during recent years of a cultivated acreage in excess of the world's requirement, and there are those who believe that the depressing influences of this excessive acreage upon prices has been intensified and augmented by methods employed upon produce exchanges.

When we reflect that had the 460,000,000 bushels of wheat exported since July 1, 1891, brought but 15 cents more a bushel, the corn exported 10 cents more, and the cotton exported only 4 mills more on the pound, fully one hundred millions less in gold would have gone abroad and many millions less in American securities have been sent back, we can understand that the purchasing power of the farmer would have been enhanced by several hundred millions, and like advances would have been secured on all similar products sold at home. Such an addition to the farmer's power to purchase would have kept the mills and furnaces employed; the operatives having constant work at high wages, would be able to buy bread, and their power to purchase of the products of their own labor, as well as of the products of the labor of others would be vastly increased; gold would be abundant, confidence unimpaired, and prosperity still be the rule.

With prices of farm products against such as afford their fair remuneration for the labor and capital employed in production, as they presently must be by reason of the elimination of the world's acreage success, the purchase of the thirty millions upon our farms will help to keep every spindle busy, labor in the towns will at least for a time be well employed, hoarding will cease, confidence will be restored, money become abundant, and an era of prosperity will result from the operation of that natural law which is the ultimate armature in determining the price in nearly every product of labor.

The growth and wealth of this entire country in the past has depended on the growth and prosperity of agriculture.

To show you that the wealth created by these farmers has steadily passed into the hands of the money-lenders, you have but to study the facts and figures in connection with the increase of mortgage indebtedness upon the farms of this country. The farmers of the country in 1850 owned 60 per cent of the wealth; 53 per cent in 1860; 40 per cent in 1890.

Why is this? Has the wealth of the entire country diminished in the same ratio? The total valuation of the property in the United States was $8,000,000,000 in 1850. In 1860 it was $16,000,000,000, or a gain of 100 per cent. In ten years, in 1870, it was $30,000,000,000, a gain of 87½ per cent. In ten years, in 1880, it was $45,000,000,000, or a gain of 50 per cent. In 1850 farm mortgages were almost unknown. A mortgaged farm was an exception, and not the rule. To-day it is the rule, and a farm without a mortgage is the exception.

Agriculture yields a lower rate of interest than any other pursuit. Why is this? Politicians tell us we are shiftless, idle, extravagant, all of which we know to be absolutely false as a general statement, though it may be true in individual cases. In 1880 agriculture employed 44 per cent of our industrial population, had an invested capital of twelve billions, and yielded products valued at two billions; those engaged in mining, manufacturing, mechanics, and the production of petroleum, with a capital of two billion seven hundred millions, threw on the market a product valued at five billion six hundred millions.

While the gross income of the farmer was 6 per cent of the invested capital, the gross income of these other pursuits was over 200 per cent. Farming is the national occupation. Our country is peculiarly an agricultural country. Farmers are the chief wealth-producers of our country; nine-tenths of our exports are agricultural products. Is it right for the wealth-producers, toilers, to be robbed of the fruits of their labors? The census of 1880 fixes the male population engaged in all occupations at 14,744,842, out of a total working population, male and female, of 17,392,690, of whom 7,670,493 were classed as agriculturists.

I quote these figures to show you that when any law or any system of government does not bring prosperity to the agriculturists of this country, it must follow as the night the day that no prosperity can come to any business in this country. Let us see a little further where the losses were.

In 1873 corn was worth to the farmer 40 cents a bushel and yielded a return of $11.41 an acre.

In 1889 corn was worth 28 cents a bushel, and yielded a return to the farmer of $7.63 an acre.

In 1873 the home value of wheat was $1.15; average yield 12.7 bushels, and worth $14.59 per acre.

In 1889 the home value was $0.698; yield per acre, 12.9 bushels; value per acre $8.98. The quantity per capita was about the same in 1873 as in 1889.

In 1872, 10,303,000 milch cows were worth $339,000,000, or nearly $33 each. In 1890, 15,952,000 were worth $352,000,000, or $22 each. The number of cows in 1872 was one to a little less than four of the population. In 1890, the number was one to a little more than four of the population; so that relatively to population, the number of cows had decreased and their value at the same time had fallen over 30 per cent.

Great as has been the fall of agricultural products, the fall in the price of farm lands has been greatest of all, notwithstanding the fact that the area of arable lands, relatively to population, is rapidly decreasing; and nowhere has the value of land fallen more than in the old settled parts of the country.

At the price of wheat in 1873 the value to the farmer of the crop of 1889 would have been $563,000,000 instead of $342,000,000, a difference of $221,000,000. This would have gone a long way toward paying off mortgages.

The corn crop of 1889, at the price of 1873, would have yielded $1,008,000,000 instead of $597,000,000.

At the value of milch cows in 1873, the number in 1890 would have been worth $510,000,000 instead of $352,000,000.

The cotton crop of 1888, at the price of cotton in 1873, would have been worth to those South $515,000,000, instead of $292,000,000, its actual value in 1888.

The difference in the value of farm products in 1873 and 1888–'89, correctly marks the difference between prices which the farmers should have received and what they receive now, because in part of protective tariffs, as I propose to show you before I finish my remarks.

There has been a good deal said about trusts in this discussion. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] the other day, through some false information, I presume, denied even that there was a steel-rail trust. The Republican party have always based their argument principally upon this fact, that they want a protective tariff, first, because they say it builds up competition among manufactories in their own country; and, secondly, because it yields a higher rate of wages to the American laborer, increasing his capacity to buy of the products of the farm, which will result in creating a home market to consume the products of agriculture. Let us see about that. Let us see what the effect of a protective tariff is. It was very cogently stated by Mr. Henry George, who says that out of a protective tariff, as naturally as grow toadstools out of a rotten log, grow the trusts and combines of your country.

These facts were taken from the New York World of September, 1892. Let us see. The 14,500 employers of the 905,000 paupers in our pauper houses, called protected industries, collected in 1880 over $300,000,000 under pretense that it was to pay the difference in wages; and the total amount received by their workers was under $300,000,000. The employers had absolute pauper labor, and robbed the paupers of over half of the public money contributed for their support.

Here are a few specific instances: The forty-nine refineries—the protected sugar trust—sold to the people in 1890 3,156,996,000 pounds. They collected 1½ cents per pound "protection" to pay the difference in wages, or $47,354,940. The total wages paid for refining this sugar were $4,419,094, leaving to the sugar trust the sum of $42,935,846 profit in addition to its pauper labor.

This enormous profit from employing pauper labor was in addition to the ordinary and usual profits in the refining business, and between 1880 and 1891 it amounted to $546,931,358, every cent of which was taken from the people by forty-nine refineries under the false pretense that it was to pay the difference in wages between this country and abroad. When, in 1888, an enormous campaign contribution was levied upon the sugar trust it refused to pay it. Senator Plumb advised Chairman Foster to "put it over the fire and fry some of the fat out of it." This was done, and the McKinley bill reduced its protection from 1½ cents to one-half cent a pound. But plenty of fat was left. The protected sugar trust did collect from the people in the year 1892 its protection of half a cent per pound on 3,600,000,000 pounds of sugar, or $18,000,000 to "pay the difference in wages." The total wages it pays is 14 cents per 100 pounds, or $5,040,000, leaving $12,960,000 which it pockets from the money collected to pay its workmen the "difference in wages" after getting its labor practically free of cost.

The forty-nine refineries reported to the Census Office in 1880 that the total wages paid for refining was 14 cents per 100 pounds. This included all wages paid. The Bureau of Statistics reports that 1880 to 1891 there were refined 16,277,719 tons, and wages paid $51,046,926, if the labor cost of refining remained the same as in 1880. It has been greatly reduced. To pay the difference in wages these forty-nine refiners have received protection of 1½ cents per pound in addition to the compensatory protection of 2 to 3½ cents to recoup the duties on raw material. This protection for wages was $546,931,358, every cent of which the trust promised to collect and pay the workmen in addition to foreign wages. The refiners collected it, but the total the workman got was $51,046,926, and the trust had $495,884,432 to divide up as boodle, and then had pauper labor that cost it not a cent.

The Tweed ring took about $32,000,000 of the public money for the improvement of the city of New York, paid about $26,000,000 in wages for honest work, and stole $6,198,950. The sugar trust in 1890 took $47,350,940 of the public money, paid $4,419,094 in wages, and "lifted" $42,935,846.

In the year 1892, the sugar trust took from the people $18,000,000, paid $5,040,000 in wages, and "lifted" $12,960,000. No one defended the thefts of the Tweed ring on the ground that 80 per cent was to pay wages, but every Republican in the land defends both the old and the new "conversions" of the sugar trust as proper and moral because a small percentage goes to the workman—and to the Republican campaign fund.

So much for the sugar trust.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I understand from the drift of your argument that the continual decrease in the price of agricultural products is owing to the policy of Republican protection.

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, sir; you are entirely right.

Mr. BOWERS of California. One other question, if you will allow me, a question which my friend did not have time to answer yesterday; and I would like to ask you, if you will tell us, why this protection, that is so hurtful to the whole agricultural interests, and which, as the eloquent gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. EVERETT] this morning stated, was "heathenish," if I understood him aright, is all right and necessary for the big mill owners in the rich State where he lives, to which this bill gives a protection of 40 per cent, or $4 on every $10, I would like to ask the gentleman to come down to that, as I know he can do it.

Mr. SIMPSON. I understand your question. The gentleman surely knows that the agricultural classes, whose interests, according to the Republican members, are left out of this bill, because they have nothing protected, are ignored because they are scattered over so wide a territory, because they represent unorganized labor, and because these other parties can combine and concentrate their forces and send a lobby here to Washington to lobby in their interests, and because farmers do not know how to protect their interests as do the protected interests; and also because Democratic politicians are no better than Republican politicians. When this force is brought here they always surrender, not alone to get the "fat" for the campaign but of getting voters to keep them in power.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Your answer is very satisfactory.

Mr. SIMPSON. Now, about the carpet trust. Mills in 1890 required 116,000,000 pounds of carpet wool, which is not raised in this country. They imported 30 per cent and added 7 per cent of the domestic shoddy on which they had to pay from 3 to 6 cents revenue duty on the wool they used, and they were given a "compensatory duty" of 12 to 70 cents per square yard. Then to unite their interests with the others, they were given a "protective duty" for themselves of 35 to 50 per cent to pay the difference in wages. To collect both duties or either duty they had to form a trust and agree on a selling price. Without this trust they could not collect even 1 per cent of the tax they paid on their imported wool.

Our carpet mills produced in 1880 product valued without wages at $24,957,524. To pay the "difference in wages" they were authorized to collect from the people, through a tariff trust controlling prices, not less than $8,735,154. They actually paid a total of $6,835,218, getting their labor for nothing and defaulting on the trust funds, $1,889,936. This was only their protection to pay the difference in wages, the ad valorem duty given them for this purpose. They had a "compensatory duty" besides.

But the protection of the carpet trusts was not confined to a tax for the difference in wages. It paid a duty on its raw material, and this duty it had a right to collect again from the people.

For every pound of imported wool used it should have the power to charge up the duty of 3 to 6 cents. But the Congress instead of authorizing it to collect the 3 to 6 cents paid, authorized it to collect 18 cents. The value of only a small part of this compensatory duty to the trust, 4,077,190 yards at 44 cents, 21,986,434 yards at 12 cents, 862,394 yards at 17 cents, 1,984,401 yards at 12 cents, 9,441,205 yards at 40 cents, 60,000 yards at 70 cents, 157,620 yards at 70 cents, 40,000 yards at 25 cents, was $8,755,863. The total duties paid were $2,077,959, leaving fat from shoddy for contributions worth at least $6,667,904.

I have here a list of the window-glass trust, worked under the same conditions. The fifty-eight members of the American window-glass trust were protected in 1860 by a duty of 15 per cent; in 1861 it was raised to 80 per cent; in 1884 to 120 per cent; and in 1890 to 132 per cent.

The price per half box of 18 by 24 in this country was in 1860 $3.60; in 1890, $3.13. The price abroad per 100 pounds of 16 by 24 to 24 by 30 was in 1867, $4.50; in 1890, $1.80.

We imported in 1890 of this size 19,097,057 pounds, for which we paid in our labor products the foreign cost $343,540, and McKinley fine (duty) $452,605, so that while the cost abroad per 100 pounds was $1.80 it should be here $4.18. In 1880 the total wages paid here for making $1.80 worth was 75 cents, and the manufacturer received to pay the difference in wages $2.38, leaving him $1.53 net "profit" for using pauper labor supported by a tax on the public.

The window-glass trust is protected by a duty of 132 per cent on the common size, 16 by 24, to "pay the difference in wages" between this country and Belgium. That "difference" is not equal to a duty of 10 per cent. Here is the proof. Take cost of melting in the United States from Republican reports, Geological Survey: Raw material, $47.53; labor costs $19.96; total, $67.49.

Take cost of melting in Belgium from Republican consular reports: Raw material, $48.44; labor costs, $11.53; add 10 per cent duty, $6.29; total, $69.26. A tariff duty of 10 per cent more than compensates for this difference in wages of 40 per cent. The additional 122 per cent duty, equal to $76.82, is "fat" levied solely for the benefit of the window-glass trust that its members may contribute liberally to the Republican campaign fund. They do. It is not necessary to "fry the fat" out of them.

The window-glass trust was protected in 1891 by a duty of $2.37½ on $2.20 worth of foreign glass 16 by 24. The cost of raw material for a melting was, in 1884, in the United States, $47.53; in Belgium, $48.44. Wages paid, ten-pot furnace, per month was, in United States, $2,241, and in Belgium, $1,584. The duty levied on a month's product of a Belgium furnace was $2,937, or $796 more than the total wages paid in this country, collecting this money from the people. They never paid it to their laborers, but have put it into their own pockets, as proved by the facts and figures that I have collected here.

The enormous amount collected from the people for this extraordinary privilege for the products they produce fell heavily upon the agricultural classes. They are the consumers of sugar and window glass and all of those things that the four hundred and fifty trusts that have been formed under your protective system produce, and that is what has brought the agricultural interests of this country to poverty and bankruptcy to-day, and it must follow that the other interests, as I stated before, must fall into it, and if they do not look to the upbuilding of those interests the whole fabric of your institutions must bring us to bankruptcy as sure as the sun will rise in the morning.

To show that protection has not built up the home market, has not increased the demands for the products of the farm, I want to read a few more statistics:

The total area devoted to the cultivation of cereals in the six New England States in 1889 was 580,297 acres, as compared with 746,128 acres in 1879, a decrease of 165,831 acres, or 22.23 per cent.

In Massachusetts the total area in cereals in 1889 was 63,376 acres, as compared with 104,631 acres in 1879, a decrease of 41,255 acres, or 39.43 per cent.

Twenty-two per cent decrease in the cultivated acres in the New England States! There, where, if anywhere, agriculture should have been benefited by this home market that we hear so much about, there is a falling off of the cultivated acres of over 22 per cent. Now, I ask my Republican friends, where is that home market of which they tell us, that was to take the products of the farm? Where has it gone?

And in the State of New York, a great manufacturing State, where they have this boasted home market, the total area devoted to the cultivation of cereals in 1889 was 3,239,466 acres, as compared with 3,669,834 acres in 1870, a falling off of 11.75 per cent. Pennsylvania shows a decrease of about 6 per cent in the cultivated acres devoted to cereals, and she is one of the great manufacturing States. So Illinois, the best agricultural State in the Union, one that is building up her manufacturing interests to establish the home market for her farm products, shows a decrease of about 20 per cent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania. Those statistics do not take into account the amount of land that is occupied by the opening of new roads and the encroaching of the municipalities of the State upon the farm lands.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, there used to be considerable controversy between Kansas City and Denver. The Denver people claimed that their city limits extended to the Missouri River, while the Kansas City people claimed that their city limits extended to the Rocky Mountains. [Laughter.] On that line of argument the reasoning of the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be correct, but this decrease has not been in the West.

Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania. How about the roads?

Mr. SIMPSON. I believe that in Kansas we have about the widest roads in the country, because the people of Kansas are a broad-gauge people and they need wide roads [laughter], but the width of our roads is only 60 feet. In your New England States your roads have been opened up for hundreds of years, and so with New York State. So that suggestion about the roads falls to the ground.

What has taken the place of those cultivated acres? The cultivation of them has been abandoned because there was found to be no profit in agriculture.

Now, as to the arguments of the protectionists, let us see what there is in them. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], who through a long experience here has learned all the details of everything connected with this question of protection and tariff taxation, stated yesterday on this floor that we were manufacturing cotton goods in this country as cheaply as they could be made abroad and that they could be bought as cheap in the city of Washington at this time, at retail, as they could be bought in the city of London.

If that is the case, if we are doing that in this country, then I want to ask you gentlemen fairly—let us be honest with one another—where are the manufacturers going to get the money to pay the increased prices of labor or the increased prices which you say they will pay for farm products?

Again, if they are making these goods here and selling them as cheaply as they are sold in England, what need have they of protection? Certainly it can not be of any advantage to them. According to your own statement, gentlemen, your own manufacturers are capable of making these goods so as to compete with all the world. What need, then, of protection?

Now, as to wages, what country of all the countries in the world do you want protection against? Do you want it against China, which pays the lowest wages of any country in the world? Is the cheap labor of China flooding this country with its products? Do you want it against Italy, which has the highest protective tariff in Europe and pays the lowest wages? Do you want it against Germany? Do you want it against France? No, sir; you want it against Great Britain, a free-trade country that pays the highest wages in Europe. If your argument is correct that high wages necessitate protection, why does not Great Britain want protection against Italy or against France or against Russia?

It has been demonstrated over and over again, and if I had time I could demonstrate it here, that the laborer in the American manufactory produces double as much per capita as any other workman in the world. The laborers in the United States factories produce on an average $1,600 worth of wealth per annum per capita, the laborer in Great Britain $800, in Germany $500, in Italy about $400. Go all through the countries that have the highest protective tariff and that pay the lowest wages, and you will find in those countries the lowest average production of wealth. Now, every man that has reasoned this question out knows that wages are regulated by the opportunities that labor has to employ itself.

In all new countries these opportunities abound. The great and boundless West opened a new country where the surplus labor of our land could find an outlet, where men could go and take up the vacant land, and labor could thus find employment. This, in connection with organized labor in the large cities, has helped to keep up wages. But now that land has rapidly concentrated into the hands of monopolists, who hold it out of use, there is no more new country to be thus opened, and the great tide of population is turned back again upon the East. Competition among laboring men has set in, and as there are no new outlets they must compete against one another for a job. As monopoly rapidly takes land out of use and deprives labor of access to it, jobs rapidly decrease, the number of people seeking employment also grows, competition becomes sharper, and wages, by a natural law of supply and demand, must gradually go down.

My friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] said to-day in the course of this debate that protection on wool and woolen goods had enabled the wool-grower of this country to get better prices, and that in this way shoddy, which would otherwise come from Europe, has been shut out. There are no facts or figures to prove this assertion. The fact is that the price of wool has been and is steadily going down under a high protective tariff. Why? Mainly because of the land monopoly. Every man who knows anything about sheep-raising knows that sheep need a large territory to roam over when they are kept in large bodies; that they eat down to the root of the grass and soon destroy it; that where they must be penned in they can only be kept in limited numbers. Hence, as the value of land goes up, it is not profitable to keep sheep. In evidence of this we have the fact that sheep-raising in this country has steadily moved westward as land became more and more occupied, and consequently rose in value.

Another thing, your protective tariff in this country has had the effect of narrowing the profits of the agricultural classes, cutting off the consumption of woolen goods, creating a demand for a cheaper article, woolen goods being placed beyond the reach of a large mass of the consumers of this country. When any man says there is no shoddy used now in manufacturing goods of this country, he states what is not true. Shoddy is more largely manufactured in this country than it ever was before in our history.

My friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] the other day, in his elegant way, flourished here some samples of shoddy, remarking that by the McKinley bill these shoddy goods were shut out; that no self-respecting American lady would wear goods of that kind. I want to show you a sample of the shoddy goods that the American people are wearing. I want to show you a sample of the goods that the American farmer and laborer are wearing to-day under your grand system of protective tariff. I want to give you protectionists, in the language of Mr. Cleveland, an "object lesson." Yesterday I went along the market on the south side by the park, where the farmers come in from the country to sell their "protected products" in the "home market." I went along, viewing the mass of people collected there. I wanted to get an average suit of clothes, such as the American farmer and laborer are wearing to-day under your beautiful protective tariff. I made a bargain with one man by which I bought his overcoat; and I have brought it here to give you gentlemen an object lesson. There it is [untying a package and exhibiting an overcoat]. There it is, gentlemen. [Great laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole will be in order.

Mr. SIMPSON. The man from whom I bought this overcoat told me that he got up at 12 o'clock at night and drove 25 miles with the products of his farm in order to sell them in this great capital city of the nation. My friends, that is the garment which he wore; that is the result of the profits which the farmers of this country are enjoying under your beautiful system of protection—an old shoddy rag with which this man has shivered through the winter blasts! [Applause on the Democratic side.] Talk about prosperity to the farmer! I can duplicate that coat by the million in the United States to-day on the backs of American farmers and American laboring men.

Mr. LOUD (to Mr. SIMPSON). I wish you would take it off of my seat. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, sir; as you are a protectionist, you do not want to come in contact with the result of your system any more than the saloon-keeper wants to come in contact with the products of his factory. [Applause.]

Mr. BOWERS of California. Will you not vote, all the same, for the 40 per cent protection in this bill for the manufacturers?

Mr. BRYAN. That is better than 300 per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] vote to make the protection any lower?

Mr. LOUD (to Mr. SIMPSON). I would not object to the coat if it were clean.

Mr. SIMPSON. Let me say to the gentleman from California that I am not pleased with this bill. I like much better the bill of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON]. But, inasmuch as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] says in his speech that this bill carries large reductions as compared with the McKinley system of robbery, and inasmuch as it puts one hundred and thirty-one more articles on the free list, therefore every man who has his article on the free list will be an enemy to the protection the other fellow gets, and must eventually come in the direction of free trade. I support and welcome the bill as a step in the direction of what may eventually follow. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me a moment?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In what mill, in what town, was the goods made that the gentleman has exhibited?

Mr. SIMPSON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I can not tell in what mill it was made, or in what town, any more than can the man who bought and paid for it. He bought it a year ago, he tells me, in the capital city of the United States, here at Washington, and paid $8.50 for it. I bought him another shoddy coat to take its place for $10.80 that will probably wear him about as long. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Was it made of imported goods or of American goods; does the gentleman know?

Mr. SIMPSON. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Can the gentleman say of his own knowledge whether the goods he has exhibited here in that coat was of American manufacture or foreign goods?

Mr. SIMPSON. Whatever it is, it is the product of protection. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Where was it made?

Mr. SIMPSON. Whether it was made in England or France or Germany or the United States, it does not detract from the force of my argument, under the conditions of the farmer and the laboring classes to-day, owing to the system of protection that has forced him to wear such a rag. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, I do not believe—and I regret to see that my time is nearly exhausted; I would like to have longer time to talk about this system of protection—but I do not believe that this great nation to-day needs protection against any person on earth. With our steam power, with our electric power, with our water power, with the immense machinery that this country possesses, doing the work of millions of men, with our boundless resources, with our means of transportation, with our vast tracts of magnificent arable and grazing land, I believe we can safely tear down the custom-houses and challenge the world for competition in its markets. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I believe, gentlemen, that the time has come for the United States as a great nation to take its place as one of the great commercial nations of the earth.

I want to read you here a short extract from a speech made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], the brilliant leader of the Republican party, a sentiment that I indorse heartily and entirely, and if it had been uttered in connection and in support of the free-trade measure, it would have had a meaning that it has not in connection with the mere extension of the use of gold as a measure of value in commercial transactions. He says:

In former times they used to be more especially confined to each particular country and were not simultaneous—

He is speaking of the periodical depressions—

but modern times have bound the earth together, so that it is impossible for even the greatest nation to disregard the other nations of the earth. The railroad has diminished distance, and the telegraph has obliterated time. The ocean steamers plying between the different hemispheres, the trains of cars which sweep across the continents, have made business a far different thing from what it was in the earlier ages. Without undertaking to give the particulars of the change, it is enough to say that the world, which in the days of Magellan it required three years to circumnavigate, can be circumnavigated to-day in a period of two months. This binding together of the whole world by obliteration of time and distance has bound together the business of the world, and hence these periodic changes occur in greater or less measure throughout the world, not always exactly simultaneous, but always more or less sympathetic.

That is it, my friends, the commercial nations, the civilized nations of the world are bound together by these natural ties, that endless chain with its unbroken links, so that when you destroy one of the links you disarrange the entire system, and it is felt like an electric shock throughout the whole earth. This panic, the failures, and bankruptcies all over the world to-day, I believe, is largely due to the vicious financial system that has disturbed the course of business, and is largely due, also, to the vicious system of protection that prevents the human race from exchanging the products of their toil and labor without restriction.

I believe in this universal union for the interests of the human race. Why, you protectionists acknowledge it yourselves when you pass your laws. Whom are you passing that law against? Is it against the citizens of a foreign country who want to come here, fill your country with good things that everybody needs and wants? No; you are passing it against the citizens of your own country, because you acknowledge that if you would remove these restrictions your own people would be quick to take advantage of the fact and better their condition by exchanging the products of their toil for the products of the toil of the other peoples of the earth. This law is passed against your own citizens.

Do the American people need protection? Does the Yankee need protection for fear he will make a bad trade? The Yankee people have been the greatest and most successful swappers the world ever saw, and your protective tariff is passed to prevent these people from making trades, on the assumption that they will make bad trades against their own interests.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion allow me to say that as has been stated upon this floor before, even if you adopt the principle of free trade in your laws to-day, your hard times will continue, because the principles of free trade as generally understood, are not as I understand them, and will not be carried out to their logical conclusion as I understand they should be.

Trade only follows when you have something to trade. If you have a thing to trade, you must have the proper tools and machinery for carrying on the trade, which will necessitate a reform in your financial system to provide the means with which to trade without putting burdens upon the people by the monopoly which at present exists through our national banking system. But after you have your transportation system to carry the goods from State to State, to bring about exchanges, after you have gotten your financial system and your transportation system, after you have removed the restrictions from trade, then you must destroy the monopoly of land, wherein lies the store of wealth that labor must have access to in order to get something to trade.

Labor must have access to this great store of wealth, the earth, in order to have something to trade. If I had time to-night, I would read you some facts and figures that will illustrate this principle in connection with the great iron ore products of this country, showing that the Mesaba ore district, up in the State of Minnesota, a deposit of ore 120 miles long, 30 miles wide, 300 feet deep, covered with a layer of gravel and earth, in some places not more than 4 to 30 feet deep, which can be mined at a cost of from 4 to 40 cents a ton—that that great iron ore deposit is under the control and ownership of a trust at whose head stands the great head of the Standard oil trust, Mr. Rockefeller. Instead of reading this article, I will insert it in the RECORD. It is as follows:

THE GREAT MESABA IRON ORE RANGE.

The history of the development of the big Mesaba iron ore mines furnishes an excellent text for a single-tax sermon. These vast deposits of iron ore in Northeastern Minnesota cover an area of about 120 by 30 miles. The deposits vary in thickness from 50 to 200 feet, and the ore beds are covered with a layer of gravel and earth from 4 to 30 feet thick. More than two billion tons of ore are known to exist in the Mesaba range. The common method of mining this ore is by means of steam shovels both to remove the gravel and earth and to dig the soft ore and load it directly from the open cuts into cars. The cost of mining the past season varied from 4 to 40 cents a ton—the average being much nearer 4 than 40 cents.

As often happens with unusually valuable land, a large portion of the Mesaba range was a gift from the General Government to the State, under the provisions of the swamp act, by which the States acquired the title to the swamp land lying within their boundaries. Such land as was not owned by the State of Minnesota was generally owned by men who had bought it for pine land. When the mineral deposit was discovered, speculators immediately leased the more valuable tracts from the State or owners. These men agreed to pay about 25 cents per ton royalty, and in addition to mine ore amounting in the aggregate to over 16,000,000 tons a year. The royalty on this amount must be paid whether the ore is mined or not. The New York Times of December 26 says:

"The lands secured by the speculators they in turn leased to mining companies at a sharp advance, rigidly binding the mining companies to all the conditions relative to amount of ore to be annually mined that were stated in the first lease. The speculators secured an advance in royalty of from 15 to 30 cents per ton as their profit on the transaction. If it is paid as agreed upon, scores of men who never struck a blow in any creative industry or performed any useful work will draw royal revenues from the iron-ore deposits of the Mesaba range.

"Last spring the Mesaba region swarmed with eager miners and speculators. * * * The greatest iron-ore deposit found by men was being developed. Towns rose out of the ground as if by magic. * * * It was boom times in Northern Minnesota, and the operators in the Mesaba range had all the other miners of iron ore in regions that are adjacent to Lake Superior by the throat, and were rapidly choking the life out of them."

Alleged mining kings in other ore-producing regions found their wealth rapidly slipping out from underneath them, and many such millionaires and important financiers became bankrupt in a few weeks. A money stringency began which soon extended to the Mesaba, "where mining companies, the face value of whose stock amounted to $189,000,000, had been incorporated to extract ore from the iron deposit and money from the pockets of the investing public. Directly times grew hard on the Mesaba. It was evident that the American market could not consume sufficient iron ore to enable the speculators to pay the royalty they had contracted to pay." Fear and panic seized the speculators and the bottom seemed to fall out of the financial slough.

"Forth from this financial storm," says the New York Times, "strode John D. Rockefeller, of Standard Oil Company fame, serene, keen-eyed, alert-brained, and armed with effective knowledge of precisely what he wanted and how to get it, and with sufficient means to buy it, and resolute in the intention to secure sufficient area of the iron-ore laden lands of the Mesaba range to control the output of the range and to set the price. Promptly after the appearance of Mr. Rockefeller a consolidation of the Mesaba iron-ore mines was effected, and included in the consolidation was the Duluth and Mesaba Northern Railroad Company."

Other mines being without outlet, the Rockefeller syndicate now has a monopoly of the richest iron-ore deposit in the world, and within limits fixed by the import duty on ores and the cost of production in other mines, can "fix" prices. This is the syndicate that says free iron ore will ruin mining industries, and that has recently closed its mines at Virginia City, Mesaba range, to secure the retention of the uncalled-for protection. That the syndicate expects to sell ore at prices which will leave a wide margin for profits is evident from the fact that it, together with other mining companies, is under contract to pay royalties on millions of tons of ore in excess of what is needed to supply the American market.

If the single tax were in operation, and the natural rent of these mines—their full royalty value—were taken by the State of Minnesota, not only would the Mesaba range supply a sufficient revenue for the State, but the monopolistic railroad syndicate would be impossible. More ore would be mined, and more miners find employment at better wages than at present. There being no monopoly, the product would be sold cheaper, to the benefit of all iron-consuming industries. Not only this, but the panics, bankruptcies, etc., in this and other iron-ore regions would not have occurred.

BYRON W. HOLT.

To-day the laborers in the mines up in the iron-ore district are on the verge of starvation and out of employment because of this iron-ore trust. While the consumers of iron all over the United States are paying tribute to this iron-ore trust, the people are paying these tributes to the sugar trust, the window-glass trust, the carpet trust, and all the four hundred and fifty trusts of the country. These are the things which have robbed labor.

The eloquent gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] told you the other day of the enormous increase in wealth in the last thirty years, from 1860 to 1890. He told you we had increased the wealth of this country more than thirty billions of dollars; and he closed his speech by saying that nearly three millions of men were out of employment and upon the verge of starvation. I have the New York World of to-day, which gives an account of ten thousand loaves of bread being distributed amongst the poor of New York, where every loaf of bread meant a meal for a family, and probably saved the life of a human being.

Labor, after having created this enormous pyramid of wealth, stands starving to-day amidst plenty. Who has gotten that wealth? Has not the labor that created it been deprived of its share? Under any just system of laws to secure the distribution of wealth these laboring men should have been benefited by this large increase of wealth. What are the facts? Through your system of finance, transportation, and protection thirty thousand men control one-half of this wealth which they gather into their coffers, and they are now called upon to support, through charity, the men who have created it.

Mr. Chairman, just a word more. Let me say to the laboring men that this is not the fault of the monopolists, of the plutocracy, as you call them. It is the fault of the laboring men themselves. They have voted to put into office the men who made these laws, and they are responsible for it; and until they have intelligence and manhood enough to vote for their own interests and to send their own representatives here to secure legislation that shall give to them a share of the wealth that they create they can expect no lasting benefits through any party. [Applause.]

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Chairman, this bill comes before the House for its consideration as a sequel to a period of prosperity that has exceeded all that this country in its previous history has ever known. This condition has been fostered by the economic laws of the country as they now exist; but it is proposed to change those laws radically and essentially in nearly every respect by the bill which is now before this House.

It is not a system of to-day, but it has grown up as a result of judicious legislation during a period of a hundred years. At the close of the Revolutionary war, as is well known and understood by the members of this House, one of the serious embarrassments which the Government then labored under was the inability by legislation to regulate or control the foreign commerce of the country.

The Congress of the Confederation appealed again and again to the States to accord to it the authority of imposing duties upon imports into the country for the purpose of sustaining and supporting the frail government which then existed; but inasmuch as the consent of each one of the thirteen States was requisite to granting this authority, unanimity upon the subject could not be secured, and the Congress of the Confederation was left in its crippled condition without this authority. The result of it was, according to the prominent historian of the country, and a foremost Democrat in that respect, that England imported into the country manufactures to such an extent as to crush out even the infant industries of the land. Upon this subject he says:

An excess of imports at low prices crushed domestic manufactures.

This is the tribute, and this is the authority of Mr. Bancroft, in writing the history of those times; and it became apparent that no government could be maintained in the country that would secure the prosperity of the people and the States alike unless it was one that should be formed for general purposes, having this power to impose duties upon the imports into the country, and, incidentally, for the benefit and improvement of the manufacturing interests.

It may be observed, as we pass, that it has never been asserted upon the part of any person that Congress had the authority solely and exclusively, and without reference to ulterior purposes, to impose duties upon imports for the sole benefit of manufacturers, for the mere purpose of building up the manufacturing industries of the country; but the position has been taken, and maintained with a singular degree of uniformity throughout all our entire history, that when Congress imposes duties on foreign imports, it can incidentally arrange those impositions of duty so that they would afford incidental protection and prosperity to the American people so far as they may be devoted to the development of manufacturing interests.

That has been the principle that has underlain this system of protection from that time down to the present; that it is the duty of Government, of Congress, to initiate measures by which the expenses of the Government may be met by means of imposts and duties upon foreign imports. It is a fact established by the history of the country; and it has been the theory upon which these laws have been passed and have been carried into execution under the authority of the General Government. It has been primarily to collect duties upon imports for the support and maintenance of the Government, for the purpose of meeting its obligations, and its exigencies, and at the same time spreading those duties over imports in such a manner as incidentally to maintain and build up the industrial interests of the whole country.

No more significant evidence of this purpose has been exhibited anywhere than in the act which was first enacted upon this subject after the formation of the Government, and which received the sanction not only of the Congress, but of Gen. Washington as the first President of the United States. The title of that act is in these words:

Whereas it is necessary for the support of the Government, for the discharge of the debts of the United States, and the encouragement and protection of manufactures that duties be laid on goods, wares, and merchandise imported, etc.

A clear and unequivocal expression of the conviction in the title of the act that this power of imposing duties for the purpose of meeting the debts and discharging the obligations of the Government and incidentally for the protection of manufactures was then constitutional authority that was vested in the Government of the United States. It was a contemporaneous construction of the authority which had been conceded directly to the United States by means of the constitutional provisions relating to the imposition of taxes and duties and the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and between the several States, and such a contemporaneous construction of the power and authority of the Constitution has been regarded and properly regarded historically as a part of the Constitution itself.

Upon this subject, in the celebrated case of Prigg vs. The State of Pennsylvania, which, it will be remembered, was one which related to the authority of Congress to enact the fugitive slave law, it was said in the opinion of the court, in referring to the contemporaneous construction in this manner given to the Constitution by the Legislature in the enactment of laws:

Under such circumstances, if the case was one of doubtful construction, such long acquiescence in it, such contemporaneous exposition of it, and such extensive and uniform recognition of its validity would, in our judgment, entitle the question to be considered at rest.

This is the authority of the Supreme Court of the United States in expounding constitutional power regarding legislation that was contemporaneous with the growth and establishment of the Constitution, and furnishes an ample answer to any objection that can be made relative to such a construction of the Constitution as might exclude the exercise of such authority. It is true that we have been met here repeatedly in the discussion of this bill that notwithstanding this great authority in favor of the exercise of this power, with the objection that the Constitution of the United States confers no such power and no such authority upon the legislative department of the Government; and reference has been made during the discussion, and also in the report which has been made, to the decision in the case of the Loan Association against Topeka, which was claimed to have been an authority that deprived the legislative department of the Government of the exercise of this power.

But that authority involved no such question. It involved no examination whatever of this principle of raising money to sustain the Government by means of taxes upon imports, and at the same time extending incidental protection to the growth and development of the manufacturing interests of the country. That case was this. Under a law of the State of Kansas authority had been given to concede, by a vote of the population of the locality, loans of money to institutions of an industrial character that might be located there, the people believing, as the people of the Western country generally will undoubtedly soon realize, that the establishment of industrial enterprises is a benefit to the progress, the wealth, the activity of the place in which they may be located.

A vote was taken, under those circumstances, to pay to a certain establishment, in case it would locate in the city of Topeka, a certain sum of money, and after it had been located there it was proposed to raise by taxation the amount of money that had been agreed to be paid. A suit was brought to restrain the imposition of those taxes, and that suit was maintained for the reason that if the understanding or agreement were allowed to be consummated it would be simply taking the property of one person and giving it to another.

That is all that was decided in that case, and all that is sanctioned by that decision, leaving a wide and extensive margin between the conclusion which was there maintained and that which is necessary for the argument against the system of legislation that has prevailed during almost the entire history of this country. In reference to the duties that are imposed upon imports, incidentally affording protection to American manufactures, there is no such attribute, there is no such distinguishing circumstance. That is not the taking of a cent of the money or any part of the property of one person and giving it to another. On the contrary, it is simply the means by which money is raised from imports brought into the country for the maintenance and support of the Government itself.

Every cent that is raised in this manner beyond the mere necessary expenses of collection finds its way into the Treasury of the United States, and is disbursed for the purpose of paying the debts and meeting the obligations of the Government. Not a cent of it goes into the possession or under the control of any private interest or any single individual. On the contrary, it is wholly and exclusively devoted to the development and the maintenance of our system of Government.

Under these circumstances the citizen receives a fair equivalent for the contribution that he makes. Whether it be made directly or indirectly is a matter of not the slightest significance, because every person is bound, theoretically at least, to contribute something to the support and maintenance of the Government from which he receives and his property receives protection and support, and it is that protection and support which is the equivalent for what he pays in the form of duties, and, under the theory of our Government, it is a fair equivalent for whatever amount he may pay.

Now, as to these matters of tariff duties, it is for the Congress of the United States to determine how they shall be spread over the imports that are brought into this country so as incidentally to aid the manufacturing interests of the country; deeming that to be a fit and important step in the promotion of the general welfare of the people of the United States by promoting all classes of industrial pursuits and enterprises within their own limits, instead of leaving them dependent for the products of manufacture upon the importations that might be brought here from the Old World for the purpose of supplying their wants.

Briefly and incidentally, it may be well to refer for a moment to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States upon this subject, although they have been brought to the attention of the House so fully that any detailed discussion of them has, of course, been rendered unnecessary. Upon this subject the Constitution provides that—

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

The exercise of the authority is subject to but one qualification. That qualification is this:

But all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

That is the only limitation upon this general grant of authority, intended, with another provision to which I propose to call the attention of the House, to cover the entire subject of legislation over these matters of foreign commerce and the incidental protection that may be extended to domestic manufactures by means of the exercise of this power. The other power is the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes." This is considered a grant of authority so broad, this power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, that even an entire suspension of commerce may be made under the direction of Congress by authority of this provision.

Such a suspension took place during the Administration of Thomas Jefferson. It was resisted as unconstitutional at the time by many people in different localities, but it was finally settled that the power to regulate, when it came to be understood and applied in its broad sense, as the language was used in this clause of the Constitution, included not only ordinary matters of regulation, but also actual prohibition; so that the construction which was then given to the constitutional provision upon this subject was of the very broadest character, and that, too, under the Administration of Mr. Jefferson, who is pointed out to us now, and justly so, as one of the exemplars to whom we are to look for a fair construction and administration of the Constitution of the United States.

But it is still urged that by means of these general provisions the power was not given to the Federal Government to impose these duties in such a manner as to incidentally build up and promote the manufacturing interests of the country. Gentlemen, let us look for a moment at the history of the times when this Constitution originated and the defects of which it was intended to be the remedy. It is a matter of history that before the present Constitution was adopted every State imposed such duties as seemed to it to be just and right for the purpose of promoting the success of its industrial institutions. The result was that the duties imposed by one State were entirely incompatible with those imposed by another; so that by reason of the duties imposed by the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New York and collected upon articles brought in from Connecticut and New Jersey, New Jersey it was said was like a barrel tapped at both ends, and it was because of this oppressive system of regulating commerce that the action of New Jersey upon the adoption of the Constitution was accelerated so that she was one of the first States to accede to that instrument.

When this Constitution was framed and adopted it was intended to vest the General Government with all the power that the States had over this subject. It was not intended to leave with the States any vestige of authority by which they could interfere in any manner whatever with the exercise of this authority by the Federal Government.

If this was not the case, if full power was not vested in the Federal Government by the Constitution of the United States, then it is certain that the power still remains with the States, because by the tenth amendment of the Constitution it was declared that—

The powers not delegated to the United States by this Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people.

It being conceded as a historical fact that these powers existed before the Federal Constitution was framed, and were vested in the several States, then if it is true that they were not by our present Constitution transferred to the General Government, they remain under this declaratory amendment of the Constitution in the States themselves. So that if it be the true construction of the Constitution that the General Government can not incidentally impose duties in such a manner as to foster and build up the industries of the country, what is there to prevent the separate States from legislating on this subject? And if this power were conceded to the States it would be found that the legislation of the several States would be dictated by the interests of one State as against another, and we should have a system which would be entirely destructive of everything like the order and harmony which prevail through the exercise of this power under the auspices of the General Government.

But it was not designed, when our Constitution was adopted, that the States should retain any such authority. On the contrary, it was the intention of the Constitution that this entire power should be vested in the Federal Government. Accordingly when the State of Maryland, in a case which members of the House will recollect, undertook to impose a license fee upon importers, requiring them to pay a license fee before being allowed to sell their imported articles, the Supeme Court of the United States decided that this could not be done; that the States had parted entirely with their authority over the subject of foreign commerce; that this power is vested wholly and exclusively in the Federal Government, and that a State law which undertakes to interfere with the freedom of importation and the rights of the importer to dispose of the imported article must be held unconstitutional, inoperative, and void, as in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

There seems, therefore, upon a fair consideration of the provisions of the Constitution, no difficulty in the way of concluding that Congress possesses this power, which, prior to the adoption of the Constitution, the States exercised, of imposing duties upon foreign importations in such a manner as incidentally to benefit and build up the industrial institutions of the country. As has been remarked, this was the doctrine of the fathers of the Constitution—the men who concurred in framing that instrument and secured its adoption; and with very little interruption the practice of the Government has been in accord with this doctrine from the time of the passage of the very first tariff act, which was expressly designed for this purpose. There have been since the passage of that act repeated measures having in view the building up and sustaining of the industrial interests of the country. And we know, as a matter of history, what has been the result of thus fostering manufacturing enterprises.

Of course, under the vacillating legislation that occurred prior to the late war, manufacturing interests drooped, enterprises of this description did not prosper, were not increased and extended as they have been in more recent years. But when the war came a different state of things was brought into existence by the necessities of the times. Duties were imposed in such a manner as incidentally to encourage and build up the industrial interests and institutions of the country; and this policy has resulted, during a period of thirty-three years, in doing more in this direction than was ever done during the whole preceding history of our Government. Hence we find that the United States to-day, by means of legislation of this character, by means of legislative encouragement to our domestic industries, has become the largest manufacturing country upon the face of the earth.

In support of the bill now before the House it has been said that a part of its design was to make the people of the United States such a manufacturing people that they would be able to send their products into all quarters of the globe, and thereby secure a degree of prosperity that has never before characterized our history or the history of any other country. But such have not been the means by which our industrial institutions have been maintained; they can not be maintained without the assistance of protective legislation; and the impracticability of a free-trade policy is substantially conceded by the provisions of the bill now before the House, because it seeks to raise from importations into this country, under the low scale of duties provided in the bill, an amount of money that will exceed the sum of $100,000,000, to be appropriated for the benefit and maintenance of this Government.

It is idle to say the people in the Old World are receiving, as has been asserted here during the course of this debate, equal measures of compensation for their industry with the people of the United States. This fact of itself, as well as the preceding history of the country in its commercial dealings, is a direct contradiction of all that has been said on that subject. We have had figures produced and submitted to our consideration indicating, as it has been said, that the American laborer and the American artisan, skilled and unskilled, receives only as much for his services in the way of compensation as persons employed in similar occupations in the Old World.

If this is true, without stopping to consider the figures at all, then where would be the possibility of this Government receiving one single cent from imports from the other side of the Atlantic, if the people who produce them were better paid than the people engaged in similar industries in the United States? It would be impossible to bring imports from the other side here and pay a duty toward the support and maintenance of the Government of the United States, toward the expenses of this Government, if it were not for the fact that these articles are produced upon a cheaper scale in the Old World, so much so that the importers can pay the additional duty on them and still bring them here and undersell those of our people who are engaged in the manufacture of similar products.

There can be no question of that fact; and that circumstance of itself is a clear and explicit contradiction of the theory advanced here, and that is endeavored to be sustained by figures, which go to show that the American artisan, skilled and unskilled receives a rate of wages not greater, perhaps not equal to the wages paid to persons engaged in similar pursuits on the other side. It would be an impossibility if this was the fact, I repeat, to bring foreign imports into our country and sell them in competion with the people of this land, and in addition to pay the duty intended to be levied on them for the support of the Government of the United States.

But that, Mr. Chairman, is not the case. Historically, our industrial interests have been built up by legislation of a protective character, and have reached a point of production that not only equals, but absolutely exceeds the manufactured products of any other country on the face of the earth. I call your attention now to what is said in the World Almanac for 1893, which certainly will be accepted as good Democratic authority on this question. I find it stated here that the amount of manufactured goods produced in the United States in the year 1888, which is said to be the last year in which accurate returns had been made, amounted to the immense sum of $7,204,000,000 a year—a sum that is beyond the human comprehension, and makes the United States, according to this statement, the largest manufacturing country on the face of the globe.

The products of Great Britain are given by the same authority, and in the same year, at $4,100,000,000, or vastly below, as you will see, the productive condition existing in the United States at that time. And this is the tribute of Democratic authority, which, of course, would not be willing to concede anything more to the success of measures of this character than was absolutely required under the circumstances that tended to the development of these industries.

Now, since that time it is a notorious fact that the industrial interests of this country have progressed more rapidly than prior to 1888; and there is probably now engaged in the production of manufactured articles so many more persons and so much more capital than there was then that the manufactured products aggregate an annual amount of more than $10,000,000,000, an amount of products that has never been exceeded, of manufactured goods, by any other country on the face of the earth.

The last gentleman who addressed the House referred to the fact that this had not aided the farmers of the country in any degree. But that is an erroneous view of the question, manifestly, because consideration must be given to the effect of the development of these industries, since they necessarily employ a vast number of people. Millions upon millions of people engaged in domestic manufactures are supported and fed by the products of the American farmer; and certainly if it were not for the vast number of persons thus employed and maintained the market of the American farmer would be very greatly abridged.

It is by supplying the wants of this vast number of persons that a large part of the agricultural products are paid for and consumed.

If the persons who are engaged in these pursuits, or a large portion of them, should be added to the agricultural population of the country you will see at once that it would necessarily increase agricultural productions, glut the markets, and bring down the prices to a lower level than they have ever descended. And it is the fact that these persons are engaged in other pursuits than agriculture that affords an immense market for a large portion of the agricultural products of the country at higher prices than could possibly otherwise prevail.

It is idle for us to suppose, if we allow the imports from the other side to be brought into this country under the ægis of a bill of this character, that the farmer is going to receive any more for his products than he does now. Europe already takes from this country everything that it requires, and it takes no more than it requires, and as a matter of generosity or sentiment, the people of Europe never buy a dollar's worth from the people of the United States.

Mr. NORTHWAY. They would not buy an hundred bushels of wheat unless they needed it.

Mr. DANIELS. On the contrary, their course of business has been such as under all circumstances to discriminate against the people and the prosperity of the United States, wherever they have been able to do that, either politically or in the matter of trade. And it has been one purpose and object of protective legislation to build up the American people as an independent people, as they were designed and intended to be, as the result of the first war, manufacturing and producing their own products, free from obligations to the Old World, either politically or materially.

The system and theory of our law is adapted to this end, and for the purpose of permitting this result to the utmost it has been provided by the Constitution that taxes or duties shall not be imposed upon articles exported from any State; whereby the inhabitant of every State in this Union has the free and unlimited authority to take its exports into foreign countries, and to sell them there, or to take them into other States and sell them where best it may be done, without any restriction, without any duties or any taxes being imposed upon their production.

This has been added as a matter of encouragement to the development of the interests and the pursuits of the people of the United States, to build the people up as one people, not dependent upon the other side of the Atlantic for any element of their prosperity any more than they are dependent upon the other side of the Atlantic for the very principles that lie at the foundation of their Government.

Now, another thing is to be observed right here: that in all that has taken place in our foreign commerce in the exports of our foreign products the Old World has taken just as much as it actually needed and could buy from the United States cheaper than it could buy from any other place; and if this bill that is now before the House should become a law, it will not have the effect of adding to these purchases or adding to the prosperity or success of the agricultural portion of the people of the United States—not one single dollar. You may buy from the other side all that your wants may require, and the other side will buy from you just exactly what they can buy cheaper than they can buy anywhere else, and they will buy not one single cent beyond that.

Now, as another circumstance in favor of this bill, it has been stated upon the floor of this House that it will encourage the exportation of domestic manufactures, instead of prejudicing and restricting and crippling those manufactures. The people who are engaged in these manufactures throughout the country know better than this. They will believe in and adopt no such sophism, for they know as a matter of fact that with the prices paid for labor in this prosperous and intelligent country of ours, this land of freedom, they can not come into successful competition with the underpaid people of the Old World.

Go to England, to France, to Switzerland, or to Germany, and, as a matter of fact, it will be demonstrated by researches that admit of no possible doubt, those countries are able to produce manufactured articles at least for one-half the cost that the same business is subjected to in the manufacturing interests of the United States. It is because labor there has come down to so low a grade of compensation as to enable those countries, except for legislation of the character which now exists, to bring their products here and undersell our people and destroy our industrial occupations.

But, aside from these considerations, is it true that legislation of the description now proposed will aid the prosperity of the manufacturing interests of the United States? Will it add to the ability of the people of the United States to send abroad their products and sell them there, if this bill should pass with its increased free list, and with the diminution of duties prescribed in it, increasing largely the imports that shall be brought into this country in competition with the products of our own established industries?

I read, gentlemen, from the present law of 1890, which contains this provision:

That where imported articles on which duties have been paid are used in the manufacture of articles manufactured or produced in the United States there shall be allowed on the exportation of such articles a drawback equal in amount to the duties paid on the materials used, less 1 per cent of such duties.

That, you will see, leaves to the importations which are brought into this country and manufactured into articles here the unrestricted right to a return of the duties paid upon them, less only 1 per cent upon their exportation to any foreign country. So you have the utmost freedom of trade by the system of drawbacks already provided for in the act of 1890. Whatever may be brought into the country that may be used in the manufacture of American products that are afterwards taken abroad, the importer who has paid the duties upon those materials has the right to have 99 per cent of these duties refunded to him as a matter of course by the custom-house. So that if there was this ability, if the power existed on the part of the people of the United States to compete with the products of the manufacturers of Europe upon the other side of the Atlantic, here is ample authority for it.

The door is widely opened under this provision of the law for the purpose of securing that end and that result; and yet nothing has been accomplished; literally nothing has been accomplished by means of this liberty to the manufacturing interests of the people of the United States. It is true that we do export articles to the other side and sell them there; but it is not owing to the fact of the existence of such a provision as this. It is owing to the circumstance that we are able to manufacture articles requiring a large proportion of wood or other materials which we can supply cheaper than they can do it upon the other side, and it is because we have engaged successfully in those manufactures that we are able to export anything and make a show of foreign trade in this respect with the people on the other side of the Atlantic.

Do not, therefore, be deceived, gentlemen. The people of the United States will not be deceived by the assurance that in this bill which is now before this House there will be any possible condition secured for manufacturing exports of the United States for sale and disposition in foreign countries. It can not be done. If it can be done at all, it could have been done already under the provision of the law securing this result to the persons who are engaged in the manufactures of the United States; but nothing has been accomplished, and we can expect nothing to be accomplished, for the reason that the manufactures of the Old World can be produced at so much lower a figure than by the people of the United States as to render this practically impossible.

If, therefore, this bill becomes a law we substantially give away our market to the people of the Old World without any equivalent. They will increase their imports here to the extent of at least one-half more than they are able to do under the present law, and will import largely into this country their manufactured articles and sell them on the market, and undersell our people. It is a matter of fact that under the present law, and in the last year prior to the present disturbance in the business of the country, we imported from the other side about $450,000,000 worth of their products—their manufactured articles. They pay the duties upon those articles at an average rate of 45 per cent, and still they come into the markets of the United States and undersell our people, who could produce most of the same things, and do it just as well, were it not for the increased amount that is paid to American labor.

There is nothing, therefore, that we reasonably can hope to expect from this source; but we must, if we build up our interests in this respect, build them up for the benefit of our people, for the security and the prosperity of the individuals who are engaged in these industrial enterprises. If you bring them down to the level of the Old World, then one of two things must necessarily follow the enactment of the bill under discussion: Either our industrial institutions must be closed up, as they are substantially now under the cloud and disturbance produced by the fear that this bill will go into effect as a law; or else conflict must take place with the persons who are engaged in the industrial pursuits of the country, and as a result of that conflict our laboring people must be brought down substantially to the same grade as the laboring people of the Old World.

There is no person who can look upon this result without disquietude. Where will be our industrial population? How will they be sustained? How can they be supported? How can these millions live who will be discharged from pursuits that have heretofore been so entirely satisfactory to them? The situation of the industrial pursuits as we have built them up to such an extent by means of legislation of this character is such that they have become essentially an important attribute of the institutions of our country. They are part and parcel of America and of the American people, and the millions who are engaged in these pursuits can find employment nowhere else, and in no other course of industrial pursuit.

Hence, if Europe is to bring in manufactured articles in this manner our people who have their large capital invested in these industrial pursuits must either give up the contest or they must enter into a contest with the laboring population, by which they will bring labor down to the same grade of wages that the European countries give. Will our Government, will our people, who are interested from nearly one end of the country to the other in these industrial pursuits, yield the market; will they abandon the protection of their own property and the maintenance of their own interests, or enter into a struggle and competition with the producers of the Old World and say to the people who are in their employment, You must come down to this measure of compensation, or otherwise you must be discharged and find some other means of livelihood.

We know that it would be an utter impossibility for so large a population to be discharged upon the various communities of this country and be able to maintain themselves. They are dependent upon the existence of these manufacturing institutions. They are dependent upon the progress and success of the industrial market. Deprive them of that and you make out of those who are now intelligent, industrious, prosperous people, a class of beggars, many of them criminals. No person can look without apprehension at the possibility of that state of affairs. The prosperity of the country is opposed to this bill.

The interests of the people in all respects and all classes, except importers, are opposed to it. Their interests have become interwoven together, for, though engaged in different pursuits, they constitute one vast nation that has secured its success and its prosperity under the operation of protective legislation. Yet we are asked to-day by those who present and advocate this bill to destroy this system by voluntarily throwing open our markets to the Old World and bringing this vast army of our own laboring population into competition with the underpaid labor of Europe. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to occupy the time of this House in the delivery of an address for home consumption. And I have no hope that what I may say or leave unsaid could affect the majority of this body. They seem, like Ephraim of old, "joined to their idols." But I desire at least, to put myself on record, as I shall later by my vote, against the passage of the pending bill.

A theory is only valuable until it comes in contact with a fact, and this bill is builded upon the theory of free trade, while the opposition has for its foundation the accomplished facts of the protective system. As a theory, free trade will cause our land to blossom like the rose; as a fact it will cause it to blossom with the thistle and the weed. As a theory, it will give renewed life and vigor to our industries; as a fact, the very shadows of its coming has paralyzed them. As a theory, it will enable the consumer to buy at the lowest possible price; as a fact, it will deprive the consumer of the means to buy at any price. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] As a theory, it will cause prosperity and consequent happiness to reign throughout our entire country; as a fact, it will lead to bankruptcy in business, and even greater suffering and want than now exist.

These are not mere assertions, having their source in selfish interest or partisan bias. They are but the self-evident conclusions of all past experience as recited on the pages of our country's history. With that experience not yet faded from the memory of the older generation who passed through some of its phases, and impressed upon the minds of the younger generation, who look to the past for guidance in the present and for the future, it is not to be wondered that from every branch of our diversified industries, from every section of our country, and all classes of our people there arises a protest against the passage of this bill. Its shadow alone has aroused them to a dread of its substance. In exercise of their constitutional rights they are petitioning this Congress against the passage of this measure, and their earnestness is only equaled by the indifference of the majority to their protests and appeals. [Applause.]

But it was stated by the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia that these protests and petitions were dictated and their signing compelled by the overseers of the laboring men. I would say to that gentleman that overseers were abolished with slavery about 1865. The workingmen who signed those petitions are the peers in point of manhood and independence of any member of this House. They do not take their orders, either for the signing of petitions or on election day, from any man or set of men. They are leaders and not followers. They are readers and students, and can give a reason for the hope that is within them. There are men employed in the mills and factories and mines of this country who need sit at the feet of no man in this House to gain instruction on the questions of protection or of free trade. With them these questions are not theories.

Until seven months ago these men who are now protesting against this bill were happy and prosperous. To-day many of them are idle, depending in whole or in part on public charity for their support, and all this through no fault of their own. What has caused this stagnation of business, this distress, this almost starvation, throughout this country? There is but one answer that can be made, and that is, the fear that the Wilson bill will become a law. It is worse than folly to ascribe any other cause, or to attempt to ascribe any other. That fear, and that fear alone, has banked the furnace fires and stopped the wheels of our manufacturing establishments, has made willing hands idle, and honest men the recipients of public charity. That fear has caused the child of hunger to suckle the breast of want. It has caused the father to hear his child cry for bread, without being able to still that cry.

With all this upon us at the present, and the absolute certainty of still greater distress and troubles before us, should this bill become a law, why does the majority in this House insist upon the commission of what can only be regarded as a legislative crime? Have the present misery and woe no power to restrain it from completing the ruin of the people? Will nothing but the annihilation of the nation's industrial system satisfy those to whom theory is everything and experience nothing?

The great argument against the McKinley law, as it has been against all our tariff laws, is its alleged unconstitutionality. If the men who framed the Constitution are to be credited with any knowledge whatever of what their work meant, then this argument must fall to the ground. For when enacting laws to give life and potency to that instrument, they embodied the protective policy in the very first. Is it possible that this great truth, if truth it be, was overlooked by Washington, and Jefferson, and Madison, and the Adamses, or was it withheld from these wise founders of the nation and only declared to the babes and sucklings of the Democracy of to-day? It can not be that this is true. The argument is contrary to history and contrary to the expressed judgment of the greatest minds the country has ever produced.

If it be patriotic to declare that unconstitutional which the framers of the Constitution inaugurated, then this bill should become a law. If it be wise to legislate upon the unsubstantial grounds of theory, rather than upon the sure basis of indisputable facts, then this bill should be put upon the statute books. If it be prudent to refuse to permit our path to be lighted by the lamp of experience, and, like blind men following the lead of the blind, turn from certainty to uncertainty, and from what has been proved to that which is but an experiment, then this bill should have our votes. If it be wise financial policy to pass a bill to raise revenue which confessedly will create an enormous deficiency in the revenues; if largely increased importation of foreign-made goods, to further which increase this bill is avowedly framed, will give work to men who are idle now; if the less work there is to be done here and the more men there are to do it the higher will be the rate of wages; if the farmer is to be benefited by opening to his products a foreign market 3,000 miles away, at the cost of destroying the home market now at his door—if all these assumptions be true, then this bill should pass.

But against their truth the whole people voice their indignant protest. They understand this bill, and no oratory however fervent can blind them to what it means. They know that the promises upon which it is framed are false, their deductions illogical, their theories vain, and the results disastrous to the interests and industries of the whole people. And they are protesting against it, protesting to unheeding ears. But in next November they will have the hearing denied them now, and their ballots then will be as effectual as their petitions now are unavailing. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Mr. Chairman, the nation to-day is in an anomalous condition. Blessed with bounteous crops, with universal peace at home and abroad, with an incomparable development in manufactures, we are in the midst of an industrial paralysis and financial depression unparalleled in our nation's history.

Less than eighteen months ago a new propaganda was issued to the American people by a national party in convention assembled in the Columbian city. The manifesto opened with the usual and customary prologue:

> That we, the Democratic party of the United States in convention assembled, do reaffirm our allegiance to the principles of the party as formulated by Jefferson and exemplified by a long and illustrious line of successors in Democratic leadership from Madison to Cleveland.

After this pledge of fealty and rebaptism of faith in the teachings of the prototype of Democracy, you said:

> We believe that the public welfare demands that these principles be applied to the conduct of the Federal Government through the accession to power of the party that advocates them.

The climax of the introduction is the grave announcement of impending national danger when you said:

And we solemnly declare that the need of a return to these fundamental principles of free and popular government based on home rule and individual liberty was never more urgent than now.

The epilogue of this pronunciamento is no less presumptuous than the prologue. It is a prayer for the salvation of the country through "a change of party, a change of administration, a change of system, and a change of method."

One year ago the prayer for "a change of party" was, through the voice of a plurality but not a majority of the electors of this nation, answered, and for the first time for more than a third of a century the executive and both branches of the legislative departments of the Government were placed in the absolute control of the Democratic party. The American people prior to this "change of party" were enjoying the blessings guaranteed to them by the Constitution. Industry, the great heart of the arterial system of trade, was beating normally and regularly; her pulsations filled the conduits of commerce with the products of American labor, American capital, and American genius. She blessed with wealth and prosperity the most remote part of the nation; she fed the bread-winners of the land with the produce of American soil and made a home market for the American farmer; capital had a field for investment; labor, employment; transportation, trade and commerce; manufactures, a demand for their products.

The nation was blessed with universal prosperity, and happiness and contentment beamed from the home. The maxim of Daniel Webster, that "Where there is work for the hands there is work for the teeth," was never more fully verified. This was the condition of our Republic before the transformation scene of a year ago.

"A CHANGE OF PARTY"

was the verdict of the ballots; the "change of administration" had not yet come. Its realization was four months in the future. The prospect of Democratic experimentation and platform translation began its work of industrial prostration and commercial depression. Capital took fright; industry moved sluggishly; products of manufactures decreased to the current demand; labor saw her wages decline and the doors of employment slowly close.

Doubt and uncertainty drove our medium of exchange into hiding; banks were forced to realize on securities to keep up reserves; exports decreased and contents of bonded warehouses increased. The nation for the first time since 1857 began to taste the unripened fruit of free trade and that sweet morsel of Anglomaniacs, the markets of the world. Who could predict what was in store when "a change of administration" should come?

The Democratic party to whom the control of the Government has been intrusted had in their indictment against the Republican party denounced as a fraud that protection which had reared industries, increased the national wealth, ennobled labor, and crowned us with industrial independence. That this policy was a felony, "the robbery of the great majority of American people for the benefit of a few." It said:

We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue only.

It charged the policy of protection as a violation of the fundamental law of the land, our Constitution, for the past thirty years, and yet it never invoked the judicial power of that same instrument to declare that policy unconstitutional. It charged the arch crime of Republicanism in these words:

We denounce the McKinley law enacted by the Fifty-first Congress as the culminating atrocity of class legislation.

And said:

We promise its repeal as one of the beneficial results that will follow the action of the people in intrusting power to the Democratic party.

You crowned this catalogue of reformations with a declaration to repeal the 10 per cent tax on State banks.

Those who study the logic and rhetoric of Democratic platforms and promises know that like the hieroglyphics on the monoliths and cenotaphs of Egypt, they require the application of a Rosetta stone for their interpretation and translation. [Applause on Republican side.] We understood perfectly well that you did not intend to repeal the "culminating atrocity of class legislation" and enact a policy of "tariff for revenue only," or the 10 per cent tax on State banks. These threats, however, against the policy of a third of a century have only been less damaging and pernicious to the nation than their enactment and consummation.

A CHANGE OF ADMINISTRATION came and ushered in a panic transcending in severity the panics of 1837 and 1857, as the business of the country had grown and its interests multiplied.

The priestess of an Adelphian oracle could not predict the future. The place of the manufacture became the home of the bat. Fixed prices were unknown quantities. The confidence and faith that prevailed throughout the land was shaken to its foundation. The success of Democracy depressed trade and commerce, but its Administration paralyzed American industries and electrified British manufacturers. The fires which Republican protection had lighted were extinguished by Democratic tariff for revenue only.

There was a prostration of American interests and a lockout of American labor. The bears of trade performed fantastic gyrations on stock exchange; solvent banks closed their doors; foreign holders of American securities demanded liquidation; the gold reserve in the national Treasury registered its lowest point. The decline in prices of farm products was simultaneous with the decrease in home consumption. The Democratic party had denounced the Republican party as one "which fosters no industry so much as it does that of the sheriff." The industry of the sheriff, however, has never been so active, so abundantly protected and nourished and universally patronized since the Democratic days of 1857 as it has during the past nine months under this change of Administration. [Applause.]

The allegation needs no proof; we see the evidence on every hand. A million of the sons of toil are barred from employment, and their cries come to these halls daily from every quarter of the nation for relief from their condition of want and starvation The avenues of business and trade are strewn with lost fortunes and financial wrecks, while the people patiently plead for relief. [Applause on the Republican side.]

CLEVELAND SAW THE HANDWRITING.

It would be difficult indeed for one to picture the want, woe, and distrust which prevailed throughout the land under this "change of Administration," in any stronger language than did the President in the call for the special session of Congress. He said:

Whereas the distrust and apprehension concerning the financial situation which pervade all business circles have already caused great loss and damage to our people and threaten to cripple our merchants, stop the wheels of manufacture, bring distress and privation to our farmers and withhold from our workingmen the wage of labor.

Again, in the same message to Congress of August 7, 1893, he said:

The existence of an alarming and extraordinay business situation, involving the welfare and prosperity of all our people, has constrained me to call together in extra session the people's representatives in Congress, to the end that through a wise and patriotic exercise of the legislative duty with which they solely are charged, present evils may be mitigated and dangers threatening the future may be averted.

Our unfortunate financial plight is not the result of untoward events, nor of conditions related to our natural resources; nor is it traceable to any of the afflictions which frequently check national growth and prosperity. With plenteous crops, with abundant promise of remunerative production and manufacture, with unusual invitation to safe investment, and with satisfactory assurance to business enterprise, suddenly financial distrust and fear have sprung up on every side. Numerous moneyed institutions have suspended because abundant assets were not immediately available to meet the demands of frightened depositors. Surviving corporations and individuals are content to keep in hand the money they usually are anxious to loan, and those engaged in legitimate business are surprised to find that the securities they offer for loans, though heretofore satisfactory, are no longer accepted. Values supposed to be fixed are fast becoming conjectural, and loss and failures have invaded every branch of business.

The Democratic party saw this ominous handwriting on the wall through the nation, and called on its political astrologers, sooth sayers, and necromancers for an interpretation, but all failed to make known the cause of our national calamity. As Belshazzar called the prophet Daniel to translate the fateful writing on the wall, so the Democratic party called its great prophet, not a Daniel, but one of the stuffed variety, to interpret the meaning of the words in its platform.

We denounce the Republican legislation known as the Sherman act of 1890 as a cowardly makeshift, fraught with the possibilities of danger in the future.

Had the divination been delayed until after the election of 1893 even an average free trader, and he is nothing if not a prophet, could have read it easily and correctly, though in agony: mene, mene, tekel, upharsin—"God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it. Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting." Thy kingdom is divided and given to the Republicans and protectionists. [Laughter.]

In less than eight months after this change of party and less than four months after the change of Administration the condition of the country had become so threatening and appalling that the President was forced to call the National Congress in extra session. In the same message the President said:

It may be true that the embarrassment from which business of the country is suffering arises as much from evils apprehended as those actually existing.

This tersely and succinctly describes the condition of the country which has existed since the nation declared for Democratic control of the Federal Government. The evils apprehended were those arising from threats in your platform to abolish protection, repeal the tax on State banks, and destroy reciprocity. We have experienced a change of party and a change of Administration for the short period of nine months and the nation is now awaiting the offspring of a "change of system" and a "change of methods." [Applause.]

UNCONDITIONAL REPEAL.

The extraordinary session of Congress called by the President convened on August 7, and eighty days were consumed by the Democratic party in the translation of the words, "We hold to the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country, and the coinage of both gold and silver without the discrimination of either." The Democratic party were not agreed as to the correct interpretation of this passage in the platform, and again deferred to the prophet. He declared it meant unconditional repeal of the Sherman law and gold monometallism for the future coinage of the nation.

The "cowardly makeshift" was repealed, and with repeal the wiseacres prophesied the reëstablishment of confidence, the revival of industries, the employment of labor, the rise of prices, and a return of the era of prosperity which prevailed throughout the nation a year ago under Republican administration. Has the prophecy been fulfilled? Has there been any transformation of the condition of the country since the day of the unconditional repeal of the "Republican cowardly makeshift"? Has unconditional repeal started idle factories and employed starving labor? Has unconditional repeal given bread to the workingmen? Do labor and capital walk hand in hand along the avenues of investment? Has it inspired credit and confidence? Has it given stability to markets and caused a rise in the price of farm produce? Newman Hall said "clamorous labor knocks with its hundred hands at the golden gate of the morning." Labor with its hundred hands is still knocking at the gates of industry, but they are not opened.

The financial and industrial condition is to-day as you found it with the passage of the unconditional repeal of the Sherman law. On what could you anchor hope for any change when you cried unconditional repeal of the Sherman law and with the same voice threatened "State bank tax repeal," "tariff for revenue only," an "income tax," and the annihilation of reciprocity?

Physical prostration is not relieved by aggravating its inducing cause.

It is folly to prescribe revolutionary legislation as a remedy for our industrial and financial depression caused by fear of such action.

Only a legislative quack in such case insists similia similibus curantur. There has never been a day since the change of administration to the 1st of October but that the total of the imports has exceeded the exports. There never was a day in 1892 during the same period but what the total exports exceeded the imports, as the following table shows:

Month.	Excess of exports from January 1 to end of each month.		Excess of imports from January 1 to end of each month.
	1892.	1893.	1892.	1893.
March	$53,932,822			$40,411,805
April	53,546,335			57,552,160
May	54,553,643			64,552,046
June	47,425,412			68,800,021
July	40,157,149			62,872,231
August	33,761,669			47,833,307
September	29,294,090			22,154,098

The excess of exports for 1891 was $142,000,000, and for 1892 $97,000,000.

The decrease of exports over imports in 1892 was $45,000,000, and $43,000,000 of that reduction was in the months of November and December, 1892, under prospective Democratic rule.

The exports of gold and silver bullion for April, May, and June, 1893, exceeded those for the same period in 1892 by $13,000,000. I append a table giving the exact figures:

Exports and imports of gold and silver coin and bullion from and into the United States for three months ending June 30, 1892 and 1893.

Months.	Exports.		Imports.
	1892.	1893.	1892.	1893.
April	$9,971,225	$20,535,501	$1,669,382	$1,710,092
May	5,202,088	19,141,690	2,054,033	3,480,789
June	18,238,904	5,753,291	2,651,426	2,595,792
Total	32,412,227	45,430,482	6,374,901	7,786,673

The unconditional repeal of the Sherman law has caused no rise in the price of cereals. The market values of wheat and corn have declined nearly 12 per cent.

I append a table from the weekly market letter of Clapp & Co., New York:

Months.	Wheat.				Corn.
	Chicago.		New York.		Chicago.		New York.
	High.	Low.	High.	Low.	High.	Low.	High.	Low.
September	$0.73⅜	$0.67⅜	$0.78⅛	$0.74½	$0.43½	$0.37½	$0.51½	$0.46⅜
October	.69½	.62⅝	.75 7/16	.68	.41½	.36½	.49½	.46½
November	.64⅝	.59⅜	.69 7/16	.65½	.39½	.35 1/16	.47½	.44½

The condition of business is shown by commercial reporters to remain comparatively unchanged.

Dun's Review of November 18, 1893, says:

Business is gaining, but it is a constant complaint that the improvement is slow.

State factory inspectors report that out of 90,000 persons employed in mills in Philadelphia only 11,500 are at work.

Review of November 25, 1893, says:

Consumption increases slowly, and all branches of business are waiting for its growth.

Trade waits for the revival of industries, and the week's returns respecting industrial progress are rather conflicting.

Failures, compiled from Dun's Review, show no decrease since the unconditional repeal of the Sherman law:

Date.	1893.	1892.	Date.	1893.	1892.
	Number.	Number.		Number.	Number.
August 12	394	160	October 7	330	181
August 19	455	172	October 14	303	215
August 26	410	180	October 21	346	225
September 2	356	148	October 28	368	197
September 9	323	179	November 4	358	228
September 16	314	182	November 11	364	210
September 23	319	183	November 18	324	235
September 30	329	177	November 25	287	189

I quote from the Chicago Times, November 7, 1893:

Everybody is waiting for somebody else to move. The purchasing clause of the Sherman silver law has been repealed, and what was generally expected has not happened.

Also from the Chicago Times, November 13, 1893:

Too great hopes had been entertained by many people regarding the repeal of the silver-purchasing clause of the Sherman law. It was too much to expect that the repeal would be immediately followed by a complete restoration of confidence and a return to the condition of things existing prior to the recent panic.

The following extract shows the commercial situation on June 1:

Bradstreet's, a great commercial authority, has received reports from 800 manufacturing establishments, at 210 different points, that have closed their doors since June 1, and says:

A summary of the results of the investigation shows that no fewer than 483,000 industrial, building trades, and mining employés have been thrown out of work within the period specified, due to the absolute closing of the establishments at which they were engaged or the shutting down of work at the mines.

The conclusions arrived at by Bradstreet's are given as follows:

When it is realized that this report, complete as it may be, is quite incomplete so far as the country at large is concerned, even with respect to manufacturing establishments which have wholly closed down for one reason or another, and that it takes no account of the thousands of reductions of working forces in other manufacturing establishments, in commercial houses, or by transportation organizations, large and small, it becomes plain to the casual observer that there are in all probability no fewer than 800,000 to 900,000 idle employés of manufacturing, commercial, and other enterprises at this time, who were nearly, if not all, actively employed three or four months ago, and that not more than one-sixth to one-fifth of this aggregate may fairly be said to have been out of work during the past two months owing to the customary midsummer shut down or the necessity for repairs, or to the taking of inventories, even though the not infrequent midsummer-wages dispute in the iron and steel industries be taken into account.

THE REMEDY.

Counterirritants in physical diseases are used to produce irritation at one point to relieve an affection at another. This principle in bodily infirmaties can not be applied to national maladies. You can not inspire faith and hope with suspense and doubt. You can not create confidence and trust with uncertainty and expectancy. You can not remove fear and distrust with objects of terror and fright. If you would raise the siege against American labor, cease firing free-trade shells at the bulwarks of American industries. If you would have confidence and reliance in financial circles and harmony in monetary affairs, tell the nation you did not intend to repeal the tax on State banks; that it was a mere exhibition of legerdemain to secure the support of the Southern Democracy. As the President has failed to refer in his message to Congress to this plank in the Democratic platform it is reasonable to presume he considered it innocuous desuetude. If you would answer the prayer that comes daily from the millions of American toilers for an opportunity to work for bread, declare that articles for American consumption shall be made by American labor on American soil and in American manufactures. [Applause on Republican side.]

PROTECTION.

The policy of protection for American industries inaugurated by the colonies, sacredly guarded and preserved by them in the Constitution, engrafted in the laws by the founders of the Government and indorsed by the American people for more than a century, has been the foundation of our great industrial system and the corner stone of American prosperity and American wealth. It was used by the Colonies as a weapon of defense against tyranny. It has produced a century of development and advancement without parallel in all the world's history. It has caused genius and capital to turn nature's resources to the wants of man and civilization. The Revolution gave us national independence. Protection has given us industrial independence. Ireland once bloomed with industrial prosperity.

England prevailed upon her to produce the raw material for English manufactures. She consented, and the Emerald Isle became a garden for England. When she parted with manufactures she parted with her liberty and independence. When England extended this same invitation to America, Protection replied that she would take the bounteous resources from the hand of God, combine them with American capital and American energy, and manufacture for American consumption. Protection was the key to the storehouse of American resources. These resources opened the doors to American industry. Industry invited American labor. Labor invited consumption. Consumption made a home market for the products of our soil. This combination of natural resources, industry, labor, and home market, has crowned the Union with national wealth and independence.

My colleague, Mr. BRYAN, in the Fifty-second Congress, said that protection has crushed the people like the Australasian cannibal tree.

You pass this bill and you will not only crush, but you will draw the lifeblood of the nation and her people.

I would advise my friend that if he has any of these cannibal trees in stock he should dispose of them under a sale extraordinary at reduced prices before the passage of this measure, as they will then only thrive in English soil. [Applause on Republican side.]

CONSTITUTIONALITY.

You declared that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for revenue only. You argue that the Constitution being one of limited and enumerated powers the power to regulate commerce does not include protection to home industries. You have admitted in the past under this power that to levy a duty is a proper method to regulate commerce. That duties may be levied under the Constitution, not for revenue only, but to counteract foreign restrictions and prohibitions. That when revenue is the design of the law that incidental protection may be given to manufactures. You said in your platform in 1884:

That revenue for customs duties should be levied for the support of the Government economically administered, and when so levied the fostering of American labor, manufactures, and industries should constantly be held in view.

In your platform in 1888 you said:

Our established domestic industries and enterprises should not and need not be endangered by reduction and correction of the burdens of taxation. On the contrary, a fair and careful revision of our tax laws, with due allowance for the difference between the wages of American and foreign labor, must promote and encourage every branch of such industries and enterprises by giving them assurance of an extended market and steady and continuous operations.

In the minority report of your committee on platforms in your last national convention you said:

That when custom-house taxation is levied upon articles of any kind produced in this country the difference between the cost of labor here and abroad, when such a difference exists, fully measures any possible benefits to labor and the enormous additional impositions of the existing tariff fall with crushing force upon our farmers and workingmen.

Delegates representing three-eighths of the Democracy of the country here admit that a duty equal to the difference between home and foreign wages was necessary.

Every Republican in the land insists that in any correct system of customs this allowance should be made.

As the parties are equally balanced numerically we have practically three-fourths of the American people united on the proposition that a tariff duty equal to the difference between American and foreign wages is constitutional and demanded for the protection of labor. You said in that minority report:

But in making reduction in taxes it is not proposed to injure any domestic industries, but rather to promote their healthy growth. * * * Moreover, many industries have come to rely upon legislation for successful continuance, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and the capital thus involved.

Three-eighths of the delegates to that convention by their votes subscribed to the doctrine that our industries are dependent upon protection for their successful continuance and that any change in the laws should be made "regardful of labor and capital."

The minority report from which I have quoted had received the indorsement of the Democratic convention of 1884 and 1888 which had twice nominated Grover Cleveland for the Presidency, but in 1892 the substitute was adopted declaring protection of every kind and variety unconstitutional.

To catch the voters both "a-comin' and a-goin'," as the slang phrase goes, Mr. Cleveland allowed himself to be understood as adhering to the tariff planks indorsed by the Democratic conventions of 1884 and 1888, notwithstanding their rejection in 1892, and it is a fact which no candid person can deny that the people believed in the obstinate honesty of the President, but few gave any real weight to the platform of his party. I may concede they had reason for faith in the man but none in his party. [Applause.]

Even in his message of December, 1893, he said:

We can not close our eyes to the fact that conditions have grown up among us which in justice and fairness call for discriminating care in the distribution of such duties and taxation as the emergencies of our Government actually demand.

You have in times past, through your leaders to whom to-day you gave the mocking service of lip praise, admitted that the power in the Constitution on regulating commerce is not wholly confined to revenue or wholly confined to commerce. If the objects of this provision in our Constitution are for levying incidental protection and lex talionis, why should it not include the object involved by every nation on the earth and the American policy of protection to the American manufactures and American industries.

Madison, in a letter of Joseph C. Cabell of September, 1828, said:

If revenue be the sole object of a legitimate impost, and the encouragement of domestic articles be not within the power of regulating trade, it would follow that no monopolizing or unequal regulations of foreign nations could be counteracted.

Under the Confederation the power to levy duties on imports and the protection of manufactures and agriculture was reserved to and exercised by the several States. When the Federal Constitution was adopted this power was taken from the States. It follows that if the power was not given to the Federal Government it is annihilated. Is it reasonable that the States which had protected manufactures and encouraged agriculture would have ratified our Constitution if it did not contain the power which was their weapon of defense against foreign tyranny and the foundation of their welfare and prosperity.

On this Madison, in his letter to Joseph C. Cabell, said:

It is a simple question under the Constitution of the United States whether the "power to regulate trade with foreign nations" as a distinct and substantive item in the enumerated powers embraces the object of encouraging by duties, restrictions, and prohibitions the manufactures and products of the country, and the affirmative must be inferred from the following considerations:

1. The meaning of the phrase "to regulate trade" must be sought in the general use of it; in other words, in the objects to which the power was generally understood to be applicable when the phrase was inserted in the Constitution.

2. The power has been understood and used by all commercial and manufacturing nations as embracing the object of encouraging manufactures. It is believed that not a single exception can be named.

3. This has been particularly the case with Great Britain, whose commercial vocabulary is the parent of ours. A primary object of her commercial regulations is well known to have been the protection and encouragement of her manufactures.

4. Such was understood to be a proper use of the power by the States most prepared for manufacturing industry whilst retaining the power over their foreign trade.

5. Such a use of the power by Congress accords with the intention and expectation of the States in transferring the power over trade from themselves to the Government of the United States.

If Congress have not the power, it is annihilated for the nation; a policy without example in any other nation and within the reason of the solitary one in our own.

In October, 1828, he wrote Mr. Cabell:

I stated briefly the grounds on which I rested my opinion, that a power to impose duties and restriction on imports, with a view to encourage domestic productions, was constitutionally lodged in Congress.

The theory of "let us alone" supposes that all nations concur in a perfect freedom of commercial intercourse; were this the case they would in a commercial sense be but one nation, as much as the several districts composing a particular nation, and the theory would be as applicable to the former as the latter. But this golden age of free trade has not yet arrived, nor is there a single nation that has set the example.

Another one of that "long and illustrious line of successors from Madison to Cleveland" has added his indorsement to protection of American industries. Jackson, in his message to Congress in 1830, said:

The object of the tariff is objected to by some as unconstitutional, and it is considered by almost all as defective in many of its parts. The power to impose duties on imports originally belonged to the several States. The right to adjust these duties with a view to the encouragement of domestic branches of industry is so completely incidental to that power, that it is difficult to suppose the existence of the one without the other.

The States have delegated their whole authority over imports to the General Government without limitation or restriction, saving the very inconsiderable reservation relating to their inspection laws. This authority having thus entirely passed from the States, the right to exercise it for the purpose of protection, does not exist in them, and consequently if it be not possessed by the General Government it must be extinct.

Our political system would thus present the anomaly of a people stripped of the right to foster their own industry, and to counteract the most selfish and destructive policy which might be adopted by foreign nations. This surely can not be the case.

This indispensable power thus surrendered by the States must be within the scope of the authority on the subject expressly delegated to Congress.

In this conclusion I am confirmed as well by the opinions of Presidents Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, who have each repeatedly recommended the exercise of this right under the Constitution, as by the uniform practice of Congress, the continued acquiescence of the States, and the general understanding of the people.

That part of his message on manufactures was referred to the Committee on Manufactures in Congress, and both the majority and minority report of that committee indorsed his utterances relating to the constitutionality of protection of the American industries.

Mr. Mallory, who presented the report for the majority of the committee, said:

The committee are gratified to have the opinion of the President, clearly and fully expressed, that the tariff for protecting domestic industries is constitutional.

Our Government has adopted and endeavored to sustain by repeated legislative enactments a policy which has had the sanction of Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe. It has been sanctioned by the continued acquiescence of the States and the general understanding of the people.

Mr. Menell, in presenting the views of the minority of the committee, said:

With the President we also concur in the constitutionality of an adjustment of import duties with a view to the protection of our own agriculture and manufactures.

It would be difficult to frame a more direct, convincing, and conclusive argument on that point than is presented in the message.

ATROPHY OF DEMOCRACY.

The Democratic party, in speaking of the principles of Thomas Jefferson, in their platform said:

We believe that the public welfare demands that these principles be applied to the conduct of the Federal Government through the accession to power of the party that advocates them.

I would that you indorse the policy of protection as did Thomas Jefferson, the prototype of a genuine Democracy. He dimly saw in 1800 what he openly advocated in 1816, the protection of American industries and agriculture, and that the combination of manufactures and agriculture was the foundation of American independence. He said in his message to Congress in December, 1802:

To cultivate peace, maintain commerce and navigation in all their lawful enterprises; to foster our fisheries and nurseries of navigation, and for the nurture of man and protect the manufactures adapted to our circumstances * * * are the landmarks by which we are to guide ourselves in all our proceedings.

He became more courageous during his second term, and in speaking of the suspension of commerce by belligerent powers, in his message to Congress in November, 1808, he says:

The situation into which we have been thus forced has impelled us to apply a portion of our industry and capital to internal manufacturing improvements. The extent of this conversion is daily increasing, and little doubt remains that the establishments formed and forming will, under the auspices of cheaper materials and subsistence, the freedom of labor from taxation with us, and protecting duties and prohibitions, become permanent.

I would like to ask my Democratic friends if these sentiments coming from their great leader, Jefferson, do not have a tendency to stay their hunger for tariff for revenue only? He left another message from which modern Democracy should profit. In a letter to his friend Benjamin Austin in January, 1816, he says:

You tell me I am quoted by those who wish to continue our dependence on England for manufactures. There was a time when I might have been so quoted with candor, but within thirty years which have since elapsed how are circumstances changed. We must now place the manufacturer by the side of the agriculturist.

In speaking of American independence from the protection of American industries, in the same communication he says:

Shall we make our comforts or go without them at the will of a foreign nation? He, therefore, who is now against domestic manufacture must be for reducing us either to dependence on that foreign nation, or to be clothed in skins and to live like wild beasts in dens and caverns. I am not one of these. Experience has taught me that manufactures are now as necessary to our independence as to our comfort, and if those who quote me as of a different opinion will keep pace with me in purchasing nothing foreign when an equivalent of domestic fabrication can be obtained, without regard to difference of price, it will not be our fault if we do not soon have a supply at home equal to our demand, and wrest that weapon of distress from the hand which has wielded it.

That these were the words of Jefferson on protection can not be gainsaid, and that they were written by him with care and deliberation is evidenced by his communication to Mr. Austin in February, 1816. He says:

Your favor of January 25 is just now received. I am in general extremely unwilling to be carried into the newspapers, no matter what the subject. With respect, however, to so much of my letter of January 9 as relates to manufactures, I have less repugnance because there is perhaps a degree of duty to avow a change of opinion called for by a change of circumstances, and especially on a point now become peculiarly interesting.

I fear if Jefferson were in these halls to-day he would fail to recognize modern Democracy as the legitimate offspring of those principles which he taught. You say in your platform that these principles of Jefferson were "exemplified by a long and illustrious line of successors in Democratic leadership from Madison to Cleveland." These principles were certainly exemplified by Madison, Monroe, and Jackson. Madison, in his message to Congress in December, 1815, says:

Under circumstances giving a powerful impulse to manufacturing industry it has made among us a progress and exhibited an efficiency which justify the belief that with a protection not more than is due to the enterprising citizens whose interests are now at stake it will become at an early day not only safe against occasional competitions from abroad, but a source of domestic wealth and even of external commerce. It will be an additional recommendation of particular manufactures when the material for them are extensively drawn from our agriculture.

Monroe in his message to Congress in December, 1822, says:

Satisfied I am, whatever may be the abstract doctrine in favor of unrestricted commerce, provided all nations would concur in it, and it was not liable to be interrupted by war, which has never occurred and can not be expected, that there are strong reasons applicable to our situation and relations with other countries which impose on us the obligation to cherish and sustain manufactures.

In his message of December, 1823, he recommends additional protection. He says:

Having communicated my views to Congress at the commencement of last session respecting the encouragement which ought to be given to our manufactures and the principle on which it should be founded, I have only to add that those views remain unchanged and that the present state of those countries with which we have the most immediate political relation, the greatest commercial intercourse tends to confirm them. Under this impression I recommend a review of the tariff for the purpose of affording such additional protection to those articles which we are prepared to manufacture or which are more immediately connected with the defense and independence of our country.

We have heard the voice of the people against this infamous measure through petitions and at the polls. My colleague [Mr. BRYAN] will remember, in the Fifty-second Congress, in speaking of the election of 1890, he said that he would not find fault with Mr. REED if he consumed his time in recalling those words of Thomas Moore, "The last rose of summer."

You will remember that you predicted that the "revolution" might reach the shores of Maine. Little you then thought that it would reach the prairies of Nebraska before the shores of Maine. With the victory of the Administration in the last Democratic convention in Nebraska and the Republican victory in the nation I know my colleague will find no fault with me if I consume sufficient time to recall the words in the last stanza of that beautiful anapest:

So, soon may I follow,
When friendships decay,
And from love's shining circle
The gems drop away.
When true hearts lie withered,
And fond ones are flown,
Oh, who would inhabit
This cold world alone.

[Laughter and applause.]

The pending bill lays a mailed hand upon every American industry. To some it extends the doubtful clemency of a lingering death.

Let us examine it with respect to two which have obtained a footing in my own as well as some other States. This will serve to illustrate its general plan and purpose.

SUGAR.

It provides that bounty on sugar under the act of 1890 shall be reduced one-eighth each year, beginning with July 1, 1895, extending to July 1, 1902, inclusive, and shall thereafter cease and determine.

Year.	Present law.	Present bill.	Year.	Present law.	Present bill.
	Cts. per lb.	Cts. per lb.		Cts. per lb.	Cts. per lb.
1894	2	2	1900	2	¾
1895	2	1⅞	1901	2	½
1896	2	1¾	1902	2	0
1897	2	1⅝	1903	2	0
1898	2	1	1904	2	0
1899	2	⅞

Under present law the benefit in eleven years would be 22 cents, or an average of 2 cents per pound per annum.

Under this bill the benefit is 9 cents in eleven years, or an average of nine-elevenths of a cent per pound per annum.

This is a reduction of 59$\frac{1}{11}$ per cent on this industry, while the reduction on sugar in which the sugar trust is interested is but 50 per cent.

Why this discrimination in favor of the sugar octopus?

Sugar is an American agricultural industry which is yet in its infancy. It is an exception to the rule, insisted upon by those on the other side of this House, that a tariff for revenue only is the true policy, and that established industries are only incidentally protected under that policy. You invoke the most severe construction of the tariff policy in the Democratic platform, and it ought not to be applied to this important and growing agricultural product. Wherever in the past a distinction has been made between agricultural industries and manufactures it has always been in favor of agriculture. The evidence of this is not only shown in the first tariff law of 1789, but the efforts which were then made to protect it are shown by public writings, debates in Congress, and subsequent tariff acts.

In the first tariff law of 1789 cotton was protected 3 cents per pound, tobacco 6 cents, indigo 16 cents, and hemp 60 cents.

Mr. Burke, in speaking on the cotton industry in the House, said:

The ordinary crops of the South no longer pay, and that the cultivation of cotton was in contemplation there, and if good seed could be procured he hoped it might succeed.

It did succeed, and cotton became king.

Mr. Sinnickson, of New Jersey, spoke for the manufacture of beer. He said:

As the raw material (barley and hops) were produced in this country, it would tend to advance the agricultural interests.

Mr. Madison thereupon moved to lay 8 cents duty per gallon on beer, and hoped that such encouragement would induce its manufacture to take deep root, in which case it would produce the collateral good hinted at by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. Bland, of Virginia, spoke for a prohibitory duty on beef.

Mr. Sherman, of Connecticut, was in favor of a like duty on tobacco in aid of agriculture.

In 1812, Mr. Jefferson, in writing to an English traveler, said:

I have not formerly been an advocate for great manufactures. I doubt whether our labor employed in agriculture, and aided by the spontaneous energies of the earth, would not produce us more (abroad) than we could make ourselves of other necessaries. But other considerations entering into the question have settled my doubts.

We find in 1816 Mr. Dallas, when Secretary of the Treasury under Mr. Madison and subsequently Vice-President, and giving the casting (Democratic) vote on the tariff of 1846, divided our industries into three classes. His second class embraces—

Manufactures which being recently or partially established, do not at present supply the demand for domestic use and consumption, but which with proper cultivation are capable of being matured to the whole extent of the demand.

In this class falls the sugar industry of this country. He further said:

It is respectfully thought to be in the power of Congress by a well-timed and well-directed patronage to place them, within a very limited period, upon a footing on which the manufactures included in the first class (i. e., permanent or established) have been so happily placed by the lapse of a few years and the perseverance of a comparatively few individuals.

In 1816 Mr. Jefferson, in referring to the powers of other nations, said:

To be independent for the comforts of life we must fabricate them for ourselves. The great question is, shall we make our own comforts or go without them at the will of a foreign nation. He therefore who is now against domestic manufactures must be for reducing us either to a dependence on a foreign nation or to be clothed in skins.

To-day we consume 2,000,000 tons, or 4,000,000,000 pounds, of sugar, and for nine-tenths of this article, which has become a household necessity, we are dependent upon foreign nations. Mr. Monroe, in his message to Congress in 1817, said:

Our manufactures will likewise require the systematic and fostering care of the Government.

Mr. Monroe, in his message to Congress in 1819, said:

Foreign manufactures, for the want of a ready or profitable market at home, have been shipped by the manufacturers to the United States, and in many instances sold at a price below their current value at the place of manufacture. Although this practice may from its nature be considered temporary or contingent, it is not an that account less injurious in its effects. It is deemed of great importance to give encouragement to our domestic manufactures.

EXCEPTIONAL AGRICULTURAL PRODUCT.

Sugar, whether manufactured from beets, cane, or sorghum, is an exceptional agricultural product. It has so been regarded the world over because its production is confined to certain climatic conditions and particular soils. It has become an expensive household necessity and requires a large investment to produce the first pound. European legislation in the interest of sugar embracing early exemptions of the raw material from taxation. The payment of bounties and premiums, the establishment of educational schools, the erection of experimental stations followed by liberal encouragement through bounties on exported sugar, and high tariff on foreign sugar all prove that sugar has been considered by France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, and other nations as a most important agricultural product.

Even if it be not exceptional in its character the mere fact that it is an agricultural product of which we produce one-tenth of what we consume; that it drains from our aggregate wealth annually over $100,000,000 is enough of itself to bring it within the policy adopted by the fathers of the Republic and within a policy that should appeal to wisdom rather than partisanship or idle theory.

The fact that we have the necessary area, the soil, and the proper climatic conditions, the energy and capital to manufacture the sugar for our own consumption are elements that should appeal to our impartial and unbiased consideration and judgment. That we have the soil and climate is vouched for by Prof. Wiley, chief chemist of the Department of Agriculture. He says:

California is the most promising State for the manufacture of sugar beets.
Colorado shows a great interest among the farmers in the culture of the sugar beet; the experience which has been gained in Colorado and other Central Western States is such as to lead to the greatest encouragement; in—
Kansas sugar beets, of high sugar content, can be produced; that—Michigan is a State peculiarly well suited to the production of rich sugar beets; in—
Missouri, the northern part of the State is especially well suited to the growth of sugar beets of high grade.
Nevada shows beets with a phenominally large sugar content, while in—
New Mexico the sugar beet, under proper agricultural conditions, can be made to produce a phenominally rich beet, and that beets in—
New York show a very high content of sugar; the beets in—
Ohio and North Dakota show a very fair sugar content, more interest having been shown in Ohio during the past season in regard to the sugar beet than ever before, and attention is called to the fact that especially in the northern part of that State there are vast areas suitable to the culture of, the climate there being favorable to, a high-grade beet; that—
Oregon shares with the rest of the Pacific Slope special advantages for beet culture; and he classes—
South Dakota with Nebraska; the latter State ranking second to California.
Virginia shows a fair content of sugar; the State of—Washington showing a very high content of sugar.
Wisconsin shows great capabilities for beet-sugar production, while beets in—Wyoming are extremely rich in sugar; and—
Utah being well suited to beet culture.

It is also known that in South Carolina the sugar beet will yield a very high per cent of saccharine matter, and now that cotton has become so depressed the farmers have begun to turn their attention to beet sugar as they did from indigo a few years ago to cotton.

CONSUMERS.

We have the interest of the people, the consumers, as individuals, to consider. Down to July 1, 1891, sugar had always paid liberal tribute, for revenue only, to the Treasury. I say this because the 3 cents duty imposed to encourage and foster it was before Louisiana was a part of this Union of States. In fact all through the debates, it will be discovered, even after Louisiana was purchased, that the policy of the duty on sugar was not so much for protection as for revenue.

Including 1888 to 1890, sugar paid $317,000,000 in duty, which in turn was exacted from the people. They have borne the sugar-duty burden uncomplainingly for over a century—ever since the enactment of the first tariff law in 1789—just as they bore the duty on cotton for the same time down to 1867. They are now entitled to the relief which the bounty policy affords and which it promises for all time. There is no sound reason not allied to half-baked theory or partisanship why this relief should not continue without a sacrifice of the sugar industry. There is no more reason for bankrupting Louisiana, sacrificing hundreds of millions of capital there and many millions more in California, Utah, and Nebraska, destroying the value of agricultural lands given over to cane and beet culture and dealing a death blow to planters and farmers, than there is in flooding the coal mines of West Virginia, the lead mines of Missouri, or firing the millions of capital invested in lumber in Michigan, Wisconsin, and Georgia. To destroy the coal and lumber interests would be no worse than is the sugar provision of this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

INDEPENDENCE.

We ought not be dependent on any nation for sugar. No one will seriously dispute this. We imported in 1891 over 3,480,000,000 pounds of sugar, and we paid a trifle over 3 cents a pound for it. The Statistical Abstract places the cost at $105,729,210.

In 1892 we imported 3,556,000,000 pounds, for which we paid 2.93 cents per pound, or as stated by the aforesaid authority, $104,400,000.

The exports and imports to and from sugar-producing countries do not show the amount of gold that must have been sent abroad for sugar. For instance, our imports of sugar from Cuba in 1892 amounted to $60,838,765 and in 1893 to $60,637,670, while our imports from exceeded our exports to Cuba in 1892 by $50,000,000, and in 1893 $54,550,000; and yet we seem to have sent in gold to Cuba in either year only $6,200,000 in 1892 and $6,400,000 in 1893. We paid in exchange through London:

Imports from and exports to sugar-producing countries for fiscal year ending June 30, 1892.

Countries.	Imports.	Exports.	Sugar imports.	Excess of imports.
Cuba	$77,931,671	$17,953,570	$60,838,552	$59,978,101
Hawaii	8,075,882	3,662,018	7,442,047	4,413,864
Santo Domingo	2,293,748	1,019,450	2,017,739	1,274,298
British Guianas	4,363,204	1,933,299	4,468,145	2,429,905
Austria-Hungary	7,718,565	1,527,980	1,818,915	6,190,585
Philippine Islands	6,308,653	70,914	2,417,109	6,247,739

There are various important considerations of a purely national character involved in this sugar question. First. The Treasury, since the formation of the Government and down to 1890, had been in receipt of custom duties on sugar. Second. The future national benefit likely to accrue under the "bounty" policy, and the interests of our capitalists, farmers, and planters who have invested in this industry several hundred millions of dollars, jointly engaged in an agricultural enterprise that promises us our sugar and at a cheaper price than our people have ever paid.

Now, let us look at the economic feature a moment. And first, under the tariff policy our importers had paid for sugar from foreign countries from 1851 to 1891 over $2,000,000,000; and they had paid in duty $1,100,000,000; a total in less than forty years of $3,100,000,000.

This, however, does not show what our people paid for sugar. It only shows what we paid in tariff duty to our own Government. If the probable average retail cost to consumers was 8 cents per pound, the foreign sugar consumed from 1851 to 1890, 53,732,000,000 pounds, would cost them $4,298,560,000
They probably consumed about 5,500,000,000 pounds of domestic sugar at 8 cents 440,000,000

Total 4,738,560,000

This surely looks as if the sugar industry was of great national economic importance to the people of this country and to the Government as well. And it becomes more and more important as each decade follows the other. We imported sugar and values as follows:

Year.	Pounds.	Value.
1851	380,400,000	$13,800,000
1861	809,750,000	30,000,000
1871	1,270,470,000	64,600,000
1881	1,946,745,000	88,670,000
1891	3,483,477,000	105,700,000

Our per capita consumption has increased as follows: From 44.2 pounds in 1881 to 62.1 in 1892.

This shows an increase in total consumption of nearly 79 per cent in ten years, with an increase in total cost of 21 per cent. Increase on consumption per capita was 40½ per cent. If our population increases as in the last decade, we will have, say, 75,000,000 people in 1900, and if we increase our consumption per capita as in the last decade (i. e. 40½ per cent), we will consume 6,000,000,000 pounds of sugar, which will deplete our aggregate wealth annually by $180,000,000, if we are dependent on foreign nations for our sugar. [Applause on the Republican side.]

EXPORTS COMPARED WITH SUGAR IMPORTS.

In 1891, we exported in value of wheat and wheat flour $106,181,000.

It took nearly all to pay for our foreign sugar. Foreign sugar rivals, backed up with bounties and tariffs, balanced our wheat and flour exports with a necessary which we can produce here.

We exported of corn only $17,600,000 and paid over six times that sum to foreigners for sugar.

The total value of our domestic exports was $872,270,000, and it cost us nearly one-eighth of the whole for sugar from abroad.

Our exports of beef, hog, and dairy products were only $139,000,000. It took nearly 80 per cent of it for foreign sugar.

It took 36 per cent of our raw cotton exports ($290,000,000) to liquidate out debt for foreign sugar.

Our foreign sugar cost us nearly eight times as much as our tea ($13,600,000), and ten millions more than our coffee ($94,000,000).

This exhaustive drain will go on pari passu with a constantly increasing population, because without adequate protection or stimulant to develop this industry and to encourage capital to embark in it, there is no hope of escape from foreign control and necessity for foreign supply.

DROUGHT AND SCOURGE.

There is still another consideration why we should not be dependent on a foreign nation for sugar.

For several months—in August, September, October, 1893—there was a sugar famine at various points in our country and prices went up, and why? The drought in Europe caused the Cuban sugar-producers to hold their sugar for higher prices.

Dependent on foreign governments for sugar, we are at their mercy. As well be dependent on them for our supply of iron, clothing, shoes, and flour. I read from the Louisiana Planter of October:

Messrs. Willett & Gray's telegram to the Picayune indicates that the New York sugar refineries were stopped last Sunday because of the lack of supplies, but started up Monday with fresh supply of raw sugars received on Sunday. Was there ever before this such a hand-to-mouth supply of sugar in the Union?

September 30, 1893, the Cuban stocks indicate an excess of near 50,000 tons over the same date last year, reflecting the stubbornness with which the Cubans have held on to their sugar, they believing that the shortage of over 150,000 tons of their own crop and the short crop in Europe justified a far higher range of sugar values than those current.

Another enemy is always likely to stalk across the path of our foreign sugar supply. An outbreak of yellow fever in Cuba or cholera in Europe is by no means a remote or improbable contingency. In such case the people must pay dearly for their sugar. Recently during the visitation of cholera in the lower bay at New York, closing the avenue for the importation of sugar from Hamburg, the price of sugar suddenly increased nearly three-fourths of a cent a pound, and continued six weeks. The Cuban producers, seeing the plight we were in, put an extra price on their sugar to us, which the refiners paid and in turn collected from our people. Here was the sum of $4,000,000 transferred from the pockets of the American consumers to the pockets of the Cuban producers in a short space of fifty days, and this simply because we were at the mercy of a foreign country for an article of daily necessity.

ENCOURAGEMENT.

If we are to look across the waters for precedents for a new revenue policy, let us not confine our attention to England, but let the eye rest as well on Germany, France, Austria, and Russia. What have they done for sugar? Instead of casting it down and out, they have by every means in their power lifted the industry, and to-day more than one-half of the world's product of sugar is made from beets. The history of the European sugar policy shows that no reasonable stimulant was considered too great, no tariff too high in its behalf. The result must astonish the world. Another important consideration is that our efforts to supply our wants are combated on all sides by powerful rivals, who possess as to cane advantages in matters of climate, cheap labor, and decennial instead of biennial planting; and as to beet sugar, cheap labor, while liberal bounty encouragement and high tariffs in foreign nations operate against both industries here.

These nations by the exercise of a liberal and an enlightened policy have become independent of the world and of each other for sugar. They have more than doubled the world's product, and by scientific, though tedious and costly research, have raised the percentage of sugar in a given weight of raw material from 50 to 80 per cent. Is it possible and shall it be said that these things can result in empires and monarchies and are denied us in the foremost Republic on the face of the globe? Shall we assume the monopoly of adverse legislation? In a country where we have comparatively no debt and a small standing army, where the Federal burden is light, shall we alone among all the enlightened nations pursue an illiberal policy? When the people understand this question they will not "mouth" the words of the political spigot savers concerning "bounties."

The people do not ask and have not asked for a repeal of the bounty on sugar. Why should they? They have contributed liberally to the upbuilding of our manufacturing industries, and now, when agriculture has found a new field, we are gravely informed that a nation which had, down to 1890, paid a tax or duty on foreign sugar for a century amounting to billions of dollars should not now pay $10,000,000 per annum bounty, laid for the purpose not only of relieving the people of four-fifths of this sugar-duty burden, but for the greater national object of so stimulating home production as to render us independent of the world for sugar.

We paid $27,000,000 in 1866, increasing yearly to $55,000,000 in 1889, a sum equal in 1871 to nearly 90 cents per capita, or $4.50 to a family; 1881, to nearly 92 cents per capita, or $4.60 to a family; 1887, to nearly 100 cents per capita, or $5 to a family.

A little calculation will readily disclose the difference between the old "duty" and the present bounty policy.

The following table shows the consumption of sugar in the United States in 1892:

Willett & Gray's circular for January 5, 1893, makes the total consumption 1,837,626 tons of 2,240 pounds each.

The Statistical Abstract for 1892, page 221, makes the consumption 1,813,594.

The mean average between these two authorities would be		1825594
		2240
		73023760
		3651188
		3651188
1892, consumption in pounds		4089330560
		8½
		$327,146,444
		13,631,101
		340,777,546
The average retail price to the consumers before the bounty law was enacted was 8½ cents, or 3 pounds for 25 cents.
Since the enactment of that law the average price has been, say, 5½ cents	4,089,330,560
	5½
	204,466,528
	20,446,652
		224,913,180
Difference		115,864,366
Sugar, and sugar from imported molasses (Statistical Abstract, page 221) was, tons	1623126
	2240
	64925040
	3246252
	3246252
	3,635,802,240
Duty on it at 2 cents	2c.
	$72,716,044
Add bounty, say	10,000,000
		$82,716,044
Balance in favor of bounty law		33,148,322

Does any sane man suppose that if the masses of the people fully understood this they would favor a repeal of the bounty law on sugar? Why should they? They have simply kept the duty in their pockets and $33,000,000 besides. They have seen beet-sugar factories built that turn out from 50,000 to 75,000 pounds of sugar a day. They have seen employment given to an army of agriculturists, land values in the vicinity of these factories increase four-hundred fold, cities and towns spring forward into activity undreamed of, railway freights increased, and millions of additional capital invested in Louisiana, Texas, California, Nebraska, with millions more standing ready to erect factories at Anaheim, San Diego, and Westminister, Cal.; at Muscatine and Sioux City, Iowa; at Omaha and Lincoln, Nebr.; at Spokane, Wash., and Syracuse, N. Y. This was the real object of the bounty law. The capitalist and the planter and farmer have fulfilled their part of the contract. Is the $150,000,000 of capital in Louisiana, the $5,000,000 in Florida, the $10,000,000 in California, the great factories in Nebraska and in Utah, to say nothing of Mr. Lapham's adventure at Staunton, Va., to be stricken down?

Give the sugar industry in America the protection and encouragement it has had in Europe and you will have 1,000 sugar factories producing 5,000,000,000 pounds of sugar, employing 1,200 laborers in each factory or an average of 1,200,000 employés from whom 6,000,000 of our population would draw their maintenance and sustenance. We would have invested in this enterprise $500,000,000, and would add annually to our aggregate national wealth $100,000,000.

The raw material used in the operation of 1,000 sugar factories would be 30,000 tons in each factory or 30,000,000 tons of beets, of the valuation of $150,000,000, which would be paid to the agriculturists annually.

RESULTS.

Wherever a beet-sugar factory is located and within a radius of many miles the agricultural country seems touched as with a new life. There is a rise in the value of land and labor is in demand, towns and villages take on vigor and growth, and every man, laborer, banker, merchant, and farmer, feels the touch of a new industry. Thousands of dollars are annually expended by the factory in every direction, giving business a steady impetus and a demand for the products of other industries.

No man, of whatever political faith, who is not a demagogue can go through a beet field and visit a sugar factory without feeling that God's sunshine is indeed a partner with labor and capital in one of the great agricultural industries.

Are the energy and capital invested in this enterprise the hopes of the farmers and planter in this great sugar industry to be paralyzed? At whose behest? Is it possible that Claus Spreckels has found favor in the eyes of a Democracy which only fourteen months ago was yelling itself hoarse in denunciation of trusts?

Mr. Bringham, in 1890, Master of the National Grange, composed of one and one-quarter millions of farmers, said:

I think our people would not favor a bounty on any commodity that we now produce in sufficient quantities to supply our people. There are many of them in favor of bounties. Take, for instance, sugar.

At the transmississippi convention, held at Ogden last spring, a convention composed of over 600 delegates from 22 States, a resolution passed without opposition against a repeal of the bounty from or protection for sugar.

Let no one suppose for a moment that but two or three States growing sugar are the only ones interested in this industry. On the contrary, the mechanic, the laborer, the merchant, and the farmer in many States, aside from the cane, beet, and sorghum belt are deeply interested in this struggle. Prior to 1857 Louisiana had paid to Eastern foundries and machine shops over $10,000,000 for engines, sugar mills, kettles, furnaces, doors, grates, bars, vacuum pans, pumps, water pipes, wagons, and harness. She had paid to Tennessee, Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, and Indiana over $7,500,000 for mules and horses for her plantations. She had purchased every year over $1,500,000 of pork, $65,000 of flour, $275,000 of shoes, $1,250,000 of clothing, half a million dollars of blankets, and $1,250,000 of horses and mules, or a total of nearly $4,700,000 annually. When she had with a capital in this industry increased fourfold and now reaching $150,000,000, her calls on the North and border States for machinery, animals, wagons, harness, provisions, and clothing makes an interstate commerce of $50,000,000 annually.

Is such an industry in such a State to be stricken down or crippled?

Her product in 1870–'71 was, pounds	168,878,592
In 1890–'91 it was	483,489,856
A gain of nearly 200 per cent, or pounds	314,611,264

The planters have invested at least ten millions new or additional capital, and increased their planted area 100,000 acres since the bounty law was enacted, and on the faith of its continuance as promised and provided. Against many disadvantages Louisiana has done well. In the ante-rebellion days the conditions were not conducive to the greater enterprise and advancement which has since marked the progress of the sugar industry. The tariff act of 1833 worked disastrous results to domestic sugar production from which the industry had not recovered at the breaking out of the civil war.

Not unlike those embarked in the venture of the beet-sugar industry, Louisiana is now availing herself of modern and costly appliances, and of scientific effort, and the sugar industry in this country may be said to be for the first time successfully launched and on the road to complete success.

Beet sugar at Watsonville, Alvarado, and at Chino, in California, at Lehi, in Utah, at Norfolk and Grand Island, in Nebraska, and at Staunton, in Virginia, under the stimulation of the bounty offered is an assured success, as the following increase of production will indicate:

Beet-sugar production:	Tons.
1880	357
1890	2,800
1891	5,400
1892	12,355
1893 (estimated)	25,000

The struggle has been tedious and expensive. Its production requires chemical knowledge of soil, skill in manufacture, practical knowledge of seed, planting, cultivation, and harvesting, heavy expenditure for land, plant material to run it, and for skilled labor.

Add to this is the material item of cost of disseminating education among farmers, who must in this country be gradually brought to see the profit in a beet crop. This has been and continues to be expensive.

While I may not hope that any sentiment uttered by Hamilton, upon whose profound learning, practice, judgment, and sterling loyalty Washington leaned, will convince the gentlemen of the majority, I venture to appeal from them to the people for whom that statesman gave a noble life, and reproduce here his words:

Bounties are especially essential in regard to articles upon which those foreigners who have been accustomed to supply a country are in the practice of granting them.

The continuance of bounties on manufactures long established must always be of questionable policy, because a presumption would arise in every such case that there were natural and inherent impediments to success, but in new undertakings they are as justifiable as they are oftentimes necessary.

There is a degree of prejudice against bounties from an appearance of giving away the public money without an immediate consideration and from a suppostion that they serve to enrich a particular class at the expense of the community.

But neither of these sources of dislike will bear a serious examination. There is no purpose to which public money can be more beneficially applied than to the acquisition of a new and useful branch of industry—no consideration more valuable than a permanent addition to the general stock of productive labor.

As to the second source of objection, it equally lies against other modes of encouragement which are admitted to be eligible.

As often as a duty upon a foreign article makes an addition to its price it causes an extra expense to the community for the benefit of the domestic manufacture.

A bounty does no more. But it is in the interest of society in each case to submit to the temporary expense, which is more than compensated by an increase of industry and wealth, by an augmentation of resources and independence, and by the circumstance of eventual cheapness, which has been noticed in another place.

BINDER TWINE.

This bill strikes down the manufacture of binder twine in this country. Under the present law there is laid a duty of seven-tenths of a cent per pound. The istle or Tampico fiber, manila, sisal grass, and sunn used in its manufacture and which are not grown to any extent in this country were by the act of 1890 put on the free list, while hemp, a product of the American farm, was made dutiable at $25 per ton.

Hemp and binder twine under the provisions of this bill are placed on the free list.

The Nebraska Binder Twine Company was organized in 1890 for manufacturing binder twine from hemp. This new and growing industry has opened a market for another agricultural product in Nebraska. The hemp from 1,700 acres of land was consumed last season by this company. The amount of binder twine manufactured was: 1891, 476,000 pounds; 1892, 626,000 pounds; 1893, 558,000 pounds.

Mr. B. W. Reynolds, president of the Nebraska Binder Twine Company, says:

In the manufacture of any commodity there is a fixed limit of price below which manufacture must either cease or be carried on at a loss. The price of binder twine during the last season has been too low to make the business either remunerative or profitable. Should the present price be reduced to correspond with the proposed schedule the industry of binder twine manufacture in this country must nearly or altogether be wiped out of existence. The only salvation would be the reduction in the price for labor to correspond with that of our European competitors, which we deem, at least in Nebraska, utterly impossible. Another consideration which is not generally given the weight it deserves is that the use of money in this country is worth fully twice as much as in Europe, and that works correspondingly against the American manufacturer as compared with his European competitor. It is also a fact that when money is invested in machinery constructed specially for the manufacture of any article, unless there is some profit in the business, that capital is practically an expense and the taxes and interest eat it up.

And I will say right here that under the present prospects or until the matter of the tariff on our product is settled the Nebraska Binder Twine Company will not manufacture another pound of twine. We can produce the raw material and manufacture the article as cheaply right here at Fremont as it can be done in any part of the United States, and we therefore have no fear of American competition, but we can not compete with European pauper labor and their low rates of interest on capital invested.

What effect has the proposed tariff change had on the wages of your employés?

We started up our two mills the middle of September on a 30 per cent reduction from former prices for the manufacture of the raw material, but even that reduction would not be adequate to make the manufacture of twine profitable with the tariff reduced as proposed.

I will state that as far as my observation extends there has been no complaint among the farmers as to the price at which we have held our twine under the McKinley tariff. They seem to be willing to pay prices that will sustain the home manufacturer in his enterprise. The kick has come from the professional politician, and for what purpose you know as well as I. The farmer reasons that the production of hemp lessens the acreage of other crops and that it has thus far proved one of our most profitable crops, when the twine could be sold at fair figures.

The policy of the present Administration seems to be to strike down any industry that promises anything for the people, and twine as well as sugar may all have to be imported until the American people are again permitted to speak at the ballot box.

The plain, simple statements of this man of business contain so much of common sense, I can not but indulge the hope that even the free traders in this House will feel their force. I know the people of my State who are sick of senile Democracy and its twin brother Calamity will consider them and next November voice their judgment by sending to this House a solid Republican representation who by their acts will give proof of loyalty first to the industries of their own State and also to all that is American.

What humiliating contrast, gentlemen of the majority, does your plan and purpose to wreck the industries of this country present to that patriotic utterance of Thoreau which made him immortal—

There is no hope for him who does not think that the bit of mold under his feet is the sweetest spot on earth.

You propose to sacrifice this industry, destroy this new field for agriculture, and place this necessity of the American farmer under the control of foreign manufacturers.

You propose to give preference and priority to foreign lands and foreign productions. In this you have succeeded in securing the support and indorsement of the Canadian and English press.

Sirs, pass this bill and you will lock the vaults of American resources.

Pass this bill and you sign the death-warrant for American industries.

Pass this bill and you issue a proclamation for the ensalvement of American labor. [Applause.]

Pass this bill and you will declare for the destruction of our home market; the depletion of the national Treasury; the placing of labor on a plane with ryots, coolies, and kanakas, and the transfer of American manufactures to foreign shores. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 5 o'clock and 30 minutes having arrived, under the order of the House the committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ARANSAS PASS.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present a report from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. For reference to the Calendar?

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5077) to amend an act of Congress approved May 12, 1890, granting to the Aransas Pass Harbor Company the right to improve Aransas Pass

The SPEAKER. This bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, will be ordered to be printed.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] will discharge the duties of the Chair at the evening session. In accordance with the order of the House, a recess will now be taken until 8 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted to debate only on the pending bill.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., was called to order by Mr. BROOKSHIRE as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is now in session for debate only on the tariff bill, and will, according to the special order, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

TARIFF.

[Mr. McKAIG withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

[Mr. HERMANN addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I observe in the report of the minority upon this bill a complaint that a tariff for revenue only has been made to embrace the principle of protection. I wish to say something on that point and to speak of the only kinds of tariff duties on imports that can be arranged. There are two, virtually three, for one of them can be divided. There is the tariff for protection only, which has protection for its object and revenue for its incident. That tariff favors the few at the expense of the many, and in my judgment is properly called a tariff of robbers.

Then you have a tariff for revenue only. That may be divided into two kinds; one the tariff which has revenue for its object, and for its incident a depreciation of that revenue and its ultimate absence. That I call the tariff of idiots. It taxes raw materials and, in the end, by crushing industry, gives us no imported raw materials to tax. The other tariff for revenue only is one whose object is revenue but whose incident is protection, and that is the tariff for revenue only which has been advocated for over half a century by the Democratic party and on which the lines of the present bill are founded. That I call the tariff of statesmen.

If you go back as far as 1844 you will find in the canvass between Mr. Polk and Mr. Clay that both those gentlemen wrote letters upon the subject of the tariff. I have here an extract from the letter of Mr. Polk, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

I am in favor of a tariff for revenue, such an one as would yield a sufficient amount to the Treasury to defray the expenses of the Government, economically administered. In adjusting the details of a revenue tariff, I have hitherto sanctioned such moderate, discriminating duties as would produce the amount of revenue needed, and at the same time afford reasonable incidental protection to our home industry. I am opposed to a tariff for protection merely, and not for revenue.

Mr. ENGLISH. Now, that was the keynote of all Democratic action on this question. It is true that fads of various kinds have prevailed in the Democratic party, for it is a party which allows a certain liberty of action in its members. But the real doctrines of the party, as I shall proceed to show, were precisely those laid down by Mr. Polk and carried out by Mr. Walker in the tariff of 1846, which, in my judgment, was the best tariff ever made in this country. I ask the Clerk to read the extracts which I send to the desk, from some Democratic platforms from 1840 down to the present time, in order to sustain my point.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Democratic platform of 1840:

"Resolved, That justice and sound policy forbid the Federal Government to foster one branch of industry to the detriment of another, or to cherish the interests of one portion to the injury of another portion of our common country."

The Democratic platform of 1844 reaffirmed this section of the platform of 1840.

The Democratic platform of 1848 reaffirmed this section of the platform of 1840.

The Democratic platform of 1852 reaffirmed this section of the platform of 1840.

The Democratic platform of 1856 reaffirmed this section of the platform of 1840.

The Democratic platform of 1868:

"And a tariff upon foreign imports, and such equal taxation under the internal-revenue, laws as will afford incidental protection to domestic manufactures and as will, without impairing the revenue, impose the least burden upon and best promote and encourage the great industrial interests of the country."

The Democratic platform of 1876:

"We demand that all custom-house taxation shall be only for revenue."

The Democratic platform of 1884:

"It proffers a pledge to correct he irregularities of the tariff; it created and has continued them. Its own tariff commission confess the need of more than 20 per cent reduction; its Congress gave a reduction of less than 4 per cent. It professes the protection of American manufactures; it has subjected them to an increasing flood of manufactured goods and a hopeless competition with manufacturing nations, not one of which taxes raw materials. It professes to protect all American industries; it has impoverished many to subsidize a few."

The Democratic platform of 1888:

"All unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation."

The Democratic platform of 1892:

"Protection.—We denounce Republican protection as a fraud; a robbery of the great majority of the American people for the benefit of the few. We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue only, and we demand that the collection of such taxes shall be limited to the necessities of the Government when honestly and economically administered."

You will see, Mr. Chairman, how closely, with the exception of those forms of language used frequently to conceal thought, all these utterances follow the lines laid down by Mr. Polk and carried out by Mr. Walker. You will see how in one or two of those platforms they recognize very positively the fact that raw materials should be free to our manufacturers, and that the true doctrine of imposing duties on imports and arranging a tariff of those duties is, first, to find revenue, and then to give us free the raw materials for our industries which we do not make here, which we make here at a disadvantage, or which we make here in insufficient quantity.

That is the line upon which this bill is framed. It does not have protection as an object, but as an incident. The ingenuity of man can not frame a tariff that will not have as an incident a certain amount of protection. Every cent that you place for revenue upon the foreign article handicaps to that extent the foreign manufacturer, and incidentally protects our own. But there is a vast difference between protection as an object and as an incident. Protection as an object is simply a robbery of the masses; protection as an incident is the inevitable result of a proper attempt to collect revenue. I am astonished at the ground which has been taken by these gentlemen of the opposition. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCKAIG] read to-night a letter from Mr. Clay, written during the Polk-Clay campaign. I have here an extract from that letter, which, though it was read to-night, I wish to emphasize.

The Clerk read as follows:

The sum and substance of what I have conceived to be a true policy of the United States in respect to a tariff may be briefly stated. In conformity with the principle announced in the compromise act, I think that whatever revenue is necessary to an economical and honest administration of the General Government ought to be derived from duties derived from foreign imports. And I believe that in establishing tariff on those duties such a discrimination ought to be made as will incidentally afford reasonable protection to our natural interests.

Mr. ENGLISH. It will thus be seen what Mr. Clay says on this subject. He was the father of the American system—the idol and the ideal of the Whig party; and we all know that the Republican party is an offshoot and descendant of the Whig party. No doubt Mr. Clay is as much admired by the Republicans of to-day as he was by the Whigs of the past. Is the opposition about to "go back" on its own position? The Republican party, which was the son of the Know-nothing party, which was the son of the Whig party, which was the son of the National Republican party, which was the son of the Blue-light party of 1812, which was the son of the Federal party, which was the son—well, I will go no further, Mr. Chairman, with this genealogy for fear I shall run presently against the impenitent thief on the cross. [Laughter.]

Will they repudiate that? They are not satisfied with assailing this tariff as a mask of protection, but they make other statements, which I propose briefly to consider. I ask the Clerk to read what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The price of lead in New York has steadily declined for the last thirty years from 6 cents per pound to 3¼ cents per pound, and the prices to-day are a little above those in London.

Mr. ENGLISH. That is all true; and it is partly due, mainly due, to the present tariff act. Prior to that act there were silver-bearing lead ores introduced in this country and used partly for the extraction of their silver and partly as a flux to the harder and more refractory ores of the West. The present tariff shut them out. What has been the result? Capital went over the line into Mexico and established smelting furnaces there. Those silver-bearing ores were reduced there, the silver paid all the cost and made a profit, leaving the lead free; and that was sent to New York, paying duties there, and it undersold our lead and brought down the price. That is the fact.

I ask the Clerk to read another extract.

The Clerk read as follows:

The pottery industry can not be accused of being fostered by a prohibitory tariff. The amount imported exceeds the amount manufactured here, and notwithstanding the act of 1890, the importations have increased. Under such circumstances, to lessen the duty would seem most unjust to the potters so long as protection is sanctioned by the bill.

Mr. ENGLISH. Is not that admirable? Claiming merit for a bill that has protection for its object, because it has fostered importations! Is not that remarkably cool, even for this weather? Do you know why the importations have increased? It is the result of those high duties.

The potteries of Trenton, in my State, are the leading potteries of the country in the coarser ware. While some of the superior classes of ware produced there are unequalled or at least unsurpassed in the world, the ordinary pottery of Trenton under this hothouse system of high duties has gone down to such a condition that we are obliged to import increased quantities of a better foreign ware. That is the fact in regard to the pottery in Trenton. But there is another fact which is very significant. Immediately after the enactment of the McKinley bill, the present law, which raised the duties, the master potters of Trenton cut down the wages of their men 20 per cent as a tribute to protection. The men resisted; a strike followed; labor won; and to-day it dictates prices and wages to the masters. I ask the Clerk to read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill proposes to put into competition with American ores foreign ores, some of which are produced at a labor cost one-tenth, and none of them at a labor cost greater than one-fourth of ours. It proposes to bring our laborers who get from $1.60 to $2 per day, and who work from fifty-five to sixty hours a week, into competition with laborers who work seventy-two hours a week and get 36 to 60 cents per day; our miners who get from $2.25 to $2.75 per day into competition with those who get from 60 to 72 cents per day. Ocean rates are so low as to afford no protection. Ore is frequently carried across the ocean as ballast, and when freight is paid at all it averages not to exceed 5s. per ton on iron ore from Bilboa and other points in Spain.

Mr. ENGLISH. Here is the most extraordinary tissue that I ever saw put upon paper. I know something about the iron in my State. The iron industry of New Jersey has declined one-half within the last few years. We have in that State magnetite, one of the richest ores of iron to be found anywhere, with the possible exception of franklinite, which is alloyed with manganese, also found in my State, and from which the splendid spiedeleisen is produced.

We made in that State some years ago two classes of iron—one from the magnetite, what is known as mill or wrought iron; the other from the limonite brought from Northampton and Lehigh, what are called the lean ores, making foundry iron or cast iron, pots, pans, stoves, and other articles of that kind. We wanted, and need to-day, the foreign ores for the admixture with some of our Eastern ores. We need the ores of Spain and Cuba; and when they say, as they do in that extract, that the labor abroad is so much cheaper than our labor; then they forget the strikes of the iron miners again and again, and that they are complaining of starvation wages, they will tell you that in Cuba they have cheaper labor than here and talk about the $2.25 and $2.75 wages of our miners.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact we do not mine iron; we dig it out. There are no tunnels and no drifts. It is brought from the surface or found in dikes and easily removed. I have seen it carted, masses of it, hematite ore, in the Pennsylvania region, almost from the surface. It is the most inexpensive kind of labor naturally. But the miners of Pennsylvania have complained again and again that their wages were reduced to 70 cents a day. Now, in Cuba you can not get any labor of any kind at less than 80 cents a day. I know that to be the fact, and I defy contradiction. They talk of it coming here into this country as ballast, or freight-free; that vessels bearing wheat bring back iron ore sometimes as ballast.

This is absolutely absurd as well as untrue. We export our wheat mainly to England, not to Bilboa, in Spain, and but 5 per cent of the ore of this character that we get and import into this country comes from England, and that is the only way it could possibly come, though even the English ships that come here for wheat do not come empty. But from Bilboa, in Spain, when the ore is brought from there, it is brought by vessels specially chartered for that purpose. The freight is more than the amount named there—5*s.*; it runs up sometimes as high as $3 a ton; for to that barren region they carry nothing from this side.

That is the kind of statement, Mr. Chairman, to be sent broadcast over the country. Let iron pass, and I will ask the Clerk to read the next extract.

The Clerk read, as follows:

TIN PLATE.

It will be observed that the proposed duty is 1 cent per pound less than that of the present law. This means a severe blow to an enterprise, which, under existing conditions, under proper protection, promises to be one of the great industries of the country.

Mr. ENGLISH. There is another thing that I am astonished should come up in a report of that character. Cicero once said that he wondered how two Augurs—who I presume were Republican politicians of that time in Rome—could look each other in the face without laughing. [Laughter.] The statement that the tin-plate industry is successful in this country is an absurdity. When that duty of $2\frac{2}{10}$ cents was added, the tin-plate manufacturers at Swansea, many of them, were on the verge of bankruptcy.

But what did they do? Why, they moved their plant and their material and the men over here. The output of America is but about 11,000,000 pounds of native American material thus made up; the rest of our consumption is made entirely of foreign material by foreign workmen and mainly foreign owners. So that we have been legislating in this country absolutely to put this profit of $2\frac{2}{10}$ cents per pound on tin plate in the pockets of foreigners. And furthermore, our tin is of an inferior character; and we are fast depreciating the value of the tin plate in the same way, and I will tell you why. They will say to you, these same gentlemen who ought to know better, that the tin plate that is made here is a finer article, that we use steel instead of iron.

Well, steel is cheaper than iron for that purpose; but it is compact, and it does not admit of any depressions or projections to which the tin can cling. And I tell you if you expose the tin plate to the heat or the weather you will soon see the difference between the steel tin plate and iron tin plate. So much for the tin-plate industry.

I ask the Clerk to read the next extract I have given him.

The Clerk read as follows:

The law of 1883 provided a duty on cutlery, including razors, of 50 per cent ad valorem. This duty was grossly inadequate, as the labor cost in making cutlery is highly skilled, and is nearly all done by hand; it equals 80 per cent in knives, and 90 per cent in razors.

Mr. ENGLISH. Now, during the recess I have been inundated by the master cutlers of my city, and they came singing the same song as that. They told me that but 10 per cent was expended for raw material, and that all the rest was for labor, and that it was all hand labor. I sat in my modest parlor and listened to what they had to say and I never smiled, nor did I order them out of my house, but I knew at the same time something of their industry, in fact I know a great deal about it, and I knew that it was not hand labor, except in some minor points, that it was the creation of machinery; and I took the trouble to write to a leading manufacturer of my town, and here is his answer; and I commend it to the attention of this committee. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

I find that hand labor has been reduced to a minimum in this country in the production of pocket and table cutlery. In the making of solid bolster table knives a bar of steel of suitable size and cut to proper length is taken, heated to redness, and put under a heavy drop of three or four hundred pounds weight containing forming dies, and with two or three rapid blows is forced into shape. This is a rapid operation, and many dozen bolsters can be formed in a day. The piece of steel in them is worked under quick blows given by a power hammer run at considerable speed, thus forging out the blade and tang. The blades are then trimmed into required shapes by dies in power presses, worked generally by boys. They are then put on plates, one, two, or more dozen at a time, heated to redness in a closed furnace and tumbled into a vat of oil, which harders them. They are again put on plates in the same quantities and put into another furnace, where they are heated to a degree determined by experience to be right and under pressure. The heat tempers them and the pressure straightens them, although they have to be looked over and a few need to be touched up by a hammer. They are then ground.

The cutlers are now introducing grinding machines, where one man can do the work previously done by three men. The blades are then glazed, polished, and handled. The manipulation of these portions of the work is accomplished on suitable wheels run by power, the handles being finished on such after they have been riveted or cemented on the tangs, subsequently to the polishing of the blades. These operations are the only portions of the work that can properly be termed hand labor. There are so many different sizes, styles, and qualities of cutlery that to go into the question of cost would take up considerable time and space. What I have said shows you that the statement made to you that cutlery is produced in this country mainly by hand labor is not true, while it is true in regard to that made on the other side of the ocean.

I know that Richardson Bros., when they had charge of the saw factory in this city, sent many cases of saws each year directly to Sheffield, the saw manufacturing center of England. Carnegie has virtually said that we can manufacture steel in this country against the world. The industries are now very few indeed that need any sort of protection, and while there may be an item or two in the Wilson bill that may need modification, in the main it is in the right direction. The utter absurdity of the assertions made by protectionist journals and manufacturers that manufactories, especially anything in the line of hardware, will be ruined by the enactment of the Wilson tariff is shown by the fact that in the old so-called free-trade period, prior to 1860, the proportion of foreign hardware sold by jobbing houses was only 15 per cent to 85 per cent of domestics, and under the tariff prior to the McKinley bill the proportion was not over 4½ per cent foreign to 95½ per cent domestic, and very probably would have been still less if natural laws of trade had continued.

A hardware merchant of New York, of forty years' experience in dealing in foreign and domestic hardware, and who for over thirty years past has been an exporter of American hardware, writes: "I have carefully gone over the hardware items affected by the Wilson bill, and outside of affecting combinations and trusts to some extent, by which enormous profits are made, I challenge anyone to make any satisfactory exhibit of any class of goods now made in this country and sold by hardware merchants, the manufacture of which can not be prosecuted with a fair, legitimate profit."

Mr. ENGLISH. So much for that. Let that pass. I ask the Clerk to read the next extract which I have handed him.

The Clerk read as follows:

Silk-workers in America are paid at least twice as much as those in England, three times as much as in France and Germany, and nearly five times as much as in Italy. We are now manufacturing and producing in this country fully two-thirds of all the silk goods consumed here; and not only that, but the same grade and quality of goods are sold here cheaper than when we depended upon the foreign manufacturer.

Mr. ENGLISH. Precisely so. The American silks can not be surpassed. What woman will take a foreign silk when she can get one of Cheney's manufacture? The Jacquard looms of Paterson produce fabrics equal to anything produced abroad. They can sell cheaper. They do. What is the need, then, for protection to the extravagant amount that has been imposed by former tariffs and by the present tariff?

The statement there that we pay twice as much wages as they do in England, three times as much as they do in France and Germany, five times as much as they do in Italy, and somewhere else, as it is stated in the report, ten times as much as they do in Japan, must make us pause and reflect when we consider that the silk-weaver of Spitalfield pays his men one and a half times as much as they do in France and Germany, two and a half times as much as they do in Italy, and five times as much as they do in Japan, and yet goes on and has no protective tariff, no high duty, but the whole of England is open to us and to Japan, and to everyone else. But you take a Japan handkerchief, which costs 75 cents, and compare it with one of the Paterson handkerchiefs. I intended to have brought a Paterson handkerchief here to-night to compare with a Japanese handkerchief.

I have a Japanese handkerchief here. You can get one for 70 or 75 cents, and the Patterson handkerchief will cost you a dollar and a quarter or more, but the Paterson handkerchief will outlast three of the Japanese. The Paterson handkerchief weighs twice as much and it is better in every way. It would be cheaper than the Japanese if it cost $2. The silk industry of Paterson can by this time stand alone; and so throughout the United States. Yet this bill gives a duty which will afford us a moderate amount of revenue and sufficient incidental protection. I ask the Clerk to read a further extract.

The Clerk read as follows:

The working of these immense coal fields gives employment directly to nearly a quarter of a million of men at American wage rates, and furnishes opportunities for labor to another army of men in addition at like wage rates.

Mr. ENGLISH. Now, just fancy for a moment the coolness of that statement! Does not everyone know the history of the coal strike in Pennsylvania? Does not everyone know that the miners there have worked at starvation wages, down to 60 cents a day, and that they struck in utter despair? You gentlemen remember the wage riots there. Yet they talk about the superior wages of these men. This talk about coal is simply rot. I can use no other word than that to characterize it. We hear every day how we will have free coal, and how we will have Nova Scotia coal poured upon us in immense quantities, and how all the manufactories on the Atlantic coast will use it; because no one has the face to say that it will interfere with the coal on the other side of the Alleghanies.

